Therefore, they were safe so long as they kept their covenant with Allah Glorified is He but when they betrayed it, Allah Glorified is He deprived them from His protection. So, they ignited the conflict that we all know about and were paid their due. That is what happened to Banu Qaynuqa', Banu An-Nadir, Banu Qurayza and the Jews of Khaybar.

Before that affliction, they were under protection from Allah Glorified is He. We know that the first thing Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did when he entered Medina was build his Mosque, and he also entered into a treaty with the Jews. They lived in peace until they violated the treaty, so Allah Glorified is He punished them by indignity and vulnerability, and they were expelled from Medina. This is how the words of Allah Glorified is He manifested themselves: 'Abasement is made to cleave to them wherever they are found, except under a covenant with Allah and a covenant with men….' (Al-'Imran: 112)

They were granted protection from Allah Glorified is He through the covenant they entered into with the one who was in authority: Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. They are always allowed to enter into such covenants with whoever has authority over Muslims at times when the doctrine of Islam is the ruling constitution. That exception, in fact, shows that they have no inherent strength; they are always overshadowed by vulnerability and ignominy unless they seek strength by making a bond with Allah Glorified is He and a bond with people. This is also evidenced by the state of things during our present time: The Jews always need to live under the protection of others.

When we fought Israel in the October war, we inflicted a pending defeat on them until the USA intervened with its military force. On that occasion, the Egyptian president at the time said, ‘I do not have the power to fight the USA.’ If the war had been between us and Israel alone, their power would have fallen short of victory. They have no strength of their own and can only attain dignity when they are under a bond of protection from Allah Glorified is He and a bond with people. Allah Glorified is He says about them after that: ‘…and they have become deserving of wrath from Allah, and humiliation is made to cleave to them…’ (Al-‘Imran: 112). It is worth noting that adh-dhellatu (abasement; disgrace) has an exception, for they may be spared abasement and disgrace if they are under a bond with Allah Glorified is He or a bond with people. As for al-maskanatu (humiliation; weakness), it has no exception, and reflects what Allah Glorified is He says about the Jews in another chapter of the Noble Quran: ‘…And so adh-dhellatu and al-maskanatu overshadowed them, and they earned the burden of Allah’s condemnation…’ (al-Baqara: 61)

The fact that the Jews cannot be spared al-maskanatu (humiliation or weakness) under any exception is due to the fact that it is an inner quality, associated with their own selves, and therefore, cannot be compensated by any external assistance. Allah Glorified is He has willed that they will forever feel inner humiliation and misery even at times when they seem to gain apparent power through the help of their allies. Adh-dhellatu (abasement, ignominy) is an external matter that can be gained through external assistance, but al-maskanatu (humiliation, weakness) is intrinsic to them, so no bond or apparent power can save them from it. Allah Glorified is He has allowed them no chance to be spared the feeling of humiliation and weakness even through a bond with Him or a bond with people. Allah Glorified is He also says: ‘... and they have become deserving of Wrath from Allah…’ (Al-‘Imran: 112). Has anyone ever seen a greater manifestation of Allah’s Wrath than the Jews being doomed to be dispersed throughout the earth? Let us read these words of Allah Glorified is He: ‘And We dispersed them as [separate] communities all over the earth…’ (al-A’raf: 168).

The one place that accommodated them at the time of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was the Arabian Peninsula, especially Yathrib (present-day Medina). They settled there for a time, and they had scholarly superiority over other communities, which stemmed from their being people of the Book, as well as having economic and military superiority. It is surprising how they returned the favour to the one place where they found a home! The thing that made them go to Yathrib was what they found in the Torah: a prophet would come in this place, and they must follow him. Allah has mentioned this obligation in The Quran, as we have previously explained: ‘Allah took a pledge from the prophets, saying, "If, after I have bestowed Scripture and wisdom upon you, a messenger comes confirming what you have been given. You must believe in him and support him. Do you affirm this and accept My pledge as binding on you?" They said, "We do." He said, "Then bear witness, and I too will bear witness."’ (Al-‘Imran: 81)

This pledge meant that the Messengers of Allah peace be upon them took it upon themselves to deliver their Message to the communities to whom they were sent and to inform the people of faith who followed them that a messenger would come to whom Allah Glorified is He will reveal the Perfect Message. The Jews did not go to Yathrib except out of hope that they would meet the expected Prophet, believe in him and fight in the cause of Allah Glorified is He against disbelievers. Still, what happened? Allah the Exalted and Almighty tells us about what they did: ‘…Even when there came to them something they knew [to be true], they disbelieved in it…’ (al-Baqara: 89).

Thus, the Jews earned the Wrath of Allah Glorified is He and He has caused them to be forever doomed to humiliation, misery and weakness. What was the reason? Allah Glorified is He gives us the answer in the Quran: ‘…This is because they disbelieved in the communications [revelations] of Allah and slew the Prophets unjustly…’ (Al-‘Imran: 112). They have denied all the miraculous signs Allah sent them, of which some are mentioned in this noble verse: ‘And We caused the clouds to comfort you with their shade and sent down unto you manna and quails, [saying,] "Partake of the good things which We have provided for you as sustenance"….’ (al-Baqara: 57)

Numerous were the signs Allah Glorified is He sent to the children of Israel, and immediately following is another one mentioned in the words of Almighty Allah: 'Remember when We took your pledge and made the mountain tower high above you, and said, "Hold fast to what We have given you and bear its contents in mind so that you may be conscious of Allah."' (al-Baqara: 63)

Before their eyes, Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him struck the rock with his staff, and water sprang forth from it so that they could drink: 'Remember when Musa (Moses) prayed for water for his people and We said to him, "Strike the rock with your staff." Twelve springs gushed out, and each group knew its drinking place…' (al-Baqara: 60).

Despite the signs they were sent, they disbelieved and even killed the Prophets when having no right to do so. The Jews accused their Prophets of lying and slew them, so Allah Glorified is He punished them for their wrongdoing: '…This is because they disobeyed and exceeded the limits.' (Al-'Imran: 112) Their rebellion caused ignominy to cleave to them Allah's Wrath to befall them, and humiliation and weakness to overshadow them forever. This punishment has come as a result of their transgression of the limits of Allah. He the Most High has sent punishment down on them as a retribution for what they have done.

To understand this, let us recite these words of Allah Glorified is He: 'For the wrongdoings done by the Jews, We forbade them certain good things that had been permitted to them before: for having frequently debarred others from God's path.' (an-Nisa': 160)

Allah Glorified is He forbade them lawful enjoyments because of the wrong they did to themselves. They sought pleasure through things Allah had forbidden, so He prohibited them from enjoying lawful things. Thus the Will of Allah Glorified is He comes contrary to that of whoever abandons His ordinance.

As we have said before, Allah Glorified is He tells us in the Quran the truth about what happened to them. However, He does not include them in a statement that groups them together. Some of them thought of embracing the Message sent down to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and some of them did believe with him. Allah Glorified is He out of His Justice differentiates between those who considered embracing faith and those who insisted on disbelief. Thus, He Glorified is He says:

لَيْسُوا۟ سَوَآءً ۗ مِّنْ أَهْلِ ٱلْكِتَٰبِ أُمَّةٌ قَآئِمَةٌ يَتْلُونَ
ءَايَٰتِ ٱللَّهِ ءَانَآءَ ٱلَّيْلِ وَهُمْ يَسْجُدُونَ ﴿١١٣﴾

But they are not all alike. There are some among the People of the Book who are upright, who recite God's revelations during the night, who bow down in worship [113]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 113)

Therefore, some of them were upright, but which of the verses of Allah Glorified is He did they recite? They recited the verses of the Perfect Book: the Noble Quran. Now, why does Allah Glorified is He say: '…prostrating themselves...'? In prayer we recite the Quran during prostration? To understand this, we need to know that the Jews do not observe the Night time prayer ('Isha'), and to give them an Islamic identifying mark, Allah Glorified is He says about them: '…prostrating themselves', thus identifying them as people who perform the Nighttime prayer ('Isha') which is enjoined on Muslims. As long as they observe the prayer of Muslims and prostrate themselves, they are Muslims. Here is another meaning we may infer from the words of Allah Glorified is He '…Prostrating themselves....' Salat (Prayer) is a symbol of solemnity and submissiveness to Allah Glorified is He and prostration represents the peak of such solemnity and submissiveness in prayer. As long as they perform the prayer, they must, therefore, recite the Quran throughout the night, in total submission to the One Who has revealed it. We know that one of the best acts of worship in Islam and one of the well-known acts of Sunnah (Teachings of Prophet Muhammad peace be upon him) is recitation of the Quran at night and observing tahajjud (voluntary night prayer; night vigil). It is one of the acts of worship that elevates a Muslim to the state of utmost devotion (ihsan).

The Arabic wording of the verse uses the expression ana' that encompasses every time of the night, not a specific part of it. The believers do not all recite the Quran at the same time of the night. Each chooses the time that suits him best; it is as though believers were dividing up the night between them so the Quran would be recited throughout every part of it. Those who aspire to the station of utmost devotion (ihsan) not only observe the mandatory nighttime Salah ('Isha') which takes but one part of the night, rather, they pray throughout the night, above what is mandatory. They do not tire of reciting the Quran because they want to attain the state of utmost devotion (ihsan). They have found that Allah Glorified is He is the Lord Who should be worshiped with earnest effort and sincerity; as a result, they exert themselves in worship above what He has enjoined on them. It is as though they said to themselves, 'O, Allah, You have enjoined on me five daily prayers, but I find this too little in my duty to You.' That was what some of the people of the Book did; they were not satisfied with sheerly announcing their conversion to Islam, but they let their faith manifest itself in such a special act of worship: observing voluntary prayer throughout the night. They loved having the thought that these words of Allah Glorified is He apply to them: 'The righteous will be in Gardens with [flowing] springs. They will receive their Lord's gifts because of the ihsan (goodness; utmost devotion) they did before.' (adh-Dhariyat: 15-16)

What is the meaning of ihsan? It is to have such firm faith in Allah Glorified is He and love for Him that you exert yourself in worship above what He has ordained on you. Allah Glorified is He has enjoined on us five daily mandatory prayers (salat), yet some perform the prayer twenty times a day, for example. We are commanded to observe fasting (sawm) just one month of the year, yet some of us do not let a month pass by without observing fasting some days in it.

Allah Glorified is He commands us to pay a fixed amount of poor due (zakat) yet some of us give so generously going beyond the prescribed amount. Hajj (Pilgrimage) is ordained once in a lifetime, for whoever can afford to observe it, yet some of us perform hajj several times. When a servant wants to reach the station of utmost devotion (ihsan), the way to that is to maximize good deeds, by doing more and more of the acts of worship Allah Glorified is He has enjoined on us. However, an important point must be said: We are not permitted to invent our own ways of worshiping Allah Glorified is He; rather, we exert ourselves more in observing worship of the same kind as Allah Glorified is He has ordained.

To reiterate, people of the Book who believed in Allah Glorified is He and whom He praises in the Quran did not just embrace Islam, but they showed utmost keenness to do their duty to Allah. They prayed throughout the night and recited The Quran, aiming to reach the station of utmost devotion (ihsan) and acting upon the words of Allah Glorified is He: 'Sleeping only little at night.' (adh-Dhariyat: 17)

They performed voluntary prayer throughout much of the night, sleeping only little. Just as we look at the sky and admire the light of its stars, so do we appear to the dwellers up there when we strive to reach the station of utmost devotion (ihsan) by praying at night. They too look down at the earth and see spots of light shining brightly on it. Thus, they inquire about those earthly stars, and the answer comes to them, 'These are the houses whose inhabitants pray throughout the night and prostrate themselves to Allah.' Every such house shines like a star to the dwellers of the sky. In description of these diligent worshipers, Allah Glorified is He also says: 'Praying at dawn for Allah's forgiveness.' (adh-Dhariyat: 18) Does Allah command His servants to pray throughout the night and sleep just little? No, but those who aspire to the elevated station of utmost devotion, i.e. (ihsan) do so. As for ordinary Muslims, they perform the Nighttime Salat ('Isha'), and when dawn comes, they perform the Dawn Salat enjoined upon them. Only those who hope to attain the station of utmost devotion (ihsan) sleep only little and spend the night in worship, thus deserving to be praised by Almighty Allah in the Noble Quran:

'The righteous will be in Gardens with [flowing] springs. They will receive their Lord's gifts because of the good they did before: sleeping only little at night, praying at dawn for Allah's forgiveness, giving a rightful share of their wealth to the beggar and the deprived.' (adh-Dhariyat: 15-19)

Preciseness of the Quranic language is truly worth contemplating. When the Quran speaks about the station of utmost devotion (ihsan), it tells us its seekers to give their money to those who are in need, yet the amount they give is not specified. When the Quran speaks about the station of faith (iman) which comes next after that of ihsan, it says: 'Who give a due share of their wealth to beggars and the deprived, who believe in the Day of Judgement.' (al-Ma'arij: 24-26)

He who aspires the station of faith (iman) might restrict his giving to the limits of the prescribed *zaka*t (poor dues), or a little above it, but he who hopes to attain the higher station of utmost devotion (ihsan) would set no limit to what he gives to those in need. So we know that people of the Book are not all alike, for some of them have entered Islam right through the door of ihsan (utmost devotion) which is proven by the words of Allah Glorified is He: 'Not all of them are alike; a party of the people of the Scripture stand for the right. They recite the Verses of Allah during the hours of the night, prostrating themselves in prayer.' (Al-'Imran: 113). Allah Glorified is He thus emphasises that people of the Book are not all encompassed in His words: '…This is because they disbelieved in the communications [revelations] of Allah and slew the Prophets unjustly; this is because they disobeyed and exceeded the limits.' (Al-'Imran: 112). People of the Book are not all the same, so the aforementioned verse does not apply to them all; a group from the people of the Book pray, recite The Quran, and prostrate themselves to Allah Glorified is He throughout the night. In this verse, Allah Glorified is He describes this category of the people of the Book as qa'ema (upright). In Arabic, qa'em (standing) is the opposite of qa'ed (sitting up); jales means 'sitting down'. It is different from qa'ed in the sense that it means changing from a reclining position to a sitting position, so one who is sitting (jales) has been reclining and then he sat up.

Yet when we say someone is qa'ed, it means he has been standing then he sat down. Sitting down in prayer is comfortable, unlike standing; we know Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would stand up in prayer until his feet swelled up. When one is standing, all his weight is on his feet, but when one sits, he distributes his weight all over the lower part of his body. When Allah Glorified is He describes some of the people of the Book by saying: '... a party of the people of the Scripture are ummatun qa'ema (a nation that stands for the right)...' (Al-'Imran: 113). This means that they have accepted the responsibility of performing their obligations with complete sincerity, while observing prayer constantly and submissively. Allah Glorified is He continues to describe them in the following verse:

يُؤۡمِنُونَ بِٱللَّهِ وَٱلۡيَوۡمِ ٱلۡأٓخِرِ وَيَأۡمُرُونَ بِٱلۡمَعۡرُوفِ وَيَنۡهَوۡنَ عَنِ
ٱلۡمُنكَرِ وَيُسَٰرِعُونَ فِي ٱلۡخَيۡرَٰتِۖ وَأُوْلَٰٓئِكَ مِنَ ٱلصَّٰلِحِينَ ١١٤ who believe in God and the Last Day, who order what is right and forbid what is wrong, who are quick to do good deeds. These people are among the righteous [114]

(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 114)

By their belief in Allah Glorified is He and the Last Day, enjoining what is right and forbidding what is wrong, they are described with the same attributes with which Allah Glorified is He describes the best community that has ever been brought forth from mankind, the community of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him This group of the people of the Book embraced faith wholeheartedly from the beginning and aspired to reach the station of utmost devotion (ihsan). Their diligence testifies that they were truly awaiting the advent of the new prophet. Once the new prophet came, they believed in his message and became part of the best community ever brought forth for humankind. Allah Glorified is He then says about them: '…who yusare' una (are quick) to do good deeds….' (Al-'Imran: 114) This bears resemblance to His address to the believers: 'Sare'u (be quick to seek) your Lord's forgiveness and a Garden as wide as the heavens and earth prepared for the righteous.' (Al-'Imran: 133).

The following two Arabic nouns have almost the same meaning, but with different connotations; sur'ah (from which the above-mentioned two words are derived), which means to do something quickly, and the word 'ajalah which means 'rushing'. They both agree in meaning with respect to performance of an action in the shortest possible time, such as a person covering a certain distance from one place to another within a certain time. The difference between the two words becomes clearer by considering their opposites: The opposite of sur'ah is ebta' (dawdling), while the opposite of 'ajalah is anah (prudence; discretion). For example, to make a decision with anah is to take your time and think about the matter carefully before deciding. So sur'ah (quickness) is praiseworthy, whereas its opposite ebta' (dawdling) is not. 'Ajalah (rushing) is blameworthy, whereas its opposite anah (prudence; caution) is praiseworthy. In other words, sur'ah is to advance quickly when quickness is required, whereas 'ajalah is to rush, or to do hurriedly what should be done with patience and caution. For this reason, the Arabic proverb goes: 'Rushing brings regret: Be cautious, be safe.' In the aforementioned verse, Allah Glorified is He says: 'Sare'u (be quick to seek) your Lord's forgiveness...' (Al-'Imran: 133).

In the verse we are discussing, He says: '…who yusare'una (are quick) to do good deeds.…' (Al-'Imran: 114) which means that whenever they have a chance to do good, they seize it; they advance with quickness when it is appropriate to do. They know that life is short and that there is no guarantee for a person that his life will continue to do a good deed he intends. Realizing this, we must be quick to do good deeds and avoid procrastination. 'Umar ibn 'Abd Al-'Aziz Allah be pleased with him was taking his usual siesta, and his guard prevented people from waking the Caliph up. The son of 'Umar ibn 'Abd Al-'Aziz approached and said to the guard, 'I want to talk to the Commander of the Believers this instant.' The guard would not allow him and said, 'This is the time when he rests, and he rests at no other time of the day or night, so leave him to rest.' Caliph 'Umar ibn 'Abd Al-'Aziz Allah be pleased with him heard the noise and asked the guard about it. The guard said, 'It is your son. He wants to talk to you, but I am asking him not to do so that you can rest.' Caliph 'Umar ibn 'Abd Al-'Aziz said to the guard, 'Let him come in.' When he entered his father's place, the son said, 'Father, I heard that you will give such-and-such estate as an endowment for Allah's cause.'

'Umar ibn 'Abd Al-'Aziz Allah be pleased with him said, 'I will, God willing. Tomorrow we will settle this.' The son asked, 'Will God preserve you until tomorrow?' Caliph 'Umar ibn 'Abd Al-'Aziz Allah be pleased with him said, with tears in his eyes: 'Praise is to Allah Who has given me children who aid me in doing good!'

The son wanted his father to be quick to do that good deed. When you feel the desire to do a good deed, do it without delay; you do not know what will prevent you from doing it if you procrastinate. If an opportunity to do good appears, seize it before you lose it. The son of Caliph 'Umar ibn 'Abd Al-'Aziz was keen on helping his father to do good without delay. Contrarily, presently, a son would sue his father for interdiction to prevent him from giving money to charity, thus ignoring the words of Almighty Allah: '…who are quick to do good deeds. These people are among the righteous.' (Al-'Imran: 114). Therefore, the following question arises: Why are they among the righteous? The answer requires a little reflection. We say things like, 'So-and-so is a righteous man, or so-and-so is an evil man.' Allah Glorified is He has chosen mankind to be His vicegerent and has made them fit to carry out this responsibility. Allah Glorified is He has created Adam and made him and his progeny vicegerents on earth. When a man who is righteous and able sees a good or beneficial thing, he would leave it either as it is or increase its goodness or benefit. An evil person would rather spoil what is good and would not do what renders anything better or more beneficial.

Suppose a man found a well that people get water from. If he were an ordinary person, not one with strong will, he would leave the well intact. If he were evil, he would perhaps fill the well with sand to make it unfit for use. If he were a person of both righteousness and strong will, he would try to be creative in serving people who get water from the well. He would, for example, build a tank, draw water from the well with a lever, and/or install pipes to carry water from the tank to houses so that people would get water directly at their homes. A man with righteousness and good will would use his intellect to maximise the well's benefit.

So a man is described as righteous and able when he is fit to be a vicegerent on earth and work for its prosperity by leaving beneficial things intact increasing their beneficence or trying to rectify anything that needs rectifying. A righteous and able man works based on deep knowledge, so he does not do any work that gives a superficial benefit, which then causes harm in the course of time. For example, the inventors of pesticides thought they managed to combat infection in crops, but they did not know they have actually done more harm to agriculture and the environment than good, if any good at all. Later, they changed their minds and started warning people against using these pesticides. Every action must be based on sound scientific principles, so let us recite these words of Allah Glorified is He: 'Do not follow blindly what you do not know to be true: ears, eyes, and heart. You will be questioned about all these.' (al-Isra': 36). Allah Glorified is He also says: 'Say

[Prophet], "Shall we tell you who has the most to lose by their actions: whose efforts in this world are misguided, even when they think they are doing good work?' (al-Kahf: 103-104)

So Allah Glorified is He praises the people of the Book who believed with Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and describes them perfectly in the Quran. They recite the Quran throughout the night, prostrate themselves, believe in Allah Glorified is He and the Last Day, enjoin what is right, forbid what is wrong, and are quick in doing good deeds. Then, the True Lord judges them generally to be righteous and able and worthy to be vicegerents on earth. After this, Allah Glorified is He says:

وَمَا يَفْعَلُوا۟ مِنْ خَيْرٍ فَلَن يُكْفَرُوهُ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ عَلِيمٌۢ بِٱلْمُتَّقِينَ ﴿١١٥﴾

and they will not be denied [the reward] for whatever good deeds they do: God knows exactly who is conscious of Him [115] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 115)

Allah the Exalted will give them fair recompense. He is the True Lord Who denies no one the rewards for their good deeds. The good that they do will not be effaced or concealed from people. He the Exalted and Almighty has full knowledge of those who are conscious of Him. A person might do things that no one sees, but Allah Glorified is He watches over everyone and gives everyone their due reward for their deeds. After this, Allah Glorified is He describes the state of disbelievers by saying:

إِنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا۟ لَن تُغْنِىَ عَنْهُمْ أَمْوَٰلُهُمْ وَلَآ أَوْلَـٰدُهُم مِّنَ
ٱللَّهِ شَيْـًٔا ۖ وَأُو۟لَـٰٓئِكَ أَصْحَـٰبُ ٱلنَّارِ ۚ هُمْ فِيهَا خَـٰلِدُونَ ﴿١١٦﴾

As for those who disbelieve, neither their possessions nor their children will help them against God – they will be companions in the Fire, there to remain [116] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 116)

The disbelievers assume that their possessions and children will avail them against Allah Glorified is He. They do not see things the way they are; possessions and children are rather meant for trial not rescue, as Allah

Glorified is He says: ‘And know that your worldly goods and your children are but a trial and a temptation, and that with Allah there is a tremendous reward.’ (al-An‘am: 28)

The fact that possessions and children are trials, does not mean they are things to shun or detest; trials are not detestable in their own right, but they are only tests, and a person may endure a trial and succeed in the test. One may have wealth but is not deluded by its lure and so uses it for doing good. One may have children, but instead of taking improper pride in them, he teaches them to follow the guidance of Allah Glorified is He and raises them according to religious ethics. Any matter that is meant as a trial, is not necessarily detestable in itself; rather remember that it is only a test, and one must do his best to succeed in it. A trial is destructive only when one falters and gives in to weakness instead of facing it with strength and patience. The disbelievers do not pass the test of possession and children, but they surrender to the lure. The Day will come when they possess neither wealth nor children. Even if they had wealth, it will avail them nothing in the Hereafter and each of their children will be occupied with their own selves, as Allah Glorified is He says: ‘People, be mindful of your Lord and fear a day when no parent will take the place of their child, nor a child take the place of their parent, in any way. Allah’s promise is true, so do not let the present life delude you, nor let the Deceiver delude you about Allah.’ (Luqman: 33).

Everyone will have something to deal with which will distract them from everyone else on the Day of Resurrection. In the life of this world, disbelievers are busy with their possessions and their children. Reflect upon the words of Allah Glorified is He: ‘...neither their possessions nor their children will help them against Allah...’ (Al-‘Imran: 116) What does ‘rich’ mean, then? A rich person is he who is in no need of anyone else, who does not need anyone to provide for him. Therefore, reflect upon this Hadith of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him ‘Richness is not having many possessions, but it is contentment of the soul.’‘Possessions’ refer to the material objects of this worldly life, whether one has many or only a few of them. Indeed pleasures of this world are like salty water: The more you drink, the thirstier you feel! A disbeliever is doomed to self-deception; he cheats himself and lets the temptations of wealth and children dazzle him forgetting that this life proceeds by the ordinance of He Who possesses all dominion in Whose Hand is disposition of all affairs. He considers life something other than its true purpose; he does not realize that the pride and pleasure associated with wealth and children are but sheer deception, for a person can live his life until the end without wealth or children. Whoever is deluded in this life by wealth and children will come on the Day of Resurrection only to find that what had pleased him in his worldly life has turned into a source of sorrow and remorse in the end. Whenever he remembers that wealth and children distanced him from preparing for that Day, anguish and regret eat his heart.

Allah Glorified is He says about him who is lured by wealth and children, while disbelieving in Him: '... they will be companions in the Fire, there to remain.' (Al-'Imran: 116). This is the end for those who fall into self-deception and let wealth or children captivate them.

What does it mean that they will be 'companions' in (literally: of) the fire? First, we must understand the meaning of 'companion'. If we say that so-and-so is someone's companion, it means he is close to him, but where does this companionship begin? It begins with the first person, while it is for the second person to either accept or reject this companionship, an attitude which may be revealed to us or concealed from us. Companions of the fire cannot conceal their regret; they blame and condemn themselves for choosing Hell as their company and final destination.

In this life, a person would commit a sin and receive his due punishment as a result; therefore, we would find him rebuking himself and admitting that he deserves to be punished for what he has done. Likewise, a disbeliever, when thrown into hellfire on the Day of Resurrection, will regret his wrongdoing and say to himself, 'I deserve what I am suffering! It is all my own doing!' Hell will say, in reply to the question of its Lord the Exalted: 'We shall say to Hell on that day, "Are you full?" and it will reply, "Are there no more?"' (Qaf: 30)

In the Hereafter, a disbeliever's organs that he used in sinning will hate him and curse him. He has control of them in this life, and they are submissive to his will, but on the Day of Judgment, their owner will be submissive to their will. An oppressor would order his hand to strike the weak with hard blows, and his hand would just obey because Allah Glorified is He has created it to be submissive to his will. A disbeliever would command his tongue to utter a word of disbelief, and his tongue would not defy him. In this worldly life, one's organs are submissive to his will, but the situation will be reversed on the Day of Resurrection. A disbeliever will be stripped of his free will, and his organs will be set free. He cannot force them on that Day to do what they dislike. Organs will rebel against their master and testify against him before Allah Glorified is He. Someone might say that it looks as though his organs will testify against themselves! It is they that will be punished! However, they will accept punishment as a means to have their sins expiated.

Such will be their final destiny: '... they will be companions in the Fire, there to remain.' (Al-'Imran: 116). If you see disbelievers doing good in this life, beware of being deceived. Instead, remind yourself that such goodness must not deceive you into thinking they will have a reward in the Hereafter. Disbelief renders every effort futile. Allah Glorified is He does not accept the deeds of those who do not believe in Him, even if such deeds are not rejected by people. Allah Glorified is He says about them in the following verse:

مَثَلُ مَا يُنفِقُونَ فِي هَٰذِهِ ٱلۡحَيَوٰةِ ٱلدُّنۡيَا كَمَثَلِ رِيحٖ فِيهَا صِرٌّ أَصَابَتۡ حَرۡثَ قَوۡمٖ
ظَلَمُوٓاْ أَنفُسَهُمۡ فَأَهۡلَكَتۡهُۚ وَمَا ظَلَمَهُمُ ٱللَّهُ وَلَٰكِنۡ أَنفُسَهُمۡ يَظۡلِمُونَ ﴿١١٧﴾

And whatever they give away in this life will be nullified: a frosty wind strikes and destroys the harvest of people who have wronged themselves. It was not God who wronged them; they wronged themselves [117] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 117)

Allah Glorified is He likens what the disbelievers spend in this worldly life to serr (a wind with intense cold) that smites the seed produce of a people who have done injustice to themselves. In the Arabic language, the root made of sad (s) and ra' (r) denotes severity or clamour, as Allah Glorified is He says, describing the wife of Prophet Ibrahim (Abraham): 'Thereupon his wife approached [the guests] with sarrah (a loud cry), and struck her face [in astonishment] and exclaimed: "A barren old woman [like me]!"' (adh-Dhariyat: 29)

She cried out due to her state of disbelief in the news because she was very old and barren so naturally unable to conceive. Another example is seen is the following verse: 'And as for the ʿAd – they were destroyed by sarsar (a stormwind) furiously raging.' (al-Haqqa: 6). Sarsar is a wind that carries frost and makes a roaring sound.

Reflect upon the words of Allah Glorified is He: '...a frosty wind....' It means the wind has caused the frosty weather to be prevalent. Frost may be confined to a certain place, but when the wind blows, it carries this frost from one place to another and widens the scope of the area affected and harmed by the frosty weather. What would a frosty wind do? It can cause disasters, as Allah Glorified is He says: '…A frosty wind strikes and destroys the harvest of people who have wronged themselves….' (Al-'Imran: 117) The word used in the Arabic text of the verse is harth which literally means 'tilth' but is used here to refer to 'harvest'. We know the word means 'produce', but Allah Glorified is He refers to it with the word harth (tilth) so we realise that if we do not sow, we will not reap fruits. Allah Glorified is He says : 'Have you ever considered the seed which you tahruthun (cast upon the soil)? Is it you who cause it to grow – or are We the cause of its growth? [For] were it Our will, We could indeed turn it into chaff, and you would be left to wonder [and to lament].' (al-Waqi'a: 63-65)

Thus, tempestuous wind destroys tilth (which is a necessary action for the growth of crops). Tilth is the turning of land to make it soft so that weak roots can grow in it and be strong enough to penetrate it, making it possible for us to take sustenance from it. These roots are able, due to the softness of the tilled earth, to take in the air necessary for them to grow.

The condition of such a land destroyed by frosty wind is like that of disbelievers who spend their money in good ways; however, whatever they spend will be in vain and will avail them nothing before Allah Glorified is He. He illustrates this when He says (and true are His words): '... A frosty wind strikes and destroys the harvest of people who have wronged themselves. It was not Allah who wronged them; they wronged themselves.' (Al-'Imran: 117).

This is the result of spending with an intention directed to other than Allah Glorified is He. Whatever is spent is fruitless in the end, exactly like tilth, in which a fierce, frosty wind has blown on and destroyed. The Arabic word sarr we have already introduced conveys the meanings of severity, chill, and violence. Hatem At-Tai, the famous generous Arab Allah be pleased with him once said to his slave: Light the fire, for this night is bleak, and the wind, O son, is too icy for the weak. Let a passerby catch a glimpse of your fire. Bring a guest to us, and you will be set free! This generous man, Hatem At-Tai, promised to free his slave in case he guided a cold guest to the warmth of his house! A guest would be most welcome in a night of extreme cold, with icy winds that violently carry the frost everywhere. Villagers know that frost can ruin some kinds of crops. Allah Glorified is He brings forth this verse after confirming to us in the one preceding it that those who disbelieved will not be availed by their possessions and children, and their fate will be the fire. He the Exalted and Almighty then removes any doubt that might occur to the listener that the wealth disbelievers spend in good causes might avail them anything in the Hereafter, for it will not. Why is this?

Deeds are judged by intentions; one is driven by a certain intention that motivates him to do a given deed. Consider the deeds of disbelievers: When they spend their money on good causes, like distributing aids, relieving the distressed or establishing hospitals, do they direct their intentions to Allah Glorified is He Who has granted them all these blessings? Or are they driven by greed for fame, commemoration in history and praise for their humanity?

Doubtlessly, they do good for the sake of fame, commemoration, or praise, for they believe in nothing beyond that. They do not believe in the existence of Allah, the One God, nor do they believe in the coming of Judgment Day when they will be held accountable for what they had done in this life. We have said before when one does a good deed, recompense should be sought from whomever he has done that deed for. As long as disbelievers work to earn fame and esteem in this world, they already receive their fair recompense based on their intention.

Allah Glorified is He gives us parables so that we may reflect. The meaning of a parable is as follows: An abstract concept, the understanding of which might be above some minds, so it is compared to a material thing that everyone knows. We all know that material things are the means by which abstract concepts can be comprehended. A child first learns to be aware of material things, and then he develops understanding of abstract concepts through these things.

A child, for example, would see a fire, try to catch it and, as a result, is burned by it. That makes him develop the idea that fire burns. He would taste honey, find it sweet, and, therefore, develop the idea that honey is sweet. A child would realize that colocynth is bitter when he tastes it, and so on. Thus, one learns abstract concepts through the tangible things he realises with his senses.

Tangible things, as we know, are detected by means of the five senses: sight, hearing, smell, taste, and touch, and each of the sense plays a key role in developing conception. The human body is rich in abilities and skills, the effects of which we are aware of although we are not aware of their means of functioning. For example, there is depth perception, which allows a person to judge whether an object he looks at is near or far. Weight perception allows a person to gauge the weight of an object he is carrying; he feels its weight by means of a sense other than the five senses. Weight perception allows a person to find out which of two objects is heavier through the muscles that carry these objects; one knows which one requires more effort to lift. Another sense peripheral to the five senses is the sensation of an interval; this is by means of which a person grasps a piece of material with his fingertips, and by doing so, determines whether it is thicker than another piece of material. To gauge the thickness of something, it must be held and touched between two parts of the body.

Therefore, we have many senses that lead us to realise abstract concepts. All perceptions are born of sensation. Reflect upon these words of Allah Glorified is He: 'It is Allah who brought you out of your mothers' wombs knowing nothing and gave you hearing and sight and minds so that you might be thankful.' (an-Nahl: 78)

These are the means of perception, and Allah Glorified is He mentions hearing and sight first because they are the primary senses. After this, He mentions minds that harbors abstract concepts, emotions and so on. Therefore, when Allah Glorified is He wills to set forth a parable of an abstract matter, on which minds might differ, He uses a tangible matter on which the senses agree. In language, we use similes, so when a student does not understand something, he may ask his teacher to compare that thing which is new to him to another thing that he knows and understands. One of us may ask another, 'Do you know such-and-such person?' If the answer is 'No', He would try describing that person, who is unknown to his addressee, perhaps by comparing him to the height, colour, etc. of another person he knows. This is one way one knows how a thing that had been unknown to him. Allah the Exalted gives us parables based on tangible matters so that we can understand abstract matters. Allah Glorified is He illustrates to us how a disbeliever is afflicted with confusion when he worships other deities besides Allah by saying: 'Allah puts forward this illustration: can a man who has for his masters several partners at odds with each other be considered equal to a man devoted wholly to one master? All praise belongs to Allah, though most of them do not know.' (az-Zumar: 29)

With this clear example, Allah Glorified is He clarifies to us the state and end result of a slave who is owned by several partners who are not in agreement and, instead, are in discord with one another. Naturally, this slave will be under intense pressure. The same is true in the case of associating partners with Allah Glorified is He: a person in this state will be internally divided between those who possess him as a slave, especiallywhen they will be rivals to one another. Contrarily, the state of a believer who embraces monotheism is illustrated with a different parable: '… a man devoted wholly to one master…' (az-Zumar: 29).

Out of His Mercy, Allah Glorified is He simplifies for us a spiritual concept by means of a tangible parable familiar to us all so that we can see that a slave owned by a single master and receives orders from him alone is spared confusion and pressure. In the same way, Allah Glorified is He sets forth an example of those who spend money on charitable works, but direct their intentions to other than Allah Glorified is He. No matter how much they spend, their spending is in vain. Parables Allah draws in the Noble Quran have to be analysed with profoundness. We need to look at the complete state represented by the parable to fully comprehend its meaning. Allah likens an idolater who associates partners with Allah to a slave who is owned by several disputing masters. To grasp the meaning, we have to look at the example given as a whole, and not take it literally. It is a parable intended to explain a certain concept, not to be considered identical to the state illustrated. Here is another example Allah Glorified is He gives: 'And propound unto them the parable of the life of this world: [it is] like the water which We send down from the skies, which is absorbed by the plants of the earth, but [in time] they turn into dry stubble, which the winds blow freely about. And it is Allah [alone] who determines all things.' (al-Kahf: 45)

Is the life of this world really like water? No, but the story of life in its entirety bears resemblance to the story Allah Glorified is He sets forth as a parable, which is that of rain falling and mixing with the earth that then quickens and produces plants with beautiful flowers, which, in turn, become dry stalks. Such is the truth about this world and its transient adornment: the beginning is splendid, full of delights, vigour and wonder; and its end is characterised with pain and destruction.

Allah Glorified is He shows us an abstract concept, the meaning of this life by compareing it to flowers and plants, the end of which become dry stalks, blown about by the wind. In another verse of The Quran, Allah says: '…and We reduce it to stubble, as if it had not flourished just the day before. This is the way We explain the revelations for those who reflect.' (Yunus: 24).

Now, let us look more deeply into the aforementioned verse: 'And whatever they give away in this life will be nullified: a frosty wind strikes and destroys the harvest of people who have wronged themselves. It was not Allah who wronged them; they wronged themselves.' (Al-'Imran: 117)

The verse contains the two components of a simile: the tenor, or the disbelievers who spend their wealth for other than Allah Glorified is He and the vehicle, or the tilth which is afflicted by a freezing wind. The resemblance between them is that both situations result in futility.

Does the wind differentiate between the righteous and the evil? Does it destroy the harvest only of the latter and not of the former? Those who wrong themselves are afflicted with this disaster as a punishment. They are like the owners of the garden whose story Allah relates in the Quran: 'We have tried them as We tried the owners of a certain garden, who swore that they would harvest its fruits in the morning and made no allowance [for the Will of Allah]: a disaster from your Lord struck the garden as they slept and by morning it was stripped bare, a desolate land.' (al-Qalam: 17-21)

Allah Glorified is He recompensed them for their wrongdoing, but have we never seen a man who did not wrong himself, and as a result, lose his produce by a disaster? We indeed do see this happen, yet a man who does not wrong himself bears the loss patiently and, therefore, earns reward from Allah Glorified is He. Perhaps by means of such an affliction, Allah Glorified is He has erased some unlawfully earned wealth that the man had unintentionally obtained.

For a believer, affliction and suffering bring reward, or may be meant as a means to purify his wealth from any ill-gotten money unintentionally earned. For a disbeliever, contrarily, no matter how much he spends of his wealth in charitable works, there will be no reward for him since he does not direct his intention to pleasing Allah Glorified is He.

Allah Glorified is He closes this verse by saying: '…It was not Allah who wronged them; they wronged themselves.' (Al-'Imran: 117) He the Exalted does not wrong disbelievers when He makes their spending futile in the Hereafter; rather, they wrong themselves, for they did not seek, by their spending, to please Allah Glorified is He. They wrong themselves by disbelieving in Him, so their deeds avail them nothing with Him, and this is the Justice of Allah, the True God Glorified is He. In the following verse, Allah Glorified is He says:

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُواْ لَا تَتَّخِذُواْ بِطَانَةً مِّن دُونِكُمۡ لَا يَأۡلُونَكُمۡ
خَبَالٗا وَدُّواْ مَا عَنِتُّمۡ قَدۡ بَدَتِ ٱلۡبَغۡضَآءُ مِنۡ أَفۡوَٰهِهِمۡ وَمَا تُخۡفِي
صُدُورُهُمۡ أَكۡبَرُۚ قَدۡ بَيَّنَّا لَكُمُ ٱلۡأٓيَٰتِۖ إِن كُنتُمۡ تَعۡقِلُونَ ١١٨

You who believe, do not take for your intimates such outsiders as spare no effort to ruin you and want to see you suffer: their hatred is evident from their mouths, but what their hearts conceal is far worse. We have made Our revelations clear for you; will you not use your reason? [118]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 118)

When Allah Glorified is He addresses believers with His words 'You who believe', know that what comes next is an obligation from Him the Exalted and Almighty. When Allah Glorified is He calls the attention of those who believe in Him, He means to give them a command; commands are not fit to be addressed to other than believers. As for those who disbelieve in Allah Glorified is He when He calls them to embrace faith, He incites their minds to contemplate the signs of His creation.

He calls them to meditate on the sky, the earth, and the wonders of the universe so that they may come to believe that the universe has One God: Allah the Exalted and Almighty. When one believes in Allah, the One God, only then does he become ready to receive His commands.

When Allah *Glorified is He*addresses believers by saying: 'You who believe', He is thus preparing them for an obligation, a duty. Allah Glorified is He does not address disbelievers with His commands; rather, He calls them first to enter the domain of faith: 'O mankind! Worship your Lord...' (al-Baqara: 21). When a person enters the domain of faith, Allah Glorified is He elevates him to the status of His believing servants by commanding him to do what is right and forbidding him from doing what is wrong.

As long as one believes in Allah, the All-Powerful, All-Wise, Ever-Watchful Creator of all things, he must then pay heed to what Allah Glorified is He ordains for him so as to live his life correctly. Sometimes, it appears that Allah Glorified is He is calling the attention of the believers only to command them to believe, as when He says, 'You who believe, believe in Allah and His Messenger and in the Scripture He sent down to His Messenger...' (an-Nisa': 136).

One might wonder why Allah calls the attention of believers only to order them to believe. This command is, in essence, for them to continue to adhere to faith and strengthen it by submitting to the ordinances of Allah and obeying His orders. When Allah Glorified is He commands believers to do something they already have been doing, it means He wants them to be firm and constant in doing that thing which He loves. In the aforementioned example, when Allah says, 'You who believe, believe in Allah…' (an-Nisa': 136), it is a command to believers to be constant in faith and adhere to it firmly because human beings are apt to change and deviate. We know that Allah Glorified is He has given us free will which some people misuse and forsake faith after they had believed. Therefore, it is not just about proclaiming faith, but holding fast to it through time.

When we recite the words of Allah Glorified is He: 'You who believe', we understand that a new command will be given. Allah Glorified is He has made obedience subject to our free will and has made this honouring call an introduction to every command: 'You who believe'. Do not, O, believer, search for the reason behind every ruling, for your mind may be too limited to go that far. Do not engage your mind in a needless pursuit, trying to answer this question, ‘Why, Lord, do you command this?’ Allah Glorified is He gives His ordinance only to those who believe in Him. As long as you believe that Allah is All-Wise, Omnipotent and Just, then trust Him and obey His commands whether you understand the reason behind them or not.

I have given this example before, and I will still repeat it: A person who suffers from indigestion would go to a digestive system doctor to seek specialised treatment. Trusting the doctor, the patient does not bother to think of his illness. He has chosen a specialist who will carry out a detailed examination, order the necessary tests, diagnose the illness, and then prescribe medication. When a doctor writes a prescription for a patient, the latter would not say, ‘I won’t take this medicine until you convince me of its benefit!’ Rather, he just obeys the doctor, trusting his expertise, eventhough he is just a human being who is subject to error. What, then, when it comes to the Almighty Creator Glorified is He? Does it not befit a believer to trust His handling of all affairs? Work of the mind should be limited to reflecting the signs of Allah in order to attain faith. Once you have believed in Allah Glorified is He and that He is the All-Wise, and then you accept His rule: His guidance is the best for you, for He is the One Who has created you and knows what sets your life right.

Allah Glorified is He commands believers to observe mandatory salat (prayer) five times daily, and they just have to obey and not try to investigate into the reason behind this obligation. Allah Glorified is He has enjoined salat on you, and when you observe it, you feel that your soul has found peace and serenity. That makes you realise that tranquility associated with devotion is the instant fruit we receive when we obey Allah Glorified is He. Thus, we realise this reason behind every command when we obey it. Allah the Most-Bounteous clarifies to us this essential aspect of faith in His words: ‘…Be mindful of Allah, and He will teach you: He has full knowledge of everything.’ (al-Baqara: 282)

When you are mindful of Allah Glorified is He and obey His commands, He guides you to the reason, the wisdom behind it and makes you feel the tranquility associated with faith. So understanding follows from obedience, not vice versa.

Allah Glorified is He might delay revealing the wisdom behind some of His commands for centuries. For example, we remained for fourteen centuries without knowing the reason why we are forbidden from eating pork. Should the believers have delayed submission to that prohibition for fourteen centuries until they had labs and scientific instruments to analyse and discover the harm associated with eating it– the harm that has been scientifically corroborated? No.

The believers did not delay obedience of the law of Allah Glorified is He; they did comply, and the later generations then discovered the harm. This should, in turn, encourage us to obey every law of Allah Glorified is He even when the wisdom behind it is unknown to us. The reason for some rulings and commands may well be beyond the scope of the human mind. However, things will arise that will explain some of the rulings that mankind did not understand before, which should make us trust the wisdom behind every other ruling eventhough still undiscovered. This teaches us that the criteria on which devotion should be based is simply true faith, by which Allah Glorified is He addresses the believers: 'You who believe'.

With these words, Allah Glorified is He addresses all of His believing servants: O, you who have believed in Me as the Only God, take from Me this obligation. I have already given the example of the doctor and patient, yet, of course, Allah Glorified is He is above all comparison. Since we trust a doctor as a specialist in his field, one would take the medicine he prescribes believing that he will be cured by the Will of Allah Glorified is He.

Suppose you visited a sick person and asked him: "Why do you take this medication?" The sick person would normally reply: "Because the doctor has prescribed it for me." Shouldn't we then trust what Allah(1) prescribes for us? In the same way we must follow what Allah has told us purely because He has prescribed it and that it is coming from Him. This is the course of action of people of understanding compared to those who claim to have understanding, and the difference between the two is most certainly noticeable. Those who have true understanding consider the mind as a means that leads them to the Ultimate Truth and not as an authority in itself that can judge or prevail over this Truth. The mind should be the means that leads us to the belief in Allah, but it should not be allowed to go beyond its limits.

(1) "The Islamic concept of "Allah" is not the same as the Christian and Jewish concept of "God". However, the word "Allah" does not refer to a tribal god or God of Muslims alone, rather, it refers to the Creator of the whole world, the One God (Who has no son). Therefore, we prefer to use "Allah" rather than "God" as it has a unique character. For example, it cannot be used to refer to any false gods and does not have any derivatives like goddess, gods, etc. It is a unique word used solely to describe the One God of this universe."

After calling the believers and attracting their attention, Allah addresses them with His command: “O’ believers, do not take as betanah (intimates) those who are not from you…” (Al-‘Imran: 118). For as long as you believe, guard your faith against the whispers and suggestions of Satan and the plots of the enemies. The way to do that is to be careful of taking as close friends those who secretly harbor malice and grudges against you.

A man’s bitanah are his close friends, his inner circle, those he keeps as close company and confides in. From a linguistic perspective, the word betanah literally means the inner lining of an item of clothing. A coarse piece of cloth requires a tailor to add a soft inner lining because it will be in direct contact with the body. Similarly the close friends of a person are just like this: they are the soft and gentle company that captures their heart with kindness. In praise of The Medinan Muslims, the Helpers (Al-Ansar), Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: “The Helpers (Medinan Muslims) are the inner soft layer, whilst all the others are the outer garment.”

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him likens the Helpers to the layer of clothing that is the closest to the skin, an endearing expression which is meant to pay them respect for their acceptance of his call with gentleness and affection. Just as the bitanah of clothes is the closest part to the body, the part that protects it from the coarseness of the outer layer, it also refers to the closest friends who enter one’s life and either do them great good or great harm, based on their traits and purpose.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was protected against sin by the Grace of Allah, received Revelations from Him, and had Companions that any believer would look up to as role models. Take a look at how the Companion 'Ali ibn Abu Talib describes this noble Messenger in a conversation with his son, Al-Hussain Allah be pleased with them both: “Dear father, tell me about the gatherings of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him" 'Ali ibn Abu Talib replied: "The Messenger of Allah would not sit down or stand up without glorifying the Name of Allah." In another narration, Ali replied: "The Messenger of Allah would not stop remembering and glorifying Allah."

Sitting down or standing up is the act of moving from one position to another. Standing after having been sitting, or sitting after having been standing, is an action, a movement that Allah has made our bodies capable of doing. The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would praise Allah with every action and every moment, being grateful for the blessings and the abilities the Creator Exalted is He has endowed him with. One may ask himself: "How many muscles do I use in order to sit or stand?"

Suffice to say that it takes a large number of muscles to move in order to lift or lower the body, a number that is unknown to most. What is it that makes these deaf limbs understand a person's will, so much so that they enable him to stand up or sit down whenever he wants? When you lift your hand, you do not know which muscles are moving in order for your hand to be lifted. This miraculous creation has been eulogized in the words of poets: "Within you is a smaller version of this miraculous universe!"

It is as though the entire world with all its wonders has been wrapped up inside you! You sleep or wake up whenever you want and your body obeys you in whatever you wish to do. Allah has made your muscles and all that is in your body completely subservient to you. This blessing is most felt and appreciated when you see another person stripped of the ability to move an arm. It is not you have a hand so you can move it, simply. Others do have hands, but they are unable to move them. Therefore, we realize that any authority which one exercises over his body is only by the Will and Grace of Allah, Who has subdued that body to him for his service.

The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: "When any of you wakes up, let him say: "Praise is to Allah Who has returned to me my soul, given strength to my body, and allowed me to remember and praise Him."

The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him intended to teach us to remember and praise Allah at every physical movement, whenever we stand up, sit down, or wake up, etc. He taught us that at every movement we should remember the One Who has created us and created within us the ability to move and control our bodies.

Let each of us ask himself: How many muscles need to move for a person to scratch his back, for example? This is unknown to most of us. Therefore, we should show reverence and gratitude to Allah by glorifying His Name at every movement, for He has given us those abilities.

Let us return to what 'Ali ibn Abu Talib said about The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: “The Messenger of Allah would not sit down or stand up without glorifying the Name of Allah.”

A point of reflection is the way The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him treated his *bitana*h. His caution in dealing with his Companions is worthy of admiration. He would not specify certain places for particular individuals to sit in and forbade assigning preferences to anyone. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would sit in any spot that was vacant and so would each of his Companions. He kept no special place near him for any of them so no one would imagine that he was preferred over the others. He treated them all equally. We see it now that some would reserve certain places for themselves at the mosque and almost forbid others from approaching them, but this is forbidden in Islam. ‘Abdullah ibn ‘Umar may Allah be pleased with them both, said: “The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him forbade pecking like a crow (i.e. seeming as if you were doing so when prostrating too quickly in prayer), stretching like a kneeling lion (i.e. flattening the forearms entirely against the ground, while prostrating in prayer), and for a man to reserve a place for himself at the mosque like the way camels choose places to settle in.”

'Ali ibn Abu Talib may Allah be pleased with him also added this description of The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: “When he visited someone, he would sit wherever there was an empty space; he would sit on the floor, eat on the floor, sit down to milk an ewe and accept the invitations of slaves.”

He was the very model of politeness. He was the noble Messenger of Allah and would sit anywhere and would never ask to be given a special or privileged seat at any gathering. He gave us an example to follow and was keen that every Muslim should mingle with more of his brothers on a daily basis by sitting next to one today and tomorrow being beside another. By this, gatherings of the followers of Islam can result in creating unions among them all and make all Muslims a united ummah (used to refer to Muslims collectively: a group of brothers or a congregation of people sharing the same faith).

'Ali ibn Abu Talib may Allah be pleased with him said about Prophet Muhammad peace be upon him : "The Messenger of Allah would give each of his companions their share of his company so none of them would think that another was dearer than him to the Prophet." He would not prefer one over another with a look or a word. By this conduct, Prophet Muhammad peace be upon him wanted to teach us that the believers are equal and that he peace and blessings be upon him was sent to all humankind and not to a particular group of people. He divided his attention equally among his companions so much so, that each of them would feel as though Allah sent the Messenger to him in particular!

Such were the ways of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him He meant to give us an example to follow and to teach us that too much attachment to one person in particular more than others may cause injury to the unity of the whole. For this reason, Allah Glorified is He warns the believers that they are being ambushed by the disbelievers who wholeheartedly wish to defeat them and defy their faith, and they would not rest until they dissuade them from belief. Beware, O believers that they will sure plot against you and try to infiltrate you.

We all know that when Islam came, most of those who believed had relatives and friends etc from amongst the disbelievers. Therefore, Allah warned with great caution regarding these ties so that no believer would be deceived in thinking that family ties, friendships or any kind of alliance or relationship would prevent the disbelievers from harming them. Consequently Allah draws the attention of the believers and tells them that brotherhood in faith prevails over all relationships. This is a warning to the believers so that they will not be deceived by those who approach them lovingly in the name of friendship as the gap between belief and disbelief cannot be removed or even narrowed. The disbelievers will not refrain from plotting against you and your religion in whatever way they can, and they will never tire of trying. For this reason, Allah addresses the believers with His command: “Oh you who believe, guard your faith and do not take the disbelievers as close allies or friends or they will continuously attempt to dissuade you from belief. They would not sit back or give up the desire of destroying you. What will the disbelievers do if you take them as bosom friends? The answer is this: They “... spare no effort to ruin you…” (Al-‘Imran: 118) They will never stop plotting against you and will seek every means to corrupt you. Allah says: “Oh you who believe, allado not take for your betanah those who are not from you. They will spare no effort in ruining you and wanting to see you suffer. Their hatred has become evident from their mouths, but what their hearts conceal is far worse. We have made Our Revelations clear for you are you not then going to use your reason?” (Al-‘Imran: 118)

This is a direct command to the believers so as not to take the disbelievers as close friends or advisors. A believer has faith to discipline him, whereas a disbeliever adheres to no law that can deter him. Allowing the disbelievers to be your close allies will give them a chance to sow the seeds of corruption among you for which they will spare no effort. It always pleases them to injure the believers “... and [they] want to see you suffer...” (Al-‘Imran: 118), and Allah does not want to inflict distress or suffering on the believers, and in this regard He says*:* “… And if Allah had wished, He could have put you into difficulties. Truly, Allah is The Almighty, All-Wise.” (al-Baqara: 220)

If He the Exalted had so willed, He would have enjoined on you many things that would involve difficulty but He has made things easy for you, O believers. The disbelievers, in contrast, want to throw the believers into hardship and suffering.

Now, from where does suffering arise? A believer acts upon the command of Allah, and he does what He commands and avoids what He forbids. The disbelievers try to convince a believer in doing what his religion does not allow just so that he would be stripped of inner peace. Torment arises within when one’s actions conflict with his principles, a situation which causes overwhelming worry and confusion due to the uneasy feeling of one’s conscience.

We see this nowadays in the societies that enjoy the highest levels of economic prosperity. In a society where all material needs are answered, the old are provided for with health and social insurance for everyone and high salaries, people should be contented. Nevertheless, we see many such societies where people are generally exhausted, suicide rates are soaring, and perversion is so rife. Loss of inner peace and failure to reconcile with conscience are to be held culprit for this suffering: Peace of mind cannot be attained unless one believes in his Creator and acts upon His guidance. For example, nothing stings the conscience of a man when he looks at his wife because his conscience is in harmony with his action. The contrary happens to him when he turns his eyes to a woman who is unlawful for him as he is afraid of getting caught, whilst doing so. If he is caught in the act, he would tremble and his conscience would be in turmoil.

To protect them from such conflict, Allah warns the believers about the dangers of taking close friends from other than themselves because they will never stop trying to cause them harm and suffering. Suffering comes when a disbeliever tries to get a believer to slide into deviation, confusion, and trouble of his conscience, taking advantage of family ties or friendship. It comes when a believer has to go against his religion to please his disbelieving relatives and friends etc. A believer cannot satisfy both what the religion requires from him and what a disbeliever wants him to do, therefore creating a gap that comes in between his conscience and actions, hence the suffering and trouble. The disbelievers would not miss any opportunity to corrupt the believers; they take advantage of every opportunity and use it against the believers.

“Oh you who believe, do not take for your betanah those who are not from you. They will spare no effort in ruining you and wanting to see you suffer. Their hatred has become evident from their mouths…” (Al-‘Imran: 118).

As long as hatred has emerged from their mouths, how can we take them as close friends? When you surround yourself with a group of disbelievers and make them your close company or advisors, be aware that you are only among a group of hypocrites who are not in harmony with themselves and who will spare no effort to drag you to their confusion and misguidance. A hypocrite says with his tongue the opposite of what he harbors in his heart. Then, when he is among those like him, he scornfully passes on what the believers have said.

This is how powerful the hatred that comes from the mouths of the hypocrites is, who are neither one thing nor another, neither with one group, nor with the other. They have no allegiance to either faith or disbelief. The amount of hatred that manifests itself before the believers is but a small pebble of the mountain their hearts conceal. The hypocrites would unveil such hatred only among themselves and would exchange words of scorn and mockery of the believers only in their absence. Still, Allah knows best what they mean and what they conceal, so He exposes them to the believers.

The Omnipotent Knowledge of Almighty Allah encompasses all secrets. The disbelievers and hypocrites should have known that Allah guards the faith of the believers and warns them against the subtlest dangers that might threaten it. However, the people of disbelief and hypocrisy were foolish and they were taught a lesson when Allah revealed His words: "...their hatred is evident from their mouths, but what their hearts conceal is far worse…" (Al-'Imran: 118). They had an opportunity to defend themselves had their hearts been free of the bitterness ascribed to them in the noble verse, but they came to realize that Allah was already aware of what was in their hearts. Hatred in the hearts of those malicious disbelievers appeared from their mouths, but who told Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and his Companions of what was in the hearts of the disbelievers, which was even worse? Almighty Allah exposed them when He sent down His words*:* "... but what their hearts conceal is far worse…" (Al-'Imran: 118). Therefore, the believers have no excuse since Allah has guided and showed them how to protect their faith. He has explained to the believers that their enemies will never stop plotting against them to dissuade them from faith, so the believers have to be careful.

This is why Allah closes the verse by saying*:* "...We have made Our ayat (signs, revelation) clear for you so will you not then use your reason?" (Al-'Imran: 118) The signs sent down by Almighty Allah clarify this, and we have already learnt that the word ayat (literally meaning "miracles") can refer to either Quranic Revelations or signs of the creation. Both the Quran and the universe flourish in divine miracles. Let us consider what Allah says about this in relation to the Quran: "When We substitute one verse for another– and Allah already knows best what He reveals– they say, 'You are just making it up,' but most of them have no knowledge." (an-Nahl: 101)

In relation to the universe, He the Exalted and Almighty says*:* “The night, the day, the sun, the moon, are only a few of His ayat (signs). Do not bow down in worship to the sun or the moon, but bow down to Allah Who created them, if it is truly Him that you worship.” (Fussilat: 37)

So we understand that the word ayat denotes an amazing thing, a miraculous sign that we must heed from which to derive guidance. In this light, ayat (as in verses) of the Quran presents to us guidance from Allah and ayat (as in signs) of the universe bear testimony to the Truth of the Quranic verses. A believer should reflect on both in order to be guided to the Straight Path of Allah. The believers have indeed taken heed of the warning. The aforementioned verse has forbidden them from taking close friends or advisors from other than the followers of the faith and the following verse proves that they have understood the message and submitted to the command of Allah*:* “This is how it is: here you are, you love them, but they do not love you; you believe in all the Scriptures and when they meet you, they say, ‘We believe,’ but when they are alone, they bite their fingertips in rage at you...” (Al-'Imran: 119).

هَٰٓأَنتُمۡ أُوْلَآءِ تُحِبُّونَهُمۡ وَلَا يُحِبُّونَكُمۡ وَتُؤۡمِنُونَ بِٱلۡكِتَٰبِ كُلِّهِۦ وَإِذَا
لَقُوكُمۡ قَالُوٓاْ ءَامَنَّا وَإِذَا خَلَوۡاْ عَضُّواْ عَلَيۡكُمُ ٱلۡأَنَامِلَ مِنَ ٱلۡغَيۡظِۚ قُلۡ
مُوتُواْ بِغَيۡظِكُمۡۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ عَلِيمُۢ بِذَاتِ ٱلصُّدُورِ ﴿١١٩﴾

This is how it is: here you are, you love them, but they do not love you; you believe in all the Scriptures and when they meet you, they say, ‘We believe,’ but when they are alone, they bite their fingertips in rage at you. [Prophet], say, ‘Die of rage [if you wish]!’ God knows exactly what is in everyone’s hearts [119] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 119)

Allah still addresses the believers on the issue of closeness and alliance with the disbelievers. The verse implies that the faith of the believers has remained firm so much so, that it was they who tried to dissuade the disbelievers from denying the Truth and have them taste the sweetness of belief. The efforts of the disbelievers were rendered fruitless. They did not manage to drag the believers to deviation or stop themselves from denying faith. The only choice left for them, therefore, was hypocrisy, so they said to the believers: "... 'We believe'..." (Al-'Imran: 119) The verse testifies that the believers have indeed grasped the admonition sent down to them by Allah, but why, then, does He say*:* "... Here you are; you love them, but they do not love you..."?

Love on the side of the believers was represented in their keenness to save the disbelievers from the tough outcomes of disbelief both in this life and in the afterlife. This is true love, but did the disbelievers reciprocate that love? No. They wanted to drag the believers into disbelief which proves the fact that they harboured nothing except hatred and grudges for the believers. The disbelievers, however, completely failed to achieve their purpose, so they resorted to lying by saying*:* "... 'We believe'..." (Al-'Imran: 119) Since the believers remained absolutely firm and their faith was undeviating, the disbelievers had no choice but to cheat them through hypocrisy: "…and when they meet you, they say, 'We believe,'…" (Al-'Imran: 119) Despair is what drove them to making that allegation despite their hatred already appearing from their mouths. In their perplexity and rage, they failed to let their words support their behavior. The Muslims already began to restrain their love for the disbelievers which ignited worries of the latter who feared that if the Muslims continued to be so constantly firm, their would be no chance for them to deviate or harm them. In order to avoid this, they claimed to have embraced faith and suppressed their grudges until they were alone to spell it out secretly, away from the believers. Nevertheless, Allah has exposed their real attitude to the believers by saying*:* "… but when they are alone, they bite their fingertips in rage at you…" (Al-'Imran: 119). What does it mean to "bite"?

Linguistically, the word "biting" means holding something between the jaws in order to tear it. The aforementioned verse makes use of the habit of "biting the fingertips" to depict the rage of the disbelievers. It is a forced nervous reaction that involves no thinking or control. No one wants to keep on biting their fingertips since it is a painful thing. Despite this, excessive rage would push a person to involuntarily bite their fingertips. It is as though the feeling of anger automatically prevails over the feeling of pain and almost eliminates it. Where does this rage come from? What ignited the disbelievers' rage was failure to dissuade the believers even slightly from adhering to the guidance of Allah. Rather, the opposite happened; the believers tried to attract the disbelievers to the light of faith. The disbelievers attempted to infiltrate the believers in the name of friendship in order to spread corruption among them. Failing to achieve their purpose this made them fall into extreme rage. One would fall prey to rage when they are unable to vent their anger on their enemies, so if a believer wants to counter the grudge of his opponent, he should shower kindness and generosity to him, an act which will only increase their rage and bitterness. Islam teaches a believer not to repay an injury or injustice done to them and that two wrongs do not make a right. Instead, a believer's conduct and attitude should be based on the following narrative: "We do not repay those who disobey Allah with regard to us except by obeying Him with regard to them."

The Muslims' kindness to them strips them of their power to harm and therefore only hardens their grudge, rage, and bitterness against Islam. The Early Muslims behaved in this way and their faith was as firm as the mountains.

The enemies of Islam disobey Allah by the manner in which they treat Muslims, but it befits a dignified believer to offer kindness and generosity as a reward for this hatred and injury. Therefore seeing their plots rendered futile, rage and grudge eat into the hearts of the enemies of Islam. Once alone, they release their repressed rage so much so, that they bite their own fingertips which, as we know, is a forced nervous reaction spontaneously resulting from anger and failure to fulfill one's purpose. Every perceptual influence on the human soul causes an emotional response that manifests itself through involuntary physical reaction. Arouse someone's anger and they will immediately fall into a fit of verbal frenzy. Such an immediate response is usually associated with warm heartedness. As for a person who can stay composed at times of anger, he should be treated with caution. Such a person would continue to check his emotions and it is just unpredictable when anger and bitterness overpower him. Ait is as the saying goes: "Beware of the rage of a forbearing person," i.e. when emotions accumulate in a patient heart, no one knows when the dam will overflow.

So perception arouses emotions which a person responds to with a physical action. Islamic Law does not require a person to be a voiceless stone without ever reacting; rather, it simply requires a Muslim to be polite and reasonable in his reaction. Allah guides the believers to this discipline by praising in the Quran those who: "…restrain their anger and pardon people– Allah loves those who do good." (Al-'Imran: 134)

The Quran recognizes that some events will make a person angry and the one who never feels angry at all behaves in a way that is inconsistent with human nature. Allah wants the human being to remain a human being, with the natural emotions and reactions associated with his disposition; however, our Creator and Guide, wants to refine the reactions of this human being. We have the best example in The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him by his reaction to the death of his son, Ibrahim. Upon hearing of this news, he said: "The eyes shed tears, and the heart grieves, yet we do not say except that which pleases our Lord. O Ibrahim, for your loss we are deeply saddened!"

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him has struck a balance between emotions and faith. Cry we must. Grieve we must. We are not expected to remain feelingless in the face of hardship, but we are only required to react in a way that shows respect for Allah. The Quran requires a Muslim to be an upright person, yet it does not teach us that "upright" means to act like a creature made of iron or stone where nothing can change or affect him. Rather, Allah the Almighty describes the true believers by saying: "…people who are humble towards the believers, hard on the disbelievers…." (al-Ma'ida: 54)

So a believer is not a creature who is set to always be humble or always be hard; rather he reacts differently to different circumstances, which is normal. When a situation demands humility and modesty, a believer should be humble; when a situation demands strength in the face of arrogant disbelief, a believer should be stern. Allah the Almighty says about the believers: "Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah. Those who follow him are harsh towards the disbelievers and compassionate towards each other. You see them kneeling and prostrating, seeking Allah's bounty and His good pleasure…" (al-Fath: 29).

Therefore, a believer is not made to constantly be lenient or tough. Instead, he responds to events, so when a believer is among believers, he is compassionate and when he is confronting the disbelievers, he is strong and severe. Allah Glorified is He has not created a human being to remain continuously fixed to a single pattern of behavior. Allah just wants a believer to refine his behavior in the face of events, so He says in praise of the believers: "…those who restrain their anger and pardon people– Allah loves those who do good." (Al-'Imran: 134)

He the Exalted also says*:* "If you [believers] have to respond to an attack, make your response proportionate..." (an-Nahl: 126). So Allah does not forbid a believer from punishing someone for their crime or to fight them in order to restore his rights which have been taken away from him. This is because Allah has created humankind and knows them best. He does not want us to act against our nature otherwise our very faith would be endangered. If a believer relinquished his rights, the disbelievers would give themselves free rein in corruption and evildoing. For this end, a believer should understand the rules of carrying out legal punishments even if it is against the believers who commit crimes. This is to make it clear to everyone that anyone who dares transgress the limits set by Allah must and will receive his fair recompense. Allah even encourages a believer to transcend revenge. Therefore, a believer may either execute punishment in proportion to the offense done or rise above recompense and heed the words of Allah when he says*:* "... but if you are patient, it will certainly be best for those who are patient." (an-Nahl: 126)

Allah has prescribed for the believers the rule of retribution but he also guided them on how to rise above revenge and commit themselves to patience. This way, Allah does not want to set human nature in a stone mould otherwise He would not have created this variable nature within us. He the Exalted explains to us that there there exists the feeling of anger but that a believer should try to keep check on his anger and should not express it in an overdone manner. When a believer can overcome the frenzy of anger, it means he has managed to pass the test and transcend nervousness. So we've learnt that restraining one's anger means that the believer does not express his exasperation emotionally. That is, if someone insults you, you do not insult them in return. This suppression of anger means keeping emotions in the heart. If a believer rises above this and refrains from even getting agitated, he takes the rage out of his heart and truly rises above the situation. Allah describes him as having attained the rank of utmost devotion by saying*:* "and Allah loves the doers of good (to others)." (Al-'Imran: 134) Therefore, by using kind words, a believer treats the one who angers him better.

What would the attitude of the person who offended you be then, O believer, after you first restrained your anger, then forgave and after that -if you managed to take the rage out of your heart- you reached the third stage which represents the peak of faith 'ihsan' (utmost devotion) as Allah says: "and Allah loves the doers of good (to others)." (Al-'Imran: 134). The person who provoked your anger would certainly reconsider his action and regret what he has done.

Islam does not neglect human emotions when it requires believers to treat well those who treat them badly. Those who think deeply will see that Islam gives the believers the right to behave according to the human nature. This is evident in The Quran when Allah says: “And if you punish [an attacker, O believers], punish similarly to that with which you were harmed.” (an-Nahl: 126). However, Islam elevates the believer to a higher level.

When we consider this, figuratively, as an economical issue (a matter of loss and gain) we will conclude that the believer has made a gain. For example, when a father sees that one of his sons has wronged the other, the father’s heart will be with the one who has been wronged. Imagine that a person abuses one of Allah’s servants?! Allah, as The Lord and Protector, will certainly be on the side of his servant who has been wronged. We know that a person once said to a man who was very close to Allah: ‘How is it that you treat well those who harm you?!’ The man replied: ‘should I not treat well those who have been the cause of Allah being on my side?’

Let us now return to the rage of the disbelievers towards the believers. The disbeliever is offended because his rival, the believer, wishes him to have faith and has no malice in his heart whereas the disbeliever is full of enmity. It leads the disbeliever to nearly lose his mind. That is why the True Lord says: “but when they are alone, they bite their fingertips in rage at you.” (Al-‘Imran: 119)

The meaning of ‘find themselves alone’ is that when they are in a gathering composed entirely of disbelievers they openly announce their hatred for the believers. They bite their fingertips in rage in the absence of those who believe in Allah. If these disbelievers had an atom’s weight of contemplation, they would have wondered how the Quran exposed them when they had carried out this action behind the backs of the believers.

Did their thoughts not lead them to the notion that these believers had a Lord who informed His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, of these hidden matters and that the Messenger then passed them on to the believers?

Despite this, they did not understand this exposure of their conduct: "but when they are alone, they bite their fingertips in rage at you." (Al-'Imran: 119) Here, we should be aware that there are things that might cause rage, but a person might be too frightened to show his reaction. If someone makes you angry, you might go straight to him and be emotionally reactive or you might keep your emotions to yourself, which is known as 'diversion of emotions'. An angry person's heart is filled with rage. The opponent whom he would react wrathfully against might be powerful and influential. As a result he timidly avoids a fiery outburst against that person. So, he then vents his anger out on himself, by biting his fingertips. If this is the case, the True Lord says to His Messenger: 'Say: "[Prophet], say, 'Die of rage [if you wish]!' Allah most definitely knows what is in everyone's hearts."' (Al-'Imran: 119) What this verse is telling the disbelievers is, the rage that the believers cause within you, O' disbelievers, will continue until you perish in your rage, so your attempt to draw the believers into disbelief is futile. 'Say: "Die of rage!"' (Al-'Imran: 119)

We know that when a person is commanded to do something that is not of his choice, such as dying, and he has to choose between this and something that he is capable of choosing such as rage, it means that the commandment has been issued to him to remain a prisoner of what is within his power, which is rage, until death comes to him.

When the True Lord says: "Die of rage" (Al-'Imran: 119), this means that the disbelievers would not be able to perish but would remain in a state of rage until they perish because they do not know when they would die. Therefore they would remain in a state of rage against the believers and for as long as the disbelievers are enraged by the believers; this indicates that the believers are implementing their religion correctly.

This verse is a conveyor of glad tidings to the believers and a severe warning to the disbelievers: "Say [Prophet], 'Die of rage [if you wish]!' Allah most definitely knows exactly what is in everyone's hearts." (Al-'Imran: 119).

The True Lord is telling us that He has full knowledge of what is in the hearts, i.e. the things that occur to the mind but have not yet been articulated as speech and He Glorified is He said before*:* “but what their hearts conceal is far worse.” (Al-‘Imran: 118)

As long as He is the True Lord Who has full knowledge of what the hearts conceal, He is able not only to requite them for the physical actions that they do, but is also able to requite them by exposing the actions that they conceal in their hearts. After this, He says*:*

إِن تَمْسَسْكُمْ حَسَنَةٌ تَسُؤْهُمْ وَإِن تُصِبْكُمْ سَيِّئَةٌ يَفْرَحُوا بِهَا ۖ
وَإِن تَصْبِرُوا وَتَتَّقُوا لَا يَضُرُّكُمْ كَيْدُهُمْ شَيْئًا ۗ إِنَّ اللَّهَ بِمَا
يَعْمَلُونَ مُحِيطٌ ﴿١٢٠﴾

They grieve at any good that befalls you [believers] and rejoice at your misfortunes. But if you are steadfast and conscious of God, their scheming will not harm you in the least: God encircles everything they do [120] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 120)

The Quran is the word of Allah, and He Glorified is He has absolute omnipotence and complete self-sufficiency. Several expressions for one meaning might actually differ because every situation has its appropriate expression. Allah selects the appropriate term with absolute accuracy. He Glorified is He says*:* “Man was truly created anxious. When misfortune touches him he is distressed but when good fortune comes his way he is stingy. Except those who pray and are consistent in their prayers.” (al-Ma’arij: 19-23)

Allah Glorified is He also says*:* “Anything good that happens to you [Prophet] is from Allah and anything bad that happens to you is [ultimately] from yourself. We have sent you as a messenger to people and Allah is sufficient as a witness.” (an-Nisa’: 79)

Allah the Exalted sometimes talks about good and evil ‘coming’, and sometimes refers to what happens to mankind as the ‘befalling’ of good or evil. In the verse which we are currently examining, we find the two expressions, for He the Exalted says*:* "If good fortune comes to you, it grieves them; and if evil befalls you, they rejoice in it…" (Al-‘Imran: 120). He did not refer to both as 'coming to you', nor as 'befalling you'. This is the speech of a Wise Lord and when we examine the meaning closely, we will surely say: 'This is a speech that none but a Wise Lord would say.'

Let us now define the terms 'coming' and 'befalling'. Some scholars say they mean the same thing citing as evidence for this when Allah says*:* "Man was truly created anxious. When misfortune touches him he is distressed but when good fortune comes his way he is stingy. Except those who pray and are consistent in their prayers." (al-Ma'arij: 19-21)

However, we say that the word 'coming' (which in Arabic is "mass" and linguistically means 'touching') is the establishment of a connection between two components. If a man touches his wife, we say he needs to make the lesser ablution because he has only touched her. It is nothing more than a touch so he has no need to make the greater ablution. As for 'befalling', it means more than just touching. The one who strikes someone else might give them a bump on the head. The hand makes contact with the cheek and injures the temple (in Arabic the word for 'injure' is (isaba), which is the same as the word for 'befall'). So, we see that there is a difference between 'coming' and 'befalling' and when the True Lord says*:* "If good fortune comes to you, it grieves them" (Al-'Imran: 120).

This means that the good fortune that comes is not much, not a great one but only some gain or a small amount of wealth. In our daily lives, we find people who are enraged simply because their rival earns ten pence more and someone might say to them: 'why do you not keep your rage until he earns one hundred pounds, for example?' This kind of anger at small instances of good fortune indicates that any good that comes to the believers will only cause annoyance and outrage to the disbelievers. By the mere coming of good fortune to the believers, the disbelievers are aggravated; what then, about bad fortune?

The True Lord says*:* "and if evil befalls you, they rejoice in it" (Al-'Imran: 120). The disbelievers rejoice at any evil that befalls the believers, though, in accordance to human nature, those who hold grudges should become merciful in such a situation: It is enough of a calamity to befall a person that you see those who hate him show him mercy! That is, it is enough evidence that a person has been surrounded with calamity that those who had previously held grudges against him show him mercy, and say: ‘By Allah, I feel sorry for him!’

So, when the believers were encircled with difficulty, did this change the disbelievers’ attitude? No. The disbelievers used to rejoice at the difficulties of the believers and when even the slightest bit of good fortune came to the believers, they were outraged. The True Lord says*:* "If good fortune comes to you, it grieves them" (Al-‘Imran: 120) and this refers to any slight good fortune that may come to them. Allah also says*:* "and if evil befalls you, they rejoice in it. But if you are patient in adversity and conscious of Allah, their deceit cannot harm you at all" (Al-‘Imran: 120). In other words no matter what they plot against you, they will never harm you.

What is required from you is to show patience in the face of their enmity, evil, their rejoicing at your discomfort and their grief in the good that comes to you. Have patience, and you will be invincible. Be patient, and their deceit will never affect you. Be patient and be pious to Allah. This will guarantee that Allah will be on your side. "But if you are patient in adversity and are conscious of Allah then their deceit will never harm you at all" (Al-‘Imran: 120).

What is deceit? Deceit is that you plot and plan to harm someone, whilst making it appear that it was someone else who plotted against them. It is planning to hurt others. The word deceit (which in Arabic is ‘kayd’), is derived from the two Arabic words ‘kayd’ (deceit) ‘Kabid’ (liver). Both words refer to one meaning because whatever harms the liver causes pain, as it is one of the strongest organs of the human body and if it is harmed, the person is injured and incapacitated. There is a saying in Arabic which says: ‘So-and-so has reached the liver of the truth’, i.e. he has reached the core of the issue about which he is speaking.

What does “plot by night” mean? They say: plotting is not evidence of bravery. When you see someone planning and engaging in plots, know that he is a coward because a brave person does not plot and plan behind one’s back. Only those who are too weak to face confrontation do so. If you are patient in the midst of their plotting and are conscious of Allah then their deceit will never harm you because Allah will be with you.

The True Lord ends the verse with the noble words: "Verily, Allah encompasses all that they do" (Al-'Imran: 120). The word 'encompasses' explains to you that He has full knowledge and awareness of everything. Encompassment means that nothing escapes Him. This verse is referring to a specific event in the history of Islam about which Allah, the True Lord says with emphasis: "But if you are patient in adversity and conscious of Allah then their deceit will never harm you at all: for, verily, Allah encompasses all that they do" (Al-'Imran: 120). We must all keep in mind the truth of this statement.

Allah also says*:*

وَإِذۡ غَدَوۡتَ مِنۡ أَهۡلِكَ تُبَوِّئُ ٱلۡمُؤۡمِنِينَ مَقَٰعِدَ لِلۡقِتَالِۗ وَٱللَّهُ سَمِيعٌ عَلِيمٌ ١٢١

[Prophet], remember when you left your home at dawn to assign battle positions to the believers: God hears and knows everything [121] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 121)

On this occasion (the battle of Uhud), the disbelievers were three thousand in number, whereas the believers were the minority, with only seven hundred warriors. The True Lord verifies the truth of His words when he says*:* "But if you are patient in adversity and conscious of Allah then their deceit will never harm you at all" (Al-'Imran: 120) ; and the meaning here is not a secret plot; rather, it refers to their open action, i.e. remember the truth of this matter, "when you, [O Muhammad], left your family in the morning" (Al-'Imran: 121). Here it refers to 'Aisha's apartment because Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was there at the time when the disbelievers of Quraysh wanted to avenge the dead and the captives of Badr. They gathered their hordes. Every individual from the battle of Badr had two horses and men. After the battle of Badr, their leader Abu Sufyan told them: 'Tell your women not to weep for the dead because weeping takes away sadness, as they used to refer to tears as the "cleansers of sadness" or the "dissolvers of griefs" and when a grieving person weeps, those around him say: 'leave him to find rest.'

If the women grieved and wept for those who died in the battle of Badr, the urgency of revenge would have subsided and so Abu Sufyan said: 'Tell them (the women) not to weep.' He wanted the rage over Badr to remain until revenge is taken. Three thousand warriors all assembled in the ranks of disbelief at Uhud and The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him sought the advice of his companions in the matter and sent for one of the leaders of the hypocrites, ‘Abdullah ibn Ubayy ibn Salul whom he had not called on before except in this battle. ‘Abdullah ibn Ubayy ibn Salul and many of the Ansar (the people of Medina who supported The Prophet Muhammad) said: ‘O Messenger of Allah, we have never gone out of the city to fight except that the enemy have caused us great loss and no enemy has ever entered upon us except that we have caused them great loss and so we think that you should not go out to them. If they stay, their plight will be wretched and if they enter, the men will fight them full on and the women and children will pelt them with stones from above and they will return home dejected.’ Yet, other companions suggested going out of Medina to fight them, by saying: ‘O Messenger of Allah, come out with us to our enemies, so they will not think that we are too cowardly and weak to face them.’ The people who held this opinion did not leave the The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him alone until he had agreed with what they wanted.

The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him entered his house, put on his armour and took up his weapon. Those who had insisted that The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would be better off going out to fight began to think that they had persuaded him into doing something that he did not agree with, so they regretted their actions and when he came out, they said: ‘O Messenger of Allah, we have persuaded you, and it was not for us to do so. If you wish, stay.’ The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him replied: “It is not for a Prophet, when he has put on his armour, to remove it until he has fought.”

So they went out to fight and it is this event that the Quran reminds us of to show the truthfulness of the previous verse: "But if you are patient in adversity and are conscious of Allah then their deceit will never harm you at all: for, verily, Allah encompasses all that they do". And [remember] when you, [O Muhammad], left your family in the morning to post the believers at their stations for the battle [of Uhud]" (Al-‘Imran: 120-121).

Notice the syntactic precision of the words of Allah when He says: "And [remember] When you, [O Muhammad], left your family in the morning to post the believers at their stations for the battle [of Uhud]" (Al-'Imran: 120), i.e. to identify a place to which they would return and remain. The word 'stations' here (maqa'id) means fixed positions, for war is composed of attacking, retreating, and standing. Allah makes firm those who fight in battle as though they are made to reside in their homeland. It is as though the Messenger's command to the troops includes that they should give no attention to anything except to their positions, which He peace and blessings be upon him had fixed and arranged for them. It is as if these stations have become their homeland and the future of their faith depends on this.

So, His words: "Wa-idh ghadawta min ahlika tubawwi'o" "And [remember] when you, [O Muhammad], left your family in the morning to post" (Al-'Imran: 121) i.e. to identify the stations for "the believers", and to say to them: 'your abode is now the position in which I have placed you'. the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him (God) peace and blessings be upon him took the archers, who numbered fifty, and appointed Abdullah ibn Jubayr as their leader, then, said to them: "Stay in your station here, and protect our backs. If you see that we have gained victory, do not join us; and if you see us being slain, do not come to our aid."

But they were unable to do this because they were inclined towards the battle-spoils, and Allah willed that experience to take place in the presence of His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him peace and blessings be upon him, To show the believers, in every battle that followed, that abiding by the instructions of the leader is the basis of being in the military; and that if you disobey the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him, you will surely be defeated.

Someone might say: 'Islam was defeated at Uhud.' The answer is: no, Islam was victorious; if the Muslims had been given victory at Uhud, despite the disobedience of the archers to the order of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, would the commands of the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him have been followed?

So, the Muslims who failed to obey the order were defeated, and they had to have this experience, whilst they were with the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. When victory seemed destined for the believers early on in the battle, the troops began to busy themselves with gathering plunder and spoils, and the archers said: ‘Everyone will take the spoils, and leave us with nothing!’ So they went down to take the spoils, and Khalid ibn Al-Walid Allah be pleased with him, who was still at that time on the religion of his tribe, took the opportunity to encircle them, and chaos erupted. The news of the death of the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him spread among the people, so they turned and fled, and the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him (God) peace and blessings be upon him began to call: “Come to me, servants of God!” until a group of his companions rallied round him, and he rebuked them for fleeing, when they said: ‘O Messenger of Allah, ‘Let our fathers and mothers be sacrificed for you! We heard news of your death, and our hearts trembled, and we turned on our heels!’ An accurate chronicle of the battle of Uhud shows that it was neither a defeat nor a victory because the battle was undecided.

Afterwards the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him called upon those who were with him at Uhud to go and find the enemy. They overtook them at Hamra’a Al-Asad, and the disbelievers fled. Allah wanted to give the believers a lesson in the importance of following the orders of the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him. The True Lord said: "And [remember] When you, [O Muhammad], left your family in the morning to post the believers at their stations for the battle [of Uhud]" (Al-‘Imran: 120). The True Lord reminds us of the responsibilities of the leader, who appoints duties, and the ranks of the army; the right wing, the left wing, the forefront army, and the back army.

He ends the verse by saying: “and Allah is Hearing and Knowing” (Al-‘Imran: 121) so that the believers know that He indeed witnessed His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him placing the believers in battle array, and that He is All Knowing of what the intentions were because the purpose of the war was defending the faith: not just submission of outer forms, but submission of hearts, on the first place.

The True Lord then says: "When two parties among you were about to lose courage, but Allah was their ally... ".

إِذْ هَمَّت طَّآئِفَتَانِ مِنكُمْ أَن تَفْشَلَا وَٱللَّهُ وَلِيُّهُمَا ۗ وَعَلَى ٱللَّهِ فَلْيَتَوَكَّلِ ٱلْمُؤْمِنُونَ ﴿١٢٢﴾

Remember when two groups of you were about to lose heart and God protected them – let the believers put their trust in God [122] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 122)

To 'lose heart' means to be afraid; and the two groups were Banu Haritha of Al-Aws, and Banu Salama of Al-Khazraj. They were the left and right flanks, and were on their way to battle, when they heard the hypocrite Ibn Salul say: 'There will be no fighting, for as soon as the troops of Quraysh see us, they will flee.'

The hypocrite Ibn Salul then said to the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him: 'If we knew how to fight, we would have followed you.' But 'Abdullah ibn Haritha said: 'I implore you for Allah's sake, and I implore you for the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him's (God's) sake, and I implore you for your religion's sake!' And so they went to fight, and stood firm, after they had considered going back.

What does 'were about to' mean here? To be about to do something refers to the mind when it inclines to a certain action. This inclination then moves to the second stage, and becomes a firm intention. What they did was just an inclination to withdraw; but they stood firm. Why was this? By this, Allah wanted to emphasize that Islam is logical in its view of mankind. Many thoughts would occur to the mind of man. That is why the True Lord mentioned this issue in order to provide us with its remedy, saying: "when two groups of you were about to lose heart" (Al-'Imran: 122).

One person from amongst these two groups said: 'I am happy that I wavered because this confirms that I am one of those about whom Allah said: "but Allah was their ally" (Al-'Imran: 122), and Allah's alliance is sufficient to me.' He was happy because he had received a badge of honour: Allah's alliance.

Thus, we receive the lessons revealed in the noble verses concerning the battle of Uhud, and we know that this battle followed the great battle of Badr. The battle of Badr ended in victory for the Muslims, although they were fewer in number and preparations. At Badr, the Muslims did not go to battle to start a war; they only went to seize the wealth of Quraysh's caravan, in recompense for the wealth they had left in Mecca. Despite this, Allah willed that they should not confront only a laden caravan, but that they should face the armed troops – and victory was theirs.

This victory, however, despite casting fear into the hearts of the enemies of the Muslims, also accumulated their fervor to muster their forces to deliver a blow which would regain the advantage for the side of disbelief. This is why the heads of Quraysh forbade their women from weeping for their dead, because weeping relieves an anguished soul, and they wanted to keep the sorrow fresh so that they could stir up a hateful grudge that would incite the people to seek revenge. From an emotional perspective, they wanted to keep emotions inflamed. From a financial perspective, they saved the money of the caravan they had managed to save, as means to plan for another battle in which their supremacy would be restored.

Before Uhud they tried to do something, but they were always sent back on their heels. For example, Abu Sufyan led a campaign of one hundred men to attack Medina; but when news of this reached the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, he rushed with his companions toward them. Abu Sufyan heard of this, and fled with the rest of the raiders, casting off their possessions on the way to lighten the load of the animals so they would be able to move faster. This was known as the battle of ‘Suwayq’, because the raiders abandoned their rations, which was mainly a kind of food called ‘suwayq’ (fine flour).

Likewise, groups of disbelievers attempted to assault Medina several times after this, but every time, the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him went out to meet them at the head of groups of warriors. Sometimes they numbered one hundred, sometimes one hundred and fifty, and sometimes two hundred; every time, the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him dispersed them. It was part of his strategy peace and blessings be upon him, that when pursued people who he had heard were planning to invade Madina, that he would remain in their city and amongst their forces for long periods of time.

All this took place before Uhud; afterwards, they gathered to go out to the battle of Uhud, and things happened as they did. The verses that discuss this battle include allusions to what happened on the battlefield. The Messenger peace and blessings be upon him arranged the troops in their battle array, and ordered them to stand firm in their positions; but some of them left their places, and others were about to turn back, and then at last stood firm, and the disbelievers of Quraysh fled. In the course of the battle, many of Allah's great signs were manifested.

When Allah Glorified and Exalted is He granted victory to the Muslims at Badr, though they were a minority, they had not gone out to fight in a battle, but had only intended to seize a caravan.

Perhaps some of them imagined that it was only their being associated with Allah and Islam would lead to constant victory, regardless of the means. So, Allah wanted to teach them that it is essential to make use of the means, attaching importance to preparations as well as numbers, and obeying the rules of the leader.

When they disobeyed, what happened had to happen. Their disobedience did not occur until they were on the brink of victory, and so sixty verses now follow concerning this battle, in order to fully explain all the lessons that we can derive throughout its proceedings. We know that those who are victorious usually feel prosperous; but the discourse here is concerned with the defeat of those who do not use the means Allah puts at their disposal. This matter needs to be considered, and so the Quran here gives us account of a part of the battle, that we can derive lessons and admonition from it. The first lesson is:

When they went out, the hypocrites, led by Ibn Ubayy, stayed behind; so the battle only came to purify, through trials, the true believers. Purification, through trials, puts the believer through intense struggle, and shows the worth of his steadfastness, and certainty. The True Lord only puts the believers to the test because they would be entrusted, throughout history until The Day of Judgment, with the protection of this creed, and none can undertake this task but the firm-hearted, those who are strong under pressure, and those with aspirations beyond the allures of this world.

After this, He considers the human soul, with its human status; for belief does not reside in the hearts of the Muslims by a proclamation of faith alone; rather, every occasion gives a new gush of the faith that all belief will consist of afterwards. For this reason, the True Lord explains to us that two groups from amongst the believers were about to turn back, for they were only human; but did they act on this inclination, or did they return to Allah's command? They regained their resolve.

So, we see that, from amongst those people who claimed to have faith, some stayed behind from the outset, and others wavered, then, stood firm. The minds began to wander, but those people did not pay heed to their self-talk (misgivings), and stood firm to the end. Some of them were superficially firm, like the archers who at first saw victory. They were from amongst those who stood firm; they did not flee at the outset like Ibn Ubayy, and they were not from amongst those who were about to lose heart. They were from amongst those who stood firm, but at the first sign of victory, they longed for battle-spoils, and disobeyed the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him. Let us read Allah's words: "God fulfilled His promise to you: you were routing them, with His permission, but then you faltered, disputed the order, and disobeyed, once He had brought you within sight of your goal* - some of you desire the gains of this world and others desire the world to come - and then He prevented you from [defeating] them as a punishment. He has now forgiven you: God is most gracious to the believers." (Al-'Imran: 152)

After this, another lesson can be derived, which is that we should never be deluded about any human being. Khalid ibn Al-Walid Allah be pleased with him was the hero of the disbelievers at Uhud, and he seized the opportunity provided by the descent of the archers from their posts, and routed the Muslims army. Then, what was done was done; by Khalid Allah be pleased with him who had not yet embraced Islam at the time. Yet was he not present at the battle of the Trench? Indeed he was present there, and he was present at many battles, fighting on the side of polytheism; yet where was his genius at these battles? Human genius is in conflict with human genius; but no human genius can stand in the way of divine ordain. For this reason, Khalid Allah be pleased with him had no role to play at the battle of the Trench; but his role was apparent at the battle of Uhud because his opponents disobeyed the orders of their leader, and so it was a matter of two opposing human geniuses. Had they remained in the confines of Allah's guidance in their directions, the genius of Khalid Allah be pleased with him would never have been able to match his Lord's ordain.

An accurate chronicle by any military figures who study Uhud would lead them to say that there was no defeat for the Muslims, nor any victory for the disbelievers because victory entails one side forcing the other out of the battlefield, while the victorious party alone remaining there. Did Quraysh remain on the battlefield, or did they flee? Quraysh fled.

Victory also is manifested when a number of those on the losing side are taken captive. Did Quraysh capture a single Muslim? No. They knew that Madina was completely empty of believers and that only the hypocrites, and the weak, had stayed behind, along with the women and children; yet their superficial victory did not render them eligible to enter Medina.

So, they took no captives, took no spoils, did not enter Medina, and did not remain on the battlefield. How could this be called a victory? Rather, we say that the battle reached a stalemate, and the Muslims remained on the battlefield.

Here, true heroism was revealed because, as we said, victory creates an atmosphere of prosperity, and even those who did not fight valiantly seized the occasion and walked about proudly. Whereas, those who were defeated, and saw their leader peace and blessings be upon him injured, and too weak to climb the mountain, that Talha ibn 'Ubayd Allah be pleased with him had to bend his back for the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to lean on so he could climb the rock; and the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was bleeding from where his tooth had been broken, and the rings of the helmet had been driven into his cheek. After all this, what happened? The cry even went up that the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had been killed.

Purification was behind it all; for those who could stand firm after all this were truly worthy to carry the sword to give victory to Allah's word until the rising of the Hour. The Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him missed one of the heroes of Islam who had been with him, who was named Sa'd ibn Ar-Rabi'.

He peace and blessings be upon him said: 'Which man will tell me what has become of Sa'd ibn Ar-Rabi'? Is he amongst the living, or the dead?' A man from the Ansar, Ubayy ibn Ka'b said: 'I went to find news of him, and I saw him; he had seventy wounds caused by stabbing of swords and striking and shooting of arrows and spears. When he saw him in that condition he said: ‘the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him sends you greetings of peace, and asks you: how do you find yourself, which means how are you?'

Sa’d ibn Ar-Rabi‘ replied: 'Tell the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: May Allah grant you on our behalf, a reward higher than the one Allah has ever granted a prophet on behalf of his followers. And tell the Ansar (supporters) that they have no excuse before Allah if the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is harmed and there is still amongst them an eye that blinks!’ Then, he passed away.

Notice his final actions! When he was wounded in the battle so that he could fight with his blade, he used the last strength in him to fight with his speech so that his words would reverberate in the ears of the Muslims, and they would know that those who inflicted wounds upon him did nothing more than to send him closer to meeting his Lord, and to paradise. Every believer wishes for such an end.

We also find that those whom the Quran, excused from participating in war still volunteered to fight! For example, Amr ibn Al-Jumuh was lame, and the lame are excused by Allah from fighting, along with the sick and the blind, for He the Exalted said: “the blind, the lame, and the sick will not be blamed. Allah will admit anyone who obeys Him and His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to Gardens graced with flowing streams; He will painfully punish anyone who turns away.” (al-Fath: 61)

‘Amr ibn Al-Jumuh had four lion-hearted sons who went out to the battle. Yet, he too requested permission from the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to go as well, saying: ‘O Messenger of Allah! My sons want to keep me away from this source of goodness and from going out with you to it, but by Allah, I hope that I will enter paradise with my lameness!’

The Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said to him: “As for you, Allah has removed the duty of Jihad from you. He, then, said to his sons: “It is not for you to forbid him, for perhaps Allah will grant him martyrdom.” And so he went out with them, and was killed.

Another believer said to the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: ‘Messenger of Allah, I saw my son, who was martyred at Badr, in a dream, saying: ‘Father, come to us!’ ‘So I hope that you will let me fight at Uhud.’ He gave him permission, and he fought, got killed, and became a martyr. The splendour of faith and Islamic loyalty were manifested in Hudhayfa ibn Al-Yaman Allah be pleased with him. His father was a very old man and a Muslim, who took his sword and followed the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him hoping that Allah would grant him martyrdom in His cause. He joined the battle without anyone noticing him. The Muslims killed him without recognizing him. His son Hudhayfa Allah be pleased with him said: ‘It is my father, by Allah!’

They swore by Allah that they did not recognize him, speaking the truth. Hudhayfa Allah be pleased with him then said: ‘May Allah forgive you, for He is The Most Merciful.’ the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him wanted to pay his deyyah (blood money), and so Hudhayfa ibn Al-Yaman Allah be pleased with him said: ‘I give it to the Muslims as charity, O Messenger of Allah.’

The events that took place in the battle show us that the battle of Uhud had to be how it was, in order to purify the believers so that they would be worthy to carry Allah’s word, and promote it throughout the earth.

The True Lord Glorified and Exalted is He says: "And already had Allah given you victory at [the battle of] Badr, while you were utterly weak... "

وَلَقَدْ نَصَرَكُمُ ٱللَّهُ بِبَدْرٍ وَأَنتُمْ أَذِلَّةٌ ۖ فَٱتَّقُوا۟ ٱللَّهَ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَشْكُرُونَ ﴿١٢٣﴾

God helped you at Badr when you were very weak.
Be mindful of God, so that you may be grateful [123]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 123)

With this, Allah took them from a battle in which there was a suspicion of defeat, or a lack of clear victory, to a battle that they won, as though He wanted to say: ‘Your affairs are in the hands of your God, who is watching you, aiding you, providing for you and taking care of you. Beware of relying on numbers and harness; rather, rely on the True Lord Glorified and Exalted is He and on whatever direction He wants for you, because Allah's succour is only provided for those who are prepared to receive it, not to those who are not.'

We know that there is a difference between an action and a response; an action is one thing, and the response to the action is something else. An example of this is that an action is one, but the response might differ. To make this clear, consider when you take a cup of tea, and find it too hot, so you blow in it to make it cool down; and in the winter, you find your hands are cold, so you blow on them to warm them up. You blow in one situation to cool down the tea, and in another to warm your hands. The action is one: blowing; but the corresponding responses are different. So, there is an action, and a response. Another example: the Quran is the word of Allah; and even if it were sent down upon the mountains, they would fall down in humility. Despite this, some people hear it, and Allah does not cover up their fault, but rather reveals it to us, by His divine might: "Some of these people listen to you [Prophet], but, once they leave your presence, they sneer at those who have been given knowledge, saying, 'What was that he just said?' These are the ones whose hearts Allah has sealed, those who follow their own desires."(Muhammad: 16)

They did not react to the Quran, and when they said: 'What has he said just now?' It refers to the way they belittled what they heard. We find that the True Lord responds to this by saying: "These are the ones whose hearts Allah has sealed, those who follow their own desires." (Muhammad: 16)

The action is one, but the responses differ. The True Lord continues His wise notification with His words: "Allah helped you at Badr when you were very weak. Be mindful of Allah so that you may be grateful." (Al-'Imran: 123) So, Allah's aid to you only comes for a believing receiver; and if there is no one to receive it, there is no aid. If you are unable to receive divinely granted aid, we say to you: repair your means of reception because it is like a broken radio: the broadcast is being continually sent, but a broken radio does not receive it. So, if you want to receive from Allah, your means of reception must be sound. The True Lord the Exalted explains this further with His words: "Remember when you said to the believers, 'Will you be satisfied if your Lord reinforces you by sending down three thousand angels?'"'

إِذْ تَقُولُ لِلْمُؤْمِنِينَ أَلَن يَكْفِيَكُمْ أَن يُمِدَّكُمْ رَبُّكُم
بِثَلَٰثَةِ ءَالَٰفٍ مِّنَ ٱلْمَلَٰٓئِكَةِ مُنزَلِينَ ﴿١٢٤﴾

Remember when you said to the believers, Will you be satisfied if your Lord reinforces you by sending down three thousand angels? [124] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 124)

He Glorified and Exalted is He then explains how the means of reception can be rectified, in order that Allah’s aid can be received, saying:

بَلَىٰٓ ۚ إِن تَصْبِرُوا۟ وَتَتَّقُوا۟ وَيَأْتُوكُم مِّن فَوْرِهِمْ هَٰذَا يُمْدِدْكُمْ
رَبُّكُم بِخَمْسَةِ ءَالَٰفٍ مِّنَ ٱلْمَلَٰٓئِكَةِ مُسَوِّمِينَ ﴿١٢٥﴾

Well, if you are steadfast and mindful of God, your Lord will reinforce you with five thousand swooping angels if the enemy should suddenly attack you!’ and God arranged it so [125] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 125)

The True Lord Glorified and Exalted is He gives us the example of patience and piety at Badr, when the believers were few, and still victory was attained. At Uhud, they were not patient, and when they saw the battle-spoils, they began to salivate, and did not show patience; and they were not conscious of Allah’s command delivered through the words of His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, which were to keep to their positions. So how could they be worthy of divine aid?

So, what determines aid? Allah is the one who gives aid; but who is capable of receiving it, and benefiting from it? It is the one who is able to be patience and conscious of Allah.

So, patience and consciousness to Allah are the harness of war, every bit of them is as important as numbers and preparations. For this reason, our Lord said to us: "And prepare against them whatever you are able of power" (al-Anfal: 60) "prepare for them what you think you need to defeat them with; no, you prepare what you are capable of, and when you have prepared what you are capable of, and have prepared all the means at your disposal, Allah, then, will complete your endeavor with victory.

Humans, by nature, are capable of doing this. For example (and Allah has the highest example, before and after), imagine that you are an important trader, and huge trucks come to you, laden with goods, big boxes and crates, and you sit, whilst the workers unload the goods. One worker comes to carry a crate to take it down, but it is too heavy for his strength. The moment you feel that he is about to fall, you rush without thinking to help and support him. This worker exerted all his efforts, but was still unable, for the one who is in charge stretched out his hand to help him. So what about the True Lord Glorified and Exalted is He?

It is as though He is saying that we must strive, and utilize the means we possess; and if you see that your means are exhausted, and that the situation is too much for you to handle, know that it might be too much for you, but it is not too much for your Lord, who says:

وَمَا جَعَلَهُ ٱللَّهُ إِلَّا بُشْرَىٰ لَكُمْ وَلِتَطْمَئِنَّ قُلُوبُكُم بِهِۦ ۗ
وَمَا ٱلنَّصْرُ إِلَّا مِنْ عِندِ ٱللَّهِ ٱلْعَزِيزِ ٱلْحَكِيمِ ﴿١٢٦﴾

As a message of hope for you [believers] to put your hearts at rest – help comes only from God, the Mighty, the Wise [126] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 126)

Be careful of imagining that the aid of the three thousand, or five thousand, that Allah sent to aid you with, or the angels that are well trained for fighting etc… were in any way a condition on which depends the victory of Allah for you. He was indeed able to give you victory without your or the angels’ participation; He is capable of granting you with victor without the participation of the angles, but it was a means of glad tidings for you, to comfort your human natures. When the believers saw such great numbers coming to their aid, although the disbelievers were greater, in number, than them, they were reassured and were confident of victory. So, the angels were only a means of glad tidings, and succour was from God, the Mighty, who cannot be defeated. All things enfold by His wisdom, which is unsurpassable. The True Lord then says:

لِيَقْطَعَ طَرَفًا مِّنَ ٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُوٓا۟ أَوْ يَكْبِتَهُمْ فَيَنقَلِبُوا۟ خَآئِبِينَ ﴿١٢٧﴾

and in order to cut off the flanks of the disbelievers' army and frustrate them, to make them withdraw in total defeat [127] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 127)

Cutting down a section is determined by understanding what tarf (section) refers to? If it refers to a large number, then 'cutting down a section' implies that some of it would be killed. If (tarf) refers to an expanse of land, then 'cutting down a section' implies that some of their land would be taken. So, the True Lord Glorified is He says: "Do they not see how We come to [their] land and shrink its borders? God decides - no one can reverse His decision - and He is swift in reckoning…." (ar-Ra'd: 41)

Every day, a part of the land of disbelief was lost to be added to the land of faith; this is in regard to the expanse of land. Supposing that (tarf) refers to wealth, the verse would mean that some of their wealth was taken in the form of battle-spoils. Then, there is Quraysh's stature, that the entire peninsula feared: the whole peninsula looked upon Quraysh with awe, and no tribe could threaten its caravans in the north or the south, because all the tribes knew that they would go to the Temple (Ka'ba) in the season of pilgrimage; no tribe would threaten them because they would soon be heading toward Quraysh. So, Quraysh had great power and authority. When the tribes learned that the men of Quraysh had been broken and routed, and that their trade route to the Levant had been threatened, they sought another faction to go to.

The cutting down of a section mentioned in this verse has many possible interpretations. If it refers to people, some of them were killed; if it refers to land, some of their land was taken and became the land of the faithful; if it refers to power and authority, they had been visited by defeat, and although their power had stretched throughout the peninsula, it was now wavering: "and in order to cut off the flanks of the disbelievers' army" (Al-'Imran: 127).

Notice that the True Lord said: "and in order to cut off the flanks" (Al-'Imran: 127). He did not say that He might annihilate; for Allah Glorified and Exalted is He let some of the disbelievers survive because they had a role to play in faith. the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was full of compassion, mercy, and tenderness for his community, and he peace and blessings be upon him had good expectations from Allah, in that He will guide them to the right path, and so there are several verses in the Quran that deal with this matter. The True Lord says: “Then perhaps you would kill yourself through grief over them, [O Muhammad], if they do not believe in this message, [and] out of sorrow.’’ (al-Kahf: 6)

And elsewhere in the Noble Quran, He says: “Perhaps, [O Muhammad], you would kill yourself with grief that they will not be believers. *If We had wished, We could have sent them down a sign from heaven, at which their necks would stay bowed in utter humility.” (ash-Shu'ara': 3-4)

Allah said to His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him peace and blessings be upon him: "You are only charged to deliver the message" (Al-‘Imran: 20). The Messenger peace and blessings be upon him hoped to guide to faith every individual member of his community, and so the True Lord said:

لَيۡسَ لَكَ مِنَ ٱلۡأَمۡرِ شَيۡءٌ أَوۡ يَتُوبَ عَلَيۡهِمۡ أَوۡ يُعَذِّبَهُمۡ فَإِنَّهُمۡ ظَٰلِمُونَ ١٢٨

Whether God relents towards them or punishes them is not for you [Prophet] to decide: they are wrongdoers [128]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 128)

That is to say, it is not for you, O Muhammad except to rejoice if Allah accepts their repentance; and if He punishes them, you should not be saddened by this, for they are wrongdoers, and you are charged with nothing but delivering the message. As for them, they have wronged themselves by disbelieving. As we know, wrongdoing (injustice) is to take something from its rightful owner and give it to another; and the height of wrongdoing is to ascribe godhood to any but Allah, which is polytheism (shirk); and so the True Lord says: And so the True Lord said: “For, Indeed, attributing partners to Him is a terrible wrong.” (Luqman: 13)

The True Lord says to His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: “Whether Allah relents towards them or punishes them is not for you [Prophet] to decide: they are wrongdoers.” (Al-‘Imran: 128)

This matter is not out of Allah's dominion, for the heavens and the earth and all that they contain are Allah's dominion. It is said that, after the disbelievers covered his face with blood, when he only called them to their Lord, the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him wanted to pray against them, but Allah forbade him, for He knew that there remained among them those who would believe, so He sent down His words:

وَلِلَّهِ مَا فِي ٱلسَّمَٰوَٰتِ وَمَا فِي ٱلْأَرْضِۚ يَغْفِرُ لِمَن يَشَآءُ
وَيُعَذِّبُ مَن يَشَآءُۚ وَٱللَّهُ غَفُورٌ رَّحِيمٌ ﴿١٢٩﴾

Everything in the heavens and earth belongs to God. He forgives whoever He will and punishes whoever He will: God is most forgiving and merciful [129] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 129)

Since we are talking about some features of the battle of Uhud, I wish to say: 'Allah be pleased with mount Uhud: for we heard that a great scholar and knower of Allah, once said: 'Uhud may Allah be pleased with it…' People were amazed at 'Abdullah Al-Zaydan, saying this, and when he noticed their amazement, he said to them: 'Did the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him not address the mountain saying: "Be firm, Uhud, for upon you is a Prophet, a great-faithed one, and two martyrs!" and did the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad not say about it: "Uhud is a mountain that loves us, and we love it"? Do you wish for better companionship than this? Say: Uhud, Allah be pleased with it!'

We said previously: if your mind is confused about something, do not consider it according to your own standards; consider it according to the higher standards. We say this because science, now, moves at an incredible rate, seeking to uncover some of Allah's secrets of the universe; it has shown us that animals use their own languages to communicate, and they are now trying to decipher the language of fish. The True Lord Glorified and Exalted is He told us the story of the ant and Prophet Solomon peace be upon him, saying: "O ants, enter your dwellings that you not be crushed by Solomon and his soldiers without [even] being aware [of you]" (an-Naml: 18).

This speech shows us that an ant came out to scan the horizons to protect those with her, then, returned to speak to her fellow ants. Our master Solomon peace be upon him heard her, and smiled at what she said. So, modern science is developing rapidly, confirming that every species has its own means of communication, and that every species has emotions, and every species has a means of multiplying. In light of this, the True Lord said, through our master Solomon peace be upon him: "O people, we have been taught the language of birds, and we have been given from all things. Indeed, this is evident bounty." (an-Naml: 16) This was a special attribute that our master Solomon peace be upon him possessed. So, birds have their own speech. If we go deeper and consider inanimate objects, we hear the word of the True Lord Glorified is He about the people of Pharaoh, and see that the inanimate objects did not weep for them: "Many a garden and spring they left behind, *And crops and noble building, many a thing in which they had delighted. Thus. And We caused to inherit it another people. *And neither sky nor earth shed tears over them, nor were they reprieved." (ad-Dukhan: 25-29)

Do the sky and earth weep? This is an extraordinary matter, for inanimate objects like the sky and the earth, do not only communicate, but they also have emotions because weeping only arises as an emotional response. This means that inanimate objects do not only talk, but that they also feel. The earth will cast off its burdens, and speak its news; how? This is because "…your Lord has inspired it to do.''(az-Zalzala: 5) And the sky and the earth approached Allah in complete obedience and humility: "Then He turned to the sky, which was smoke — He said to it and the earth, 'Come into being, willingly or not,' and they said, 'We come willingly.'" (Fussilat: 11)

So, there is more than just communication: they also have emotions, just like you; and just as things make you sad, the earth too weeps. As long as it weeps, it must also be able to be happy; and Allah Almighty says, about the world of Pharaoh: "and neither sky nor earth shed tears over them" (ad-Dukhan: 29). If they did not cry for some people, this statement would not have any significance.

In this regard, Imam 'Ali may his face be honored by Allah said: 'When a believer dies, two places weep for him: the place where he prayed because it will be denied the blessings of faith; and the place where his good deeds rose up. One place is on earth, and the other is in the heavens.' So, we must be aware that everything has feelings.

The Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him also said: "When a believer dies, the earth rejoices in him; and there is not a single plot but wishes he would be buried therein." Why are we saying this now? We say it so that if it is confirmed scientifically that everything has its own language, and that every species in the universe has a means of communication, it should be said that there were people who were visited by the cool breezes of faith, and they perceived and felt this fact in the Quran; no one can claim that they invented it by themselves because it is in the Quran, even if we did not know the how of it.

This battle, the battle of Uhud, is mentioned over the course of sixty verses. We notice that Allah here says: "And [remember] when you, [O Muhammad], left your family in the morning..." (Al-'Imran: 121), and "When two parties among you were about to lose heart..." (Al-'Imran: 122). And "already had Allah given you victory at [the battle of] Badr, while you were very weak..." (Al-'Imran: 122). After this, He leaves the battle in its heat, and mentions other things, then, returns to finish the battle. Had this been just a scene from the battle, and had simply stopped here, and a new subjects had started, we would not have needed to search our souls. The battle is mentioned over sixty verses; so how could the speech about the battle end when it has given us nothing but the beginning of it, and after that, the Quran, would focus on a totally different subject? What makes Allah leave aside the battle, and say: You who believe, do not consume usurious interest, doubled and redoubled. Be mindful of God so that you may prosper – '"beware of the Fire prepared for those who ignore [Him] - * and obey God and the Prophet so that you may be given mercy. * Hurry towards your Lord's forgiveness and a Garden as wide as the heavens and earth prepared for the righteous,* who give, both in prosperity and adversity, who restrain their anger and pardon people - Allah loves those who do good - '"those who remember Allah and implore forgiveness for their sins if they do something shameful or wrong themselves - who forgives sins but God? - and who never knowingly persist in doing wrong.* The reward for such people is forgiveness from their Lord, and Gardens graced with flowing streams, where they will remain. How excellent is the reward of those who labour! ‘”Allah’s ways have operated before your time: travel through the land, and see what was the end of those who disbelieved. *This is a clear lesson to people, and guidance and teaching for those who are mindful of Allah.” (Al-‘Imran: 130-138)

Why did the True Lord only give us a hint of the battle, and then move on different subjects, the first of which is usury; what is the connection between these issues and the battle? I say: may Allah have mercy on the author of ‘In the Shade of the Quran, commentary, Sheikh Sayyid Qutb, who was able to derive several important principles of faith from this change of subject; if the Muslims in every corner of the earth were only able to put them right in front of their eyes, not a single disbelieving nation would be able to overpower us.

We wish to understand these issues; why did they begin with the issue of usury? It is because one of the reasons for their routing, and their lack of clear victory at Uhud, was their desire for battle-spoils. Battle-spoils represent superfluous wealth, and usury is based on greed for superfluous wealth.

Since the Quran is making mention here of an event-based issue, and events come and go, Allah wants to preserve the event so that it has relevance to other than the time in which it occurs. If not, the event might disappear along with the lesson that can be learned from it, and become useless. When the soul is in the midst of an event, it is more receptive of it, because, as Sheikh Sayyid Qutb said, the event is still hot. When the Quran utilizes an event before it cools off, the issue upon which the lesson is based can easily touch the human soul. Allah did not want the events of Uhud to disappear with all its potential lessons without the noble Quran using them to confirm particular issues of faith that are prevalent in times different from times of war, and that can conform to times of peace. It is as if the verse of usury here has fallen into the middle of the texts that discuss the battle of Uhud.

People who consider it superficially might say: ‘What has made the Quran, go from talking about the battle of Uhud to talking about usury again, after it had talked about it before?’ To this, we say that the Quran, does not chronicle events. Rather, it uses events to simplify and explain the concepts that give events their breadth, their length, and their depth; for every event that occurs takes up the amount of time that is appropriate to this event, and the event takes up a certain amount of time, like an hour, two hours, or a night. This is the event's length.

The events that Allah sets in motion have lengths that demarcate the length of time the event will last, and they have breadths, which give them their extents. After they were straight lines, they become areas, and the True Lord makes them applicable to many things; for He does not want events to flow in a straight line, He wants them to have a wide track, with an area, and a width. This width produces a terrain that contains many different things, yet this might also end with the event itself, and so Allah wants to give the event a third dimension, which is historical depth, which gives its own gift, just as we are now able to benefit from what we have been given by the event of the battle of Uhud.

So, events have sizes too, and this is what makes people stop to say: 'Maintaining the bond of kinship lengthens the lifetime'; and life has a limited time span, which is a straight line, yet there are those who increase the breadth of their lives so that instead of benefiting people in a small way, they work to give benefit over a wider area, making their lives cover a larger space.

Other people desire their lives to be even more powerful; what do they do? They give their lives depth, and so instead of working for the extent of their lives only, which will end however expansive they are, they increase their good works, leaving a legacy of knowledge or charity that will continue after their lives end, ''as the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said:

"When a man dies, his deeds come to an end except for three things: ongoing charity, or knowledge that gives benefit, or a pious son who prays for them."(1)

And so the True Lord said: "[Prophet], do you not see how Allah makes comparisons? A good word is like a good tree whose root is firm and whose branches are high in the sky, * yielding constant fruit by its Lord's leave - Allah makes such comparisons for people so that they may reflect." (Ibrahim: 24-25)

(1) Narrated by Abu Hurayrah-Muslim

It is but a good word spoken, yet it is like a healthy tree because it takes root in the ear of the one who hears it and becomes an action that conforms to the word, and every time the one who hears this word performs an action that results from its effect, some of the reward for it goes to the one who said the word, even if they have died. It is as though the one who said this word is still alive, and as though his life span has been extended by his good word. So, the good works of a person do not actually extend his life because life is limited to a certain span; but there are people who give their lives breadth and others who give it depth so that it will keep on giving until the Hour rises. It is as though they have given themselves an eternal life. It has been said that: 'Dhikr (supplication to Allah) is a second life for a person.'

The True Lord Glorified and Exalted is He clarifies the useful lessons that can be derived from the battle of Uhud. The first incident of disobedience was the reason not behind defeat but, let us say, it was behind the failure to accomplish victory because they were victorious at first, yet the victory was not completely secured because of the act of disobedience. The motivation for this disobedience was that when they saw the battle-spoils, they rushed toward them. So, their motivation was seeking wealth unlawfully because Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had said to them: "Keep the cavalry from us, and let them not come upon us from your side. Keep to your posts, whether the tide of battle be for us or against us. Even if you see the birds pecking at us, do not leave your posts!" Thus, forsaking their posts became unlawful. It is deemed an unlawful act, when the self seeks something different from what the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him commanded. The desire here was for money; and such is the case with usury.

The true Lord willed that the heat of the event as well as its effect result in the unaccomplished victory, and the Muslims' suffering. The cause of this suffering was that a few of them wanted to gain superfluous wealth in an unlawful manner. So, the True Lord Glorified is He wanted this to be a way of illustrating the evil affect of dealing in usury.

So, it is appropriate that we should find a verse dealing with usury here, for it illustrates the evil consequences of coveting superfluous wealth gained unlawfully. There are many positions in the Quran, where effects of actions are illustrated in ways that appear to be unrelated, but on deeper reflection they actually are related.

We already discussed the words of Allah Almighty where He says*:* "Maintain with care the [obligatory] prayers and [in particular] the middle prayer and stand before Allah, devoutly obedient. *And if you fear [an enemy, then pray] on foot or riding. But when you are secure, then remember Allah [in prayer], as He has taught you that which you did not [previously] know." (al-Baqara: 238-239)

A person who thinks superficially might say that the True Lord speaks about divorce before these two verses, when He says*:* "And if you divorce your wives before consummating the marriage but after having fixed a bride-gift for them, then give them half of what you had previously fixed, unless they waive [their right], or unless the one who holds the marriage tie waives [his right]. Waiving [your right] is nearer to righteousness, so do not forget to be generous towards one another. Indeed Allah sees what you do. *Take care to do your prayers/praying in the best way/ and stand before Allah in devotion…." (al-Baqara: 237)

The True Lord then leaves the issue of divorce and enjoins the preserving of prayer, saying*:* "Maintain with care the [obligatory] prayers and [in particular] the middle prayer and stand before Allah devoutly obedient." (al-Baqara: 238)

After that, the True Lord returns to finish speaking about divorce and the separation of death, saying*:* "And those who are taken in death among you and leave behind their wives - for their wives is a bequest: maintenance for one year without turning [them] out. But if they leave [of their own accord], then there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable way. And Allah is Exalted in Might and Wise." (al-Baqara: 240)

He speaks about divorce and death in two verses, yet He sends down a verse about prayer in between. Why? It is to show us that the Islamic way is a perfectly complete way. Be careful of saying, 'Divorce is different from prayer and death.' No, it is a complete way of life. It is also because He Glorified and Exalted is He wants to alert us to the fact that divorce is an action that comes when a person feels anger and when the husband, the wife and their families are in a disturbed state. For this reason, the religion advises them, 'if you understood clearly, you would rush to prayer whenever these disturbing matters afflict you.'

When you are in a state of anger and worry, perform ablution, and pray because The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him taught us that when something distressed him, he would stand and pray. So, when tension arises between a husband, his wife and their families, tell them, 'The situation has gone beyond our manipulations, so let us pray so that Allah will help us solve these difficult issues.' I challenge that there is no problem for which Allah will not provide a solution, if a Muslim turns to prayer.

Therefore, we understand that the True Lord says, "Maintain with care the [obligatory] prayers and [in particular] the middle prayer" (al-Baqara: 238) because maintaining these prayers is the means to preventing disagreements. This is because Allah is not in your minds at times of stress and hardship and instead you submit yourself to the stress and hardship and forget the prayer, at the time when you need it the most. At times of stress and hardship, you must turn to your Lord. I give the example (and Allah has the highest example) of a boy whose friends beat him up and so he runs to his father for comfort and help. Likewise, if you make your wife angry, she will go to her family; how then can you not turn to your Lord at times of hardship and stress?

Hence, we find that what Allah says in this verse, "Maintain with care the [obligatory] prayers and [in particular] the middle prayer"; (al-Baqara: 238) this comes in the right sequence and the same is true for the verse about usury; it is in its proper place, especially because He has mentioned usury beforehand. Then, comes the incident and its heat, and this noble word is sent down so that anyone who desires wealth that exceeds what Allah has made lawful would know that it would bring strife upon him and others; for the strife during the battle of Uhud affected everyone - the archers and everyone else.

As a result, the whole world suffers when the teachings of Allah are contradicted. If excessive and unlawfully gained wealth is not forsaken in obedience to the Laws of Allah, He declares war upon those who take it; a war from Allah and His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُواْ لَا تَأۡكُلُواْ ٱلرِّبَوٰٓاْ أَضۡعَٰفٗا
مُّضَٰعَفَةٗۖ وَٱتَّقُواْ ٱللَّهَ لَعَلَّكُمۡ تُفۡلِحُونَ ١٣٠

You who believe, do not consume usurious interest, doubled and redoubled. Be mindful of God so that you may prosper [130] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 130)

Usury is excess wealth; can it be gorged upon? Indeed it can because all financial matters are for the sake of the scraps that one eats; this is the origin. The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: “Whosoever of you reaches the morning feeling secured among his ‘flock’ (i.e. his people, healthy in body, possessing provisions for his day, it is as if the world has been gathered for him.”

We know that if any of us are in a place where there is not a single slice of bread, it will not help him to own a mountain of gold. "Do not consume usury, doubled and multiplied" (Al-‘Imran: 130). The statement of Allah, "doubled" and "multiplied" are modern economic terms. Doubling, in Arabic is something which has increased that when it is compared with the original, that original appears to be feeble. For example, if the original capital is one hundred and an interest of twenty percent is added to it, the total will be one hundred and twenty. So, the one hundred and twenty makes the original one hundred appear feeble; this is what is understood by the word ‘doubling’.

What about the meaning of "multiplied"? The one hundred and twenty will become a new capital and when another year goes by, interest will also be taken on the one hundred and twenty so that the increase will itself be increased upon. This is called ‘compound interest’. Does this mean that it is acceptable for us to consume usury if it is not doubled and multiplied?! No, it is because the situation was like this at the time of the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

Someone might say: ‘I understand from the Quran, that all that is prohibited is doubling and multiplying; if it is not doubled and multiplied, is it acceptable to make a simple profit in the form of an interest rate based on the original sum only?’ We direct such a person to the words of Allah, "But if you repent, you may have your principal - [thus] you do no wrong, nor are you wronged." (al-Baqara: 279) This wise statement confirms that repentance entails that a person returns to the limits of his capital and does not contaminate it with either plain or compound interest. When we find the words "doubling and multiplying," they have only been used to highlight the situation that was prevalent at the time.

After this, the True Lord ends the verse by saying, "but fear Allah so that you may be successful." (al-Baqara: 149) We always say, when we see the phrase "fear Allah", that it means 'to place a means of protection between yourselves and Allah'. Does this mean a barrier between yourselves and the majestic and beautiful attributes of Allah? No because protection is against those things that cause suffering and pain. Therefore when Allah says "but fear Allah" in this verse, it means to place a means of protection between yourselves and His attributes of majesty, such as The Compeller, The Subduer and The Avenger. When the True Lord says "but fear Allah" in this verse, it is akin to His words "And fear the Fire (of Hell)" (Al-'Imran: 131) as the fire (of Hell) is one of the hosts of the majestic attributes of Allah.

When the True Lord says, "so that you may be successful" (al-Baqara: 149), we know that the word successful (or 'falah' in Arabic) in this verse is meant to encourage those who believe in Allah and His Guidance. The word successful in Arabic is derived from the word farming ('filaha') and Allah uses this word as it is something that can be felt and seen all the time as it is connected with our survival; you plough and sow and only reap the benefits afterwards.

Therefore Allah wants to show you that the hardships that come with ploughing, sowing, and watering show their results at the time of reaping. A farmer might take two measures of grain from his stores to sow a patch of land. When he does this, you do not say him that he has reduced the amount of grains in his stores because he has not taken from his stores except to increase this amount. The one who never takes from his stores and never sows, will have his head in his hands with regret when it is time to harvest, but regrets will not benefit him by then.

What The True Lord wants to say to us is, 'Even if the religion exhausts you and requires much action from you, you will gain benefit in return, depending on your intention and your dedication to your work. Allah gave us an example by His words*:* "like a seed [of grain] which grows seven spikes; in each spike is a hundred grains. And Allah multiplies [His reward] for whom He wills. And Allah is all-Encompassing and knowing." (al-Baqara: 261) The meaning is clear: we take one seed from you, which might reduce your supply but in return it gives you back seven hundred. So, when the seed is taken from you, do not say that you have lost something. Rather realise that you will have a profit of so and so. Allah draws this example for us of one of His creations, the land; the inanimate land. If you give this inanimate land one seed, it will give you back seven hundred. If one of the creatures of Allah, in this case the land, can give you back many multiples of what you gave it, can the Lord of this land not give it back to you doubled and multiplied? Allah is able to grant the finest of gifts and this is what true success is. After this, when He mentions the true success, He also tells you that you will not only gain success, but you will also safeguard yourself from the Fire.' The True Lord says*:*

وَٱتَّقُوا۟ ٱلنَّارَ ٱلَّتِىٓ أُعِدَّتْ لِلْكَٰفِرِينَ ﴿١٣١﴾

beware of the Fire prepared for those who ignore [Him] [131] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 131)

So, there are two issues here: the deprivation of harm and the obligation of benefit. He obliges the benefit of success on you, and deprives you of the harm of Hell. For this reason, Allah says*:* "And whoever is drawn away (and protected) from the Fire and is admitted into Paradise has most definitely attained the ultimate success". (Al-'Imran: 185)

This is because if he is drawn away from hell and is admitted into heaven, then this is the greatest success and this is why our Lord Glorified and Exalted is He at the moment when the Straight Path is crossed, will lead us over hell so that we pass over it. Why? So that we realize how our faith has saved us from it. So, what is the means by which we attain success and avoid hell? The means to this is following the Guidance of Allah which He has placed on the tongue of His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, as Allah says*:*

وَأَطِيعُوا۟ ٱللَّهَ وَٱلرَّسُولَ لَعَلَّكُمْ تُرْحَمُونَ ﴿١٣٢﴾

And obey God and the Prophet so that you may be given mercy [132] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 132)

"Mercy" manifests in Allah not afflicting you with hardships whereas, recovery means that you fall into hardships and then, it is removed from you. For this reason, if we follow the guidance from the very beginning, we will receive mercy. Allah also says*:* "And We send down the Quran as healing and mercy." (al-Isra': 82)

Health here means eliminating the sin that we have become embroiled in and which the Quran heals. Mercy is manifested when we follow the religion from the beginning so no hardships afflict us.

The True Lord then says*:*

وَسَارِعُوٓا۟ إِلَىٰ مَغْفِرَةٍ مِّن رَّبِّكُمْ وَجَنَّةٍ عَرْضُهَا
ٱلسَّمَٰوَٰتُ وَٱلْأَرْضُ أُعِدَّتْ لِلْمُتَّقِينَ ﴿١٣٣﴾

Hurry towards your Lord's forgiveness and a Garden as wide as the heavens and earth prepared for the righteous [133] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 133)

We know that 'hurrying' is different from 'rushing': hasting means to advance when it is appropriate, which means to do something in as little time as possible. An example of this is when a person drives from Cairo to Alexandria, trying to cover the two hundred and ten kilometres in the least amount of time possible. Instead of taking three hours, he drives faster so that it takes only two. So, 'hurrying' means advancing when appropriate and it is praiseworthy. It is the opposite of 'dawdling' which is blameworthy.

Rushing, on the other hand, means advancing when it is not appropriate and it is blameworthy. Its opposite is deliberation, which is praiseworthy. So, hasting is praiseworthy and its opposite, dawdling, is blameworthy; and rushing is blameworthy, and its opposite, deliberation, is praiseworthy. One popular proverb says: In deliberation lays safety and in rushing lays regret.

The True Lord says*:* “And hurry to the forgiveness from your Lord" (Al-‘Imran: 133) i.e. seek forgiveness and Paradise as quickly as you can because you do not know how long you will remain in this world. Beware of putting off a good deed or an act of charity because you do not know if you will stay alive to perform it or not.Your life is a chance, so take it and seek forgiveness and paradise. This is the meaning of the well-known proverb: ‘work for this life as though you will live forever, and work for the Afterlife as if you will die tomorrow.’

People perceive reality in accordance to what matches their psychological needs. For example: ‘work for this life as though you will live forever’ is undestood by them as: ‘gather as much as you can in this world so you are provided for until the Day of Resurrection’; but this is not a correct understanding. The correct understanding is that whatever passes you by of worldly things today, consider that you will live long enough to get it tomorrow; as for the affairs of the Hereafter, you must be quick where they are concerned.

“And hurry to the forgiveness from your Lord and a garden that is as wide as the heavens and the earth." (Al-‘Imran: 133) We know that area is comprised of length and width because something with an equal length and width is a square, and something with a smaller width and a longer length is called a rectangle. When the True Lord says "as wide as the heavens and the earth" (Al-‘Imran: 133), we know that width is the lesser of the two dimensions, i.e. it is wider than we can see. It is as though He has compared the smallest dimension of paradise with the widest dimension that we know, the heavens and the earth combined together, thereby giving us something much wider than we can see. If its width is greater than we can imagine then what about its length? It is an extent that we cannot comprehend.

Someone might ask why does Allah mention its width, saying “as wide as the heavens and the earth" (Al-‘Imran: 133), without mentioning its length? To this, we say: do the heavens and the earth alone comprise the entire universe? Allah Glorified is He says: "His throne (i.e knowledge and power) extends over the heavens and the earth." (al-Baqara: 255)

In addition, The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: “The heavens and the earth and what lies between them are akin to nothing more than a ring thrown by a king into an empty desert. Is it not Allah’s dominion?

And so we see that this paradise has been prepared for those who are conscious of Allah. The meaning of “prepared” is formed and made, and that is that. The Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him confirmed this, by saying: “Paradise was shown to me; and had I wished to bring you a fruit from there, I would have.” Why? Because mere information about a thing might mean that it does not yet exist, but will exist later; but a thing’s existence negates the possibility that it might not exist because its existence has become a reality. When Allah says: "Prepared" in this verse, it means that Allah has finished its creation and He will not take the raw materials of this world and wait until the world develops under your watch and then use the means and materials that you have developed to prepare Paradise. No.

The Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him informed us about it saying: “There will be bounties which no eye has seen, no ear has heard and no human heart has ever perceived.”(1) Allah had created paradise in its entirety with nothing more than the word “Be!” When He says: "Prepared" in this verse, this means it is something that is finished and done with. As long as this is the case, the matter of the final journey to it or to its counterpart, has also been settled. Paradise has been made ready for those who are fearful of Allah; but who are they? Allah says*:*

ٱلَّذِينَ يُنفِقُونَ فِى ٱلسَّرَّآءِ وَٱلضَّرَّآءِ وَٱلۡكَٰظِمِينَ ٱلۡغَيۡظَ
وَٱلۡعَافِينَ عَنِ ٱلنَّاسِۗ وَٱللَّهُ يُحِبُّ ٱلۡمُحۡسِنِينَ ﴿١٣٤﴾ who give, both in prosperity and adversity, who restrain their anger and pardon people – God loves those who do good [134] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 134)

These are some of the attributes of those who fear Allah an example of those who restrain their anger can be found in the battle of Uhud.

Hamza may Allah be pleased with him, the master of the martyrs, and the uncle of our master the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was killed. If only it was just a killing but further than that he was mutilated.

---

(1) Narrated by Sahl bin Sa’d Al-Bokhari

His liver was taken out and Hind (bint Otbah) chewed on it. This is more than just a killing. This is the fruit of vile malice.

When the news of the killing of Hamza may Allah be pleased with him reached the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and they told him that Hind had taken his liver and chewed upon it before spitting it out as Allah had made it hard for her to chew, he said: "Allah would not torment any piece of Hamza in Hell". This is because Hind was destined for hell and if she had eaten the liver, it would have formed part of the cells of her body, and so if she entered hell, then a part of Hamza may Allah be pleased with him would enter with her. Therefore, her Lord made her body tremble and prepare to vomit, so she spat out the morsel of liver that she had bitten off.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him considered the death of Hamza may Allah be pleased with him as the most abominable thing he had ever encountered, saying: "If Allah grants me victory over Quraysh in any place, I will mutilate thirty men of their dead!'

But then the matter of restraining anger became necessary for the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, on the occasion of the death of one of the most beloved people to him, an event that angered him more than any other. Allah then sent down His words*:* "And if you punish [an enemy, O believers], then punish them with an equivalent of that with which you were harmed with. But if you are patient then it is better for those who are patient." (an-Nahl: 126)

This was in order that we know that our Lord, His the Most High, does not react to anything because reaction is a trait of temporal beings and this is His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and so He Exalted is He sent down to him the words*:* "And if you punish [an enemy, O believers], then punish them with an equivalent of that with which you were harmed with" (an-Nahl: 126), and this is a command to withhold anger, which He sent down specifically in relation to the Messenger and the event of the battle of Uhud. After this, He makes it a general principle, applicable to times of peace as well as war and applicable to all people, not just the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him as it already applied to Him.

"And who restrain their anger" (Al-'Imran: 134). We know that all abstract concepts are derived from material ones. The word for restraining anger (in Arabic 'kazhm') is derived from the word which refers to filling a water skin (a leather pouch used for transporting water). When the bag was full of water, its neck would be tied tightly so that no water could spill out. This action; of tying the bag was called 'kazhm'. The water skin was soft and if it were put on the back of a man or a beast, it might spill water because of its softness, so it needed to be tied well to prevent water spillage.

In the same way, anger stirs in the human soul. Allah does not forbid the arousal of anger in the soul because it is a natural reaction and if Allah did not want natural reactions, He would have prevented their causes when creating the human being.

Rather, He wills their existence for certain reasons. For example, the sexual instinct: He wills that it exists in order to preserve the species, and He subjected it to legislation just to refine it. The same is true for the natural reaction of anger: Islam does not want the believer to be poured into an iron cast, with no emotions; rather, Allah the Exalted wants the believer to react to events, but in an appropriate manner, with a gracious, productive reaction and not a destructive one. For this reason, the True Lord says: "Those who follow him are harsh towards the disbelievers and compassionate towards each other. You see them kneeling and prostrating, seeking the bounty of Allah and His good pleasure." (al-Fath: 29)

So the believer is not supposed to always be stern or always merciful; the situation is what should determine human emotions. The True Lord the Exalted says: "people who are humble towards the believers, hard on the disbelievers." (al-Ma'ida: 54)

Is anyone humble and mighty at the same time? We say: It is the guidance of faith that makes a believer such: humble to his brother, and mighty before the disbeliever. So, Islam does not cast the believer in a mould so that he does not react to events.

Another example can be found in the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him when his son, Ibrahim, died. Did he react? Indeed he did and he wept and grieved. Allah does not want the believer to be made of stone; He wants the believer to react to events but in a way that corresponds with the event in question. And so our master, the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, said upon the passing of his son: "The eye weeps, and the heart grieves; but we only say that which pleases our Lord."(1)

At the time of reacting, we should not say something that will displease our Lord. Our reaction should be properly directed. The believer requires anger when he is provoked into defending the religion of Allah, but the believer must restrain this anger, i.e. he should not allow his reaction to prevent him from behaving well and considering his actions. Restraining anger (of 'kazhm' in Arabic) as we have seen is derived from something tangible. Another example for this is in the case of camels and other beasts that have two stomachs, one for storing food, and the other for rumination.

When a camel ruminates, it regurgitates the food from the extra stomach and chews it. When the camel stops rumination, the Arabic verb for this is ''kazhama", derived from the same root word as 'kazhm' (restraining anger). The True Lord the Exalted says*:* "who restrain their anger and who pardon the people" (Al-'Imran: 134) and we said that there are different types of reaction. A reaction might be suppressed and held in check, meaning that a person is able to turn it into a physical reaction but refrains from doing so. As for 'pardoning', it means that the anger is removed from the heart, as though the incident never happened. This is the second level. The third level is that you give a corresponding reaction, i.e. you do not stop at this limit, but rather, you repay the bad deed with a good deed. So, there are three stages: Firstly, suppressing anger, secondly, pardoning and forgiving, and thirdly going beyond these two in repaying the ill turn with a good one.

This is the development along the stages of certainty because if you do not hold your anger in check, and instead react, the other person is also capable of reacting in a way that matches your reaction, and directing his rage and anger towards you. This rage might then continue to grow, passing from generation to generation. If you suppress your anger however, the other person might be ashamed of himself and the issue might be closed.

(1) Narrated by Anas - Al-Bukhari

"And who pardon the people" (Al-'Imran: 134). The verb 'afa' (to pardon) is derived from 'afa 'ala al-athar' (the wind blowing away the tracks someone leaves in the desert sand). The True Lord finishes the verse by saying: "and Allah loves those who do good (to the extent of perfection)." (Al-'Imran: 134)

We have previously discussed the philosophy of this. We said that we are all the creation of Allah and all creatures are dependent on Allah. As long as we are all dependent on Allah, if one of us wrongs another, Allah will be on the side of the one who is wronged and will shower him with His mercy, pardon, and compassion. In this way, the one who is wronged gains; so should they not treat well the one who wronged them?

Yet the human intellect abandons its intelligence at times of anger and so if someone wrongs a person, he considers him an enemy. We must understand however that those who wrong us only put Allah on our side, so their poor treatment of us gains for us more than what it takes from us. For this reason, you must have strong faith and treat well the one who wrongs you.

The True Lord then adds to the attributes of the residents of paradise:

وَٱلَّذِينَ إِذَا فَعَلُواْ فَٰحِشَةً أَوۡ ظَلَمُوٓاْ أَنفُسَهُمۡ ذَكَرُواْ ٱللَّهَ فَٱسۡتَغۡفَرُواْ لِذُنُوبِهِمۡ وَمَن
يَغۡفِرُ ٱلذُّنُوبَ إِلَّا ٱللَّهُ وَلَمۡ يُصِرُّواْ عَلَىٰ مَا فَعَلُواْ وَهُمۡ يَعۡلَمُونَ ١٣٥ those who remember God and implore forgiveness for their sins if they do something shameful or wrong themselves – who forgives sins but God? – and who never knowingly persist in doing wrong [135] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 135)

An immorality means a vile sin. Does this mean that when the archers at Uhud left their posts, they abandoned their faith? No, it was only a mistake, but it was a grievous sin on the part of those who encouraged the believers to descend from their positions and a minor sin on the part of those who were persuaded to descend from their positions.

It is, therefore, appropriate to say: "And those who, when they commit an immorality or wrong themselves [by transgression], remember Allah" (Al-'Imran: 135). In this verse, The True Lord wants us to "remember Allah" as a reminder to us that those who commit shameful deeds and wrong themselves do so because they forget Allah and when they perform their sin, Allah is not on their mind. What allows a person to dare to sin in order to satisfy his passions is that he does not consider Allah or His reward and punishment in the Hereafter. Were he to envisage this, he would not sin.

In the same way, the one who is careless in obeying Allah does so because he does not think of Allah and how He rewards the pious. If he remembered Allah and how He rewards the pious, he would not be too lazy to obey Him. And so the True Lord says*:* "(They) remember Allah and seek forgiveness for their sins" (Al-'Imran: 135). If someone prays for his sins to be forgiven, he has surely remembered Allah.

The scholars differ over the meaning of 'fahishah' (immorality). Some say it means an enormity (a grievous sin), whereas wronging oneself is a venial (minor) sin. Other scholars say that 'fahishah' means fornication because the Quran mentioned it explicitly and that everything else is a minor sin.

However, the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: "There is no grievous sin when forgiveness is sought; and there is no minor sin when there is persistence."

So, it is not permissible for someone to disregard his own sins, saying: 'This is only a minor sin, and that is only a minor sin...' because the accumulation of minor sins causes them to become grievous sins. When we consider the word of Allah: "And those who, when they commit an immorality or wrong themselves [by transgression]" (Al-'Imran: 135), we find that the one who committed the shameful deed has also sinned against himself because he has gained for himself a fleeting pleasure, but has earned himself eternal suffering.

In that case, why did the True Lord not simply say: 'and wrong themselves…' with 'and' instead of 'or wrong themselves'? It is because He wanted to show us the difference between an immorality and a sin against the self.

The one who performs an immorality only gains for himself the satisfaction of a lust or desire, even if it is only fleeting. The one who sins against himself, however, performs a sin without gaining any benefit for himself. For example, the one who gives false testimony does not gain any benefit for himself because the benefit goes to the one who is falsely attested to. The bearer of false witness sins against himself because he fulfils the fleeting need of another person, but does not save himself from the punishment of the Hereafter. As for the person who performs an immorality, he takes some pleasure in this world, then, faces recompense in the Hereafter.

However, the one who sins against himself does not benefit himself, but hurts himself. It is an evil thing to sell your religion for a worldly gain; for you only receive the pleasure of this world, and the life of this world is short.

The True Lord did not forbid the pleasures of this world, but He says: "Say (O Muhammad), the enjoyment of this world is little" (an-Nisa': 77). There are also those who sell their religion for the sake of another person's worldly gain, receiving nothing in return, and only sinning against themselves.

The True Lord says: "and seek forgiveness for their sins - and who can forgive sins except Allah?" (Al-'Imran: 135) The meaning of 'sin' is the contravention of the directions of the religion: the religion gives an order, but the order is not followed; the religion gives a prohibition, but the prohibition is not heeded. Nothing is called a sin until Allah tells us that it is a sin; this is divine ordinance. In the sphere of human ordinance, we say: 'There is no prohibition without a text (that contains legislation); and there is no punishment without prohibition.'

This stresses the importance of clarifying what constitutes a crime so that a crime can be properly punished; and nothing is a crime unless it is confirmed with a text, i.e. it is criminalised before it is allocated a punishment. So what about the law of Allah? He first tells us what sins are, and then allocates the punishment that those who commit them merit.

Consider the words of Allah when He says: "and those [who] do not persist in what they have done, while they know." (Al-'Imran: 135). Therefore, asking for forgiveness is not to follow a sin by saying 'I seek the forgiveness' of Allah; whenever you fall into a sin; fall forward and say, 'I seek Allah's forgiveness' and be persistently keen not to do it again.

This does not mean that you never commit a sin again. Actually, you might commit it, but when you seek forgiveness, you are firm not to repeat it. The sin might occur again, but without premeditation to commit it, such as saying to yourself: 'I will commit the sin and, then, seek Allah's forgiveness afterwards.'

In this manner, you are only mocking your Lord. More dangerous, indeed, is that Allah might not allow you the time to seek forgiveness after the sin. When Allah says*:* “They do not persist in what they have done [of sins], while they know” (Al-‘Imran: 135) which makes it clear for us that there is no penalization without a clear criminalization declared in the [Shari'a] texts.

Before anything else, Allah informs us about the meanings of the sin and punishment and the proper way to seek forgiveness. Then, theTrue Lord says*:* “These are the ones whose reward will be forgiveness from their Lord and gardens with flowing streams underneath; therein they will abide forever. What a blessed reward for the workers!” “These” is a demonstrative pronoun that refers to the preceding Quranic verse in His saying*:* “And hurry with one another to attain to your Lord’s forgiveness and to a paradise as wide as the heavens and the earth, which has been readied for the God-conscious” (Al-‘Imran: 133)

Allah also sets out the attributes of the God-Conscious in His words: “Those who spend [in His way] in time of ease and hardship, and who restrain their anger and pardon the people. Surely, Allah loves those who do good”. (Al-‘Imran: 134)

They spend at times of ease out of gratitude and at times of hardship because they are really humble and mindful of their Lord. Evidently, when the blessings are abundant at the times of plenty, thanksgiving must be shown for them. Similarly, when the blessings are given at times of hardship, one shall express humility before Allah to relieve the doers of good from trials and hardships. As such, they keep spending whether they are in hardship or in ease.

At times of ease, many people forget about the Divine blessings imagining that these blessings have come from their own endeavours. Other people are too distracted by their blessings to feel the pains of others; they are only concerned with their own pains. But the believers never forget their Lord and His Commandment that they spend at times of hardship and ease. Because of this, they say about a generous person ‘S/He never refrains from giving, neither on days of joyful happiness nor on days of sorrows.’

Let us continue the description of those who are conscious of Allah: "And those who, when they commit an immorality or wrong themselves [by transgression], remember Allah and seek forgiveness for their sins - and who can forgive sins except Allah? - and those [who] do not persist in what they have done, while they know." (Al-'Imran: 135)

This is kind of reassuring the believer about the changes of his soul; if he once submits to the Satanic temptations, this does not remove him from the fold of taqwa (God-consciousness), for Allah has made the repentance from sins as one of the attributes of the God-conscious. The shameful act is instigated by the Satanic temptations. As such, the true servant is immediately mindful of Allah and beseeching Him for forgiveness with a sincere intention not to repeat it, which keeps them within the company of the God-conscious. Indeed, Allah is the All-Forgiving: “for who but Allah could forgive sins...”? They are informed about that, for the True Lord never declares anyone guilty without a definitive text and never punishes anyone without a crime. And of this Allah says:

أُوْلَٰٓئِكَ جَزَآؤُهُم مَّغۡفِرَةٞ مِّن رَّبِّهِمۡ وَجَنَّٰتٞ تَجۡرِى مِن تَحۡتِهَا
ٱلۡأَنۡهَٰرُ خَٰلِدِينَ فِيهَاۚ وَنِعۡمَ أَجۡرُ ٱلۡعَٰمِلِينَ ١٣٦

The reward for such people is forgiveness from their Lord, and Gardens graced with flowing streams, where they will remain. How excellent is the reward of those who labour! [136] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 136)

It refers to those endowed with all of the previous characteristics. Notice that the True Lord the Glorious and Exalted has promised two rewards for those who mindfully act upon taqwa (God-consciousness): The first promise He declared in His words: “And hurry with one another to attain to your Lord’s forgiveness and to a paradise as wide as the heavens and the earth, which has been readied for the God-conscious” (Al-'Imran: 133).

The second promise speaks of their final abode: “These are the ones whose reward will be forgiveness from their Lord and gardens with flowing streams underneath” (Al-'Imran: 133).

The first mention of paradise stimulates emotions that yearn for paradise. Then, Allah mentions the characters and categories of people declaring paradise as a reward. “What a blessed reward for the workers!”

The 'reward' usually refers to what a person takes in exchange for a service rendered. The workers take this reward for their work dependent on the evaluation of the employer himself. A pay increase or decrease is determined by the judgement of the employer or the employee. For example, if many employers request the services of one worker, s/he may ask for a pay increase; if no one wants him, he will accept the first pay offer he finds.

As such, the entire matter is determined by the need of employers or the need of the workers. When it comes to the dealings of the hereafter, it is with Allah the All-Sufficient Who is in no need of your works. Yet, He has offered a reward for them.

How to understand this issue? He has no need for your works and rewards you for them, saying: 'This is the minimum reward but I can double it and even give you more and more.' How many are the stages here? They are three. Although, He benefits nothing from the work, He provides three levels of reward for it.

Apparently, the need here is on one part only: it is on your part, O servant. You are in need of your Creator, but He is in no need of you. Yet, the One True Lord not only rewards you what is equal to your work but actually gives you much more than that. Your employer in this world may pay you a limited wage enough to provide for a day, for example, or a day and a half. Nevertheless, when you take the reward from Allah, He gives you an endless reward; He says: "What a blessed reward for the workers!" This is the reward worthy of praise, such as saying: 'What an excellent reward! It is not a reward for my work but rather greater and greater than all I did. It also comes from the One Who has no need for my work.

He the Most High has blessed me at the beginning and blessed me at the end. In other words, the True Lord the Glorious and Exalted guides you that when you do a good deed, O servant, the effect of this deed returns to you, yet despite this He rewards you for it.

We have previously explained that these Quranic verses came in the midst of the accounts of the battle of Uhud to provide a practical guidance and shed further light on the events of the battle. As such, if a person lives through the events in imagination, the events come back fresh and the lessons and morals taken from them reach the soul easily. Evidently, they have direct contact with real events, which confirm and emphasize them. After this, the True Lord the Glorious and Exalted says*:* "[Many] Ways of life have passed away before your time. Go, then, in the earth and behold what happened in the end to those who gave the lie to the truth" (Al-'Imran: 137).In other words, you are not the first to experience these matters. "Passed away" here means 'gone before' i.e. they were real events that took place in the past times before revealing this statement.

Usually, one's speech may be true or false, but this issue is not open for probabilities because the current reality does not belong to the future. The reality has already taken place. Therefore, the speech on reality needs nothing to confirm the veracity of the statement because it has already taken place. Allah the Most High says*:* "[Many] Ways of life have passed away before your time…" (Al-'Imran: 137).

'Ways of life' (sunan) refer to the ways in which Allah the Most High orders His universe for the good of the creation to guarantee the benefit of mankind as the masters of this universe. The benefit of mankind comes true when the Truth dominates human life, by their free choice; in the same manner the Truth dominates the universe without choice.

We previously said that the universe has no free will. Inanimate objects, plants, and animals have no free will to benefit you or not. No one ever went to a fertile plot of land and sowed seeds in it to find the land refusing to produce plants saying: 'I will not give you anything.' The earth never said about a person: 'He is a disbeliever, so I will not give him any provision.' The earth is subdued for the service of mankind; as long as man utilises its means, it will give to him/her. Likewise, animals are subdued for your service, not by your choice or power, but only because Allah has subdued them to you.

We said: a person may have an animal, as some farmers do, which s/he sometimes uses to carry piles of manure made of the farm animal waste. The farmers may then decide to use the animal as a mount. As such, beautiful saddles and bridles, comfortable life and cleanliness are all possible favours from the farmers to their mounts.

In this case, did the animal at first refuse to carry the manure or later refuse to carry the person? No. You can lead it wherever you wish, for it has no freewill. Likewise, plants have no freewill, nor do the inanimate objects or the animals have. Only the human beings have the freewill.

Truly, Allah has controlled man's will by some elements to which s/he submits so that they never think that they are absolute masters or have an intrinsic power. In His dominance of man, the True Lord makes some things inevitable to keep humans submitted. Meanwhile, He leaves other things to man's freewill. If we look at the universe, we find that things devoid of the freewill follow a very perfect system without any trace of chaos or clash. Only things left to man' interventions suffer imbalance. Why? Clearly, man's choices may go contrary to the way of the Creator. As such, when the free man seeks a well-balanced life, they shall follow the guidance of Allah.

When your choice follows this way, you have harmony similar to the rest of the creation and your affairs will be in order. If we compare things in which mankind have freewill to those in which they do not, we find that the latter things are completely well-organised without the least bit of disorder, whereas the former matters fall into chaos and disorder.

For example, the animals used for transportation, such as camels, horses or donkeys move about; they walk in a straight line and meet one another in opposite directions without ever crashing into each other or killing their riders. Animals avoid one another and keep out of each other's way, even if the rider is asleep. No matter how crowded with animals a street is, they never crash because this is part of the plan of Allah for the control of animals.

Let us now consider man's invented modes of transport. Mankind have produced many kinds of car which people drive; yet despite the fact that they drive them, many accidents and crashes occur because of man's intervention in the matter.

The True Lord the Glorious and Exalted wants to show you that things created and put under control by the Commands and Guidance of Allah never become a source of corruption. Corruption only comes from those things left to man's freewill. In conclusion, endeavour to make your decisions according to the Guidance of Allah. When the True Lord commands or prohibits, you must believe and obey. Evidently, when the True Lord puts things under the control of mankind, they are all in perfect order. Likewise, when you obey Allah, the affairs of your life will proceed with ease. For this reason, we said before that people never complained of a ‘sun crisis’, or a ‘wind crisis’; so why do they complain of ‘food crisis’? It is simply because man interferes with the production of food. Everything left to mankind must follow the Divine Law: “Do that and Do not do that.”

The universe is really created in harmony; everything in the universe performs its duty in line with the Divine Plan. Similarly, when mankind live up to their imposed responsibilities, everything would be in order and harmony. When mankind neglect their duties and follow their delusive choices, they turn to the ways of falsity and the result is nothing but false things, whilst the universe is based on the truth. Allah says*:* “We did not create them (the heavens and the earth i.e. the universe) except with the truth, but most of them do not know” (ad-Dukhan: 39). The True Lord the Most High fixes the universe on some certain firm laws so that nothing can infringe upon anything else. It is mankind’s choice that brings about the opposite of truth that is falsehood. For this reason, Allah preserves the universe in such a way that He makes it clear that the truth is in conflict with falsehood, but the truth will eventually survive and dominate, whereas falsehood will vanish and disappear. Allah shows us this in front of our eyes with His words: “And say: “the truth has now come [to light], and falsehood has withered away: for, behold, all falsehood is bound to wither away!"” (al-Isra’: 81)

As such, the statement of Allah: “[Many] Ways of life have passed away before your time…” intends to guide people to reflect on the past conflicts between the truth and the falsehood; the falsehood did not dominate the truth because it is ever withering away.

As such, we see many practical examples of the defeat of falsehood, not only in the conflicting relationships of individuals, but in the conflict of falsehood with the Divine Truth as well. The Divine Truth is represented by the Prophets and their Divinely revealed messages. Indeed, every Divine Truth revealed by Allah was opposed by the people of falsehood.

Why? Simply, the Divine intervention only comes when corruption has become widespread. This means that there are people who are befitting from this corruption. The people who benefit from corruption and falsehood will defend it. Consequently, the powers of the Divine Truth rise to challenge the falsehood and its advocates. Such is the moment of the battle. Allah the Most High says: "[Many] Ways of life have passed away before your time…" (Al-'Imran: 137). This statement declares that falsehood is ever vanishing. Actually, whenever the people of the earth battle the Divine Guidance, the Divine Truth always proves victorious. In the chapter of (al-'Ankabut: 29), Allah explains this fact to us in several illustrative examples; Allah the Most High says: "And to [the people of] Midyan [We sent] their brother Shu'aib, who said: "O my people! Worship Allah alone, and look forward to the Last Day, and do not act wickedly on the earth by spreading corruption!" However, they belied him. Thereupon, an earthquake overtook them and they lay lifeless, in their very homes, on the ground." (al-'Ankabut: 36-37)

This was the first example, then the second follows: "And the tribes of ʿAd and Thamud, [too, did We destroy] as should have become obvious to you from [whatever there remains of] their dwellings. [They perished] because Satan had made their [sinful] evils seem goodly to them, and thus had barred them from the path [of Allah], despite their having been endowed with the ability to perceive the truth" (al-'Ankabut: 38).

Now, look at their remnant dwellings to show you the punishment that befell them. Then, the third example is given: "And [thus, too, did We destroy] Qarun (Korah) and Pharaoh, and Haman: to them had come Moses with all evidence of the Truth, but they behaved arrogantly on earth [and rejected him]. Yet, they could not escape [Us]" (al-'Ankabut: 39).

When we hear "Yet, they could not escape [us]", it implies that something was chasing them. Clearly, when someone chases another, the latter tries to escape. As such, they tried to escape, but never succeeded. Then, the ways of life are clearly presented.

Allah also says: "We took each by his sins. Some of them We sent upon violent winds; and some of them were overtaken by a sudden blast; and some of them We caused to be swallowed by the earth; and some of them We caused to drown. And it was not Allah who wronged them, but it was they who had wronged themselves" (al-'Ankabut: 40).

As such, the conflict between truth and falsehood occurred in the past nations before you. Their dwellings still exist, and you can visit them for confirmation if you so wish. The cities of Prophet Saleh stand as a witness and so are the remains of the Tribe of 'Ad. Indeed, every place has some relics of the past. That is why Allah the Glorified informed you of it and whoever believes in Me shall believe My word. As for the unbelievers and other seekers of certainty, Allah the Most High says: "Then, go about the earth and behold what happened in the end to those who gave the lie to the truth!" (an-Nahl: 36)

The True Lord the Glorious and Exalted illustrates the conflict between the firm truth and the falsehood. This kind of conflict occurs even among the creatures that have no freewill. It is the Divine plan the struggle takes place between the truth and the falsehood even among the creatures with no free will, for people to benefit. Allah has placed this struggle between things beyond the realm of mankind for the service of mankind as seen in material matters. For example, in the area of values, Allah says: "He sends down water from the sky, and [once-dry] river-beds are running high according to their measure, the stream carries scum on its surface; and, likewise, from that [metal] which they smelt in the fire in order to make ornaments or utensils, [there rises] scum. In this way does Allah set forth the parable of truth and falsehood: for, as far as the scum is concerned, it passes away as [does all] dross; but that which is of benefit to man abides on earth. In this way does Allah set forth the parables" (ar-Ra'd: 17).

Allah the Most High sends down rain which runs into the valleys. As we know, a valley is lowland between two mountains. When rain falls on high ground, it flows to low ground and runs in the valleys. Valleys are fertile places because the mud and silt that flow down from the mountains with the rain and then settle become fertile spoil from which crops grow. Every valley takes water to its full capacity and the rest of water finds its way to other paths or to the underground. This scene was well known in the Arabian Peninsula; when it rains, the valleys are filled with water each to its full capacity. "The stream carries scum on its surface…" (ar-Ra'd: 17) as we see in the fields and we call it the ‘froth’ which refers to the filmy matters that accumulate on the surface of water. What happens to this froth? It is accumulated to form a layer on the surface before turning to the sides. Have you ever seen a pan of boiling meat overflowing? We see the foam floating on the surface.

This foam contains matters that have come out from the substance in the pot. Heating the pot by fire lets it come out to the surface. As such, man either removes it and cleans the pot or leaves it to solidify on the sides to its end. Where does this froth come from? It comes from the earth. Many things are kept in the earth, such as the roots of plants, and the remains of what the wind carries. They all seep into the earth and then hinder the growth of small roots preventing them from absorbing the nutrients from the soil. When Allah sends down rain, the water carries these things which begin to float on the surface. So the small roots find their way to nutrition and grow.

Allah sends rain to wash the soil, which makes foamy things float because they are scum. Indeed, the scum always floats. When the scum floats, do not imagine that it is going high. It is rather, the rise to death. Such is the case with outbursts of falsehood. Do not think that the useless is useful or that the rising froth is higher than the rest of the pot. No, it is a purgation of the substance in the pot. So, the True Lord says: “the stream carries scum on its surface…” (ar-Ra‘d: 17). If all traces of the scum do not disappear with the wavy movements of the water, they will disappear one way or another. Consider the filthy things cast into the sea; they all wash up on shore after a while “And none knows the soldiers of your Lord except He” (al-Muddathir: 31). It washes up on the shore for those in charge of cleaning to collect. If not, how could the water remain pure? Allah the Most High has made the movement of the water a means for the water to clean itself. Therefore, when rain falls and flows in streams, it cleans the soil from the impurities that impede the nourishment of the primary roots. Some people might not feel satisfied with this example, so Allah gives us another example: “…and, likewise, from that [metal] which they smelt in the fire in order to make ornaments or utensils, [there rises] scum. In this way does Allah set forth the parable of truth and falsehood: for, as far as the scum is concerned, it passes away as [does all] dross; but that which is of benefit to man abides on earth...” (ar-Ra‘d: 17) .

We see this every time any metal is put into fire. The metal melts and becomes soft like dough, and then bubbles emerge from it, which we call slag. When the slag is taken from the metal, it becomes strong. So, the fire melts the metal, and removes the harmful or dysfunctional waste from it. I might make a strong suit of armour from iron or refine steel from it. These activities require us to melt the iron with fire and remove the slag in order to make it stronger. The same goes true for gold and silver; when we want to rid them of these impurities, we melt them to remove extraneous matters mixed with them.

Why, then, does the Lord use these visible examples of water? As for Al-Hilyah (ornaments), it refers to what is unnecessary whereas Al-Mata' refers to the necessary needs. He the Most High says*:* "In this way does Allah set forth the parable of truth and falsehood…" (ar-Ra'd: 17)

Truth is similar to water and fire. Water carries the scum far from the pores of the earth and fire removes the scum and slag from metal which qualifies it to the jobs required. In this way, Allah sets forth the examples of truth and falsehood: "for, as far as the scum is concerned, it passes away…" (ar-Ra'd: 17), i.e. it is cast aside and rejected "but that which is of benefit to man abides on earth…" (ar-Ra'd: 17). This is a material example that Allah presents for the struggle between truth and falsehood over principles and morals. It is wondrous that He draws the example using two opposites which perform the same function: water and fire. When you see opposing matters, do not think that they are working against each other. Indeed, each of them is necessary for a certain task.

Allah the Most High says*:* "[Many] Ways of life have passed away before your time…" (Al-'Imran: 137) to alert us to the struggle between truth and falsehood. At times, we might see falsehood dominating and in control. Yet, it is only the scum on the riverbank. This is one of the Divine Norms in life. If you wish to confirm this, look at the precision of the True Lord's words: "…Go, then, in the earth and behold what happened in the end to those who gave the lie to the truth" (Al-'Imran: 137).

Here are two observations; one is general and the other is specific: The general observation is that we understand the statement (go in the earth) to mean that we travel on the earth; but this is according to our own limited perspective. However, when Allah speaks, His perspective is wider, for He is the Creator of this universe. We are still ignorant of many facts about this universe and have only known some of them very recently. The Creator of the universe is the One Who knows all of its secrets.

We used to say that we travel on the earth in belief that there was nothing on this earth except us. Then, science discovered that were it not for the existence of the air on the earth, there could be no life. When the earth turns, the air around it turns with it; they call this the 'the atmosphere.' The atmosphere is a part of the earth with huge expansion. When man travels, s/he travels in the earth, but the one travelling on the earth is the one who walks over the atmosphere. The one who travels on the land with the atmosphere above him is travelling in the earth, not on the earth.

The issue at hand is still one of ways of life that have gone, but Allah wants us to consider them saying: "Go, then, in the earth": how should we go? Either we go by travelling, or we go by means of reflection because someone might not have the means to travel leaving that job to travellers. The travellers, for instance, went to the south of the Arabian Peninsula and saw the valley of Ahqaf where they discovered that a single sandstorm had buried an entire caravan.

Storms have buried many things; one storm alone buried a caravan. How many storms have raged throughout the centuries? The True Lord the Most High tells us about City of Pillars, Iram when He says*:* "Are you not aware of how Your Lord has dealt with the tribe of ʿAd, [the people of] Iram, the town with great columns, the like of whom has never been reared in all the land? And Thamud who carved the rocks in the valley? And with Pharaoh of the [many] tent-poles? [It was they] who transgressed all bounds of equity all over their lands, and brought about great corruption therein: and therefore Your Lord let loose upon them a scourge of suffering" (al-Fajr: 6-13)

He the Most High tells us that the like of Iram was never created in the land, i.e. it surpassed the ancient civilisation of Egypt, which is full of wonders; so where are they now? As long as a single sandstorm could bury an entire caravan, how many sandstorms passed over these lands? Simply, we all dig under the ground to uncover the artefacts. Why do we have to dig when these artefacts were originally above the ground? Sandstorms buried them.

An example to illustrate this: if you leave your house for a month and come back, you find that the inside of the house is covered with dust eventhough the windows were closed. How much dust would you find if you left the house for a year, two or three years, even if all the windows and doors are closed and sealed? Dust would creep in and cover the furniture and the floor. If this happens in our own homes, what about the places exposed to hurricanes and sandstorms? Could whole cities be covered or could they not? Indeed, some entire cities and civilisations were buried under sand. As such, when we search for artefacts, we dig under the ground. This is another way of going through the earth for discovery and contemplation. When Allah says:

قَدۡ خَلَتۡ مِن قَبۡلِكُمۡ سُنَنٞ فَسِيرُواْ فِي ٱلۡأَرۡضِ فَٱنظُرُواْ
كَيۡفَ كَانَ عَٰقِبَةُ ٱلۡمُكَذِّبِينَ ١٣٧

God’s ways have operated before your time: travel through the land, and see what was the end of those who disbelieved [137] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 137)

What does ‘the end to those who gave the lie to the Truth’, mean? When a nation established a great civilisation, the True Lord says in this concern: ‘Are you not aware of how Your Lord has dealt with the tribe of ʿAd, [the people of] Iram, the town with great columns, the like of whom has never been reared in all the land? And with Thamud who carved the rocks in the valley? And with Pharaoh of the [many] tent-poles? [It was they] who transgressed all bounds of equity all over their lands, and brought about great corruption therein. Therefore, Your Lord let loose upon them a scourge of suffering’ (al-Fajr: 6-12).

Were those who established this civilisation not able to ensure its safe survival? How could these great civilisations come to an end and fall into oblivion? It is undoubtedly true that this could only happen because of an even greater power. Despite the awesome development of these civilisations, they were unable to protect themselves from annihilation. It was a superpower higher than them. As such, we understand Allah’s words: ‘…behold what happened in the end to those who gave the lie to the Truth.’ (Al-‘Imran: 137) It was the All-Sustaining, Who sees all the creation, so those who go beyond limits and spread corruption will eventually meet the same fate. Consequently, Allah's words are absolutely true: '[Many] Ways of life have passed away before your time. Go, then, in the earth and behold what happened in the end to those who gave the lie to the truth.' (Al-'Imran: 137)

Next, the True Lord says:

هَٰذَا بَيَانٌ لِّلنَّاسِ وَهُدًى وَمَوْعِظَةٌ لِّلْمُتَّقِينَ ١٣٨

This is a clear lesson to people, and guidance and teaching for those who are mindful of God [138]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 138)

Consider the phrase, 'This [should be] a clear lesson unto all men…' (Al-'Imran: 138). When the clear lessons come, they take their force and authority from the power of the one who issues them. When a revolution takes place in a given society, the whole world is shaken by the first declarations of the new power. This is a declaration issuing from a human being; so what about a declaration issued by Allah?

It is a clarification from Allah that He will not take us suddenly: 'This [should be] a clear lesson unto all men, and a guidance and an admonition unto the God-conscious.' (Al-'Imran: 138). The guidance, as we know, means the way that leads to the desired end. The 'admonition' is defined as forcing one's self to do what is good and avoid what is evil, either by encouragement or fear. This is the 'admonition'.

All these matters are mentioned in the course of the Quranic verses dealing with the battle of Uhud, after we have taken the moral lessons from it, whilst the event is still fresh in minds. As such, before He completed for us the account of Uhud, Allah encouraged our souls by this issue and presented to us these material and moral issues to guide therewith in our lives. So, the story of Uhud did not finish and people miss the lessons drawn from it.

Given this fact, those who fought in the Cause of Allah are the soldiers of truth, who are assured of the truth by receiving Allah's support when His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him was with them as a bearer of the miracle proving his veracity, the events of Uhud should not weaken you. Simply, you know how Allah supports the truth and strengthens it, and campaigns against the falsehood. We have clarified to you the ways and set out the clear lessons. In light of this, Allah the Most High says:

وَلَا تَهِنُوا۟ وَلَا تَحْزَنُوا۟ وَأَنتُمُ ٱلْأَعْلَوْنَ إِن كُنتُم مُّؤْمِنِينَ ﴿١٣٩﴾

Do not lose heart or despair – if you are true believers you have the upper hand [139] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 139)

His saying: 'Be not, then, faint of heart...' (Al-'Imran: 139) means 'do not be weak.' It particularly refers to the weakness of bodies because many were injured at Uhud to the extent that some of them were unable to stand. Even the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was unable to climb the mountain. Talha ibn 'Ubaidillah Allah be pleased with him had to support him on his back to stand. For this reason, Allah says: 'Be not, then, faint of heart...' (Al-'Imran: 139) because when you remember that you are a believer, you know that Allah will not let the forces of falsehood overcome you. You are on the side of truth, and the truth is from Allah Who is the Lord of Truth, Who never leaves His Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and his people fall to their enemies. If you remember all this, never be weak. Indeed, the weakness essentially signifies a lack of physical strength.

'And grieve not...' Grief is an emotional sentiment in the heart. They grieved because many of them had died; seventy-five martyrs in all, of whom five are from the Meccan migrants and five from the Helpers of Medina. It was very difficult and distressing. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him grieved for the martyrs and was deeply moved by the death of Hamza Allah be pleased with him saying: 'I will never suffer any painful loss graver than your loss! Nothing has ever angered me more than this!' Then, he said: 'If Allah gives me victory over Quraysh, I will mutilate thirty of their men for your sake!' Allah then says: 'And grieve not!' Why? That is because you must always view events in the light of their ends.

It is true that the killing was hard and repulsive to the soul,but consider the ultimate end. Then, consider what is left behind. The martyrs have gone to an immortal life with their Lord, which is quite unlike the life in this world.

Our worldly life has its laws, as does the life with our Lord. Is our status higher than His? No, of course not; it is not.

Considering the case of martyrs proves that they have a life higher than the world they left behind. Therefore, do not grieve for them but rejoice for their ultimate happy end. To epitomise, the martyr has a shorter life span in this world but the ultimate end is to reach Allah's mercy and win the life of Heavens. S/He is happy enjoying his/her Lord's company. In this world, when we are on a journey to a certain destination, we are pleased if someone shortens for us the time to get there.

Rather than going to Alexandria on foot, I go there on horseback or by car; and the well-off person goes by plane. If you wish to reach a certain destination, then something makes your journey shorter, why would you grieve? S/He is martyr. Beware of saying: 'Allah denied me his/her strength to support the religion.' Allah has indeed provided further powers and aids for the victory of the Truth; when hearing that a person has given himself to Allah, you must be aware that the ultimate end is tremendous. As such, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him sent the members of his own family first at the battle of Badr, because he knew where any of them would go, if killed. He loved his family greatly beyond the limits of this world. Some people also love their families, but their love is confined to the worldly affairs.

'And Grieve not' for the battle-spoils missed or for the victory lost. Why? That is '…for you are bound to rise high….' Practical illustration soon came in the words of Abu Sufyan who proclaimed the glory of his idol saying: 'Glory to Hubal!' That means their idol 'Hubal' had been victorious. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said to his Companions: 'Will you not answer them?' They said: 'How should we answer them?' He said: 'Say: Allah is the Most High and Most Exalted.' In reply, Abu Sufyan said: 'We have al-'Uzza, while you have no 'Uzza.' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said to his companions: 'Answer him'. 'What to say'? they asked. He said, 'Say: Allah is our protector and you have no protector.' Then, Abu Sufyan said: 'We will meet you at Badr next year.' In response, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him said to one of his companions: 'Say, yes, we shall meet. You have our pledge.'

Therefore, ‘you are bound to rise high if you are [truly] believers.’ So long as you have faith, you will be the uppermost. If you want to know the true meaning of ‘bound to rise high’, compare the battle of Uhud to the battle of Badr. They killed your men at Uhud and you killed their men at Badr. However, you took some of them prisoners at Badr and they took no prisoners from you at Uhud; You took spoils at Badr but they took no spoils at Uhud. You are in the superior position because Allah protected your city, eventhough it had no military protection. This shows your higher position when we consider the results of the two battles. If we consider the battle of Uhud alone, leaving aside Badr, in the light of Allah’s words: ‘…for you are bound to rise high if you are [truly] believers’ (Al-‘Imran: 139), we see this fact confirmed; when you were truly believers, as conditioned by obeying the commands of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him who only speaks by Allah’s leave, you were splendidly victorious. You killed more than twenty of their leaders including the standard bearer, in the first phase of the battle. However, when they disobeyed the commands of the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him the faith in their hearts was shaken.

The events that unfolded confirmed the truth that ‘…you are bound to rise high if you are [truly] believers.’ (Al-‘Imran: 139). They first had the superior position but when they disobeyed, there followed what followed. As such, there came true the truth of Allah’s words: ‘…for you are bound to rise high if you are [truly] believers’ (Al-‘Imran: 139).

Furthermore, if you consider the battle, you note that the enemy did not remain on the battlefield. Only, the Muslims remained there. Where did the enemy go? Did they go to another place to gain victory and success? There was nothing left but Medina which was entirely vulnerable as left without defence. However, the enemies did not go there. Instead, they took their way to Mecca. As such, they escaped.

In the aftermath of the battle, the caller of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him announced that they should pursue the enemies to cast fear into their hearts and demonstrate that the Muslims still had strength to fight; the afflictions they suffered had not weakened them.

The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him went out to pursue the enemy. He did not mobilize battalions of soldiers, who had not witnessed the battle.

Rather, he called upon the believers: ‘Come to me, O servants of Allah.’ Seven hundred men attended the battle, of whom many were injured and seventy-five were killed, including Hamza, Mus‘ab ibn ‘Umair, ‘Abdullah ibn Jahsh, Shammas ibn ‘Uthman, and Sa‘d Allah be pleased with them the ally of ‘Utba. These five are from the Meccan emigrants whereas the rest of martyrs were from the Helpers of Medina. The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him accompanied the rest of his army after losing the support of this number of martyrs who first attended the battle. He did not take anyone in their places from his followers in Medina, of those who offered to go with the army in pursuit of Quraysh. Rather, the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him preferred to go only with those who first battled the enemies, leaving behind, of course, those martyred or injured.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did not accept anyone who did not attend the battle except one man, Jabir ibn ‘Abdullah Allah be pleased with him who did not go to the battle of Uhud. He explained to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that his father ‘Abdulah ibn ‘Amr ibn Haram had ordered him to stay behind and look after his seven daughters saying: ‘Son, it is not appropriate that you and I should leave these women without a man, and I am not leaving my position in support of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to you. Stay behind with your sisters.’ So, he stayed to look after them and the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him accepted his excuse and allowed him to accompany him. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him pursued them to Hamra’ Al-Asad. As for his father ‘Abdullah ibn ‘Amr, he was martyred at Uhud. Despite the martyrdom of his father, Jabir asked the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him for permission to go to Hamra’ Al-Asad. It reminds us of Allah’s words: ‘And none knows the soldiers of your Lord except He’ (al-Muddaththir: 31).

In the wake of the battle of Uhud, there passed by the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him one of the idolaters who was fully trusted as one of the ardent allies of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and whose name was Ma‘bad Al-Khuza‘i, who said: ‘O Muhammad, by Allah, your afflictions grieved us deeply.’ Then, he met Abu Sufyan ibn Harb and those with him at Ar-Rawhaa’. They had decided to go back for the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and to his Companions. Abu Sufyan said to him: ‘What is the news behind you, O Ma‘bad?’ He said: ‘Muhammad has come out along with his companions to pursue you with huge numbers of hosts I have never seen the like.’ He did not leave them until Abu Sufyan and those with him were dissuaded taking their way back to Mecca in fear and hurry. The Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him arrived at Hamra’ Al-Asad where he found no one; so he camped for three days. In other words, it was Quraysh who fled the battle. Thus, you are bound to rise above but be carefully mindful of the condition: ‘If you are [truly] believers’ (Al-‘Imran: 139). Allah then consoled the believers saying:

إِن يَمۡسَسۡكُمۡ قَرۡحٞ فَقَدۡ مَسَّ ٱلۡقَوۡمَ قَرۡحٞ مِّثۡلُهُۥۚ وَتِلۡكَ ٱلۡأَيَّامُ نُدَاوِلُهَا بَيۡنَ
ٱلنَّاسِ وَلِيَعۡلَمَ ٱللَّهُ ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُواْ وَيَتَّخِذَ مِنكُمۡ شُهَدَآءَۗ وَٱللَّهُ لَا يُحِبُّ ٱلظَّٰلِمِينَ ﴿١٤٠﴾

if you have suffered a blow, they too have suffered one like it. We deal out such days among people in turn, for God to find out who truly believes, for Him to choose martyrs from among you – God does not love evildoers [140]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 140)

We have spoken before about the meaning of ‘Al-mass, i.e. touching.’ We said that it is to contact with someone or something without feeling it; it touches you, but you do not feel, for example, any warmth or softness. Unlike the word ‘lams’ in Arabic, it means that you come to contact with something and feel it, which requires contact for a certain length of time. In the case of al-Mass, you almost do not feel anything. Al-Qarh ‘misfortune’ here means ‘injuries’. It is also pronounced “al-qurh” which refers to the pains of injuries. Every word has its own specific meaning.

You might sometimes see words and think they have the same meaning, but actually each word has its own meaning. For example, the words ‘ra’a, nazhara, lamaha, ramaqa and rana’, all indicate sight. However, each word has its special meaning: "Ramaqa" is to glance stealthily by the far side of one's eyes whereas "Lamaha" is to glimpse taking a brief look for a short moment from a distance. As for "rana" it is to take a long look, and so on. Another example is 'jalasa' and 'qa'ada', both of which generally mean 'to sit down'. Yet, the more precise usage reveals that 'jalasa' takes place after the posture of 'reclining', while 'qa'ada' takes place after standing i.e. to 'sit down'. The two verbs result in the same end. The same goes true for qarh and qurh. They have their own meanings. For example, people say that lions have many names in Arabic: Al-asad, Al-ghadanfar, Ar-r'ibal, Al-ward, and Al-qaswara. Truly, these are all names of the lion. However, each of them has its own specific meaning. For example, Al-Asad is the namse of the genus; Al-ghadanfar identifies the lion with a sprouted mane; Al-ward is a lion whose backbone has stretched out. Every posture of the lion has its own specific name.

As to Allah's words: 'If misfortune touches you, [know that] similar misfortune has touched [other] people as well…' (Al-'Imran: 140), notice that the speaker here is Allah, so understand His speech as carefully as possible. In the conditional sentence, as we know, the condition comes first, and then the result follows. For example, we say: 'if you study hard, you will succeed.' Success is the result of that condition, which is hard studying.

As to His truthful statement: 'If misfortune touches you, [know that] similar misfortune has touched [other] people as well…' (Al-'Imran: 140). Does this conditional sentence mean that the misfortune touched the disbelievers at Badr for the misfortune that touched the believers at Uhud? No, it could not be a result of that condition because if it were, the Lord would rather have said: 'If misfortune touches you, similar misfortune will touch the other people.' However, He did not say it in this like manner. Simply, the misfortune that afflicted the disbelievers at Badr happened before the misfortune that befell the believers at Uhud.

These words of Allah mean: If misfortune touches you, do not be downcast, for similar misfortune has touched your opponents as well. The final clause in the previous sentence is not the main clause in the conditional, but a complementary clause that explains and justifies the meaning of the main clause. This analysis is essential to eliminate any misunderstanding of the verse.

By this justification, Almighty Allah, means to console the believers and reassure them. Suppose someone has experienced a disaster, so we may tell him by way of condolence: ‘Let it suffice as solace that your adversary has undergone the same disaster.’ This can be a sort of condolence. Likewise, Allah means to console the believers by reminding them that eventhough a wound has touched them, they should not be downcast. Rather, they should find solace in the fact that their enemies suffer a wound, too. This should hearten them and help them overcome their hardship.

Do we offer condolences based on events that had already taken place, or events yet to take place in the future? Sure, we offer condolence by reminding the distressed of events that did occur and this is what Allah has done with the believers:

‘If you have suffered a blow, they too have suffered one like it...’ (Al-‘Imran: 140).

After this, Allah in the same verse states a general law He has established among people: ‘… We deal out such days among people in turn …’ (Al-‘Imran: 140). What does that mean? It means to transfer a person from one state to another; to take a thing from one person to another. Let us consider here the two battles of Badr and Uhud. Muslims won undisputed victory in the Battle of Badr. As for the Battle of Uhud, none of the two parties can be said to have been victorious or defeated. This explains the words of Allah: ‘…We deal out such days among people in turn…’ (Al-‘Imran: 140). It means that even if the disbelievers are roughly considered to have won victory in the Battle of Uhud (although they did not), then know, O believer, that it is the law of Allah to give people victory and defeat in turns.

Do not let it escape you, however, that victory was only taken from you, O believers, when you disobeyed the instructions of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him By disobeying divine guidance, the believers are thus stripped of the advantage they have over their enemies, and material power is then to determine victory.

Since they have turned thus equal in terms of spiritual power, material power can give one of them victory on a day and defeat on another. Such is how Allah deals out days among people. There is something particularly worthy of notice in the noble verse: Days are dealt out in turns among people so long as they are thus equal, but if the believers hold fast to divine guidance, victory is impossible to be apportioned to the disbelievers. And ponder the words of Allah: '…We deal out such days among people in turn…' (Al-'Imran: 140). Allah says, 'among people' and not 'among the believers and disbelievers'.

The word 'days' here does not refer to the common meaning of the period of time encompassing the day and night; rather, 'days' here refers to victory and predominance that take turns with people through time. We say: 'The day was his," which means victory was his. So '…We deal out such days among people in turn…' (Al-'Imran: 140) does not mean victory is apportioned between the believers and disbelievers; rather, when the believers were occupied with the battle-spoils, their faith wavered, so they lost their advantage as 'believers' and Quraysh roughly won victory over them. If they had remained steadfast, they would never have been deprived of victory, but they deviated from their Lord's guidance, and in doing so, became no better than the disbelievers. So long as such is the case, it is normal then for days of victory to be appointed in turns between one party and another; this is absolute justice.

We must bear in mind the condition Allah states, not for avoidance of defeat, but for superiority and outright victory: '…you shall have the upper hand if you are believers.' (Al-'Imran: 139).

In stating the law of apportioning days among people, Allah means to remind the believers whose faith has wavered that, as long as they are equal to their enemies, by losing the advantage of faith they have over them, victory will be given them and their enemies in turns; it will be for those who are the most tactful and powerful, for material power will then decide who the winner is.

If Muslims leave aside the guidance of Allah, they become human beings facing other human beings, without the spiritual power that gives them superiority over their opponents. Given this law, when the archers failed to obey the command of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him the genius of Khalid ibn Al-Walid who was the commander of the disbelievers' army, then overcame the genius of the Muslim warriors.

The words of Allah are so clear. '…We deal out such days among people in turn…' (Al-'Imran: 140). Victory is not apportioned between the believers and disbelievers, but between 'people' where each party has no special power or assistance to aid them. So long as they leave aside divine guidance, people become all equal, and victory is then determined by material power: the best in this realm is the one who gain victory.

What is it then that guarantees victory for the believers regardless of material power? It is faith: if you have Allah on your side, no creature can be able to face Him in a battle. I have given this example before, and let me repeat it again: If a little boy's peers bully him, and he takes refuge with an adult man, they will all leave him alone. They cannot face the man, but if the child strays far from him, they can harm him then. How about having Allah on our side? He is above all comparison and such is the case of the believers with the disbelievers.

The disbelievers can achieve victory only when the believers stray from divine guidance; Allah will not succour those who do not follow His guidance. If He were to do so, this would render the issue of faith completely devoid of meaning. Exalted is He above all that does not befit His Majesty! Let us consider the Noble Quran; any statement made about people who deviate from the guidance of Allah confirms that the outcome of such deviation is misery. For instance, Allah says: 'By the declining day, man is [deep] in loss...' (al-'Asr: 1-2). Humankind would have been wholly doomed to loss and misery, but what is the only way that can save them? Here is the answer offered to us by Allah: 'Except for those who believe, do good deeds, urge one another to the truth, and urge one another to steadfastness.' (al-'Asr: 3).

This truth is confirmed in another context in the Noble Quran, where Allah Glorified is He says: 'Man was truly created anxious: he is fretful when misfortune touches him, but tight-fisted when good fortune comes his way. Except those who pray...' (al-Ma'arij: 19-22).

So, every general statement in the Quran about humankind denotes that we are generally doomed to misfortune. What then is the only way for us to be saved? It is abiding by the guidance of Allah.

Thus, the Words of Almighty Allah: '…We deal out such days among people in turn…' (Al-'Imran: 140) imply mild blame to those who have proclaimed faith yet disobeyed the commands of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

At the end of the same verse Almighty Allah says: '…for Allah to find out who truly believes, for Him to choose martyrs from among you– Allah does not love evildoers.' (Al-'Imran: 140)

At times of victory, everyone, even those who has not participated in the battle, wish to include themselves among the victorious. At times of defeat, however, people are differentiated. Only the truthful would share the burdens and difficulties of defeat, even those who have not directly engaged in the battle, and would not try to evade responsibility, whether they blame or excuse those who have directly caused the defeat. Someone might wonder: 'Did Allah need to "find out" who truly believes'? He the Exalted and Almighty certainly knows who the believers are whether battles occur or not. However, we do not know what the Omnipotent Knowledge of Allah encompasses. Therefore, unless Allah unveils to us the truth about something, it cannot be held as evidence against us. When Allah makes manifest to us the truth that He eternally knows, it becomes a proof and an argument in favour of those who believe and against those who disbelieve. This way, no one would claim that he had been ready to proclaim faith if only he had been granted the chance!

Therefore, we are tested through trials and tribulations: so that we can know ourselves, and for our attitudes to stand for us or against us. Accordingly, Allah has absolute, eternal Knowledge of all things, but they do not represent evidence against us unless we are made to know them. Someone might claim that if a great battle were to take place, they would stand up and fight with perseverance; still, it is only when the battle actually takes place that the valiant are differentiated from the cowardly. Let us give an example of this (and Allah has the Highest Example). The dean of a college may ask one of the teachers to run an exam to assess students and give prizes to the best. The teacher may reply that there is no need for an exam and he can just tell who the best students are. By experience, the teacher may classify the students in order of excellence. The dean, however, would insist on holding the exam so no one will have an excuse, and would choose another teacher to carry out the exam. The results would come out, and the expectations of the first teacher would turn out to be true, but now his knowledge is proved by unquestionable evidence so none of the student would be allowed room to object to or deny the truth.

If human beings can have knowledge and tell truths by experience, what about Allah Who has the absolute, omnipotent Knowledge? Allah, with His Omnipotent Knowledge, knows everything; His Knowledge encompasses all that was, is, will be, and would have been. Still, He does not say to us, for example: ‘I know if you entered a battle, you would have done such-and-such.’

This would have allowed deniers of the truth a chance to argue for themselves and make unfounded allegations. To prevent this, Allah has willed that a battle must take place and the truth, which He already knows, to be thus proven to people so none of them can have an excuse. So, Allah does not need to ‘find out’ anything; He just makes His Knowledge known to us to remain a standing proof for or against those who witness it.

The True Lord says: ‘…for Him to yattakhidh (choose) martyrs from among you…’ (Al-‘Imran: 140). The Arabic word yattakhedh denotes selection of a person or thing in preference to others. For example, Almighty Allah says: ‘…Allah ittakhadha (took) Ibrahim (Abraham) as a friend.’ (an-Nisa’: 125) This means Allah has singled Ibrahim (Abraham) out and exalted him with His Love. The word ‘yattakhidh’ means selection of a person or thing based on preference to elevate them to a special status. Accordingly, ponder these words of Almighty Allah: ‘…for Him to yattakhidh (choose) martyrs from among you…’ (Al-‘Imran: 140). The classical meaning of the Arabic word shahid is one who fights in the cause of Allah and is killed in the battle, yet he remains alive and amply provided for up there with his Lord.

Here is a common misconception. Some would say: ‘If we open the grave of a martyr, we will find dust and bones, which means that his life has been taken from him’! No, Allah has given him a new life up with Him, not in the world of people. If someone were to open the grave of a martyr, they indeed would find bones and dust, for Almighty Allah has given the martyr a life with Him, not with us: ‘[Prophet], do not think of those who have been killed in Allah's way as dead. They are alive with their Lord, well provided for.' (Al-'Imran: 169). The martyrs have with their Lord a life we do not know the nature of. When we open their graves, we are dealing with a material issue, but the life of martyrs is not in the material world, but up with Allah as He has told us. The Arabic word shaheed (literally: "martyr") also conveys "to bear witness"; martyrs will testify to the truth the battle was fought for. Everyone wants the best for themselves, and if those people had not known that to expose their lives to death in the cause of Allah was better for them than their staying alive, they would not have done so.

In this way, each martyr bears witness to the Truth for which they have lost their lives. The word shaheed (literally: "martyr") can also mean they struggled to deliver the Message of Allah to the last drop of blood. Allah concludes the verseby saying: '…Allah does not love evildoers' (Al-'Imran: 140).

This implies an emphasis that the battle must be fought under the banner of truth. As we have said earlier, as long as both opponents contradict divine guidance, Allah will not wrong any of them in any way; He will let material power determine victory in the battle, since none of the fighting parties has any nonmaterial advantage over the other. Despite Allah's aversion to disbelief, He will not be on the side of the believers if they do not hold fast to the requirements of faith. It is only in this case that the disbelievers can defeat the believers. Nevertheless, if the believers hold fast to their faith, Allah guarantees victory for them. Then, Allah says,

وَلِيُمَحِّصَ ٱللَّهُ ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا۟ وَيَمْحَقَ ٱلْكَٰفِرِينَ ﴿١٤١﴾

For Him to cleanse those who believe and for Him to destroy the disbelievers [141]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 141)

To "cleanse" something means to render it pure by removing only harmful elements; it is unlike destroying which means to remove the thing in its entirety. The reason for this process is then clarified in the following verse where Allah says:

أَمْ حَسِبْتُمْ أَن تَدْخُلُوا۟ ٱلْجَنَّةَ وَلَمَّا يَعْلَمِ ٱللَّهُ ٱلَّذِينَ
جَٰهَدُوا۟ مِنكُمْ وَيَعْلَمَ ٱلصَّٰبِرِينَ ﴿١٤٢﴾

Did you think you would enter the Garden without God first proving which of you would struggle for His cause and remain steadfast? [142] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 142)

Faith is not simply a word that is spoken; you must go through a test to prove your faith is true. It is not just proclaiming faith that can constitute sufficient evidence that you are true bearers of the Message. If you are truthful in your claim, you must stand up for the Truth to be predominant when the party who holds it is short of power. When the Truth is victorious and its people are strong, it has no need for anyone to stand up for it. Only at times of weakness does the Truth need to be consolidated by sincere believers. Attaining Paradise is subject to a test that a believer must pass.

Allah says: '... before Allah tests those of you who fought (in His Cause) and (also) tests those of you who are patient?' (Al-'Imran: 142). We must be aware that Allah has known from eternity those who strive in His cause and those who are patient. He only makes His Knowledge evident to people through events so no one can deny the truth. In the following verse, Allah says:

وَلَقَدْ كُنتُمْ تَمَنَّوْنَ ٱلْمَوْتَ مِن قَبْلِ أَن تَلْقَوْهُ فَقَدْ رَأَيْتُمُوهُ وَأَنتُمْ تَنظُرُونَ ﴿١٤٣﴾

Before you encountered death, you were hoping for it. Well, now you have seen it with your own eyes [143] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 143)

Those who missed the honour of participating in the Battle of Badr wanted to make amends for that by participating with Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him in the Battle of Uhud. Therefore, Allah addresses them by the aforesaid verse. Did you think that longing for confrontation with enemies would alone bring victory? Did you think that every battle the believers enter must end in their victory? If you think victory is so easy, it means you have embraced faith with only auspice, ease and victory in your mind. However, Allah has willed to make plain those who have embraced faith with readiness to give their lives for His cause.

If victory were so easily attained, everyone would embrace faith, and this is why Allah says: 'Do you think that you will enter Paradise before Allah tests those of you who fought (in His Cause) and (also) tests those of you who are patient? (Al-'Imran: 142). Did you think Allah would admit you to Paradise before He makes plain to all what He has eternally known, before He manifests through events what is in your hearts to be a proof for or against you? No one is to attain Paradise unless Allah reveals those who strive in His cause and patiently endure adversity for the sake of the Truth.

Allah says: 'Before you encountered death, you were hoping for it. Well, now you have seen it with your own eyes.' (Al-'Imran: 143). That which you had longed for in the past (dying in the cause of Allah) was right in front of you, so if you are sincere, you should be eager to sacrifice your lives as you are eager to remain alive. After this, Allah says:

وَمَا مُحَمَّدٌ إِلَّا رَسُولٌ قَدْ خَلَتْ مِن قَبْلِهِ ٱلرُّسُلُۚ أَفَإِين مَّاتَ أَوْ قُتِلَ
ٱنقَلَبْتُمْ عَلَىٰٓ أَعْقَٰبِكُمْۚ وَمَن يَنقَلِبْ عَلَىٰ عَقِبَيْهِ فَلَن يَضُرَّ ٱللَّهَ شَيْـًٔاۗ
وَسَيَجْزِى ٱللَّهُ ٱلشَّٰكِرِينَ ١٤٤

Muhammad is only a messenger before whom many messengers have been and gone. If he died or was killed, would you revert to your old ways? If anyone did so, he would not harm God in the least. God will reward the grateful [144] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 144)

Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is the name of the final Messenger of Allah. He has another name which is mentioned in the Quran as well as the Bible; namely, Ahmad. 'Isa (Jesus), son of Maryam (Mary), said, 'Children of Israel, I am sent to you by Allah, confirming the Torah that came before me and bringing good news of a messenger to follow me whose name will be Ahmad.' Yet when he came to them with clear signs, they said, 'This is obviously sorcery.' (as-Saff: 6). 'Muhammad' is mentioned in the Quran four times and 'Ahmad' only once.

The verse we are dealing with now mentions the name of 'Muhammad': 'Muhammad is only a messenger before whom many messengers have been and gone…' (Al-'Imran: 144). Let us recite these words of Allah: 'Muhammad is not the father of any one of you men; he is Allah's Messenger and the seal of the prophets: Allah knows everything.' (al-'Ahzab: 40). And His words: 'And (as for) those who believe and do good, and believe in what has been revealed to Muhammad, and it is the very truth from their Lord, He will remove their evil from them and improve their condition.' (Muhammad: 2)

Let us recite this noble verse as well: "Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah. Those who follow him are harsh towards the disbelievers and compassionate towards each other. You see them kneeling and prostrating, seeking Allah's bounty and His good pleasure…' (al-Fath: 29).

A name is a word given to a thing or person to distinguish them so that when the name is spoken, the mind envisages that thing or person. In case the same name is given to two things, a description must be added to differentiate between them. If two people in the same family are named 'Muhammad', a description has to be added to tell who is who. In the country, they would say, for example, 'the eldest Muhammad' and 'the youngest Muhammad'.

The words 'Muhammad' and 'Ahmad' are both derived from the same Arabic root h-m-d which denotes 'praise'. Still, the morphological pattern of each results in a difference in meaning. When a word is used as a name, it is stripped from its linguistic meaning and turns into just a word by which a person or thing is distinguished.

A black slave-girl may be called Qamar (literally: 'the moon'; in the Arabic culture, a beautiful girl is likened to the moon), or a miserable slave-boy may be called Sa'id (the Arabic for 'Happy'). When a word becomes a name for a person or thing, it loses its original meaning and becomes more like a label distinguishing the named person or thing. However, when people give their children names, they hope that the meaning of the name will be manifested in the character and conduct of the child.

Perhaps one who names his plain girl Qamar (literally: 'the moon') wishes her to have the beauty of the name, since she lacks outward beauty in reality. As we said, the Arabic root h-m-d denotes 'praise'. The derivative Muhammad means 'highly praised'; someone or something profoundly praised and admired by others. It means someone highly esteemed and honoured by others.

As for the derivative Ahmad, it means someone who pays high homage to someone or something else.So, he is the one who offers high praise and not the one who receives. Now, let us examine the two names of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him Muhammad and Ahmad. Both are derived from the root h-m-d (praise). As for Muhammad, it means a person who receives high praise and admiration from others. A near synonym to it is Mahmoud which means 'praiseworthy', but Muhammad means highly and profoundly praiseworthy and extolled, so the latter is stronger in meaning.

As for Ahmad, it means someone who offers high praise to another person or thing. The word Ahmad is a comparative form; it means someone who offers praise to someone or something more than others do. A near synonym to it is Hameed which also conveys offering praise to someone or something, but not so highly. Thus, Ahmad is an intensified form of Hamed; it denotes offering a great deal of praise to someone or something, and Muhammad is an intensified form of Mahmud; it denotes receiving a great deal of praise from others.

Hence, Allah has granted His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him a combination of two commendable attributes: He is highly praised by Allah and he is also a devout servant of Him who praises Him highly. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him has been granted his elevated status in two forms: He is the choicest servant of Allah who is Muhammad (highly praised) by Him, and he is also the most devout of His servants who is Ahmad (praises Allah more than anyone else does). So, we are dealing here with two sublime stations granted to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: 'I am Muhammad, Ahmad, Al-Muqaffi (the Final Prophet), Al-Hasher (the Gatherer), the Prophet of Repentance, and the Prophet of Mercy.'

There is much to be said about this point, but now let us return to our main topic: the Battle of Uhud. After the archers disobeyed Prophet Muhammad's orders peace and blessings be upon him the idolaters of Quraysh seized the chance and launched a counter attack. The Companions ran here and there, fleeing, and the idolaters were able to approach Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to the extent that Ibn Qami'ah was able to strike the noble Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him with a stone that broke his tooth! The two rings of Prophet Muhammad's Helmet pierced his cheeks, and he took to bleeding. The Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him tried to climb a rock of the mountain to stand on top of it, but he could not, so the Companion Talhah ibn 'Ubaydullah Allah be pleased with him supported Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him from beneath and lifted him on the rock. The noble Prophet peace and blessings be upon him was thus subject to hardship and suffering like any human being. Was it not in the Power of Allah to protect the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him from all this? Undoubtedly, Allah has power over everything. Still, He did not want to deny His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him the honour and pleasure of fighting and suffering in His cause. Also, Allah wanted the believers to understand why He has sent Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him as a Messenger to all humankind. Allah the Exalted did not send Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him as His Messenger to spare him the inevitable human struggle; rather, He wanted Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to be a role model for every believer who wants to taste the sweetness of faith and struggle in the cause of Allah. In the Battle of Uhud, some warriors fled from the battlefield, and the winds of defeat almost blew upon the believers. The Companion Abu 'Ubaydah ibn Al-Jarrah hurried to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and found the helmet rings penetrating his cheeks. As Companion Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him tried to take them out, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him felt pain, so Companion Abu Ubaydah said: 'O Abu Bakr, spare yourself the trouble. I beg you to let me do it'! Companion Abu 'Ubaydah bit down on one of the rings and pulled it from Prophet Muhammad's cheek and in doing so lost one of his front tooth. He did the same with the other ring and lost another front tooth. It marked the noble Companion ever after that his two front teeth were lost, and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him honoured him with this testimony: 'Every nation has a trustworthy guardian, and the trustworthy guardian of this ummah (all Muslims collectively) is Abu 'Ubaydah ibn Al-Jarrah'. Prophet Muhammad's blood was flowing. Allah inspired Fatema Az-Zahra' Allah be pleased with her to take a piece of a straw mat, burn it, and use its ash to cure the wound. Allah did not want to deny His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him the honour and pleasure of struggling in His cause.

Mean, while, Anas ibn an-Nadr saw a group of the noble Companions, including 'Umar Al-Khattab and Talhah ibn 'Ubaydullah Allah be pleased with them sitting, having thrown down their weapons. Companion Anas asked them: 'What makes you sit back'?! They replied: 'The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him has been killed'. He said: 'Then, what will you do with life after him?! Stand up and die for the cause the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him has died for'! He resumed fighting against the polytheists until he was martyred.

Those were true believers; their firm faith would not have been revealed if the battle had not occurred. Hence came this message from Allah: 'Muhammad is only a messenger...' (Al-'Imran: 144). Allah willed to teach the believers that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is a human being like them; he was sent as a Messenger from Allah just as Prophet 'Isa (Jesus) peace be upon him and all the Messengers have been sent. They were all human beings, all mortals, and death must come to them. 'Muhammad is only a messenger before whom many messengers have been and gone. If he died or was killed, would you revert to your old ways?...' (Al-'Imran: 144)

O believers, did the followers of the previous Messengers forsake faith when their Messengers passed away? How can you be of less mettle than they were? Suppose Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him passed away, would you not undertake to deliver the timeless Message he has passed on to you so it would reach people until the Day of Resurrection? If a man's good deeds die with him, does it mean he truly established something? No, one's struggle is successful only when its fruits outlive him.

Unsuccessful leaders, eventhough remarkable in themselves, are those who die and leave people desperate for good leaders after them. They are those who leave their subjects baffled and wondering why their late leader did not pass on his wisdom to anyone. They continue to lament his loss and wish he had prepared an able successor to take control after him. This is why Allah says: 'Muhammad is only a messenger before whom many messengers have been and gone…' (Al-'Imran: 144).

When we hear the statement: 'Muhammad is only a messenger', we feel the emphasis placed on the meaning intended. Allah emphasizes that Prophet Muhammad's peace and blessings be upon him status is elevated only in the sense that he is a Messenger. This implies that some of his contemporaries perhaps believed him to be more than a human messenger and believed he could not die. Therefore, Allah Glorified is He clarifies that Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is but a messenger before messengers have been and gone: Allah gives no one an eternal life in this world.

Were people heedless of this plain truth? Yes, they were; even after this verse was revealed, eventhough they would recite it day and night along with the other verses of the Quran, we find that Companion 'Umar Allah be pleased with him himself seemed to almost forget it. He had faith just as firm as mountains, a disposition perfectly in harmony with the revelations of Allah, and a mind inspired by His guidance.

Despite that, once he heard the news of Prophet Muhammad's death peace and blessings be upon him he said: 'By Allah, the Messenger of Allah is not dead, and he will not die until he destroys a lot more of the hypocrites'! The shock of Prophet Muhammad's death stunned Companion 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab, Allah be pleased with him. Deep anguish drove him to say that as if he had forgotten that verse. Hence, Companion Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him reminded him of the truth: 'If you worship Muhammad, know that Muhammad has died, and if you worship Allah, know that Allah is Ever-Living and He never dies'! Then, he recited these words of Almighty Allah: 'Muhammad is only a messenger before whom many messengers have been and gone. If he died or was killed, would you revert to your old ways? If anyone did so, he would not harm Allah in the least. Allah will reward the grateful.' (Al-'Imran: 144) Commenting later on this circumstance, Companion 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him said: 'It was as though I had never recited this verse until that day'.

After Muslims pledged allegiance to companion Abu Bakr as caliph, Companion 'Umar said: 'Yesterday, I said something that has no truth in it. By God, I have found nothing to support it in the Book of Allah [the Quran] or in any covenant His Messenger [Muhammad] peace and blessings be upon him has made with me. Indeed, I had hoped that the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him would outlive us all, but Allah the Exalted and Almighty has preferred for His Messenger His Company above your company. Hold fast, then, to the Book by means of which Allah has guided His Messenger, and follow its guidance just as Allah's Messenger peace and blessings be upon him had followed it."

This momentous event teaches us two things: First, we learn from it how ardently the Companions of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him loved him. Second, we know that faith is our safeguard. Our love for someone must not prevail on our love for Allah and our faith in Him. Listen what 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him said afterward: 'When I heard Abu Bakr recite this verse, I saw the truth of it. [Conscious of the situation at last,] My legs would no longer carry me, and I fell to the ground.'

Thus, we understand what Almighty Allah means by His words: 'Muhammad is only a messenger before whom many messengers have been and gone…' (Al-'Imran: 144). It is a message to the believers: 'Do not raise him, due to his prophethood, higher than I Myself have raised him'.

Allah says in the verse: '... If he died or was killed, would you revert to your old ways?' (Al-'Imran: 144). The Arabic expression rendered here as 'revert to your old ways' is literally translated as 'turn back on your heels'. Accordingly, it may mean 'to retreat before their enemy' or 'to return to disbelief after having proclaimed faith'. As for the words of Allah: 'If he died or was killed', it is a clear statement. Earlier, we have considered death and murder, and we said their end result is the same, which is the end of someone's life. However, murder necessarily involves damage to the physical form that hosts the soul which makes it unfit to host it anymore. The word 'death' is different in the sense that it means the end of one's life without damage to that physical form; death would come upon any person without necessarily being preceded by physical harm, illness, etc.

Destruction of the body that leads to loss of one's life is 'murder' or 'killing'. The soul cannot reside in a material form unless it has certain characteristics, and if these characteristics are deformed, the soul leaves. On the other hand, when the soul leaves without destruction of the body, this is the classical meaning of 'death', unlike 'murder' or 'killing'.

In the verse we are dealing with, Allah Glorified is He says: '... if he died or was killed...' (Al-'Imran: 144). In the battle of Uhud, word spread that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had been killed. Some would wonder how the Companion believed such a rumour whereas Allah says: '…Allah will protect you from people…' (al-Ma'ida: 67).

The answer to that is: Do you know whether this verse was revealed before or after the Battle of Uhud? Do you think Companions always had every verse of the Quran flashing into their conscious minds? Do you not see that the rumour of his death threw them into extreme confusion that they started fleeing? Even 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him the revered Companion, almost forget about this verse upon the news of Prophet Muhammad's peace and blessings be upon him death: '... if he died or was killed...' (Al-'Imran: 144). It is also possible that the protection Allah granted His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him was protection against their mischief and their degradation.

In this way, Allah has willed that all those who had proclaimed faith would be tested so what each harboured in his heart would be revealed. 'Abdullah ibn Ubayy, for example, retreated from the battle and took with him one third of the army. Two other groups were about to lose heart, but Allah has willed to make their hearts firm, so they remained steadfast with Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him; the archers also had their own part to play at the Battle of Uhud.

They saw victory close at hand and lure of the battle-spoils dazzling, so some of them craved the spoils, and they were split in dispute. Commander of the archers, 'Abdullah ibn Jubayr, and few archers insisted on obeying the orders of Prophet Muhammad, so they fought until they were martyred. Those were the ones who yearned for reward in the Hereafter. The rest of the archers yearned for the spoils. When the rumour of Prophet Muhammad's murder spread, the remaining archers fled the battlefield along with others, while Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was calling out: 'Come back to me, O servants of Allah! Come back to me, O servants of Allah'!

It was a severe trial through which Allah has willed to reveal the true colour of all those who had proclaimed faith. The stand each one took unveiled what was in their hearts, and those whose stand was contrary to the ordinance of Allah were obviously exposed. Meawhile, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him experienced a sharp decrease of his human strength to such an extent, as we have said, that he was unable to climb the rock by himself, so Companion Talhah ibn 'Ubaydullah lowered his back for the Prophet to mount and ascend the rock. In such a state of physical weakness, Allah the Exalted and Almighty willed to give His Messenger strength sufficient to enable him to stand firm before one of the tyrants of Quraysh who was threatening him.(1)

If it had been a moment of strength for Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him then, it would have been no wonder that he should triumph over his tough opponent. However, Allah wanted to show us His support and assistance of His Messenger at a moment of weakness and exhaustion. That tyrant of Quraysh was Ubayy ibn Khalaf Al-Jamhi. He had a horse that he sarcastically mentioned to the Messenger of Allah, saying: 'I feed this horse many measures of corn every day [so it can bear the burden of your corpse!] and upon it I will slay you'! Full of certainty that his Lord would not let him down, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him replied: 'No, it is me who will slay you by the Will of Allah'.

This man did not dare approach Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him while he enjoyed full strength. Rather, he took chance of his severe injuries, his broken tooth, his cheeks pierced with the rings of his helmet and his blood pouring. In a tone of groundless defiance, Ubayy ibn Khalaf Al-Jamhi said: 'Where is Muhammad? Let me perish if he survives'! The Companions said: 'O Messenger of Allah! Should one of us confront him'? Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him signified to them to remain silent. He knew Ubayy showed such boldness only because he knew the Messenger of Allah was physically almost powerless. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him took up a spear and struck Ubayy who fell off his horse, bellowing like a bull. The companions of Ubayy exclaimed: 'No harm has been done to you, O Ubayy! What a fine fellow you are! It is only a scratch'! By that scratch, Prophet Muhammad killed the man on whom the Wrath of Allah was severe. It has been reported on the authority of Ibn ‘Abbas: ‘The Wrath of Allah was severe upon him. The Messenger of Allah killed, with his own hand, for the cause of Allah, and the Wrath of Allah was severe upon those who made the face of the Messenger of Allah bleed’.

Those who harboured enmity toward Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him were driven by arrogance and stubbornness, not by beliefs firmly ingrained in their hearts. They believed him to be truthful and believed what he delivered was indeed the Message of Allah. This is what Allah reveals in the Noble Quran: ‘But when Our enlightening signs came to them, they said, “This is clearly [just] sorcery”! They denied them, in their wickedness and their pride, eventhough their souls acknowledged them as true. See how those who spread corruption met their end!’ (an-Naml: 14)

Deep inside, they did know Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him told the Truth, and how this conviction manifested itself in the case of Ubayy ibn Khalaf Al-Jamhi. As we have said, companions of Ubayy told him: ‘What a fine fellow you are! It is only a scratch’! Ubayy replied: ‘By Him Whose Hand is my soul, were my injury to be distributed among the entire population of Hejaz, they would surely all die’! His companions, however, again reassured him: ‘You are fine, Ubayy. it is only a simple scratch’. However, Ubayy replied: ‘No. By Allah, I know that blow will kill me, for he told me in Mecca: “No, it is me who will slay you by the Will of Allah”. By Allah, had he only spat on me, he would have killed me!” Ubayy died on their journey back to Mecca.

That was a sign from Allah: He willed that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him should kill that die-hard Qurayshite idolater despite his physical weakness and injured body. That constitutes a clear proof that material human power is not the criterion to determine victory. Allah, by His Power and Might, aided Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and granted him victory despite his lack of physical strength then. That aid bore testimony to the Might of Allah Who sustains and protects His servants, independent of their material means. Were victory to come at a time of predominance and power, people would simply say: ‘They are strong, so they won victory, naturally’.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him struck that Qurayshite tyrant and killed him despite his physical weakness. That was a sign from Allah, and other signs followed to consolidate confidence of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and the believers in the fact that he was the Messenger of Allah and supported by Him. One of those signs was that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him before that battle already knew what would happen there, for he said: ‘By Allah, I have seen a good vision: I have seen cows being slaughtered, a crack at the tip of my sword, and I saw myself placing my hand in fortified armour that I interpret to be Medina’. He peace and blessings be upon him also said: ‘I have seen myself [in a vision] on the day of Uhud and no creature near me except Gabriel on my right and Talha [ibn ‘Ubaydullah] on my left’.

So, the battle and all its events had already been revealed to him, and despite that he was eager to fight it, which testifies that Allah had immunized and prepared him for all that would occur. So, on one level, Allah supported Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him by those visions that revealed to Him those future events. On another level, events of the battlefield afforded miraculous signs as well. We know that martyrs are not washed before burial, yet Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said about one of those who were martyred at Uhud: ‘The angels are washing your companion’ by which he referred to the martyr Hanzhalah. The believers knew that this was contrary to the usual case with martyrs. Later, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him and the believers found out why this was the case with Hanzhalah. That Companion Hanzhalah was washed, did not represent a breach of the law of martyrs except that they were the angels who washed him. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him witnessed that exceptional scene, and when he went back to Medina, he asked the family of Hanzhalah about him. He discovered that he had only consummated his marriage when he was called for battle. Eager to answer the call, Hanzhalah had no time to perform ritual ablution after his intercourse with his bride. The story thus told by his own wife revealed the one reason why Companion Hanzhalah was washed by the angels. That incident was another sign, another reassurance from Allah the Exalted and Almighty that He did not abandon them at the time of weakness and need. Rather, the events of the battle all happened for a reason.

Allah Glorified is He wanted to send Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him signs to prove to himself that he was the Messenger of Allah. Let me remind you of a story I have related before. Some of the Companions went to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and told him Companion Jabir ibn ‘Abdullah was indebted to a Jew and repayment was due upon harvest of dates. The produce of Jabir’s dates decreased that year because of some infection or the like. Consequently, they asked Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to ask the Jew to grant Jabir respite for repayment of the debt. The Messenger of Allah went to the Jew and asked him that, but the Jew refused. ‘No, Abu Al-Qasim’!

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him repeated his request, but the Jew said: ‘No, Abu Al-Qasim’! The Messenger repeated his request a third time, but the Jew insisted: ‘No, Abu Al-Qasim’! Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him with the confidence of faith in Allah, asked Companion Jabir to take him to his garden. He went to the garden, walked among the palms trees, then went to the arbour where Jabir would sit, and, reclining, he said: ‘O Jabir, harvest your dates and repay your debt’! Jabir reported: ‘I harvested the dates and the profits yielded were enough to repay the debt I owed to the Jew, and moreover the amount that remained exceeded what I ever had at times when I had no debts to repay’.

When Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him heard this, he said: ‘I testify that I am the Messenger of Allah’! Allah the Exalted thus willed to give His Messenger clear signs to show him that he was truly the Messenger of Allah. The Jew did not accept the Prophet’s intercession, so Allah gave him a sign to be both solace and evidence. At times of weakness or inability, Allah would not leave Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him without reassurances and aids. Some of Prophet Muhammad’s peace and blessings be upon him opponents wanted to insult him. We have learnt that his name Muhammad literally means ‘highly praised’. His enemies wanted to insult him and curse him, but Almighty Allah did not allow them even to insult the name, let alone the person of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

Allah has encompassed Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him with His protection, so He even prevented his enemies from associating any insult with his honoured name, Muhammad. Instead, He inspired them to fake another name that did not belong to the Prophet: Mudhammam (literally: "disgraced"). Thus, the Prophet's noble name, Muhammad, was never associated with an insult in one sentence! Rather, the fake name they had invented, Mudhammam, was the one that bore the burden of the impudence! Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him laughed when he heard what Umm Jamil, the wife of Abu Lahab, said: 'Mudhammam we have defied! His call we have rejected and his religion despised'! She was alluding to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him by these verses. The 'firewood-carrier' (as Umm Jamil is referred to in the Noble Quran) passed by Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him while he was sitting at the Sacred Mosque, by the Ka'ba, along with Abu Bakr As-Siddiq Allah be pleased with him. As she stood before them, Allah blocked her vision so she would not see Prophet Muhammad. With a stone in her hand, and seeing only Abu Bakr, she addressed him: 'O Abu Bakr, where is your companion? I was told that he has affronted me, and by Allah had I found him, I would have struck his mouth with this stone! By Allah, I am a poetess [and can compose poetry to affront him too]'! Then she said the abovementioned verses.

The Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: 'Does it not surprise you that Allah has prevented Quraysh from associating my name with an insult [in one sentence]? They curse Mudhammam (literally: 'disgraced'; a name Qurayshite idolaters have faked for the noble Prophet Muhammad, peace and blessings be upon him) and they insult Mudhammam, but my name is Muhammad [literally: "highly praised'; thus Allah has protected Prophet Muhammad's name from their insults]."(1)

Thus, we see that out of the mouths of those who hated the messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him he was protected by Allah's will, and Allah even preserved his name from being cursed, and the named one himself peace and blessings be upon him was neither insulted nor cursed.

(1) Narrated by Abu Hurayra – [Al-Bukhari]

The events of the battle of Uhud were a primary lesson for the Companions of the messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and a confirmation of the truthfulness of his divine message. The battle depicted and embodied this, and so when we examine the battles that followed, we do not find a single instance where the believers were defeated because they were purified and educated so that each one of them became aware that Allah knew whatever he concealed, and that if he did not excel in times of trial and struggle, Allah would reveal what was in his soul, and announce it. So, every believer from amongst them entered every battle prepared to strive, and every battle after Uhud brought victory and safety.

The True Lord teaches us here that sticking to the teachings of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is the way to salvation and victory; and He warns us that the believer should never turn back on his heels. He said: ‘So if he was to die or be killed, would you turn back on your heels [to unbelief]? And he who turns back on his heels will never harm Allah at all; but Allah will reward the grateful.’ (Al-‘Imran: 144)

‘And he who turns back on his heels…’ (Al-‘Imran: 144) is a kinetic, physical, and visual image. Some of the companions turned back on their heels at the battle of Uhud, and fled to Medina. The meaning of "turn back" is when somebody faces the enemy in a battle, and then gives the battle his back to flee. The expression is congruent to another one in the Quran, when Allah says: ‘turned their backs [in flight]’ (al-Fath: 22).

Yet, the expression in the verse: ‘you turn back on your heels [to unbelief]’ (Al-‘Imran: 144), has a tangible connotation. It has a moral connotation too, which refers to deviation from the fundamentals of the religion. The True Lord informs us that after this incident, and after the assumption, of killing the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had spread, what the hypocrites said was different from what the people of weak faith said. The hypocrites who were more evil than the disbelievers, said: ‘If he was truly a Prophet, he would not have been slain; go back to your brothers and your former religion’. As for those whose faith was weak, they said: ‘We will go to Ibn Ubayy and seek amnesty from Abu Sufyan’. Anas ibn An-Nadr stood firm, and said: ‘O Allah, I absolve myself from what these people (the hypocrites) have brought, and I seek your pardon for what these people (the weak of faith) have said'.

He divided it evenly; he absolved himself from the hypocrites who said: 'They will return to their former religion', and sought pardon and forgiveness for those who were weak of faith. Allah the Exalted says: 'And he who turns back on his heels will never harm Allah at all; but Allah will reward the grateful.' (Al-'Imran: 144). Why? It is because Allah, before creating anything, is eternally endowed with attributes of absolute perfection; and none of these attributes can be affected in the slightest by any of His creatures. He created the universe and all in it because He is Omnipotent, Wise, All Knowing. Thus, the creation of the universe did not add to Allah's attributes. When He created you, and formed you, He gave you guidance so you would be an upright, well-balanced creation. The benefit returns to us, creatures, and so we must understand that the revealed ways of guidance sent by Allah give no benefit to Him, but benefit us. That's why the verse continues: 'but Allah will reward the grateful.' (Al-'Imran: 144) This is because a person only gives thanks for blessings: the blessings of purification, teaching, and the clarification of the true rank of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him in the sight of his Lord. The believers are aware that Allah deserves thanks from them for these blessings.

After this, the True Lord bids us consider a general matter, which applies to all humanity:

وَمَا كَانَ لِنَفْسٍ أَن تَمُوتَ إِلَّا بِإِذْنِ ٱللَّهِ كِتَٰبًا مُّؤَجَّلًا ۗ وَمَن يُرِدْ ثَوَابَ ٱلدُّنْيَا
نُؤْتِهِۦ مِنْهَا وَمَن يُرِدْ ثَوَابَ ٱلْـَٔاخِرَةِ نُؤْتِهِۦ مِنْهَا ۚ وَسَنَجْزِى ٱلشَّٰكِرِينَ ﴿١٤٥﴾

No soul may die except with God's permission at a predestined time. If anyone strives for the rewards of this world, We will give him some of them. If anyone strives for the rewards of the Hereafter, We will give him some of them: We will reward the grateful [145] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 145)

'It is not for one to...' (Al-'Imran: 145) means 'should not'. In our daily life we say: 'It is not for you to strike Zayd (Arabic name for males)'; we mean you should not strike him. Allah says: ‘No soul may die except with Allah’s permission...’ (Al-‘Imran: 145); this might make us wonder: ‘Is death a voluntary action?’ No, but the True Lord’s expression here suggests something, because if you say: ‘It is not for so-and-so to do such-and-such’, this means that they can choose whether to do it or not, and that the person can either do it or not. No one can describe Allah’s power in these terms, however.

We understand from this that even if someone were to expose themselves to destruction, they could not die except by Allah’s leave. If this is the case, what about it if someone does not expose themselves to destruction?

So, if a person seeks death, it will not visit them unless Allah allows it. In our daily life, we find many different manifestations of this. We find that some people cannot cope with this life because their faith is not sufficient to deal with its trials and tribulations, and so they commit suicide, wanting to flee from that which they cannot control. As for someone with strong faith, no matter what trial or difficulty befalls them, they say: ‘I have a Lord, and whatever He decreed for me, He is the Wise, the Sustainer who knows what is good for me better than I know myself. Perhaps this tribulation will efface my sins for me’.

This is the opposite of the one who flees from what he cannot control, and so kills himself; all of us have seen or heard of those who attempt this, but are saved by someone who reaches them in time to carry out Allah’s will in saving them, for example by pumping the stomach of the one who takes an overdose, or putting out the fire on the somebody who tries to burn themselves to death. The one who attempts suicide wants to die, but if Allah does not give His leave, He will not allow them to do so. A person might attempt suicide by shooting himself, but the gun does not fire; someone might attempt to hang himself with a rope from the ceiling, but it breaks. Why? That is all because no one can take life except He who gives life.

Someone might say: ‘But what about those who are killed by another person’? The popular adage says: ‘If the killer were patient enough to leave his victim alone, he would die of his own accord’. The moment when the soul leaves the body is assigned to a fixed time. Sometimes it arrives without any cause, and a person dies suddenly, his friends saying: ‘He was with us a short, while ago’! They forget that he died because his death was ordained for a specific time.

For this reason, we find that a person might seek to improve his health by undergoing a certain operation, and during the operation, he dies. Ahmad Shawqi Allah rest his soul said:

Death sometimes overwhelms, and sometimes is expected, and every man is hostage to the closing of his book;

He who dies by the claws of a lion is akin to he who dies by a bite from its teeth.

If death sleeps from you, all medicine is helpful; But if it sleeps not, medicine is one of its henchmen!

If the book is closed, then, it is the end. If a person comes face to face with a lion, it makes no difference whether he is killed by its teeth or its claws. If death leaves a person alone, he might be cured of his illness by a pill or a tonic; but if it awakens, medicine and treatment might ultimately cause death or become an instrument of death. What the murderer is capable of is destroying the body of the one he kills; and this is for what he is punished.

So, the True Lord says: 'No soul may die except with Allah's permission at a predestined time.' (Al-'Imran: 145) This is a general fact of life. The expression 'pre-ordained term' is sometimes used to mean the entire life span, and sometimes used to mean the absolute final moment of life, which is true death. When the murderer destroys the body of the one he kills, he is only doing so in accordance with the term ordained by Allah. But why, then, is the murderer punished? We punish him because he has destroyed another person's physical body.

The True Lord says: 'No soul may die except with Allah's permission at a predestined time.' (Al-'Imran: 145) Notice His words; 'except with Allah's (God's) permission' (Al-'Imran: 145). This shows us that Allah is the One Who gives permission. Permission is given to the angles for implementation. Because of this, we find that when the Noble Quran addresses this issue, it sometimes ascribes this act to Allah, and so He says: "Allah takes the souls at the time of their death, and those that do not die [He takes], while they sleep. He keeps hold of those whose death He has ordained and sends the others back until their appointed time. There truly are signs in this for those who reflect." (az-Zumar: 42)

Elsewhere, the Quran ascribed the act to one angel: Say, ‘The angel of death will take you who has been entrusted with you. Then to your Lord you will be returned.’ (as-Sajda: 11) Elsewhere, the True Lord ascribes the act to envoys who aid the angel of death: ‘He is the Supreme Master over His subjects. He sends out recorders to watch over you until, when death overtakes any of you, those sent by Us take his soul - they never fail in their duty.’ (al-An‘am: 61).

Every proclamation issued by the True Lord Glorified and Exalted is He is the absolute truth because every commandment that sets the pre-ordained term is not subject to the will of the one entrusted with carrying it out; it is by leave of Allah Almighty, who ordained it. As long as every commandment issues from Him, it is He who causes death, and then the angel of death, Azra’il, passes on the commandments that issue from Allah to his helpers, each of whom carries out their mission. So, the bringing of death ultimately goes back to Allah.

The bringing of death being delegated to the angels is the meaning of Allah’s permission, and ‘permission’ requires someone to be given it, which in this case is the angels, who are given permission by the angel of death, who is given permission by Allah Glorified and Exalted is He.

The True Lord then says: ‘If anyone strives for the rewards of this world, We will give him some of them.’ (Al-‘Imran: 145). Whoever wants the rewards of this world asking for recompense for his work therein, will receive it even if he is a disbeliever: ‘If anyone desires [only] the fleeting life, We speed up whatever We will in it, for whoever We wish; in the end We have prepared Hell for him in which to burn, disgraced and rejected.’ (al-Isra’: 18).

Allah Glorified and Exalted is He also says in the Noble Quran: ‘If anyone desires a harvest in the life to come, We shall increase it for him; if anyone desires a harvest in this world, We shall give him a share of it, but in the Hereafter he will have no share.’ (ash-Shura: 20)

This prevents us from saying: ‘the disbelievers are in a better position than we are: they are advanced, and we are behind.’ Was there not a time when the believers were highly advanced? There was a time when the believers were advanced, and for a thousand years they led the world, whilst at the same time the disbelievers described themselves as living in the 'Dark Ages'. Why did you ignore this!? It is because history is written and misrepresented by them (the disbelievers), and so we say to them: we used to be the advanced, and you and history attest it.

We said before that those who believe in Allah must be eager for Allah's means, and must not leave them to those who disbelieve in Him. Will the disbelievers utilize Allah's means, and you, the believer, leave those means for them? No, because those who believe in Allah have more right to the secrets of His creation, and if we leave the disbelievers to take advantage of the secrets of science, and we refrain from competing with them, we are being negligent.

'If anyone strives for the rewards of the Hereafter, We will give him some of them: We will reward the grateful.' (Al-'Imran: 145) Notice that the True Lord used the word 'grateful' twice, and the Quran emphasizes this point. Allah, exalted be He, gave us means, and if these means will aid us in this world, this merits gratitude; and if, in addition to the means, we are assigned with a task, this responsibility will bring us reward in the Hereafter and this also merits gratitude.

After this theoretical statement, 'No soul may die except with Allah's permission at a predestined time.' (Al-'Imran: 145) Allah confirms that this has been manifested during the life of the believing nations that preceded us; for there is a difference between speech and the actual occurrence of what the speech entails, and the truth of this statement indeed occurred before us. Allah says:

وَكَأَيِّن مِّن نَّبِيٍّ قَٰتَلَ مَعَهُۥ رِبِّيُّونَ كَثِيرٌ فَمَا وَهَنُوا۟ لِمَآ أَصَابَهُمْ
فِي سَبِيلِ ٱللَّهِ وَمَا ضَعُفُوا۟ وَمَا ٱسْتَكَانُوا۟ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ يُحِبُّ ٱلصَّٰبِرِينَ ١٤٦

Many prophets have fought, with large bands of godly men alongside them who, in the face of their sufferings for God's cause, did not lose heart or weaken or surrender: God loves those who are steadfast [146] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 146)

They say that 'Waka'ayyin' (and how many) is to suggest large numbers, like 'how many'. For example, if a person asks you: 'Why do you shun me?' and you reply: 'Kam' (How many times) have I visited you?' When you said:

'How many times have I visited you?', it may have seemed like a question, but you do not really want him to tell you how many times you have visited him, what you really mean is: 'You are the one who should answer your question because when you do, you will recognize that I have visited you many times!' Thus the answer will match what you actually did.

You asked 'How many times have I visited you?' because you are sure that were he to answer, he would say: 'You have visited me many times.' If you were not sure of this, you would not have asked it to begin with. So, when you ask: 'How many times have I visited you, and how often have I been good to you, and how often have I supported you, and been kind to you?' Your words 'how many' are like the 'Waka'ayyin' used to suggest a big number. We say yama (a word in Egyptian dialect) so and so happened. 'Yama' means the same as 'Waka'ayyin' (in the verse); both mean 'how many'.

A friend might ask you: 'How could this have happened?' You may respond: ka'ayy (Like any) one who does this or that, then, so and so happens to him.' You mean that the matter is not unusual, and that it happens a lot. When you say Kam or kam min (how many times), both are correct. The meaning is that how many a prophet [fought and] with him fought people who believe in his message, just like what happened in the case of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him. The True Lord's word 'ribbiyyoona' (men who are devoted to Allah) means people who are experts and knowing the ways of war, it also means followers who fight, and it could also mean people who follow divine guidance.

Allah's words: 'But they never lost heart' (Al-'Imran: 146) mean that they did not become weak. Allah shows us the role model, as though He were saying: 'Why did you become weak, in attitude, at the battle of Uhud, when you were fighting with the Messenger of Allah? It had been better for you to have more eagerness in fighting with him than that of other followers of other prophets because he is the Seal of the Prophets who is establishing the principles that will live on until the Final Hour, and none will come after him; so it was necessary that you strived with eagerness, for you are the best "ummah" (followers of Islam) brought out for mankind, and I have chosen you for that purpose.'

The True Lord was giving them an example which refers to them indirectly, admonishing them and teaching them too. Allah says*:* 'And how many a prophet', i.e. many Prophets, 'with him fought many religious scholars. But they never lost heart due to what afflicted them' (Al-'Imran: 146), i.e. they did not become weak, which implies that they were afflicted in the course of fighting with something that usually weakens people. 'But they never lost heart' (Al-'Imran: 146), i.e. they did not suffer a decline of faith as you did. 'Nor did they weaken or submit.' (Al-'Imran: 146) The words 'they never lost heart', 'nor did they weaken' and 'or submit' come here in their proper order because losing heart is the first sign of weakening; it takes place in the heart and then spreads to the limbs.

What does istakanu (submit) mean? It is derived from sukoun in Arabic, which means 'stillness', the opposite of movement. War necessitates movement, and whoever comes to war needs to be able to advance and retreat. The one who does not move stays still because he does not have the power to move. The verb istakan (to submit) begins with the three letters 'i-s-t' which denote a request. When you say istafhama (to elicit), you are requesting or asking for comprehension. These three letters (i-s-t) denote a request for the meaning that the rest of the word shows, like in the Arabic word ista'alama (to inquire) which means that you are asking for the information you want to know. The word istakhbara means to ask for news; istakan means literally 'to seek existence' as though they had lost heart and weakened to the extent that they sought only to have some kind of existence because the manifestation of existence is movement, and movement had ended. This is the meaning of istakanu (to submit).

This implies that the word here is indeed of, what the Arab grammar scholars call, the 'istaf'ala' pattern. The word Istakanoo is derived from kawn (existence). However, the word may not follow the 'istaf'ala' pattern. If so, the first three letters ist in istakanu do not denote a request. Instead, the 's' is original in the word, and the word is actually derived from 'sakan' (stillness) on the ifta'ala morphological pattern. Does this mean that they sought stillness? No, for they were already still, so the more suitable meaning is that they sought only to exist, and this is what I am inclined to and prefer. It is also said that it means that they did not yield or humiliate themselves.

ʽBut they never lost heart due to what afflicted them in the cause of Allah, nor did they weaken or submit. And Allah loves those who are patient in adversity.' (Al-'Imran: 146) Whatever afflicts the servant is a trial from Allah. The Prophetic Hadith says: ʽIf Allah loves a people, He sends tribulation upon them.' – narrated by Anas ibn Malik. All of this losing of heart and weakness should not have distracted them from the battle, for if had borne their adversity with patience, Allah would have sent them His aid because when the means of creatures run out and end, there comes the aid of the Creator.

With the end of this verse, the True Lord draws our attention by saying: ʽAnd Allah loves those who are patient in adversity' (Al-'Imran: 146), i.e. it is enough reward for patience in adversity that one becomes beloved to Allah because, as we have said before, we might love Allah for the blessings He sends us, but what is pivotal is not that you love Allah, but that you, by following His guidance, become beloved to Him. Someone once said: ʽHave you not seen so many who loved but they were not loved?!'

You love Him for His blessings, but you also want to be loved by Him, because your love for His blessings is not enough, for the disbeliever enjoys these blessings too; therefore, something else is required. There is something ready to hand, and something delayed until later: the blessings of life are ready to hand, and all humanity shares in them, believers and disbelievers alike, but what is delayed is Allah's reward in the Afterlife, which is the principal one.

So, if people reflected on Allah's's words: ʽAllah loves those who are patient in adversity' (Al-'Imran: 146), they would, whenever they were tested with adversity say: 'Patience is sufficiently rewarded with Allah's love.' Truly, adversity did not make them faint at heart, weak or abased, and this means that they enjoyed the absolute certainty of conviction in Allah, and the absolute certainty of conviction in Allah made them worthy to receive Allah's aid. All you have to do to know Allah's aid is to patiently bear your afflictions. Allah's aid and support is not truly manifested except in times of weakness because when you are strong, you might behave as did those whom the Quran describes thus: ʽWhen man suffers some affliction, he cries out to Us, but when We favour him with Our blessing, he says, "All this has been given to me because of my knowledge" it is only a test, though most of them do not know it' (az-Zumar: 49).

Yet the believers, when they were afflicted ‘did not lose heart’ (Al-ʻImran: 146) because they were certain of an issue that concerns faith: Allah does not leave you to your own devices except when you leave Him. They asked themselves: ‘Why did this happen to us?’ They did not say: ‘Lord! Help us so we can emerge from this weakness!’ Rather, they thought deeply about the reasons why they had reached such a state:

وَمَا كَانَ قَوۡلَهُمۡ إِلَّآ أَن قَالُواْ رَبَّنَا ٱغۡفِرۡ لَنَا ذُنُوبَنَا وَإِسۡرَافَنَا فِيٓ
أَمۡرِنَا وَثَبِّتۡ أَقۡدَامَنَا وَٱنصُرۡنَا عَلَى ٱلۡقَوۡمِ ٱلۡكَٰفِرِينَ ﴿١٤٧﴾

All they said was, ‘Our Lord, forgive us our sins and our excesses. Make our feet firm, and give us help against the disbelievers’ [147] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 147)

It is as if what happened was the result of the sin that had preceded it, and so, they discovered the cause. They were in a battle, and this battle had made them struggle and grow exhausted. True, they did not weaken, yet in such a state, one might suppose that they would say ‘Our Lord, give us victory’, before saying anything else. Instead, they said ‘We have to know the reason for the initial reverse.’ The reason behind this reverse is that Allah does not leave anyone to their own devices unless they forget Him.

ʻAll they said was ″Our Lord...″’ (Al-ʻImran: 147). Consider the wording of their call: ʻOur Lord!’ They could have said ‘O Allah’, but they chose to say ‘Our Lord!’ Why is that? It is because the the servants’ relation with the Oneness of Allah’s Lordship precedes their relation with the Oneness of Allah’s Divinity. The Oneness of Allah’s Divinity is binding, for ‘the Divine’ means ‘He is worshiped’, and as long as He is worshiped, there is an obligation to obey Him, and this obligation is what comes next. He has Lordship over all mankind before He obliges them with His commands. As long as the Lord is the One who attends to the nurturing of his subjects, it is more fitting that they say ʻOur Lord!’ This expression ʻOur Lord!’ means: ‘You are in charge of our affairs and You sustain us.’

ʻOur Lord, forgive us our sins…’ (Al-ʻImran: 147). It is as though they said: ‘Nothing afflicts us except as a result of committing a sin due to heedlessness.’

Whoever truly understands the meaning of the word ʽsin' will never fall into committing it because the word, in Arabic, 'dhanb' is derived from the word 'dhanab' (tail or end of something). The 'dhanb' (sin) has an end result, which is punishment. So the uttering of the word itself inspires the fact that a result will follow; and if you call to mind the punishment for a sin, you will not commit it.

ʽForgive us our sins and our excesses' (Al-ʽImran: 147) because every sin represents the breaching of the boundary of what Allah made permissible, and an unlawful overindulgence, even if it is of the same type of something that Allah made permissible, nevertheless it exceeds the requirements of your life. Allah allowed us to marry and raise children, but if we seek what marriage grants us from persons other than our spouses, we are being immoderate. Allah gives us wealth in accordance with the effort we exert, but if we covet the wealth of others, we are being immoderate.

Acting immoderately means to take something which is not necessary for you to live. For this reason, the True Lord says*:* ʽSay: [Thus speaks Allah:] ″O you servants of Mine who have transgressed against themselves! Despair not of Allah's mercy: indeed, Allah forgives all sins – for, verily, He alone is the Forgiving, the Merciful.' (az-Zumar: 53)

He the Exalted clarifies: 'I have made a category of women permissible for you, so what has made your eyes swerve to what Allah has not permitted for you? I permitted for you whatever your hands earn, and if you are poor, you can receive charity; so why have you acted without moderation?' Thus, excessive gratification of anything that is beyond the requirements of preserving life is called 'immoderation'. ʽForgive us our sins and our excesses. Make our feet firm' (Al-ʽImran: 147). They began to enter the truth, but in the beginning they saw falsehood, and falsehood is one of the causes of the True Lord's not succouring us to begin with, but when He forgives sins and immoderation, we become worthy of receiving His aid and being granted steadfastness.

ʽMake our feet firm' (Al-ʽImran: 147). Why does the True Lord say this when it is clear that in battles, feet do not remain firm? Battles require people to be in constant swift motion. So what does the term: ʽmake our feet firm' mean? The True Lord's words: ʽMake our feet firm' mean 'do not make us flee from the battlefield, and make it so that we never leave it'. For this reason, we have said that after what the disbelievers had done, they did not remain on the battlefield, but rather left it and dispersed. Even though the believers had been routed, they remained on the battlefield for a time, and then gave chase and pursued their enemies. Eventually, humanity realized this. In France, there is a medal of honour called the ‘Medal of the Fly’. Why does it have this name? It is because no matter how many times you wave a fly away from a place, it will return; the same is true for a leader who has withdrawn from an area: he must be prepared to return to it, and so they award him the ‘Medal of the Fly’.

So His words ʿmake our feet firm’ mean that in any area and any battle, we must not desert our posts because leaving them is the first step towards defeat, and the enemy will use this opportunity against us.

ʿMake our feet firm, and give us victory over the disbelievers.’ (Al-‘Imran: 147) The ʿgive us victory over the disbelievers’ part (Al-‘Imran: 147) is relative because as long as they said ʿgive us victory over the disbelievers’ (Al-‘Imran: 147), they were believers, true believers. In light of this, ‘Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him made his famous statement: ‘You will defeat your enemy by obeying Allah; if you and they are equal in disobedience, they will defeat you with their superior equipment and numbers.’

Faith, therefore, requires that you, first, carefully consider your own weaknesses which caused your afflictions. That is why you truly did not weaken nor surrender, though the battle brought pain and exhaustion upon you. The True Lord is showing us that they realized this, and began with inspecting their status, spoke of their sins, sought forgiveness, spoke of their immoderation, and then they spoke about the battle. What did Allah then bestow upon them? The answer follows:

فَـَٔاتَىٰهُمُ ٱللَّهُ ثَوَابَ ٱلدُّنْيَا وَحُسْنَ ثَوَابِ ٱلْـَٔاخِرَةِ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ يُحِبُّ ٱلْمُحْسِنِينَ ﴿١٤٨﴾

And so God gave them both the rewards of this world and the excellent rewards of the Hereafter: God loves those who do good [148] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 148)

In other words, whoever wants this world, Allah will give it to them of battle spoils and the like. We should notice that when the True Lord speaks here about this world, He does not describe it as being good or as anything else; He simply mentions ‘the rewards of this world’ (Al-‘Imran: 148). When He speaks about the Hereafter, however, He says ‘the goodliest rewards of the life to come’ (Al-‘Imran: 148). This is the beauty that we must truly long for because however long the life of this world lasts, it is nothing, but a brief pleasure, a fancy, and a passing delight. However blessed you are in this world, you still await one of two things: either the blessings will leave you or you will leave the blessings.

The True Lord ends the verse with His words: ‘Allah loves those who do good.’ (Al-‘Imran: 148) They did well when they called on their Lord after He tested them. They asked forgiveness, asked that their immoderation be forgiven, asked that He made their feet firm, and that He succoured them against the people of disbelief. They saw that their own human strength, without Allah’s aid, was nothing but dust in the wind; it had no power.

‘Allah granted them the rewards of this world, as well as the best rewards of the life to come; for Allah loves the doers of good’ (Al-‘Imran: 148). We have said before about patience that ‘Allah loves those who are patient in adversity’ (Al-‘Imran: 146). To become beloved to Allah is sufficient for the believer as a reward for his patience as well as his ‘ihsan’ (doing good to the extent of proficiency).

Next, the True Lord says:

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوٓاْ إِن تُطِيعُواْ ٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُواْ
يَرُدُّوكُمۡ عَلَىٰٓ أَعۡقَٰبِكُمۡ فَتَنقَلِبُواْ خَٰسِرِينَ ﴿١٤٩﴾

You who believe, if you obey the disbelievers, they will make you revert to your old ways and you will turn into losers [149] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 149)

As long as you are believers, and they are disbelievers, how could you ever obey those who disbelieve? First of all, you are different from them, for you are believers and they are disbelievers. Disbelievers and hypocrites will take advantage of any weakness in the Muslim’s faithful heart and try to sneak into it. As we have already mentioned, a group of the hypocrites said: ‘Muhammad got killed, and we no longer have a messenger, so let us return to the religion of our fathers!' The believers who were in a moment of weakness said: 'Let us go to Ibn Ubayy (the leader of the hypocrites in Medina), ask him to mediate between us and Abu Sufyan and take an amnesty from him.'

And so the True Lord has said: ʽYou who believe, if you obey the disbelievers, they will make you revert to your old ways and you will turn into losers.' (Al-'Imran: 149) If you need patronage, do not seek it from the disbelievers; seek it from the One in whom you believe. Allah then has said:

بَلِ ٱللَّهُ مَوۡلَىٰكُمۡۖ وَهُوَ خَيۡرُ ٱلنَّٰصِرِينَ ﴿١٥٠﴾

No indeed! It is God who is your protector: He is the best of helpers [150] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 150)

Did Abu Sufyan not say: 'We have Al-'uzza, and you have no 'uzza!' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him told them to say to him: ʽAllah is our Protector, and you have no protector." When Abu Sufyan said: 'One day for another (i.e. Uhud for Badr), war sways to and fro'. 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him replied: 'It is not the same, for our dead are in Paradise, whilst your dead are in Hell!' How, then, could they be alike, and how could war sway to and fro between them?

ʽNo indeed! It is God who is your protector; He is the best of helpers.' (Al-'Imran: 150) We understand from Allah's words: ʽHe is the best of helpers' that Allah creates men, whether disbelievers or otherwise, who could help you in a superficial way, yet it is not real help; true help is what comes from Allah alone. Why? Because as soon as help comes from Allah, you can rest assured that you are true and sincere to Allah because if not, help would not have come to you. When Allah's help comes, be assured of your faith and that you are with Allah. Allah's words: ʽHe is the best of helpers'" show that help could come by human means. The believers said: 'O Lord, we are now weak, and if we do not go to someone to protect us, what will we do?' The True Lord has clarified for them that they should stand as the forces of faith against the forces of disbelief, and they should not turn to those who disbelieve in their Lord because those are not trustworthy. If they wanted to know what Allah would do "We will strike panic into the disbelievers' hearts.” If He cast dread into the hearts of the disbelievers, what could their equipment and numbers avail them?! Their equipment and wealth would pass on to the believers in the form of battle spoils.

سَنُلۡقِي فِي قُلُوبِ ٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُواْ ٱلرُّعۡبَ بِمَآ أَشۡرَكُواْ بِٱللَّهِ مَا لَمۡ
يُنَزِّلۡ بِهِۦ سُلۡطَٰنٗاۖ وَمَأۡوَىٰهُمُ ٱلنَّارُۚ وَبِئۡسَ مَثۡوَى ٱلظَّٰلِمِينَ ١٥١

We will strike panic into the disbelievers’ hearts because they attribute partners to God although He has sent no authority for this: their shelter will be the Fire – how miserable is the home of the evildoers! [151] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 151)

The True Lord indeed did cast dread into their hearts. When they told Abu Sufyan that Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was coming with a great army from Medina, with additional forces which had not yet fought, to meet him at Hamra Al-Asad, what did Abu Sufyan and his people do?

The word ‘sanulqi’ (to cast) is derived from the word (ilqa’) and it is only used for material things. The Quran makes this clear to us when Allah says: ʻAnd He threw (cast) down the tablets...’ (al-A’raf: 150) A tablet is a material thing. Allah says: ʻAnd he threw down the tablets [of the Law] and seized his brother’s head, dragging him towards himself. Cried Aaron: “O my mother’s son! Behold, these people over-powered me!”’ (al-A’raf: 150)

This is a material thing. We say: ‘he cast the stone’, i.e. he threw it. The True Lord says*:* “They threw their ropes and staffs, saying, ‘By Pharaoh’s might, we shall be victorious.’” (ash-Shu'ara’: 44) They were ropes, i.e. material things. He, the Glorified the Exalted also says about the inspiration revealed to the mother of Moses peace be upon him: ʻWe inspired the mother of Moses saying ″Suckle him, and then, when you fear for his safety, put him in the river; do not be afraid and do not grieve for We shall return him to you and make him one of the messengers.”’ (al-Qasas: 7)

So, to cast is a physical action, as though Allah wanted to make the emotion of dread absolute by saying*:* ‘I will collect dread and place it in the heart so that its effect will be physical.’ If dread takes root in the heart, lassitude soon follows; and when lassitude takes root in the heart, it spreads exhaustion throughout the body. Allah says: 'Into the hearts of those who are bent on denying the truth We shall cast dread.' (Al-'Imran: 151). It is as though He symbolized dread for us, and dread is an emotion that means to become fearful of everything. Therefore, He explains that He will bring dread to them and cast it into their hearts, where it will remain to produce lassitude and exhaustion.

'Into the hearts of those who are bent on denying the truth, We shall cast dread…' (Al-'Imran: 151). Observe the expressions that Allah uses. He uses the plural of majesty in the word 'sa/nu/lqi' (nu in the middle of an Arabic word means We); notice that when the True Lord speaks about a matter that requires an action, He refers to it with the plural of majesty: 'Behold, it is We Ourself who has sent down the Quran and We Ourself will guard it [from all corruption].' (al-Hijr: 9)

As sending down the Quran is a mighty act, Allah uses the plural of majesty, seeing that He will send it down with might, wisdom, knowledge, hearing, sight, sustenance, contraction, and expansion. So He says: 'Behold, It is We'. The plural of majesty is used in the Arabic words 'Inna' (We) 'nahnu' (for people, ourselves; for Allah, ourself), but when He speaks about His own Being, He says: 'Indeed, I am Allah…' (Ta Ha: 14) He does not say 'We are Allah', but on the subject of divine revelation, He says: 'Behold, from on high have We bestowed this [divine writ] on the Night of Decree.' (al-Qadr: 1)

This is because these actions are mighty. So, the plural of majesty is used to describe actions, and these actions require the manifestation of many divine attributes. As we said, before you begin any action, you should say: In the Name of Allah, the Most Merciful, the Dispenser of Mercy'; why? Because the action you will perform requires the power to perform it, and it also requires knowledge and wisdom, i.e. it requires many attributes, and so you should begin the action with the name of the fully capable Who can give you power, the All Knowing Who can give you knowledge, and the Wise, Who can give you wisdom.

All of these attributes will work together to bring out the action so that He has mercy on you even when He aids you. He does not ask you to invoke all the attributes required to perform your action, for there are attributes of which you are unaware. Rather, He says to you: ‘Here is the name that embodies all of these attributes of perfection, say: ″In the Name of Allah”’. By this, all the attributes of perfection are brought together.

Now you notice that when we see the plural of Majesty represented in the letter ‘nun’ (the ‘n’ sound in Arabic words like sanulqi, inna and nahnu), you say ‘we’ to refer to a group of people. A single person also uses it when he magnifies himself. We find it even in our human sphere. Do royalty not say ‘We, the king…’? This ‘we’ in the case of Allah is not a plural, it is a symbol of majesty, majesty that combines all the attributes of perfection that any action requires. And so Allah says*:* ‛Into the hearts of those who are bent on denying the truth We shall cast dread.’” (Al-‘Imran: 151) Every heart in which there is disbelief will have dread cast into it. So, the plural of majesty comes to overwhelm these disbelieving hearts.

Allah does not impute guilt unjustly to them by casting dread into their hearts; it is they who deserve to have dread cast into their hearts. Why? ‛Because they attribute partners to Allah.’ (Al-‘Imran: 151) Associating partners with Allah is what has brought dread to them because Allah acts, whilst these ‘partners’ do not act. If these partners were real, they would not have abandoned them; so why do they not bring their partners to succour them? Dread visited them because they had no protector, and if they had any powerful gods, as they claimed, they would have said to these gods: ‘The Lord of Muhammad does such-and-such to us, so why do you not stand up to Him, O lords of ours?’ However they associated with Allah that which can neither help nor harm, yet is closer to harming than helping.

‛Because they attribute partners to Allah although He has sent no authority for this’ (Al-‘Imran: 151). The ‛authority‛ is power, proof, and evidence. The Arabic word (sultan) is derived from the root s-l-t. We say that someone ‘tasallata’ (dominates over) someone else, which means ‘to overpower’. They say that someone is saleet Al-lisan’ (sharp-tongued) to describe someone who is capable of verbal abuse. Hence ‘sultah’ (authority) means power and force that impose action or in its abstract sense it means proof and evidence. The believers always have authority from Allah because when they have a material victory, this is the authority of power; when they are defeated materially, they still have the authority of truth and evidence. We have mentioned before that Iblis (Satan) will come forward on the Day of Resurrection and say: 'Yet I had no power at all over you: I but called you – and you responded unto me. Hence, blame not me, but blame yourselves'" (Ibrahim: 22).

We said that this authority is of two kinds: either a power that forces us to commit sins or a piece of evidence and proof that motivate us to commit sins. The difference between an overwhelming power and the authority of evidence is that an overwhelming power forces you to do something against your will, whereas the authority of evidence convinces you to do it, so you do it willingly. Thus, sometimes 'authority' means a force that compels you to do something unwillingly; and the authority of evidence and proof will convince you to do it. Satan will come to testify for himself in the Hereafter saying that he 'had no authority over you', i.e. 'I had no power to force you to sin and I had no evidence to convince you to sin'. So what happened then? 'Yet I had no power at all over you: I but called you – and you responded unto me.' (Ibrahim: 22) That is, 'you obeyed me, and answered my call without any authority of power that would enable me to compel you to do anything, or any authority of evidence that would enable me to convince you.'

The True Lord ends the verse by saying: 'their shelter will be the Fire—how miserable is the home of the evildoers!' (Al-'Imran: 151); i.e. their final destination is hell. A shelter is the eventual location to which one retreats. It is as though there was an integral part of the self of someone who disbelieves that pushes them into hell, which then becomes their shelter and sanctuary to which they retreat. For this reason, we must pay attention to the fact that the True Lord sometimes says: 'and that they will return to Him' (al-Mu'minun: 60); other times He says: 'and to Him you will be returned' (al-Baqara: 245) and 'How miserable is the home of the evildoers!' (Al-'Imran: 151) That is, an abode from which there is no escape because we can leave any abode, but the abode where the evildoers will eternally remain is hell, the worst of abodes. Next, the True Lord says:

وَلَقَدۡ صَدَقَكُمُ ٱللَّهُ وَعۡدَهُۥٓ إِذۡ تَحُسُّونَهُم بِإِذۡنِهِۦۖ حَتَّىٰٓ إِذَا فَشِلۡتُمۡ
وَتَنَٰزَعۡتُمۡ فِي ٱلۡأَمۡرِ وَعَصَيۡتُم مِّنۢ بَعۡدِ مَآ أَرَىٰكُم مَّا تُحِبُّونَۚ مِنكُم مَّن
يُرِيدُ ٱلدُّنۡيَا وَمِنكُم مَّن يُرِيدُ ٱلۡأٓخِرَةَۚ ثُمَّ صَرَفَكُمۡ عَنۡهُمۡ لِيَبۡتَلِيَكُمۡۖ
وَلَقَدۡ عَفَا عَنكُمۡۗ وَٱللَّهُ ذُو فَضۡلٍ عَلَى ٱلۡمُؤۡمِنِينَ ﴿١٥٢﴾

God fulfilled His promise to you: you were routing them, with His permission, but then you faltered, disputed the order, and disobeyed, once He had brought you within sight of your goal – some of you desire the gains of this world and others desire the world to come – and then He prevented you from [defeating] them as a punishment. He has now forgiven you: God is most gracious to the believers [152]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 152)

We know that the sentence ‘Allah fulfilled His promise to you’ (Al-‘Imran: 152) contains two objects (in grammar), the first (second person pronoun in Arabic) is “you” in the word ‘sadaqakumu’ (fulfilled to you), and the second is ‘wa’dahu’ (His promise), i.e. Allah’s promise. He made a promise, and actual events played out in accordance with that promise. The True Lord says: ‘If you help [the cause of] Allah, He will help you, and will make firm your steps’ (Muhammad: 7) and He has also said: ‘And the ones who support Our cause will be the winners.’ (as-Saffat: 173) These two verses confirm the issue of making a promise; after that, the actual implementation came. Was the promise fulfilled or not? It certainly was, but when? Is the True Lord referring to the battle of Badr in this verse?

‘When, by His leave, you were about to destroy your foes’ (Al-‘Imran: 152) means literally ‘you were about to remove their sense’ (sense meaning the five senses). The meaning of ‘remove their sense’ is to deprive them of their five senses. ‘You were about to destroy your foes’ (Al-‘Imran: 152); it indeed did happen, and the believers overwhelmed them, killed them and captured them; or it might refer to the sound that comes out of a human being, and when a human being loses sense, he is done. ‘When, by His leave, you were about to destroy your foes’ (Al-‘Imran: 152). When you were true to your approach towards your enemy, according to Allah's guidance, Allah has fulfilled His promise. This was the situation at Badr.

As for there, at Uhud, He has said: '…until the moment when you faltered' (Al-'Imran: 152), i.e. you became fearful, 'And disputed the order and disobeyed [the Prophet's command]' (Al-'Imran: 152) 'Once He had brought you within sight of your goal' (Al-'Imran: 152), i.e. the battle spoils, 'some of you desire the gains of this world and others desire the world to come' (Al-'Imran: 152). It is as if Allah the Almighty were giving us a moral drawn from two battles: a battle in which Allah's promise was fulfilled and victory was attained and the other when Allah has also kept His promise when you disobeyed Prophet Muhammad, and hence, defeat ensued. So, the issue is laid out before you in the form of an actual experience, not just theoretical speech or in the form of a verse, but an actual event.

Moreover, the whole thing might even refer to the battle of Uhud. Let us suppose that this is so and leave Badr aside. When you first plunged into the battle, O believers, were you victorious? Indeed you were, and Talha ibn Abu Talha, the standard-bearer for the disbelievers, was killed along with twenty or so others. The standard of the disbelievers fell early in the battle; its bearer killed as well, and this is alluded to by Allah's words: 'And, indeed, God fulfilled His promise to you: you were routing them, with his permission, but then you faltered, disputed the order, and disobeyed..." (Al-'Imran: 152). One group said: 'Let us stay on the battlefield' and another said: 'Let us withdraw', and when you saw the booty, you awkwardly reacted and did what this verse mentioned. Consequently, the defeat took place. Had not been for your erratic reaction, you would have had the right to doubt this religion, for what happened was a proof of its truthfulness, and evidently that shows that, when you part with Allah's guidance, you would land on failure and debacle.

But '… then you faltered, disputed the order, and disobeyed...' (Al-'Imran: 152). One group said: 'We will remain where Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him commanded us to be', while others said: 'We will go to collect the battle spoils.' 'Some of you desire the gains of this world and others desire the world to come' (Al-'Imran: 152). As long as you disputed the command, and some of you elected to stay in their positions, while others elected to collect the spoils, this means that those who wanted to continue fighting desired the Hereafter and were not distracted by the booty, whilst those who cared for this world alone elected to go after the booty.

Ibn Mas‘ud Allah be pleased with him said about this: ‘By Allah, I was unaware that any of the Companions of Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah, desired this world until what was revealed about us on the day of Uhud.’ In other words, he did not imagine that any of Prophet Muhammad’s companions desired this world; he thought that they all desired the Hereafter alone, and when Allah has revealed His words: ‛Some of you desire the gains of this world and others desire the world to come’ (Al-‘Imran: 152), Ibn Mas‘ud realised that there were some among Prophet Muhammad’s Companions attracted to worldly material pleasures.

However, Ibn Mas‘ud’s opinion does not detract from their status. When they witnessed victory, they thought that the battle came to an end because the standard of the disbelievers had fallen, and the believers had killed a number of Quraysh hardliners. Allah Almighty is He pardoned the believers and forgave them for their disobedience to the command of His Messenger, Prophet Muhammad.

‛Whereupon, in order that He might put you to a test, He prevented you from defeating your foes’ (Al-‘Imran: 152). You were busy fighting them before you looked to the spoils, and when you looked to them, you looked to the desires of your worldly lives, therefore you were distracted from your foes, and you neither finished them off, nor did you completely rout or overwhelm them. ‛Whereupon, in order that He might put you to a test, He prevented you from defeating your foes’ (Al-‘Imran: 152). Your test in this battle was one of the implementation of Allah’s guidance, as though it were a battle especially intended to test, and you see now everything that happened therein. After that hard test, the experience proved a success because the Muslims were never defeated in battle again after this one.

For this reason, the Battle of Uhud is not considered a defeat, rather a precious lesson that led the Companions of Prophet Muhammad peace be upon him to numerous victories afterwards. Let us set an example. Suppose that a boy fails one school year and feels humiliated for such a failure, for such a discredit, he then works diligently and ends up as one of the top students; that is to say the initial failure encouraged him to improve and thus it was for his own good.

ʿBut now He has effaced your sin’ (Al-‘Imran: 152) ; such a pardon was granted because you had your own perspective: thinking that the battle had ended with the fall of the disbelievers’ standard, the killing of Talha ibn AbuTalha and some of the war veterans on the disbelieving front; so you believed that it was all over. You had to remember, however, that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had said to you: ‘Stay in your posts and positions, even if you see us pursuing them to Mecca or you see them entering Medina.’

Could there be any warning more articulated than that? ʿFor God is limitless in His bounty unto the believers’ (Al-‘Imran: 152). Allah the Almighty has not ousted them from the fold of faith for their indiscretion with this wise revelation. The truth then says:

إِذْ تُصْعِدُونَ وَلَا تَلْوُۥنَ عَلَىٰٓ أَحَدٍ وَٱلرَّسُولُ يَدْعُوكُمْ
فِىٓ أُخْرَىٰكُمْ فَأَثَٰبَكُمْ غَمًّۢا بِغَمٍّ لِّكَيْلَا تَحْزَنُوا۟ عَلَىٰ مَا
فَاتَكُمْ وَلَا مَآ أَصَٰبَكُمْ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ خَبِيرٌۢ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ ﴿١٥٣﴾

You fled without looking back, while the Messenger was calling out to you from behind, and God rewarded you with sorrow for sorrow. [He has now forgiven you] so that you may not grieve for what you missed or for what happened to you. God is well aware of everything you do [153]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 153)

Here “[Remember] when you [fled and] climbed [the mountain] without looking aside at anyone”, Allah gave them an image from the battle so that if any one of them heard this, they would recall the shameful image which should not have taken place: ʿWhen you fled’. The Arabic word used for ‘flee’ is taken from a root that means ‘to ascend’ and ‘to go to a flat plain’, i.e. to the land to which it is easiest to flee: The Arabic root '‘seda’. The one who flees does not look here or there; there is nothing in front of him except easy land to traverse.

'Paying no heed to anyone' (Al-'Imran: 153), i.e. not halting for anything. The crucial thing about this is that there was an appeal from the greatest commander, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, who was calling them: '…, while at your rear the Apostle was calling out to you…' (Al-'Imran: 153), i.e. calling you from behind you, requesting that you return to the battle field, 'wherefore He requited you with woe in return for [The Apostle's] woe' (Al-'Imran: 153). You caused Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him woe by disobeying his commands, and so Allah Almighty is He, placed you in this position.

In the phrase 'wherefore He requited you with woe in return for [the Apostle's]' (Al-'Imran: 153), 'woe' really means 'punished you', but He Almighty is He expressed it and coated it with His divine tenderness and says: 'He requited you'. It was requital! By His Lordship and Divinity, He has acknowledged them to be believers, so He was not tough on them by saying: '…wherefore He requited you with woe in return for [The Apostle's] woe…' (Al-'Imran: 153) as though what happened to them was a true expiation so that'… you should not grieve [merely] over what had escaped you…' (Al-'Imran: 153). If there had been no grief, humiliation, or debasement, you would have been obsessed with the loss of battle spoils and victory, and your minds would have remained with the spoils because they were the cause of it all. It is as if the woe that afflicted them only came to purify their hearts from excessive yearning for worldly desires, the killing, and defeat that afflicted them. 'Wherefore He requited you with woe in return for [The Apostle's] woe so that you should not grieve [merely] over what had escaped you, nor over what had befallen you: for God is aware of all that you do' (Al-'Imran: 153), i.e. Allah Almighty is He appreciates what overcame you. Since there was likelihood that 'while at your rear the Apostle was calling out to you…' (Al-'Imran: 153), they did not hear the call over the din of battle, but 'God is aware of all that you do' (Al-'Imran: 153), and He is aware of every action and emotion. The truth then says:

ثُمَّ أَنزَلَ عَلَيۡكُم مِّنۢ بَعۡدِ ٱلۡغَمِّ أَمَنَةٗ نُّعَاسٗا يَغۡشَىٰ طَآئِفَةٗ مِّنكُمۡۖ وَطَآئِفَةٞ قَدۡ أَهَمَّتۡهُمۡ
أَنفُسُهُمۡ يَظُنُّونَ بِٱللَّهِ غَيۡرَ ٱلۡحَقِّ ظَنَّ ٱلۡجَٰهِلِيَّةِۖ يَقُولُونَ هَل لَّنَا مِنَ ٱلۡأَمۡرِ مِن شَيۡءٖۗ قُلۡ
إِنَّ ٱلۡأَمۡرَ كُلَّهُۥ لِلَّهِۗ يُخۡفُونَ فِيٓ أَنفُسِهِم مَّا لَا يُبۡدُونَ لَكَۖ يَقُولُونَ لَوۡ كَانَ لَنَا مِنَ ٱلۡأَمۡرِ شَيۡءٞ
مَّا قُتِلۡنَا هَٰهُنَاۗ قُل لَّوۡ كُنتُمۡ فِي بُيُوتِكُمۡ لَبَرَزَ ٱلَّذِينَ كُتِبَ عَلَيۡهِمُ ٱلۡقَتۡلُ إِلَىٰ مَضَاجِعِهِمۡۖ وَلِيَبۡتَلِيَ
ٱللَّهُ مَا فِي صُدُورِكُمۡ وَلِيُمَحِّصَ مَا فِي قُلُوبِكُمۡۗ وَٱللَّهُ عَلِيمُۢ بِذَاتِ ٱلصُّدُورِ (١٥٤)

After sorrow, He caused calm to descend upon you, a sleep that overtook some of you. Another group, caring only for themselves, entertained false thoughts about God, thoughts more appropriate to pagan ignorance, and said, 'Do we get a say in any of this?' [Prophet], tell them, 'Everything to do with this affair is in God's hands.' They conceal in their hearts things they will not reveal to you. They say, 'If we had had our say in this, none of us would have been killed here.' Tell them, 'Even if you had resolved to stay at home, those who were destined to be killed would still have gone out to meet their deaths.' God did this in order to test everything within you and in order to prove what is in your hearts. God knows your innermost thoughts very well [154] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 154)

Then, after this woe, He sent down upon you a sense of security, a drowsiness which enfolded some of you, whereas the others who cared mainly for themselves, entertained wrong thoughts about God – thoughts of pagan ignorance – saying, 'Did we, then, have any power of decision [in this matter]?' Say: 'Verily, all power of decision does rest with Allah – [but as for them,] they are trying to conceal within themselves that [weakness of faith] which they would not reveal unto thee, [O Prophet, by] saying, 'If we had any power of decision, we would not have left so many dead behind.' Say [unto them]: 'Even if you had remained in your homes, those [of you] whose death had been ordained would indeed have gone forth to the places where they were destined to lie down. And [all this befell you] so that Allah might put to a test all that you harbour in your bosoms, and render your innermost hearts pure of all dross: for God is aware of what is in the hearts [of men].' The phrase 'sent down' indicates that there is a lofty bestowal unrelated to material means or human laws because sleep is a state that overcomes living beings, and this state is necessitated by certain chemical activities in your body. Until now, we do not know exactly what these chemical reactions are, and the most that is understood about them is that they are an inherent restriction in the human body. It is as though the mobile equipment (the human) composed of a brain that works, eyes that see, ears that hear, senses and movement, had a certain limited power, and when it runs out of energy, it does not say to you 'You are the one who will stop working'; rather, it says 'I am no longer apt for work'. It is self-detterence, just as the case of machines which stop running the moment the power supply is cut.

So, this self-detterence mechanism is manifested in sleep when drowsiness overpowers one. Scientific research shows that there are some substances in the body that are not expelled as waste, but rather require equilibrium and chemical balance. We know that there are discharges in the metabolism process that result from motion; the residues of which are excreted in the form of urine, faeces, mucus, etc. So, much of the waste is the result of energy production, but it is not desirable to expell other substances, rather to be equilibrated. When one sleeps, motion stops, and the chemicals within the body begin to be equilibrated; and those things are caused by sleep which is a basic natural process. A distraught and distressed person never sleeps well; rather, he exhausts his body, leading to a more serious problem. Given those circumstances, sleep would be a blessing from Allah.

Remember that we have said before that Imam 'Ali Allah be pleased with him became renowned for issuing fatwa (legal opinion) and for being able to answer all questions raised to him. They said, 'We used to seek his legal advice on a complicated issue and see how he would answer us', as though they had forgotten that he could deliver his 'fatwa' (legal opinion) efficiently because he was raised under the patronage of Prophet Muhammad. The Divine Call was awarded to Prophet Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him when 'Ali Allah be pleased with him was still young, whereas the other Companions were old, so they had absorbed some practices from the pre-Islamic days of ignorance, whilst 'Ali was not polluted with such pre-Islamic debased practices. He received all the vast dimensions of education at the hands of his guide, Prophet Muhammad. Such an interaction had entitled him to be well grounded in religious issues and delivered fatwa pretty quickly.

For example, a woman came to him and said: 'O son of Abu Talib, how could they give me only one dinar from six hundred? The one from whom I inherit left six hundred dinars, and they gave me a single dinar.' He said to her: 'Perhaps he died leaving behind a wife, two daughters and a mother, so the wife takes one eighth (seventy-five dinars), the daughters two-thirds (four hundred dinars) and the mother takes a sixth (one hundred dinars); and perhaps he had twelve brothers and one sister, full or half brothers, and you are the sister, and there were twenty-five dinars left to be shared amongst twelve brothers and one sister; so your share is one dinar.'How could he have known this? It was the precision of arithmetic skill from one who was raised in the house of Prophethood.

In the verse that we are currently examining, we find that the Truth Almighty is He bestowed them with 'drowsiness' to protect them, and so sleep did not come by their own will, but rather, Allah sent it down. The meaning of 'sent it down' is that He sent a new Divine mercy to rescue those people who were afflicted by chagrin because of what they had done. For this reason, Abu Talha said: 'Drowsiness enfolded us, whilst we were at our posts on the day of Uhud so that one of us would drowsily drop his sword, pick it up, drop it, and pick it up again.

It was a matter of compulsion then. When Allah Almighty is He sends down drowsiness, it is a matter of rescue from misdeeds dictated on them by the frailty of the human nature and made up for by Allah's compensation. But what was it about the hypocrites? Without a doubt, those who fought in the battle out of hypocrisy felt no woe whatsoever over what had happened; on the contrary, they must have been delighted and reassured by what happened. Such people were not worthy of Allah's compensation in the form of the security of sleep. Rather, Allah let them be for their selves, because they were not under Allah's protection as they neither followed the Straight Way of guidance nor devoted themselves to the concept of absolute surrender to Him or at least being true to the concept of surrender to Him. Allah Glorified is He left those to their own discretion.

Hence, the security of sleep would not be sent down to them. As long as this was so, they became worried. Why? It was because they cared only for their own safety. When a person truly believes in Allah and accepts to surrender to Him, he implicitly and devotedly sells himself to Allah. And this trade with Allah has to continue for long. Any time that a Muslim feels conceited, we may assume that he has gone back on the trade, and so Allah, the One purchased his life from him, will leave him to his own discretion. Therefore, His words 'who cared mainly for themselves' (Al-'Imran: 154) mean that they went back on the pledge of faith because the one who concludes such a pledge with his Lord is the one whom Allah described thus: 'Behold, Allah has bought of the believers their lives and their possessions, promising them paradise in return, [and so] they fight in Allah's cause, and slay, and are slain: a promise which in truth He has willed upon Himself in [the words of] the Torah, and the Gospel, and the Quran. And who could be more faithful to his covenant than Allah? Rejoice, then, in the bargain which you have made with Him: for this, this is the triumph supreme!' (at-Tawba: 111)

As long as Allah Almighty is He has purchased the believer's own self, the believer must not get immersed in self-indulgence and must plunge into the battle pursuant with the conditions of the pledge of faith. If one fails to abide by them, he will become worried, troubled, and restless. Finally, he would be entangled into the web of misconceptions and delusions and, even worse, fall easy prey to kaleidoscopic visions. His soul would be insecure then, and as long as a person is concerned with his own cares and indulgences, sleep would never overtake him eventhough it is a natural reaction.

And so we find that Imam'Ali, Allah be pleased with him when asked about the strongest of Allah's soldiers, he stretched his hands and said: 'The strongest of Allah's soldiers are ten: well-pegged mountains, yet iron cuts them, so iron is stronger than the mountains; yet fire melts iron; and water extinguishes fire; and the clouds suspended between the sky and the earth by Allah's command carry the water; and the wind disperses the clouds; and the son of Adam can overcome the wind by covering himself with garments and then goes out to fulfil his needs; and intoxication overwhelms the son of Adam; and sleep overwhelms intoxication; and care overcomes sleep; so the strongest of Allah's soldiers is care.'

When care overpowers the human soul, it is then the strongest of Allah's soldiers, for care overcomes the human soul in many forms in one single situation. He imagines many complicated issues in relation to one single issue. An event might only have one form, but care maximizes the matter in every possible form. Those people worried about themselves, and as long as that was so, they breached the pledge of faith. As long as they breached the pledge of faith by means of which Allah purchased from them their own selves, Allah relinquished them. And since Allah has relinquished them, they had to face their doom.

Care and anxiety took hold of them to the extent that they are horrendously scared when confronted with any vicissitudes. However, the state of the first group was different because Allah Almighty is He treated them well as they sustained their pledge of faith, albeit their human nature misleads them to interpret the course of action incorrectly, they thought the battle was over dashing to claim the spoils of war. Allah Almighty is He appreciated their devotion to Islam, admonished them for their incorrect interpretation of the events, and requited them with woe because of their disobedience, but He sent down security upon them because they remained devoted to the cause of Islam.

'Whereas the others, who cared mainly for themselves, entertained wrong thoughts about God - thoughts of pagan ignorance' (Al-'Imran: 154). They were "a group" that had particular idiosyncrasies they strongly adopted. It was not just any group, but one which adopted a single notion and the wise statement here came to reveal their internal monologue. Did anyone hear them? No, but Allah was well aware of it, and He revealed what lay within all their souls with a single statement which explains that they all adopted a single notion expressed by a single sentence: 'Did we, then, have any power of decision [in this matter]?' (Al-'Imran: 154) They said this to themselves, so who heard them as a group? Allah Almighty is He heard 'for Allah is aware of what is in the hearts [of men]' (Al-'Imran: 154).

The word 'group' (tai'fa) in Arabic denotes a singular word; twa'aif is the plural form for the word. But in Arabic, the reference of the singular word tai'fa may be singular and plural. The verb used with the dual word takes the dual form at times and plural form at other times. In Arabic, such a remark is only grasped by a professional linguist who distinguishes between its usage in the singular form and its connotation referring to the plural; for this reason, we find this as the inimitable and miraculous nature of Quran linguistics. The Truth Glorified is He says: ʽHence, if two groups of believers fall to fighting, make peace between them; but then, if one of the two [groups] goes on acting wrongfully towards the other, fight against the one that acts wrongfully until it reverts to Allah's commandment; and if they revert, make peace between them with justice, and deal equitably [with them]: for, verily, Allah loves those who act equitably!' (al-Hujurat: 9) When He says, ʽHence, if two groups of believers', He relates to two groups that ʽfall to fighting' in the plural form; the Arabic word ta'ifatan is used to refer to the dual sense (for two groups), yet out of syntactic precision, each group constitutes a plurality. ʽIf two groups of believers fall to fighting', what should we do? We should ʽMake peace between them.' The dual form is used this time, meaning the two groups). Sometimes it refers to the plural form; other times to the dual form. On the battlefield, one group does not fight with a single sword, and nor does it deliver a single strike; during fight, every individual member of the group has his own role, so the individuality of the group is numerous in a way.

When we seek conciliation between them, however, do we go to every individual member of each group, or do we consider each group represented by their leaders and make peace between them? The syntactic precision of the Quran is shown: ʽIf two groups of believers fall to fighting'. After this, the truth returns to the dual sense of the word, saying: ʽHence, if two groups of believers fall to fighting, make peace between them' (al-Hujurat: 9), with the plural used first and the dual used second. Then, Allah returns to the dual, saying: ʽbut then, if one of the two [groups] goes on acting wrongfully towards the other, fight against the one that acts wrongfully until it reverts to Allah's commandment; and if they revert, make peace between them' (al-Hujurat: 9). Peace accords are concluded between groups represented by their leaders.

Allah says: ʽwhereas the others, who cared mainly for themselves, entertained wrong thoughts about Allah – thoughts of pagan ignorance – saying, "Did we, then, have any power of decision [in this matter]?" Say: "Verily, all power of decision does rest with Allah" – [but as for them], they are trying to conceal within themselves that [weakness of faith] which they would not reveal unto thee, [O Prophet, by] saying, "If we had any power of decision, we would not have left so many dead behind' (Al-'Imran: 154). This statement indicates that they were a group who adopted the same idiosyncrasies, and it also indicates that their hypocrisy was commonly agreed upon; it was not that each of them worked in recluse; rather, they were a group of hypocrites and they constituted a faction which had a common policy, codes and uniformed thought; laid bare by the words of Allah Almighty is He: ʿwhereas the others, who cared mainly for themselves, entertained wrong thoughts about Allah – thoughts of pagan ignorance' (Al-'Imran: 154).

We know that the truth is firm: Unchanging is He; Being Truthful is out of the question. Allah is Truth, and He created the heavens and the earth and the entire universe truthfully. He sent down His Book with truth, all with truth. They entertained thoughts about Allah that were untrue, eventhough He is the Truth, He created the universe according to true laws, Allah's Sunnah (ways) in creation were fulfilled truthfully and He always succours the truth. They entertained untrue thoughts about Allah, saying: 'Our Lord did not grant us victory, despite having promised to do so,' totally ignoring the fact that Allah devised the elements as means to victory. This is Allah's Sunnah; and Allah's Sunnah always prevails, even in the case of those He favours. They disobeyed the order of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, hence they received an instant retribution by being routed, for no one is exempted. Whoever disobeys must accept the consequences because this is the right thing to do.

They should have mulled over the crystal clearness of the truth. As when the people whom Allah favoured and yet disobeyed Allah's commandment, though were on the side of His Messenger, Prophet Muhammad, they received their lot, the Sunnah of Allah took its very course for being the way of truth; they entertained thoughts of pagan ignorance about Allah, Almighty is He. Either this means the thoughts of the people of the pre-Islamic ignorance, or it refers to ignorance of all kinds.

In saying: ʿ…"Did we, then, have any power of decision [in this matter]?"' they might mean that ʿHad we gained any victory or even collected war spoils?' In saying: '… "Did we, then, have any power of decision [in this matter]?"…' Or 'We went out to fight despite our views, for we were of the opinion to not go for fighting and to stay in Medina, and fight them only when they entered it.' And in saying "…"Did we, then, have any power of decision [in this matter]?" say: "Verily, all power of decision does rest with Allah"' (Al-'Imran: 154). They lacked the subtlety of faith insight and so were unable to grasp the gist behind their loss. They thought that they had not been victorious, but truly, it was a victory. Why? It was so because the battle consolidated the principle that when orders are disobeyed, victory is denied. So Islam was victorious, but the defeated were those who had forsaken the guidance of Islam, and this in itself was a victory for Islam. For this reason, we must always differentiate between the Islamic principle and those who are only outwardly affiliated to it. Be careful not to judge a principle according to the persons who outwardly embrace it. Those persons can serve as a manifestation of this principle only if they adhere to it wholeheartedly. This is because when Allah Almighty is He announced a religion, i.e Islam, in order to regulate people's lives, He ordained legislations to certain actions, while He prohibited others. As long as there are prohibitions and permissions set by Allah, Muslims are susceptible to a sort of breach to these laws. When Islam sanctions the flogging or stoning of the adulterer and adulteress and the amputation of the thief's hand, and likewise, when Islam legislates all punishments for crimes, there is a possibility that these crimes will be committed. If they are committed, this is not a pretext to incriminate Islam, but rather, the perpetrator. We do not assume that Islam permits stealing; rather, we say that a Muslim stole something, and Islam sanctions severe punishment in his case; i.e, the amputation of the hand.

'[But as for them,] they are trying to conceal within themselves that [weakness of faith] which they would not reveal unto thee, [O Prophet by] saying, "If we had any power of decision, we would not have left so many dead behind."' (Al-'Imran: 154) This exposes them because what was it that they wanted for themselves? They did not want to have to go out to fight, and hence said: 'If we had had any choice in the matter, and if he had followed our own suggestion, we would not have come to the battlefield, and none of this would have happened.' This is one explanation; another is: 'If we had been granted the victory that God promised Muhammad and his Companions, we would not have left so many dead behind'. According to both explanations, the meaning is correct; it was as though they wanted to relate killing and death to material causes; yet, who dares to ascribe killing or death to material causes? Death signals the end of life; the cause of which is unknown, together with its time, place, and age which are only known by Allah.

Since the matter is unknown, why should you relate the killing to the battlefield? Have you ever not seen a person die, while not in battle? Have you ever not seen a person killed, while not in battle? If killing only took place in battles, you would have the right to say that, but deaths and killings are common things, they are facts of life. They are not linked to a place, a time, an age or a cause; one dies because the die is cast; it is predestined.

By relating killing and death to the battle, they abandoned their faith, so the reply came from the True Lord in the form of a decisive command to the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him: ʽSay [unto them]: "Even if you had remained in your homes, those [of you] whose death had been ordained would indeed have gone forth to the places where they were destined to lie down' (Al-'Imran: 154).

A person may be a reason of his own death. This can be exemplified as the situation of a person who is ill and insists on having surgery, but the doctor apologises saying: 'I have a lot of operations to perform, so wait for a month,' but the patient seeks mediation to convince the doctor to operate. The patient insists, increases the doctor's fees and then dies in surgery. Was not the patient a reason of his own death? Indeed, he was.

The True Lord says: ʽEven if you had remained in your homes, those [of you] whose death had been ordained would indeed have gone forth to the places where they were destined to lie down.' (Al-'Imran: 154) The Arabic root baraza (to go forth) indicates a hasty movement indicating that a row is actually coherent, and the person who comes forth is the one who advances in the opposite direction of the the row, so he sticks out.

ʽSay [unto them]: "Even if you had remained in your homes, those [of you] whose death had been ordained would indeed have gone forth to the places where they were destined to lie down." And [all this befell you] so that Allah might put to a test all that you harbour in your bosoms, and render your innermost hearts pure of all dross: for Allah is aware of what is in the hearts [of men]' (Al-'Imran: 154). The one who goes forth to his final resting place is the one who leaves a secure place, otherwise how could those whom Allah destined to fight for Islam be tested until the Hour? There must be hard experiences testing people so that only chosen elite is allowed to carry weapons during wars.

When Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him announced that they would go out to fight at Uhud, some lagged behind seeking the intercession of Ibn Ubayy not to be among the fighters. This was the first filtration test. Then, the archers were tested, and this was the second filtration; some of them remained, while others went to collect the battle spoils. Afterwards, word spread that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had been murdered. This was the third filtration. '…And [all this befell you] so that Allah might put to a test all that you harbour in your bosoms, and render your innermost hearts pure of all dross: for Allah is aware of what is in the hearts [of men]" (Al-'Imran: 154).

A person attempts to conceal within his heart that which he must keep to himself, with the care that one friend has for another. It is as if the heart were careful not to reveal what lay within, but Allah revealed them to the people, and exposed them to themselves because they could even be fooling themselves. The True Lord then says:

إِنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ تَوَلَّوۡاْ مِنكُمۡ يَوۡمَ ٱلۡتَقَى ٱلۡجَمۡعَانِ إِنَّمَا ٱسۡتَزَلَّهُمُ ٱلشَّيۡطَٰنُ
بِبَعۡضِ مَا كَسَبُواْۖ وَلَقَدۡ عَفَا ٱللَّهُ عَنۡهُمۡۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ غَفُورٌ حَلِيمٞ ١٥٥

As for those of you who turned away on the day the two armies met in battle, it was Satan who caused them to slip, through some of their actions. God has now pardoned them: God is most forgiving and forbearing [155]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 155)

When we read the words "caused them to slip" (Al-'Imran: 155), we see that the verb is in the istaf'ala form, which implies a request or requirement.

'Slip' means to to err, i.e. to make a mistake. So, Satan wanted them to stumble 'only by means of something that they [themselves] had done' (Al-'Imran: 155), as though Satan did not dare to cause any believer to slip unless they had fallen into dissolution in some way. But as for those who have no dissolution, Satan has no power over them. When a person allows himself to entertain a certain desire, Satan labels him and says: 'This one is weak; we are able to cause him to slip.' However, he never approaches those whom he sees to never allow themselves fall into dissolution.

Hence, the lower self is Satan's instrument of sin. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him says: 'Satan flows in the son of Adam as blood flows.' When Satan sees anyone overpowered by his lower self, he says: 'This person is a promising would-be evildoer!' This is the one through whom he flows like blood, as the Hadith describes. As for the one who practices his religion, when his lower self incites him to evildoing, and he refuses, Satan fears him. So, Satan cannot cause anyone to slip except those who are weak, and if someone keeps their Lord in mind at all times, Satan will not dare to approach them.

Allah has named Satan 'the whispering, elusive tempter (alwaswas Al-khannas)' (an-Nas: 4). He whispers to people, but when Allah is mentioned, he sneaks away. He only remains with you when he sees that you are distracted from your Lord; but if you are with your Lord, he is unable to reach you and he disappears. He is prevented from whispering if you seek Allah's refuge from him.

So, His words, 'Satan caused them to stumble' (Al-'Imran: 155), mean that Satan sought for them to stumble as a result of what he knew they had done, thereby showing their weakness. 'Satan caused them to stumble only by means of something that they [themselves] had done…' (Al-'Imran: 155). The phrase 'only by means of something that they [themselves] had done…" (Al-'Imran: 155) being followed by '…but now Allah has effaced this sin of theirs…' (Al-'Imran: 155) suggests that Satan was unable to take them by means of everything that they did, for our Lord pardons much. 'Satan caused them to stumble only by means of something that they [themselves] had done. But now Allah has effaced this sin of theirs: verily, Allah is much-forgiving, forbearing' (Al-'Imran: 155). Why did Allah efface their sins? He effaced their sins in honour of the principle of Islam which they had embraced sincerely, but their souls were a little bit detached regarding certain matters. He could have punished them for that, but He pardoned them, for this is the right of Islam; 'Verily, Allah is much-forgiving, forbearing' (Al-'Imran: 155). The True Lord then says:

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُواْ لَا تَكُونُواْ كَٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُواْ وَقَالُواْ لِإِخۡوَٰنِهِمۡ إِذَا ضَرَبُواْ فِي
ٱلۡأَرۡضِ أَوۡ كَانُواْ غُزّٗى لَّوۡ كَانُواْ عِندَنَا مَا مَاتُواْ وَمَا قُتِلُواْ لِيَجۡعَلَ ٱللَّهُ ذَٰلِكَ
حَسۡرَةٗ فِي قُلُوبِهِمۡۗ وَٱللَّهُ يُحۡيِۦ وَيُمِيتُۗ وَٱللَّهُ بِمَا تَعۡمَلُونَ بَصِيرٞ ١٥٦

You who believe, do not be like those who disbelieved and said of their brothers who went out on a journey or a raid, 'If only they had stayed with us they would not have died or been killed,' for God will make such thoughts a source of anguish in their hearts. It is God who gives life and death; God sees everything you do [156] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 156)

You who believe, do not be like those who disbelieved and said of their brothers who went set forth on a journey or a raid, 'If only they had stayed with us they would not have died or been killed,' for Allah will make such thoughts a source of anguish in their hearts. It is Allah Who grants life and death; Allah sees everything you do.

'Setting forth on a journey' here means to travel in search of Allah's bounty and for the cause of making His word the uppermost. Those who disbelieve related death and killing and the loss of human life to what? They related it to their having travelled afar or going out to fight in Allah's cause, saying: 'Had they not gone out, none of this would have befallen them!' We would rather clear it out saying: it is as though you never saw a man die in his bed, or a man killed by a falling wall, or a bucking camel, or a stray bullet. Is it a must that everyone who dies or is killed should be travelling or fighting in Allah's cause?

This is a foolish way of judging; the True Lord has mentioned this to give us an example of how they judge matters, a judgment with no basis in true inductive principles. If we know them to be disbelievers, we say that this is their nature; their judgments on clear matters is incorrect, and whilst their judgments of particulars is unsound and unrealistic, if you know them to be disbelievers, you will find that it makes sense that they would say such a thing because their state is such that their arguments have no consistency, and so it is no wonder that they do not believe.

The term 'Or gone forth to war…" used in Arabic rendered as 'gone forth to war' is actually ghuzza which is the plural form of ghaz (which simply means the one who goes forth to war)—just as the plural words suwwam and quwwam of the active participles sa'im and qa'im meaning, respectively someone who is fasting and someone who is standing up [praying late into the night]). 'If only they had stayed with us they would not have died or been killed,' for Allah will make such thoughts a source of anguish in their hearts. ' (Al-'Imran: 156). So, Allah Almighty is He depicts for them what they said in order to chastise them therewith. Why? Because it will lead them to say: 'If they had been with us, we would have prevented them from going out or from being killed, so it is our fault.'

In this way, we find that every time they remembered their dead, they realised that they were wrong, and this instilled bitter anguish into their hearts. If they had only referred back to the Higher Truth, they would have found respite and would not have put themselves into such a labyrinth. This also occurred on their part so that their foolishness is uncovered, for it was manifested by all their actions their understanding of individual events, their judgment of absolute faith and their intervention in other people's matters; and our Allah wished to make that a source of anguish for them.

'"If only they had stayed with us, they would not have died or been killed,' for Allah will make such thoughts a source of anguish in their hearts' (Al-'Imran: 156). The principle of faith here is: '…it is Allah who grants life and death…' (Al-'Imran: 156). Travelling and fighting in Allah's cause is not the cause of death, and this is why Khalid ibn Al-Walid said: 'I saw a hundred advances or thereabouts and there is not a part of my body except that it has been struck with a sword or pierced by a spear; yet here I am, dying in my bed as a wild donkey dies! Let the eyes of the cowards sleep not!'The poet said:

‘O ye who would prevent me from the tumult and the glory: Can you grant me, then, eternal life?’

That is, ‘O you who seek to prevent me from entering the battle, can you guarantee that I will live forever if I forgo fighting?’ The poet continued:

‘If you indeed cannot meet my request, let me rush to it with all that I possess!’

The True Lord ends the verse with His words: ‘Allah sees everything you do.’ (Al-‘Imran: 156) It is as though their foolishness were off limits; they failed to cover up their sin; it was made seen. The statement ‘sees’ is stronger than ‘All-knowing’ because if the word were ‘knows’, it would have suggested that they had some moral scruples to enshroud their actions. It is not Allah’s knowledge at play here; it is rather, His sight. Their action, i.e. their mistake, was too plain to be seen, so Allah says: ‘…and Allah sees all that you do’ (Al-‘Imran: 156). The Truth then says:

وَلَئِن قُتِلۡتُمۡ فِي سَبِيلِ ٱللَّهِ أَوۡ مُتُّمۡ لَمَغۡفِرَةٞ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِ وَرَحۡمَةٌ خَيۡرٞ مِّمَّا يَجۡمَعُونَ ﴿١٥٧﴾

Whether you are killed for God’s cause or die, God’s forgiveness and mercy are better than anything people amass [157] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 157)

Those who do not want to go to war for fear of not being killed, what pushes them to such intent? It is nothing but relating prosperity to the quality of being alive.

As long as they linked their prosperity to the quality of being alive, they must have entertained false assumptions that being alive would bring about their welfare. So they feared to be killed and leave behind that prosperity. They possessed no faithful insight, and we say to such people: your prosperity in life is determined by your actions, your strength, knowledge, and wisdom. As for the delights you would receive upon meeting Allah as a martyr, they are determined by what Allah possesses of bounty and mercy; enumerable are they! You have failed to grasp the difference between your ability, wisdom and knowledge and your efforts to earn a living, and that which Allah Himself would grant you of these means. So the True Lord says: ‘Whether you are killed for Allah’s cause or die, Allah’s forgiveness and mercy are better than anything people amass.’ (Al-‘Imran: 157). Next, the True Lord says: ‘for, indeed, if you die or are killed, it will surely be unto Allah that you shall be gathered.’ We should notice that in the first verse, the True Lord mentioned killing first and then death, saying: ‘And if indeed you are killed or die in Allah’s cause…’ (Al-‘Imran: 157); whereas in the latter, He mentioned death first and then killing, saying:

وَلَئِن مُّتُّمْ أَوْ قُتِلْتُمْ لَإِلَى ٱللَّهِ تُحْشَرُونَ ﴿١٥٨﴾

Whether you die or are killed, it is to God that you will be gathered [158] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 158)

He mentioned killing first in the first verse because it was addressing warriors who die and meet their Lord as a result of being killed more often than they die of natural causes. The purpose of this verse, however, is to remind us that, on the Day of Resurrection, all humanity will be brought before Allah Almighty is He and most of them will have their souls separated from their bodies by means of death, not killing, so death is mentioned first. Every word and sentence, then, is commensurate with its context, for this is the word of the Wise, the Knowing. Afterwards, Allah says: ‘By an act of mercy from Allah, you [Prophet] were gentle in your dealings with them—had you been harsh or hard-hearted, they would have dispersed and left you—so pardon them and ask forgiveness for them. Consult with them about matters, then, when you have decided on a course of action, put your trust in Allah: Allah loves those who put their trust in Him.’ (Al-‘Imran: 159)

The verse, as we see, begins with a statement of fact which is: ‘By an act of mercy from Allah, you [Prophet] were gentle in your dealings with them…’ (Al-‘Imran: 159). It is as though Allah wanted to say: ‘Your nature, O Muhammad, is in line with what is required from you in this matter. They disobeyed you, and did not pay heed to you when you said: “To me, servants of Allah, to me, servants of Allah, I am the Messenger of Allah!” This is something that could have caused vexation and anger, but it did not vex your disposition or anger your temperament, because your inherent nature when dealing with your community is to show mercy.’ It is as though He wanted Prophet Muhammad to show tenderness to his community who were afflicted with woe, saying to him: ‘Be careful not to punish them for this, for you are by nature merciful, and you are not by nature harsh or hard-hearted; so do not act contrary to your nature in this matter.’ It is akin to when you say to someone: ‘You are a good person by nature, so be a good person in this matter!’

‛By an act of mercy from Allah, you [Prophet] were gentle in your dealings with them….’ (Al-‘Imran: 159) Literally, it reads ‘And by some grace from Allah....’, i.e. by some grace that was placed within you. When you say, ‘by some grace..., you are making the matter ambiguous, and when you do this, it shows the immensity of the matter because things are referred to with ambiguity either because they are very small or very big, i.e. either too big to be conceived or too small to be conceived. We can only see a small portion of immense objects and we cannot see minute objects at all. If something is referred to as being unknown, this sometimes indicates its immensity, sometimes its minuteness, sometimes its magnitude and sometimes its scarcity. If it is inconceivable because of its magnitude, it is huge in quantity; while if it inconceivable because of its minuteness, out of the range of human eyesight, it is minute or infinitesimal.

So, when Allah says: ‛And it was by Allah’s grace…’ (Al-‘Imran: 159), it means ‘by Allah’s grace, which is inherent in your nature, you dealt gently with them. Why is the word ma (some) used here in Arabic? It can either be understood as a device to illustrate ambiguity, i.e. ‘grace that is mighty beyond comprehension’, or it can be understood as a lexical connector, as though the True Lord were saying to him: ‘By the mercy that your Creator placed within you, commensurate with your place in your community, you dealt with them gently, and as long as this is your nature, be gentle with them in this regard, pardon them and pray that they be forgiven.’

This verse came after the mention of several events that took place at Uhud. The first event was that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him preferred not to go out and fight the Quraysh outside the city, but rather to stay in Medina; but those who longed for martyrdom and battle and longed to make up for what they had missed out on at Badr, preferred to go out to meet the Quraysh. Prophet Muhammad deferred to their opinion and donned his armour. When they saw that they had coerced the Messenger of Allah into something that was contrary to the opinion he had arrived at, they went back on what they had said and suggested that he was right not to go out; but he said: 'It is not for a Prophet, when he has put on his armour, to remove it until he has fought.' Since he had prepared to fight, it is over. This was the first event: that of the consultation.

The second matter was that of ibn Ubbay's lagging behind with a third of the army. The third event was the archers' disobedience of Prophet Muhammad's order and their abandoning of their posts, despite His having warned them not to do so, saying to ʿAbdullah ibn Jubayr, whom he had placed in authority over the archers: 'Keep the cavalry from us with your arrows, lest they come to us from our rear; whether the battle swings for us or against us, keep your position and let us not be approached from your side.' But they disobeyed the command of Prophet Muhammad. The fourth event was their fleeing when word went out that the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him had been murdered. The fifth event was that when he tried to rally them, they fled without paying attention to anything.

All these events were about to exert effects on him peace and blessings be upon him. As such, it is as if Allah Glorified is He wanted to say, ʿI created you with such mercy which makes you feel tolerant about all these mistakes. I am the One Who grants mercy and thus I embedded you with such energy that enables you to endure all disobedience committed by your followers. Did you think that you were sent to an angel-like ummah?! You were sent to mankind who frequently commit mistakes and who also change from time to time. That is why I want you to learn the lesson. I actually embedded you, O Muhammad, with mercy and you had already invoked Me for bestowing a lot of goodness upon your followers'. His mercy may be shown clearly in the event when Jibril (Gabriel) called upon him saying, ʿIndeed, Allah the Exalted heard what your people said to you and the response they gave you. And He has sent you the angel in charge of the mountains to order him to do to them what you wish.' Muhammad then added, ʿThen the angel of the mountains called me, greeted me and said: "O Muhammad, Allah listened to what your people had said to you. I am the angel of the mountains, and my Rubb (Lord) has sent me to you so that you may give me your orders. (I will carry out your orders). If you wish, I will bring together the two mountains that stand opposite to each other at the extremities of Mecca to crush them in between.' But the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him replied, 'I rather hope that Allah will raise from among their descendants people who will worship Allah the One and will not ascribe partners to Him (in worship).'

So, it is as though Allah said: I ask you (O Muhammad) to show them that particular mercy I implanted into your heart and which you made use of in all spheres of life. Certainly, it is by means of that mercy that you became lenient with them and thus they gathered around you due to your great moral character, great modesty, and warm smile; they gathered around you because you offered them considerable relief. As well, you took their individual affairs into your account to the extent that you were never the one who withdrew his hand first from theirs. You are of a great moral character. In fact, I implanted all of this into you so as to show them tolerance towards the mistakes they committed and to forgive them by virtue of such mercy and forbearance. That is because you are entitled with the role of educating them and cultivating their manners. As a matter of fact, these two characters of education and cultivating manners entail that you should not become angry at any mistake committed by them; otherwise, you are not performing your role perfectly.

فَبِمَا رَحۡمَةٖ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِ لِنتَ لَهُمۡۖ وَلَوۡ كُنتَ فَظًّا غَلِيظَ ٱلۡقَلۡبِ لَٱنفَضُّواْ
مِنۡ حَوۡلِكَۖ فَٱعۡفُ عَنۡهُمۡ وَٱسۡتَغۡفِرۡ لَهُمۡ وَشَاوِرۡهُمۡ فِي ٱلۡأَمۡرِۖ فَإِذَا عَزَمۡتَ
فَتَوَكَّلۡ عَلَى ٱللَّهِۚ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ يُحِبُّ ٱلۡمُتَوَكِّلِينَ ١٥٩

By an act of mercy from God, you [Prophet] were gentle in your dealings with them – had you been harsh, or hard-hearted, they would have dispersed and left you – so pardon them and ask forgiveness for them. Consult with them about matters, then, when you have decided on a course of action, put your trust in God: God loves those who put their trust in Him [159] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 159)

Why? Because you are weaning them off the practices they used to do in the pre-Islamic time of ignorance. In reality, it is taken for granted that a person who takes the responsibility of weaning someone off the practices he used to do, should not resort to unfriendly manner. That is because that particular person is in need of compassion and mercy. As such, it is not right to bring about two difficulties upon him; that is, declaring the act he used to do ugly and deniable as well as weaning him off it. Therefore, anyone who gives a piece of advice to someone else should take into account that 'giving advice is not an easy matter. That is because the act of advice itself entails declaring to be criminal the deed committed by the person to whom advice is offered. So, when you advise someone not to do that particular act, what does this truly mean?

This means that it is hard enough to make a person who does a bad act wean off the practices he used to do in the past. So you should not add to this difficulty by directing advice in a way which is not good and harsh. In reality, this is not true because, in this particular situation, the person needs the adviser to be compassionate and lenient in order to remove the bad moral characters from him. We, in fact, apply this in our life when we coat the bitter medicine with sugar so that it could pass over the tongue without pain or annoyance until it reaches that particular area where we cannot feel its bitterness.

Hence, since you apply this in your worldly affairs, you should apply the same as to spiritual matters. Due to the fact that 'giving advice is not an easy matter,' you should not turn it into an argument. In addition, you should not offer it in a way which is difficult. It goes without saying that offering advice in a lenient way achieves the goal without agitation or annoyance. Similarly, being kind, while offering advice strongly urges the person to accept it and act upon it.

As such, you establish your goal. A case in point is the story of the king who dreamt that all his teeth had been fallen and thus he asked someone to explain it for him. The man said, 'All the members of your family will die,' but the king felt unpleasant with the interpretation of the dream in such words. So, he sought another person to explain it for him and the man said, 'Your life span will be longer than any of your family members.' It is the same interpretation given by the first man but in different words. It is true that as long as his life span will be longer than the life spans of his family members, then all of them will pass away before him. It is exactly the same interpretation. Therefore, Arabs used to say, 'Telling truth is difficult and thus you should do it in soft and kind words.'

'And had you been rough, hard-hearted, they would certainly have dispersed from around you' (Al-'Imran: 159), so, it is due to mercy that you became lenient with them. As well, it is by virtue of soft words that they followed you, gathered around you, and gave you their love. Linguistically, the word fazhzh (rough) refers to the water camels store in their stomachs. It is known that camels drink great quantities of water which suffice them for long periods of time. So, when they, the camels, find no water to drink, they make use of these quantities of water stored in their stomachs. It is historically recorded that fighters slaughtered camels to drink water from their stomachs. It is known for certain that the taste of water taken from the stomachs of camels is unpleasant, and this actually indicates the true meaning of the word fazhzh. Due to the fact that this act of drinking water from the stomachs of camels brings about roughness, Arabs used to refer to 'harsh words' as roughness. Being hard-hearted automatically brings about harsh words.

'And had you been rough, hard-hearted, they would certainly have dispersed from around you....' (Al-'Imran: 159) It is a mercy upon which you (O Messenger of Allah) were created by Allah the Almighty Who truly sent you with the Message.

And it is due to this mercy that you became gentle and lenient with them. The fruit of this mercy was crystal clear in the fact that they gathered around you and gave you their love. If you had shown them something otherwise, they would have dispersed from around you. As such, these previous events undoubtedly prove that mercy and leniency truly manifest your nature and moral character.

After telling about the mercy He the Almighty implanted in The Messenger's heart and after telling about his leniency, He Glorified is He ordered him peace and blessings be upon him to pardon them. We have previously explained that the word al-'Afwa (pardon) means to entirely erase sins. This act of pardoning is totally different from kazhm al-Ghayzhzh (restraining anger). That is because the latter means that you do not punish for the sin, eventhough you are angry with it, but you restrain your body parts and tongue. Concerning the act of pardoning, it means the entire sin is completely forgiven. Placing emphasis on this act of pardoning, one says, 'As for me, I pardoned you.'

However, the matter is not like that. It is because the issue is not related to you alone and thus you are also supposed to ask Allah to forgive them. The person against whom the sin is committed may pardon, but My Lord and the master of that particular person may not. Accordingly, Allah Glorified is He puts it in clear words, 'If you pardon them, this is your right. But you are required to ask Allah to forgive them so that Allah does not punish them for the mistakes they committed against you.'

'Pardon them therefore...' (Al-'Imran: 159) This order is directed to the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him in particular. 'And ask forgiveness for them...' (Al-'Imran: 159). You should ask Allah to forgive them for the mistakes they committed in the battle of Uhud, which led to your defeat and injury. You (O Muhammad) should not say, 'I consulted with them and acted upon their advice, but we were defeated. This defeat should not make you keep away from consulting with them. In spite of the fact that the defeat you had was the outcome of this consultation, you should not shut the door to it. That is because education, cultivation of manners and testing the truthfulness of belief were the lessons to be deduced from the battle of Uhud. So, you should not hate to consult with them because of that. Rather, you should permanently have their consultation. As such, as long as you pardon them, and as long as you ask your Lord forgiveness for them, even if not in their presence, this indicates clearly that you feel content with them, and thus you are to resume your previous relations normally because you have already learned the lesson that will enormously benefit you in many subsequent events.

From the battle of Uhud on, Muslims always gained victory because they had learned the lesson very well to the extent that when Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him consulted with the companions concerning the apostasy wars, some of them advised him not to engage in them. But he did not follow their advice; rather, he consulted with them. The most important of all of this is that a counsel should be sought. Also, we shall follow the best opinions offered. The word Al-Mashuratu (counsel) means to draw comparisons between the various opinions and to choose what is best from among them. According to a line the a poem, 'Seek counsel of others if affliction should befall you, even if you are of those who give counsel.' The poet managed to convey the true meaning to us. Eventhough one may be from among those people known for giving counsel to others, he should also seek the counsel of others. But why should he? You will find the answer to this question in the following verse by the same poet who said, 'The eye may see what is near to it and what is far from it, but it cannot see itself without the recourse of a mirror.'

It is true that the eye sees what is near and far, but it is incapable of seeing itself without a mirror. The same applies to other people' issues you examine because your mind minutely examines them, and truth is your strong motive. Your own personal affairs, however, may be negatively influenced by your caprice which may make them pleasing to you.

As such, Muslims became fully aware of the result of the Messenger of Allah seeking their counsel in Uhud. It seems that Allah the Almighty wants to say to His Messenger, 'Do not rely on the previous act of counsel to break off your relationship with them, and thus not consulting with them anymore. That is because, for certain, you will pass away one day, and another person will rule them. So, as long as they are governed by a person from among themselves, you should not prevent the ruler from seeking the advice of others. As a matter of fact, when various opinions are offered to the ruler in question, he will be able to choose the most correct one due to the fact that he is the ruler. Also, he will have the option to compare them all and say, 'This opinion is good but this is not, and so on.' Of course, this will be the case unless he authorises another person to make the decision

'And consult them in the matter. And when you have decided, then rely upon Allah...' (Al-'Imran: 159) The Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him was determined to set off to war and thus he put on his armour, so the question to be asked here is: 'Is it for the Prophet to put his armour on and then take it off due to their counsel?' No, it does not go like this because there must be no hesitation in the matter. 'And when you have decided, then rely upon Allah.' (Al-'Imran: 159) This is the benefit of belief which is clearly manifested in the fact that all the body parts shall work, while the role of hearts is to trust Allah; what a good equation it is!

The body parts say, 'We sow good seeds, plant, plough, irrigate and fertilise the land.' In spite of all of these acts, we suppose that frost may affect our plants and thus we bring straw and the like to cover the crop. This is the work to be done by the body parts. Then, hearts shall trust Allah the Almighty. So, be careful not to say, 'It is for certain that I am going to harvest my crop because I perfected my work.' No, this is not right because Allah the Almighty is the One Who prepares reasons. So, it becomes crystal clear right now that the body parts shall work, while the hearts have to trust Allah—this is the benefit of belief; that is, I truly believe in Allah Who is Omnipotent and Who is able to create with and without reasons and means. You serve as reasons (O mankind), but Allah the Almighty is the One Who has nothing to do with reasons. So, your work means that you have actually considered reasons, and trusting Allah means that you seriously have to consider Allah, the One Who brings about reasons.

So, the body parts, as we explained previously, shall work and the hearts shall trust (Allah). Be careful not to think that trusting Allah means to leave your body parts idle. That is totally wrong. In fact, this is called indolence and laziness. In other words, it is the false trust. Liars are those who claim that! This is proved by the fact that such people like to trust Allah in difficult matters, while they do not do so when it comes to easy ones. To such man who claims that he trusts Allah but he does not work, we say, 'You have no trust because if you did, you would never stretch out your hand to food and place it into your mouth. You claim that you have trust in Allah, but you do not work, so let your (false) trust place food into your mouth, and chew it for you!'

Of course, he will not do such thing. To that person, we also say that his claim of trusting Allah is nothing but misunderstanding of the true meaning of belief. It is not a real trust in Allah the Almighty.

Allah the Almighty says, 'So pardon them and ask forgiveness for them and consult them in the matter. And when you have decided, then rely upon Allah.' (Al-'Imran: 159) The word 'azamta (you have decided) requires the existence of determination, while trust requires showing impotence. The true meaning to be understood from the sentence 'I trust Allah' is that man has used up all his means and thus he resorts to the One Who is All-Omnipotent, i.e. Allah the Almighty.

In our daily lives, we hear people say that they have entrusted the matter to so-and-so. This means that a person is unable to do that particular thing and thus entrusts another to do it on his behalf. Also, it shows that this person is incapable of doing that thing. That is why he entrusts the matter to someone else who is able to do it. Similarly, this is the case with placing trust in Allah resulting from true belief in Him the Almighty. The word At-Tawakkul (having trust in) means to entrust your affairs to Allah the Almighty because you truly believe that He Glorified is He perfectly arranges matters of the entire creation including the fact that He has provided the means to you. Thus, you are not to neglect those means and meanwhile ask Him Glorified is He to work instead of you. We previously explained in (al-Fatiha: 5) that a man invokes Allah the Almighty for His Help.

The word nast'ain (we seek help) means that we want such help from You (O Allah) so that we can perfect o`ur work. Moving to the next verse, He the Almighty says, 'If Allah should aid you, no one can overcome you; but if He should forsake you, who is there that can aid you after Him?' (Al-'Imran: 160) 'If Allah should aid you, no one can overcome you; but if He should forsake you, who is there that can aid you after Him? And upon Allah let the believers rely.'

In this particular verse, He Glorified is He says, '... And upon Allah let the believers rely.' Thus, the question to be asked in this verse is who the believers are. Undoubtedly, it means those ones who truly believe in Allah. As long as they believe in Him the Almighty it is clearly implied that He Glorified is He is Omnipotent and fully aware of man's interests; thus there is nothing better than to entrust all your affairs to Him the Almighty.

Upon reciting the saying of Allah 'If Allah should aid you, no one can overcome you...,' one may ask, 'What is the opposite of Allah's Aid or Victory?' The answer is clearly given in the following part of this particular verse, which is, '... but if He should forsake you, who is there that can aid you after Him?'. As such, you have made use of all available means mentioned by Allah the Almighty. Moreover, you have obeyed the heavenly-revealed orders clearly embodied in the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him, the one who conveyed His Message. In the same connection, you have prepared your troops as far as possible. But be careful not to draw a comparison between the number of your troops and the number of your enemy's. That is because Allah the Almighty ordered you not to do that. He the Almighty rather has said, 'You shall prepare your troops as far as possible.' But why did He the Almighty order them to do that? That is because He the Almighty wants to make the believers superior to the disbelievers, thanks to their true belief in Him Glorified is He. In reality, if matters had had to run normally, the (weak) force of the believers would have met with the (strong) force of the disbelievers. But He the Almighty wants the number of the believers' troops to be fewer than that of the disbelievers. As such, believers will confess their weakness and say, 'Our Lord, this is all our ability. We trust that You (O Lord) will provide this small number with Your Support. You the Almighty are our All-Powerful Supporter. You clearly stated in the Noble Quran that You are the Protector of those who have believed, while the disbelievers have no protector.' (Muhammad: 11) As for this particular verse (Al-'Imran: 160), He the Almighty says, 'If Allah should aid you, no one can overcome you...' This means that if you engage in war with the aim of making the Word of Allah superior, you will undoubtedly guarantee victory.

But the question here is how we can realise that we support Allah. We fully realise that when victory is ours. This is based on the undeniable fact that the Laws set by Him the Almighty can never contradict reality, otherwise, Muslims would have been deceived, Allah forbid, by these divine laws. As a matter of fact, if reality contradicted religion, people would surely say, 'Reality contradicts this particular topic of religion.' However, this is not the case. That is why Allah the Almighty places emphasis on the following undeniable fact that if you support Him the Almighty He will support you. (Muhammad: 7) Then, reality comes to confirm this fact. Therefore, our belief will not be particularly restricted to that topic, but it will exceed it to include all other unknown topics. For example, when factual findings of modern science prove the truthfulness of the Quran as to a particular topic, then my belief in such authenticity should not be solely confined to that topic; rather, one shall say, 'All that I am unaware of in the Quran is included under this truthfulness.'

This is why we previously said that Allah the Almighty left unveiled certain secrets of the universe which are not fundamental; if we come to know about these secrets, we will get no great benefit. Also, He the Almighty keeps certain secrets in the universe for peoples' minds to ponder over. Hence, that particular thing which was not to be accepted in the past has been approved by today's minds—the passage of time has proved it right. That is why we should make an analogy to this particular rule.

For example, they say that Pasteur discovered microbes, but the question here is whether or not microbes existed before Pasteur. They did exist, but no one had ever seen them because man cannot see microscopic items without a suitable instrument. Before the time of Pasteur, the microscope (instrument used to magnify tiny items thousands of times) had not been invented.

Similarly, when the telescope was invented, people were able to see the extremely remote items that they were unable to see before. Although these items may be extremely tiny and unnoticed, yet we became fully able to see them by means of the magnifying instrument called microscope.

The telescope makes distant objects look nearer, whereas the microscope makes very small objects look larger, so we are able to observe their movement and life. These findings make me firmly believe in the authenticity of the Quran when it tells about the unseen worlds like the jinn and the angels. Undoubtedly, I can never think otherwise because there are creatures which have been created from the same material I was created from, however, I cannot see them. Thus, when Allah the Almighty tells that there are other creatures like angels and jinn, I can never believe that the Quran tells a lie. Therefore, understanding this topic (about the microscope and the telescope) makes the meaning clearer.

إِن يَنصُرْكُمُ ٱللَّهُ فَلَا غَالِبَ لَكُمْ ۖ وَإِن يَخْذُلْكُمْ فَمَن ذَا ٱلَّذِى
يَنصُرُكُم مِّنۢ بَعْدِهِۦ ۗ وَعَلَى ٱللَّهِ فَلْيَتَوَكَّلِ ٱلْمُؤْمِنُونَ ١٦٠

If God helps you [believers], no one can overcome you; if He forsakes you, who else can help you? Believers should put their trust in God [160] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 160)

We know for sure that obtainig the Support of Allah relies entirely on the fact that you should engage in war only for the sake of supporting His Word, but how can we achieve that goal? It can be achieved by submitting to His Orders, making His Word superior, and making the word of disbelievers the lowest.

But '... if He should forsake you, who is there that can aid you after Him?' (Al-'Imran: 160) He the Almighty supports us all the time, but sometimes we feel that He Glorified is He has forsaken us; why? That is because we sometimes abandon some of His Orders. Accordingly, He Glorified is He seemingly supports you all the time. But when you do not follow His Orders, He makes you go through hard times to teach you a lesson. He the Almighty then concludes the verse with His saying, '...And upon Allah let the believers rely.' (Al-'Imran: 160) In the previous verse, He Glorified is He states that He the Almighty loves those who rely upon Him. So, the person who does not rely upon Him Glorified is He shall check the veracity of his belief.

Moving to the next verse, He the Almighty says,

وَمَا كَانَ لِنَبِيٍّ أَن يَغُلَّ ۚ وَمَن يَغْلُلْ يَأْتِ بِمَا غَلَّ يَوْمَ ٱلْقِيَٰمَةِ ۚ
ثُمَّ تُوَفَّىٰ كُلُّ نَفْسٍ مَّا كَسَبَتْ وَهُمْ لَا يُظْلَمُونَ ﴿١٦١﴾

It is inconceivable that a prophet would ever dishonestly take something from the battle gains. Anyone who does so will carry it with him on the Day of Resurrection, when each soul will be fully repaid for what it has done: no one will be wronged [161] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 161)

What does the word yaghull (acting faithfully in regard to war booty) mean? The word ghalul means to take something in secret. It is derived from Aghall Al-Jaziru, i.e. when the butcher skins an animal and folds the skin to hide some meat in it. This is the original meaning of the word. From the Sharia perspective, it is used to refer to acting unfaithfully in regard to war booty. It is true that amidst the horrors of war, one may find something precious thus takes it in secret—this is the meaning of Al-ghalul. In addition, the word may be used to refer to people hiding hatred in their chests. So, the meaning of this noun revolves mainly around the hiding of something.

He the Almighty says, 'It is not [attributable] to any prophet that he would act unfaithfully [in regard to war booty]...' (Al-'Imran: 161) But why is it not?

The booty seized from the battle of Badr was not divided among all who participated in the battle. The ones who found it took it. That was to encourage fighters to exert their utmost efforts because Badr was the first battle. So, when archers saw the booty in the battle of Uhud, they hastened to seize it. Similarly, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him is narrated to have previously said, 'Whoever kills someone in battle, having a proof for that, then his goods are his.' Because of that, warriors during the battle of Uhud thought that the Messenger of Allah would not divide the booty among them, as was the case in Badr, so Allah the Almighty explicitly instructed them that there was a big difference between the two battles stressing that whoever did something like that would have committed the act of ghalul. When Allah says: 'It is not [attributable] to any prophet that he would act unfaithfully [in regard to war booty]...' (Al-'Imran: 161), it means that the nature, upon which the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him was created, indicates that the act of ghalul can never be committed by him. However, it may be committed by a person from his followers. Therefore, there is a big difference between the two examples; that is, the fact that the Prophet can never commit this act of betrayal and the fact that a believer may prevent himself from committing it; it is so because the act has nothing to do with his nature; however, it may be committed by one of the warriors in his army. A case in point is when the companions brought the crown of Khosrow to 'Umar Allah be pleased with him, he said, 'Truly, honest are those people who bring such a thing to their commander.' This means that it is conceivable that they could have concealed it.

'It is not [attributable] to any prophet that he would act unfaithfully [in regard to war booty]...' (Al-'Imran: 161) When you hear the words wa ma kan (it is not attributable to), this means that this act of betrayal can never be committed by the Prophet. Then, He the Almighty states the general ruling as to this act of ghalul; that is, it may be committed by any other person. He the Almighty says, '... And whoever betrays, [taking unlawfully], will come with what he took on the Day of Resurrection.' (Al-'Imran: 161) This means that if a person unfaithfully takes something from the war booty, Allah the Almighty will bring it on the Day of Resurrection. In this regard, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him is narrated to have said, 'By Allah, any one of you will not take anything from (the public funds) without any justification, but will meet his Lord carrying it on himself on the Day of Judgment. I will recognise any one of you meeting Allah and carrying a growling camel, or a cow bellowing or a goat bleating'. Then he raised his hands so high that whiteness of his armpits could be seen. Then he said, 'O my Lord, I have conveyed (Your Commandments).' So, whoever secretly takes something unlawfully will come on the Day of Resurrection carrying that thing, be it a camel, a cow or a sheep, even if it is a donkey braying.

Thus, if the person will bring all what he takes secretly on the Day of Resurrection, the stolen object itself will expose his deed. That is why the Day of Resurrection is known as Al-Fadihah (the day when people evil deeds will be exposed) and Al-Tammah (the greatest Overwhelming Calamity). So, a person may take something secretly in this worldly life, but he will carry that secretly stolen object on his back on the Day of Resurrection. Then, such a person will call upon the Messenger of Allah and say, 'O Muhammad... O Muhammad!' He will call upon him peace and blessings be upon him because they (Muslims) are fully aware of the fact that he is kind and merciful, and that the punishment intended to that particular person will not please him peace and blessings be upon him. But he peace and blessings be upon him had already told about the punishment prepared for such person on the Day of Resurrection, thus those who firmly believed in him must not have taken from the war booty in secret.

But why is the hiding of war booty viewed as something evil? It is due to the fact that fighter in the battlefield takes into account one ultimate goal; that is, to make the Word of Allah superior, so how can he be content with such betrayal?! He fights for the sake of making the Word of Allah superior and thus he must take into consideration this ultimate goal.

Then, Allah the Almighty lays down the general rule that is: 'Then will every soul be [fully] compensated for what it earned, and they will not be wronged.' (Al-'Imran: 161) This verse refers to unfaithfully taking something in secret, either from the booty or from any other thing. If we apply this verse to all those who betray the trust given to them, we can deduce that a person who betrays the trust regarding the construction of a building will come on the Day of Resurrection carrying the building on his back, and so is the person who stole a hundred tons of fish or imported rotten cheese.

Therefore, anyone who steals will come on the Day of Resurrection carrying the stolen item on his back. Undoubtedly, people do not like their evil deeds to be exposed to their peers, who are limited in number. So, what about the disgrace that will afflict the person on the Day of Resurrection? Indeed, man's evil deeds will be exposed to the entire humanity, from Adam to the end of time. So, every person must take into account that his act of betrayal will be exposed on the Day of Resurrection.

'... And whoever betrays, [taking unlawfully], will come with what he took on the Day of Resurrection. Then, will every soul be [fully] compensated for what it earned, and they will not be wronged.' (Al-'Imran: 161) This means that since He the Almighty will fully compensate people for their deeds, there will be no injustice at all. But if the matter was to be fulfilled without rewarding/punishing people for their deeds, then it would be sheer injustice, Allah forbid. Having clarified this rule for the Muslims, He the Almighty then says, 'So is one who pursues the pleasure of Allah like one who brings upon himself the anger of Allah and whose refuge is Hell? And wretched is the destination.'

أَفَمَنِ ٱتَّبَعَ رِضْوَٰنَ ٱللَّهِ كَمَنۢ بَآءَ بِسَخَطٖ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِ
وَمَأْوَىٰهُ جَهَنَّمُۚ وَبِئْسَ ٱلْمَصِيرُ ١٦٢

Can the man who pursues God's good pleasure be like the man who has brought God's wrath upon himself and whose home will be Hell – a foul destination? [162] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 162)

In reality, when Allah the Almighty proposes an issue in the form of a question, this does not mean that He the Almighty wants to know further about it. Rather, He Glorified is He does so in order to encourage people to express their opinions about it. Their opinions will be offered as evidence against them (on the Day of Resurrection). Indeed, there is a big difference between the one who pursues the pleasure of Allah and the one who brings upon himself His Anger. This is totally true. But Allah the Almighty wants people to express their opinions on this particular issue. That is why He the Almighty says, 'So is one who pursues the pleasure of Allah like one who brings upon himself...'. The word baa' means to bring upon himself [the anger of Allah].

Undoubtedly, whoever knows about the differences between pursuing the Pleasure of Allah and provoking His Anger shall say, 'Most surely, pursuing the Pleasure of Allah makes man superior, while the one who brings upon himself His Anger Glorified is He will be in the lowest depth of loss and misfortune.' So, the listener says his own opinion about that particular issue. Hence, Allah Glorified is He wants us to express our opinions on the issue in order to use them as evidence against us. Here arises a very important question, namely: Is there some sort of similarity between that person who pursues the Pleasure of Allah and that one who brings upon himself His Anger?

In other words, is there any sort of similarity between the person who follows the Pleasure of Allah the Almighty who does not take from the war booty in secret and who does not betray the trust and that one who acts otherwise? This means that there is no similarity whatsoever between those who obeyed the Orders of Allah and hastened to strive against the enemy and those who did not obey the Orders. It is for sure that there is no similarity between them at all. In reality, those who do not obey the Orders of Allah will bring upon themselves His Wrath and Anger.

The word Al-Sakhat (anger/wrath) means to reproach someone or some people openly. However, this act of reproaching may not exert impact upon those people with harsh feelings. That is why Allah the Almighty then states the ruling of such people. He Glorified is He says, '... and whose refuge is Hell? And wretched is the destination.' (Al-'Imran: 162) The word ma'wa refers to man's abode. In this context, it refers to hellfire which is an evil destination. Having concluded this verse, He the Almighty says,

The Chapter of

Al-‘Imran

Continued

هُمۡ دَرَجَٰتٌ عِندَ ٱللَّهِۗ وَٱللَّهُ بَصِيرُۢ بِمَا يَعۡمَلُونَ ١٦٣

They are in a different class in God’s eyes; God sees exactly what they do [163] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 163)

The saying of Allah the Almighty: ‘They are [varying] degrees in the sight of Allah...’ means that people’s different positions in the Hereafter will be in accordance with their deeds in this worldly life. In the Hereafter, everyone will be held accountable for his deeds. In this context, we notice that Allah the Almighty uses the word darajat (degrees) with reference to the paradise and uses the word darakat (the lowest depths) to refer to the fire. Thus, it becomes clear that word ‘degree’ refers to the high rank in paradise, while the word ‘the lowest depth’ refers to the awkward position in the fire.

‘They are [varying] degrees in the sight of Allah..., this clearly indicates the Divine Justice of Allah the Almighty. He Glorified is He sees all His creatures equally. In addition, He has no enmity towards them. This rule laid down in this verse is applicable to all mankind, be the ruling for or even against them. Allah then concludes this verse saying, ‘...and Allah is seeing of whatever they do.’ (Al-‘Imran: 163) This is to make people feel assured that Allah is All-Seeing of what they do; thus their good deeds will not be to waste, nor will their evil deeds. ‘... And Allah is seeing of whatever they do.’ We frequently hear the following three verbs yaf‘al (do/does), ya‘mal (work/works) and yaqul (say/says). It goes without saying that ‘work/action’ is the most important of the three. That is because it entails the fact that every part of the body shall perform the act assigned to it. For example, the function (work) of the heart is to intend, and the function of the ear is to listen, while the function of the eye is to look. So, it is crystal clear now that every part of the body has a certain function to do. Therefore, every function performed by a body part is called an action.

However, all the body parts perform actions, except the tongue, which produces saying (speech), and speech is the opposite of actions and “work” includes both “action” and “speech”. But why is what the tongue produces known as saying or speech; not action? That is because man talks too much, but putting his words into practice is another thing. That is why Allah the Almighty warns the believers against saying that which they do not do, stressing that this act is one of the most hateful acts in the sight of Allah. (as-Saff: 2-3)

It becomes clear now that saying is in contrast to doing, and both of them are included in the action category. In this regard, He the Almighty says, '... and Allah is seeing of whatever they do.' This means that He the Almighty hears their sayings and sees their actions. He Glorified is He then says,

لَقَدْ مَنَّ ٱللَّهُ عَلَى ٱلْمُؤْمِنِينَ إِذْ بَعَثَ فِيهِمْ رَسُولًا مِّنْ أَنفُسِهِمْ يَتْلُوا۟ عَلَيْهِمْ ءَايَـٰتِهِۦ وَيُزَكِّيهِمْ
وَيُعَلِّمُهُمُ ٱلْكِتَـٰبَ وَٱلْحِكْمَةَ وَإِن كَانُوا۟ مِن قَبْلُ لَفِى ضَلَـٰلٍ مُّبِينٍ ﴿١٦٤﴾

God has been truly gracious to the believers in sending them a Messenger from among their own, to recite His revelations to them, to make them grow in purity, and to teach them the Scripture and wisdom – before that they were clearly astray [164]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 164)

In reality, conferring a favour upon someone is to grant him something he needs. Hence, Allah wants to say, 'Do I need your belief? Do I need your submission? Is there any of My Attributes which is imperfect and thus you are going to remove this imperfection?' The answer is no. Therefore, when I send you a Messenger who is merciful to you, the favour is to be attributed to Me Alone. 'Certainly did Allah confer [great] favour upon the believers when He sent among them a Messenger from themselves...' (Al-'Imran: 164).

The question to be asked here is: 'Did He the Almighty send an angel?' The answer is no. He Glorified is He sent a human being so that people could take him as a perfect example. Thus, when he, the Prophet, orders Muslims to follow his Sunnah, they must adhere to his orders. But if Allah had chosen an angel, would he have been taken as an example? Of course not, because if that angel orders you to do a particular act, you might reply, 'I am unable to do it because you are an angel.' Along the same lines, ascribing divinity to a Messenger negates the fact of being a perfect example because if he says to you, 'Be like me,' you may reply, 'Can we do so? Your nature is different; could we reach such a level? We could not!' For this reason, all those who ascribe divinity to any Messenger are ignoring the possibility of taking him as a perfect example. A Messenger is known to be a perfect example of behaviour, to convey the Message of Allah and to declare that he is a mere human being. He shall say, 'I am a human being and I can obey and submit (to the Will of Allah). Furthermore, I am following the Orders of Allah assigned to you.' So, a Messenger is a practical example of behaviour.

Even though the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him was sent to all creatures, Allah the Almighty declared, as shown in the verse, that His favour is restricted only to those who believe. Why? It is because the believers are the ones who will benefit from this situation, while others missed the opportunity of taking him peace and blessings be upon him as an example, and that is why the favour of Allah is conferred only upon those who believe. 'Certainly did Allah confer [great] favour upon the believers...' (Al-'Imran: 164). So, what does the word minnah (favour) mean? Originally, this word means cutting off. But when we hear it, we realize that it may indicate several opposite meanings. For instance, it may give the meaning of giving money away without expecting its return. It may also mean to spoil a good deed by permanently reminding others of it, as shown in the verse (al-Baqara: 262).

Hence, the kind of favour we are discussing in this particular verse is to give to others without expecting its return. However, the word Al-mannu has been frequently used to spoil the good deed by always mentioning it. A case in point is when one says to a person who all the time reminds him of the favour he conferred, 'I do not want you to do me that favour you are speaking about all the time.' So, the word Al-mannu was used to refer to the blessing and the act of spoiling it. One may say 'So and so did me a favour as he helped me overcome a difficulty.' Arabs used to say, 'So and so has no munnah (strength).' As clearly shown, all the meanings of the word have to do with cutting off even with blessings and expenditure since a blessing is received to cut off one's needs. In addition, expenditure also indicates the meaning of satisfying the need. Therefore, the word has been used in this context to indicate its original meaning.

So, when the need is satisfied by the existence of a blessing, thanking the one who granted you this blessing, especially Allah the Almighty is a required act. Nevertheless, the act of always reminding the person of your favour annuls the act of thanking. This is because when you remind the person of your favour to him all the time, he might get annoyed and thus reject your favour.

So, this annuls the act of thanking. As a matter of fact, if you give a needy person something that satisfies his need, this is called a blessing or favour; however, if you are proud of the favour you did, to the extent that you spoil it, this is viewed as annuling the favour because it implies the negation of the act of requirement to thank that person. This act is called Al-mann because it hurts people’s feelings and emotions. However, in case you completely annul or cut off something, this is called Al-munnah. Arabs say, ‘So and so has no munnah; that is, he has no strength to make decisions about matters.” In this verse, Allah the Almighty says, ‘Certainly did Allah confer [great] favour upon the believers...’ (Al-‘Imran: 164). The word mann in this context indicates the meaning of doing a favour. The worldly favours are exclusively confined to the affairs of this worldly life; however, the favour conferred by Allah upon us, by sending the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him, involves the affairs of this worldly life and the life to come, thus it is a great blessing.

‘Certainly did Allah confer [great] favour upon the believers when...’ (Al-‘Imran: 164). The word idh (when) in this verse means ‘[remember] when Allah the Almighty sent you a Messenger from among yourselves.’ This is actually viewed as a great blessing granted by Him the Almighty to you (O mankind). In reality, if the ultimate goal of sending a Messenger was to guide people to the Way of Allah, this is already viewed as a blessing. But what if the Messenger sent to them were from among them? This is actually viewed as an additional blessing because as long as he is from among them, it obviously indicates that his lineage and moral character are known to them; he does not betray the trust; he does not tell a lie—this (i.e. sending of a Messenger with these qualities) is ‘a favour’ because they did not have to exert any effort to know him peace and blessings be upon him and ask questions like: Has he ever told a lie?’ and ‘Has he ever betrayed the trust?’ Did it not come into their minds? Besides, they did not concern themselves with asking about whether or not he wanted his news to be spread here and there. On the contrary, they were fully aware of his lineage; his grandfather was Al-Muttalib, chief of Mecca, and all his family members were of senior ranks.

All his followers knew for certain that he was honest since early childhood. Therefore, all this information stopped people from having to assure themselves whether he was truthful. That is why when He the Almighty sent the best of creation to people; there was a group from among them who immediately and firmly believed in him once he said to them, 'I am Allah's Messenger to you.' Although he did not perform a miracle for them at that time, they did not doubt him and asked what he was saying or doing.

But once he told them that he was the Messenger of Allah, they firmly believed in him. So, upon what events did, they rely on for their acceptance of his Message? They entirely relied upon the events of the past.

You called him 'the reliable man of the tribe' in his youth; and the reliable person is not to be doubted in what he says. In this regard, Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him may be quoted, 'If he said so, he had told the truth.' So, the previous information they knew about him peace and blessings be upon him was the way leading to their acceptance of his Message. Because of the same reasons, Khadijah Allah be pleased with her believed in him peace and blessings be upon him eventhough he did not perform miracles for her and nor did he recite the Quran to her. Rather, once he peace and blessings be upon him said to her, 'I am the Messenger of Allah,' she replied, 'You have told the truth. You must be a Messenger.' Look! Even though he peace and blessings be upon him himself was doubtful, she firmly believed in him. He peace and blessings be upon him even wonders, 'May the one who attended me in the cave be a jinn?' But Khadijah Allah be pleased with her took him peace and blessings be upon him to Waraqat ibn Nawfal, her cousin, and further explained to the Prophet that what he was talking about could never bring about a calamity or disgrace upon him because his previous life led directly to that expected result; that is, he would be a noble Messenger sent by Allah the Almighty. She said to him, 'By Allah, Allah will never disgrace you. You keep good relations with your kith and kin, help the poor and the destitute, serve your guests generously and assist the deserving afflicted by calamity. A man with such qualities can never be approached by jinn. Let us go to consult with one of the people of the Book who knows about these matters. So, she believed in him peace and blessings be upon him even before Waraqat told her anything.

Therefore, the saying of Allah the Almighty, '... from among themselves' (Al-'Imran: 164) clearly indicates that he peace and blessings be upon him was known to them, and that Allah the Almighty did not send an angel from heaven and He said to them, ‛This is the Messenger of Allah to you.’ No; this did not happen so. But Muhammad is a Messenger {from among themselves}; this is actually the first blessing and favour from Allah. He the Almighty says, ‛Certainly did Allah confer [great] favour upon the believers when He sent to them a Messenger from themselves’ (Al-‘Imran: 164). This is the meaning if we consider the verse in the light of the tribe of the Prophet. As for the saying of Allah ‛...from among themselves...,’ this indicates that he peace and blessings be upon him is an Arab, which is viewed as another favour conferred upon them; he peace and blessings be upon him is an Arab, thus they are able to understand his speech. Also, they will not need any medium to translate to them. The Messenger peace and blessings be upon him was sent to bring mankind out of darkness and into the light. Therefore, he was in need of a people who were able to understand him. That is why Allah the Almighty clarified His Favour upon them by saying ‛I did not burden you with the need to interpret his speech. He is from among you. He has your same characteristics.’ However, due to their obstinacy, they did not believe in him peace and blessings be upon him. Their obstinacy led them not to believe in him peace and blessings be upon him on the grounds that he was a mere human being. (al-Isra’: 94)

They did not believe that Allah the Almighty had sent a mere human as a Messenger. As a matter of fact, this is a stupid argument. But Allah Glorified is He answered them that if angels were to walk on the earth in peace, He Glorified is He would have sent an angel from heaven as a Messenger to them. (al-Isra’: 95)

Due to the fact that you are human beings, it was inevitable that any Messenger sent to you, must have been from among you. Therefore, when he orders you, ‛Do this,’ you will obey his orders because he is a human who works and so are you. Yet, if he were an angel, you would say ‛We can never act as an angel.’ Accordingly, their argument in this regard proves tenuous. It is in this way that Allah the Almighty conferred His Favour upon the believers by sending them a Messenger from among themselves. Undoubtedly, it is a Favour in the truest sense of the word; if we view it in the light of the fact that he peace and blessings be upon him was from their tribe, it is a Favour; and so is the matter if we consider it in regard to the Arab race, who speak one language; it is also the case if we view it regarding all mankind.

At this point, an important question shall be asked, 'Does considering one particular meaning negate the other meanings? Or can they all be accepted together?' Certainly, all of those meanings can be accepted together. That is because Allah the Almighty is the One Who states all those meanings; thus one word may carry various meanings. He the Almighty says, 'Certainly did Allah confer [great] favour upon the believers when He sent among them a Messenger from themselves....' (Al-'Imran: 164) Yet, there is one particular mode of recitation (that is odd) reads anfasihim (the best of them) because his lineage goes back to the family of Hashim who are the best of Quraysh, if not the best of all Arabs.

But what is the role attributed to the Messenger? One can understand from the saying of Allah that 'a Messenger' does not bring anything from his own. Because, in spite of his high rank, great moral character and glorious past, he is sent by Allah the Almighty Who is better than him peace and blessings be upon him. Thus, do not occupy your minds only with thinking of this great man; rather, you must wonder who sent him?' You must pay full attention to the fact that the One Who sent Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is better than Muhammad himself.

'... A Messenger from themselves, reciting to them His verses...' (Al-'Imran: 164) The word yatlu means to recite or to read. That is because words follow each other, one after the other. The word ayat, as we know, is used to refer to wonderful matters. For example, we say, 'So and so is a manifestation of beauty,' that is, his beauty attracts people's attention. It is along the same line when you say, 'So and so is a manifestation of intelligence.' It is true that there are many intelligent people, but he is the most intelligent. This means that the intelligence of that particular person is something which gains admiration. As such, the word aya means a wonderful matter that one should reflect upon to realise its amazing aspects. Signs are of two kinds: those which are seen and observed in the universe, such as the signs of the night, the day, the sun, the moon, etc. (Fussilat: 37)

In reality, all the phenomena of the universe are considered amazing and wonderful. As for the second kind, it has to do with the ayat (verses) of the Quran, shown in the fact that Allah the Almighty replaces one aya (verse) by another. (an-Nahl: 101) Therefore, signs are those amazing matters. They are of two kinds, namely that which is seen and observed, and that which is recited. As for the first kind, the seen and observed signs, it includes the entire universe. As for the second kind which is the recited signs, it has to do with the Quran. The Quran explains the signs of the universe and vice-versa. Besides, the Messenger was sent to recite the verses of the Quran to them which was amazing and surprising to them. As for the other signs of the universe, they (people) saw and observed them. The Messenger was sent with these recited verses to drive their attention to the ones that could be seen and observed. One is absolutely astonished by knowing about the absolute accuracy in the creation of the universe, so he finally believes in the One Who created the universe.

Talking about the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him, Allah the Almighty says, '... reciting to them His verses and purifying them...' (Al-'Imran: 164). But his mission is not exclusively confined to reciting the verses to them to gain their admiration. Rather, the Messenger was given a mission regarding belief; this mission shall drive the attention of all who listen to the Quran, to the One Who created this wonderful universe full of amazing signs. Then, He Glorified is He gives the Messenger the methodology compatible with the beauty of the universe. Therefore, the Messenger was sent to guide believers to that particular methodology under which they can purify themselves. In fact, when one hears the word yuzakkihim (purify them), he immediately realises that it is derived from the word Az-Zakat. The most important meaning given by the word Az-Zakat is purification, cleansing and growing. Hence, the verses of the Quran with which the Messenger peace and blessings be upon him was sent, were meant with purifying their souls.

But is such purification beneficial for the one who commands it or the purified person? It is undoubtedly beneficial for the one commanding it. However, you are the ones who will get benefit from growing and increasing. Yet, this matter should not be taken against taklif (legal charge/obligation). That is because taklif has nothing to do with the mukallif (the One who imposed those legal obligations/Lawgiver); rather, it is concerned with the mukallaf (a person who has a duty ordained by law). I give this example to fully illustrate the point; a rich man who loves his children and wants to encourage them to learn may say to them, 'If you succeed, I will do such-and-such for you.'

Actually, he does not want anything from them for himself because he has what suffices him and meets his requirements. Thus, it is the interest of his children that he wants to achieve.

Therefore, the Lawgiver does not gain any benefit by our obligations; rather, it is we who will get benefit from that; it is good for us to be cleansed, to be purified and to achieve growth. At-Tazkiyah (purification) gives the meanings of purification, cleansing and growing. Let us consider the condition of Arabs in the pre-Islamic period of ignorance in the light of these three meanings given by this word.

In fact, there was neither purification, nor cleansing nor growing during that particular period. That is because it was a period of ignorance during which they were subject to whims, despotism, and injustice. It is known for certain that the first thing man pays attention to is to keep his life. As a matter of fact, At-Tazkiyah encompasses all of these matters, i.e. purification of the man himself. So, instead of telling a lie, he purifies it from that; instead of unlawful looking at women; he purifies his eye from that; and instead of stealing, he purifies his hand from that by refraining from doing it.

It is known for certain that theft is considered a vice. This is proved by the fact that the thief hides from people, while committing this crime. Religion, therefore, comes to instruct such a person not to steal. Hence, religion purifies the movement of man's body parts in this worldly life, and also purifies his heart from hatred so that he will live in great comfort. Similarly, a man's strength will be preserved, by virtue of religion, thus it could be used in hard work. A number of questions are to be asked here, 'Why should man weaken his strength?! Why should he look at what Allah has forbidden?! And why should he break off relations with others?!'

It becomes clear now that religion is meant to purify man; it has actually to do with purifying and cleansing him, as well as improving his living conditions. So, when one feels impotent or incapable, he will not accept humiliation for the sake of sustenance. In such a way, religion protects man from humiliation to the extent that it prescribes a certain share for the poor from the money of the rich. Not only that, but it is the rich who shall search for the poor to give them their due share as well. Therefore, when the poor finds all the riches the believers are searching for, in order to give them their shares prescribed by Allah the Almighty then they will say, ‘We are not alone in this world. We are backed and supported by our fellow Muslims.’ It is in such a way that man’s purification takes place.

But what is it about the preservation of human race? Most surely, Allah Glorified is He wants to purify mankind from all vices by guiding them to the divine code of ethics manifested clearly in chastity. Therefore, religion came to purify you (O mankind) in all your affairs; it has to do with purifying the movements of your body parts so that one movement by a particular body part shall be in its proper context set by Allah the Almighty the One Who created it. In reality, Allah Glorified is He has clarified the primary roles to be performed by all the body parts including the eye, the tongue, the hand, the leg and the heart. Therefore, it is Allah the Almighty Who created all the body parts and clearly defined the role of each. Therefore, there shall be neither extravagance nor negligence. Yet, if any of the body parts breaks the code established by Allah the Almighty this will be considered disobedience to Him the Almighty. In such a way, it becomes clear that religion has come to purify and cleanse you (O believers). It is also meant to improve your living conditions ‘...And teaching them the Book and wisdom...’ (Al-‘Imran: 164). As a matter of fact, Allah the Almighty uses the word “the Book” in this context to refer to the Quran, the Book that He revealed down upon the heart of Muhammad. As for the word Al-Hikmah, it is used here to refer to the Sunnah (of the Prophet). This is proved by the fact when Allah Glorified is He asked the wives of the Prophet to remember the verses of the Quran and Al-Hikmah recited in their houses (Al-‘Imran: 34).

It is known for certain that ayatu Allah (or the verses of Allah) in this context refer specifically to the verses of the Quran, while ‘Al-Hikmah’ refers to the Sunnah of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him.

Here in this verse, Allah the Almighty says, ‘... reciting to them His verses and purifying them and teaching them the Book and wisdom...’ (Al-‘Imran: 164) This verse clearly indicates that the Book is the Quran. This means that he, Muhammad, will recite the verses of the Quran to them, and then he will teach them what has been revealed down in the Book. Yet, some mufassirun (scholars who are able to give explanation for the verses of the Quran) opine that there is another explanation for the word Al-Kitab in the verse. They said, 'The word Al-kitab must be interpreted and explained to mean something other than the Quran.' 'In this context,' they added, 'it means writing.' And the first instance of writing was the writing down of the Quran. Thus, the two meanings apply. A case in point is the battle of Badr, when disbelieving captives were to be released in return for either money or teaching ten unlettered Muslims how to read and write. Muslims, at this time were unlettered—a fact proved by Allah the Almighty Who states clearly in the Quran that He Glorified is He has sent an unlettered Prophet (Muhammad) to an unlettered nation (The Arabs) to recite to them His Verses (the verses of the Quran) to purify them and to teach them the Quran and the Sunnah. (al-Jumu'ah: 2)

Therefore, I believe that explaining the word Al-Kitab in this context as referring to 'writing' is the most correct opinion because it fits the illiteracy of the Arabs. You may also consider the following point on the grounds that there is a difference between recitation and education as follows: recitation means that the Messenger himself is the one who recites to them the verses of the Quran, while education means that they themselves are the ones who recite the Quran. '... And teaching them the Book and wisdom...' (Al-'Imran: 164) The verb 'Allam bears the meaning of conveying knowledge from a teacher to a student.

Allah the Almighty then concludes the verse with His saying, '... although they had been before in manifest error.' (Al-'Imran: 164) The Quran contains various linguistic styles including the preposition 'in'. As a matter of fact, sentences containing this preposition may indicate different meanings. For example, it may mean "if" indicating condition in some sentences, that is, it is to be followed by a verb of condition and a verb of action. A case in point is when Allah says "If a wound has afflicted you (at Uhud), a wound like it has also afflicted the (unbelieving) people…" (Al-'Imran: 140).

This verse means that if wound afflicts you, O Muslims, do not despair or be downcast because the same wound has already afflicted the opposing people. This particular linguistic style is also clear in the verse: "If you give alms openly, it is well…" (al-Baqara: 271). In this verse, we notice that the preposition 'in' has been used to indicate condition; that is, the sentence contains a verb of condition and verb of action. In another linguistic style, this preposition 'in' may be followed by ‘illa’ (or except/save). This is clear in the verse: “None can be their mothers except those who gave them birth…” (al-Mujadala: 2).

In this context, He the Almighty tells about those people who commit the act of Zhihar against their wives. Zhihar means that the husband says to his wife, ‘You are to me as like the back of my mother.’ But the Quran declares this act as wrong. That is because the husband’s mother is the woman who gave birth to him. It is for certain that man’s wife did not give birth to him. So, if your wife were your mother, you would be forbidden from getting married to her. (al-Mujadala: 2) As a matter of fact, this linguistic style in which the preposition ‘in’ is followed by ‘illa’ indicates that what comes after ‘illa’ is different from what comes before it. This is crystal clear in (al-Mujadala: 2). Concerning this particular verse of (al-Mujadala: 2), Allah the Almighty states clearly that men’s mothers are those women who gave birth to them and not their wives.

However, concerning the preposition ‘in’ in the verse (Al-‘Imran: 164), it indicates neither condition nor negation. It actually indicates reality; that is, it is true that those people were in manifest error. Yet, there are some Arabic language grammarians who believe that it (i.e. the preposition ‘in’) is used in this context to make the situation plain and obvious.

At that point, we shall know what is meant by the word Ad-dalal (error). Arabs say, ‘So and so dalla at-Tariq (deviated from the way) in case he walked on a way that would not lead him to his final destination or when that way may even bring him a different result.’ But what about deviation regarding moral conduct? Most surely, it will not achieve man’s ultimate goal that is being admitted in Paradise, but rather, it will lead to the opposite which is hellfire. Actually, this is the manifest error. It is proved by the fact that the one who commits a crime does not like people to know about it. For instance, a thief does not like people to know about his crimes, and so is the liar who will be deeply shocked once someone calls him a liar. Therefore, these vices are committed by people who do not want anyone to see them or know about them (i.e. vices).

The verse ‘... Although they had been before in manifest error’ (Al-‘Imran: 164) describes error as manifest and obvious. This is proved by the story of the two young men who entered prison (Yusuf: 36). The two young men had realised that Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him was a doer of good because he was able to distinguish good from bad. Due to the fact that they (the two young men) were fully aware of the criterion of doing good, it was easy for them to recognise Yusuf. But why did any of them not say such a thing before? They gave this testimony about Yusuf peace be upon him because it was at that time that they were in need of his advice concerning the interpretation of visions. Yusuf peace be upon him was imprisoned and none dealt with him but as a prisoner. It was due to his behaviour towards these two young men that they perfectly knew that he was a doer of good and kindness. That is why they resorted to him and became certain that he was able to interpret their two visions. We have already stated clearly that the deviant himself knows very well the value of uprightness. Therefore, we can deduce that uprightness is something naturally implanted in man. This is based on the fact that the deviant himself realises the essence of uprightness.

Then, Allah the Almighty sheds light on a very important topic; He Glorified is He conferred His favour upon the believers by sending them a Messenger who was from among them, who recited His Verses (the verses of the Quran) to them, and who was sent to purify them and to teach them the Book and the wisdom (i.e. how to make use of something in the best way). So, it was due to this Favour that when the Messenger ordered you to do something, you did not have the right to disobey him peace and blessings be upon him, and when he makes a miracle for you, you should not argue with him in this regard. So, what is wrong with you? Allah the Almighty says,

أَوَلَمَّآ أَصَٰبَتۡكُم مُّصِيبَةٞ قَدۡ أَصَبۡتُم مِّثۡلَيۡهَا قُلۡتُمۡ أَنَّىٰ هَٰذَاۖ قُلۡ هُوَ
مِنۡ عِندِ أَنفُسِكُمۡۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ شَيۡءٖ قَدِيرٞ ١٦٥

Why do you [believers] say, when a calamity befalls you, even after you have inflicted twice as much damage [on your enemy], 'How did this happen? [Prophet], say, 'You brought it upon yourselves.' God has power over everything [165]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 165)

Why do you (O believers) say, ʽHow could the disbelievers defeat us?' In reality, you were defeated because you disobeyed the orders of the Messenger of Allah; He Glorified is He conferred His Favour upon you by sending you a Messenger who was from among yourselves and who came to you, purified you and taught you the Book and the wisdom. This actually implies that you are obliged to obey all the orders of such a Messenger; none of you should say, 'Why were we defeated as such?' In other words, none of you should say, 'Why did the situation go like this in the battle of Uhud?' You should not say this because your saying does not match with the favour of Allah the Almighty conferred upon you by sending you a Messenger. In addition, the defeat in Uhud was inflicted upon you after you had already defeated the disbelievers (in the battle of Badr) and after you had certainly afflicted them with misfortune which was twice as much the misfortune you were afflicted with in Uhud. So, you were the first to defeat them (in Badr); Allah the Almighty gave you victory; you killed seventy from the disbelievers and took other seventy as captives, while in Uhud they killed seventy of you but they took no captives; you (O believers) took the booty of Badr, while they (the disbelievers) did not take any booty in Uhud, so what is unusual about this? You were supposed to inspect yourselves and examine the truthfulness of your belief and the faithfulness of your obedience and submission to the leadership of the Messenger of Allah! As a matter of fact, the question 'Whence is this?' should not have been asked by you because it indicates objection to the occurrence of the defeat; that is, you wondered, 'How could we be defeated as such eventhough we fight in the Cause of Allah and the Messenger of Allah is among us, while the others are idolaters?' We answer your question by asking you the following, 'Have you (O believers) reached the required level of belief?!' As a matter of fact, this required level of belief necessitates that you obey the orders of the Messenger, but you (O believers) did not really reach that level of belief that you previously had in the battle of Badr.

The saying of Allah the Almighty 'What! When' indicates interrogation and time respectively; that is, you have believed in Allah as the True Lord and you have believed in Muhammad as a Messenger, but when a misfortune afflicted you, and you had certainly afflicted the disbelievers with twice as much before; you say, 'What! When!'

Reason indicates that you were never supposed to ask such a question because you have believed in a Fair God Whose Laws are neither altered nor changed. Do you think that He the Almighty would change these laws for your sake? No, since He Glorified is He says: "(Such has been) the course of Allah with respect to those who have gone before; and you shall not find any change in the course of Allah…" (al-'Ahzab: 62). He Glorified is He affirms this undeniable fact that His Laws are neither changed nor altered in another verse of the Quran in which He the Almighty also states that evil scheming will not engulf but its authors (Fatir: 43).

Had you recalled your belief in the One God Who established these laws to perfectly run the affairs of His Universe in such a way that is most beneficial, you would not have said something like that, and as long as you have believed in the fact that it is Allah the Almighty Who established these laws, you would have known for sure that He Glorified is He would not change His Laws for your sake because you chose Islam (submission to the will of Allah). So, you would have known for certain that in case you disobeyed His Orders, all His Laws would have been applied to you, so you must have understood the matter. Furthermore, you would not have asked this question because you have believed in Allah as One Who established Laws and in Muhammad as a Messenger from Allah.

So, when a misfortune afflicted you (O believers), and you had already afflicted the disbelievers with a misfortune that was twice as much as yours, you said, 'How could this happen?!' You (O believers) had already afflicted the disbelievers with a misfortune which was twice as much as the misfortune you were afflicted with, so you would have reviewed your deeds in light of the criteria of belief, and if you have already done this, why would you ask this question 'How could this happen?! When one hears this question anna hadha (how could this happen?!), he should realise that it indicates two meanings; that is, it means either the question, 'How could this happen?', or the question, 'Whence did this happen?'

If it were used to refer to a person who would like to know about something, as was the case with Prophet Zakaryya (Zechariah), it means 'from where?'; Zakaryya (Zechariah) peace be upon him wanted to know 'whence' came the provision to Maryam (Mary) Allah be pleased with her while in her sanctuary. (Al-'Imran: 37) It may also have the meaning of 'how' as shown in the story of that Prophet who passed by a town that had fallen into ruin. Therefore, he wondered, 'How will Allah bring this town into life after its death?' (al-Baqara: 259)

In the above mentioned example, it (i.e. Anna) indicates the meaning of 'how'. Hence, it has the meaning of 'whence' or 'how'. As for the believers who fought in the battle of Uhud, they were surprised at their defeat, hence Allah the Almighty clarified the matter for them, 'Had you already taken into your account the fact that you truly believe in a Just (God) Who established unalterable and unchangeable Laws to run the affairs of His Universe, you would have known for certain that He the Almighty will not change these laws for your sake; rather, you are the ones who must change for the sake of Allah.

'What! When a misfortune befell you, and you had certainly afflicted (the unbelievers) with twice as much...' (Al-'Imran: 165) The word lamma in this verse gives the meaning of an adverb of time 'when'. It may also be used exactly as the case with the particle 'lam'. Furthermore, this Arabic adverb of time 'lamma' is also used to negate verbs. This is clearly shown in the Quran when Allah the Almighty told the dwellers of the desert that faith had not yet entered into their hearts. (al-Hujurat: 14)

This verse (al-Hujurat: 14) means that faith had not yet entered the hearts of the dwellers of the desert, but it might enter into their hearts later. This is the apocopate function of the word lamma. This word may also be used to indicate condition. For example, Arabs say, "Lamma yaqum Zayd yahrauthu kadha." This sentence means 'when Zayd ploughs the earth, this particular thing will take place.' This conditional usage of lamma is confirmed in the Quran when Allah the Almighty tells the story of Ibrahim (Abraham) and his son Ismail (Ishmael) peace be upon them (as-Saffat: 103-105).

These verses of (as-Saffat: 103-105) refer to 'When both Ibrahim and his son Ismail surrendered to the Order of Allah and Ibrahim laid his son down to his forehead in submission to the Order of Allah, We called out to him saying: "O Ibrahim! You have indeed shown the truth of the vision."' With regard to the particle waw (and) in these verses of (as-Saffat: 103-105), it is used for emphasis, exactly like the verse of the Quran in which Allah the Almighty talks about the opening of the gates of paradise (al-Haqqa: 73). It becomes crystal clear now that the particle 'and' in this context is used to indicate emphasis. Other Arabic language grammarians, though, believe that this particular word was used in this context to indicate that the act of Allah the Almighty calling Ibrahim, came shortly after he peace be upon him laid down his son Ismail to his forehead to slay him in submission to the Order of Allah the Almighty.

So, the word lamma here in this verse is an adverb of time. This means, 'When a misfortune afflicts you and you had certainly afflicted (the unbelievers) with twice as much', you began to say, 'Whence is this?' (O believers) it would have been better for you if you would have drawn a comparison between what happened in Badr and what happened in Uhud; it was in Badr that you had certainly afflicted (the unbelievers) with twice as much you were afflicted with in Uhud, but why did your enemy defeat you in Uhud as such? You must have asked yourselves this question because criteria are already established, and as long as you paid them no attention, here is the answer to your proposed question, 'Say to them, O Muhamamd, "It is from yourselves."' You disobeyed the order of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him, thus your defeat was inevitable because of the belief in Allah Whose Laws are neither changed nor altered.

'What! When a misfortune befell you, and you had certainly afflicted (the unbelievers) with twice as much, you began to say: Whence is this? Say: It is from yourselves....'

Allah the Almighty then concludes the verse with His saying: '... surely Allah has power over all things.' (Al-'Imran: 165) So, the question to be asked here is 'why did Allah the Almighty conclude the verse that way?' The answer is that as long as Allah has established unchangeable Laws and He the Almighty has absolute power over all things, no other (false) god will come to nullify any of these Laws established by Him the Almighty. And since there is no other god, then it is the Almighty the One Who has power over all things and has power to keep His Laws unchanged. In fact, there is not any other power that can change the Laws established by Allah the Almighty Who, then, can change them?! As a matter of fact, these laws can never be changed except by a power which is more enormous- Allah forbid- than that of Allah the Almighty. Accordingly, He Glorified is He clarified the matter, 'I have power over all things and thus I can keep My Laws in the Universe in such a way which is perfect. Therefore, there is no other power that can change or alter these Laws established by Me'.

As well, you should not think that what afflicted you was a result of the fact that My Laws are unchangeable; no, it afflicted you by My Permission. He the Almighty put it clear that whoever disobeys His Commands will be afflicted with His punishment. Therefore, there is nothing which takes place in the universe without the Knowledge and Permission of Allah the Almighty. Then, He Glorified is He says,

وَمَآ أَصَٰبَكُمۡ يَوۡمَ ٱلۡتَقَى ٱلۡجَمۡعَانِ فَبِإِذۡنِ ٱللَّهِ وَلِيَعۡلَمَ ٱلۡمُؤۡمِنِينَ ﴿١٦٦﴾

What befell you on the day the two armies met in battle happened with God's permission and in order for Him to see who were the true believers [166]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 166)

This means that He the Almighty made the army of the believers fight against the army of the disbelievers at Uhud by virtue of His Knowledge and Permission. He Glorified is He previously knew the result of the battle, and that they would disobey the orders of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him. Yet His saying, 'with Allah's Permission' may be explained in the light of His Laws which are unchangeable. Therefore, all what happened to them has taken place with the Knowledge of Allah the Almighty. Yes, it happened with His Permission, and it is for certain that the divine laws are applied to all those who disobey His Orders.

'And what befell you on the day when the two armies met (at Uhud) was with Allah's knowledge, and that He might know the believers.' (Al-'Imran: 166) When Allah the Almighty says, 'and that He might know the believers,' and 'that He might know the hypocrite,' this truly means that He the Almighty knows them perfectly well before the occurrence of the events, but His Knowledge will not bear testimony against people unless they do the action themselves. That is because a person may say, 'O my Lord, you held me accountable for this deed by virtue of Your Knowledge, but I would not have done this deed.' He the Almighty therefore, will clarify the matter, 'No, it does not go like this. You knew about it because you had already done it, thus it bears testimony against you.’

For more clarification, I will offer the following example: A teacher may say to one of his students, ‘You have failed.’ The student then replies, ‘No, you must test me.’ The teacher will then say, ‘I know that you have failed,’ whereupon the student says, ‘I do not rely on your knowledge in this regard, but you must test me.’ The teacher will then say, ‘I will test you.’ But upon giving some questions to the student, he fails. Then, the student became fully aware of his failure; it is true that he already knew about it, but now he is unable to argue with the teacher about the matter which has now turned into an undeniable fact.

The saying of Allah the Almighty ‘...and that He might know the believers.’ (Al-‘Imran: 166) indicates that there are some believers whose faith is steadfast; it is those believers whose belief in Allah increases with the misfortunes afflicting them. He Glorified is He then says,

وَلِيَعْلَمَ ٱلَّذِينَ نَافَقُوا۟ ۚ وَقِيلَ لَهُمْ تَعَالَوْا۟ قَٰتِلُوا۟ فِى سَبِيلِ ٱللَّهِ أَوِ ٱدْفَعُوا۟ ۖ قَالُوا۟ لَوْ
نَعْلَمُ قِتَالًا لَّٱتَّبَعْنَٰكُمْ ۗ هُمْ لِلْكُفْرِ يَوْمَئِذٍ أَقْرَبُ مِنْهُمْ لِلْإِيمَٰنِ ۚ
يَقُولُونَ بِأَفْوَٰهِهِم مَّا لَيْسَ فِى قُلُوبِهِمْ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ أَعْلَمُ بِمَا يَكْتُمُونَ ﴿١٦٧﴾

When it was said to them, ‘Come, fight for God’s cause, or at least defend yourselves,’ answered, ‘We would follow you if we knew there was going to be fighting.’ On that day they were closer to disbelief than belief. They say with their tongues what is not in their hearts: God knows exactly what they conceal [167] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 167)

The saying of Allah the Almighty: ‘And that He might know the hypocrites...’ means that He the Almighty will reveal the deeds of the hypocrites so that people recognise them. But if these events did not take place, how could you recognise them? It goes without saying that they will conceal themselves. These events must have then taken place in order to expose them (the hypocrites) because the nature of the hypocrites entails cheating. That is why Allah the Almighty causes these events to take place in order to reveal and expose them.

'And that He might know the hypocrites; and it was said to them: Come, fight in Allah's way, or defend yourselves.' (Al-'Imran: 167) Medina was under attack, and if the disbelievers gained victory, they would enter it and take Muslims as captives and do all sorts of evil deeds. That is why 'Abdullah ibn 'Amr ibn Hiram said to the hypocrites, 'Come out to fight with us, and if you do not come out to fight with us, then come out to defend yourselves, your property and your women because if they (the disbelievers) gain victory over you, they will enter the city and do all sorts of evil deeds.' He called them out to fight by evoking their feelings of pride and zeal. But when he Allah be pleased with him became fully aware that they would not come out to fight with the believers, he said to them, 'Go away, O enemies of Allah! Most surely, Allah will suffice His Messenger.'

Hence, the verse clearly indicates that there is a difference between 'fighting in the Cause of Allah' and 'defending themselves.' That is why He the Almighty says, 'Come, fight in Allah's way or defend yourselves.' The believers said to the hypocrites that in order for the disbelievers to know that Muslims are large in number. They (the hypocrites) replied, 'If we knew fighting, we would have certainly followed you.' If we consider the story carefully, we will find that Ibn Ubayy was of the opinion that Muslims should have stayed in Medina, but why? Because it is proved by evidence that all those who tried to attack the people of Medina from inside it were defeated, but when they (the people of Midyan) fought against any enemy outside the city, they gained victory.

Therefore, Ibn Ubayy was fully aware of the matter; he did not want to go out to fight because he knew from experience that the people of Medina gained victory over enemies when they fought from inside the city, but when they came to fight outside Medina, they were defeated. So, he was fully aware of the result of coming out to fight the enemies outside Medina. But since it was 'Abdullah ibn Ubayy, the head of the hypocrites, the one who said that, you were unable to know where the truth was. It is possible that the impact of the migration of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him was felt by him because it was on that day of migration that he would have been crowned as the king of Medina. But when the Messenger of Allah arrived at Medina, the situation completely changed, and Ibn Salul was not appointed as the king of Medina. So, he might have kept his feeling hidden.

'They said: If we knew fighting, we would certainly have followed you.' (Al-'Imran: 167) Ibn Salul claimed that coming out of Medina to fight against the enemy was nothing but simply throwing oneself into destruction because war means that you engage in it, while thinking that you may gain victory; nevertheless this particular act of coming out of Medina to fight against the disbelievers was nothing but marching into destruction, and not real fighting. Allah the Almighty said, 'If we knew fighting, we would certainly have followed you.'

Allah the Almighty exposed their evil deeds by stating that, '... They were on that day much nearer to unbelief than to belief.....' (Al-'Imran: 167) This means that their hypocrisy was concealed, and as long as hypocrisy is concealed, it means that the tongue says, while the heart denies and rejects. Therefore, they are wavering between this and that, (belonging) neither to these nor to those; and this issue made him closer to manifest disbelief.

Allah the Almighty then says, 'They say with their mouths what is not in their hearts....' (Al-'Imran: 167) This verse clearly indicates that the heart has to do with 'intentions', while the tongue has to do with 'speech', so one may say that which he does not. That is why we have already said that hypocrites' souls are divided, and their faculties are shattered; they say with their tongues what they deny in their hearts. That is why they will be in the lowest depth of the hellfire because they are deceivers and their souls are divided.

'They say with their mouths what is not in their hearts....' (Al-'Imran: 167) The mouth is very important for the act of 'saying' because it reflects what is in the soul. Similarly, if one expresses what is in his soul in writing, this is considered as an act of 'saying.' That is why whoever feels shy to say something to someone, he will write it on a paper, and thus his writing is considered an act of 'saying'. As for those hypocrites, they say with their mouths and not in writing; this is considered sheer hypocrisy because if they were shy, they would just whisper it. '... They say with their mouths what is not in their hearts....' This indicates that the saying of the tongue does not match the intention of the heart; the heart is absolutely determined to committing disbelief, Allah forbid, and the tongue lies by declaring belief.

We know for certain that truthfulness is achieved when the act of ‘saying’ agrees with reality, which is the topic of belief. As a matter of fact, belief entails the existence of an intention in the heart and a deed to prove that belief. As for the hypocrites, their sayings do not match their intentions. But when Allah exposed their evil intentions, people knew their deceit. That is why they were closer to unbelief. Allah says, ‘They say with their mouths what is not in their hearts....’ (Al-‘Imran: 167) This saying of Allah the Almighty indicates the lack of belief in their hearts, for they dealt with Allah in the same way they dealt with human beings. Allah the Almighty then says,

ٱلَّذِينَ قَالُوا۟ لِإِخْوَٰنِهِمْ وَقَعَدُوا۟ لَوْ أَطَاعُونَا مَا قُتِلُوا۟ ۗ قُلْ فَٱدْرَءُوا۟
عَنْ أَنفُسِكُمُ ٱلْمَوْتَ إِن كُنتُمْ صَٰدِقِينَ ﴿١٦٨﴾

As for those who stayed behind, and said of their brothers, ‘If only they had listened to us, they would not have been killed,’ tell them [Prophet], ‘Ward of death from yourselves, if what you say is true’ [168] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 168)

When Ibn Ubayy wanted to desert the army, some of the hypocrites agreed with him, while others did not. But when those hypocrites who did not agree with him were killed, other hypocrites, who obeyed the command of Ibn Salul not to come out, were delighted and said, ‘Had they only obeyed us and stayed in Medina, they would not have been defeated or killed.’ Hence, Allah the Almighty explains the way they think to us. It is true that they stayed behind and said to their brothers who were killed in the battlefield and who mainly belonged to their own group of hypocrites, ‘... If they had obeyed us….’ This clearly indicates that an order was issued by the hypocrites to their brothers to ‘stay behind’. But those members of the group who are of less hypocrisy did not obey them and came out to fight, so they were afflicted with defeat and killing.

But how did Allah the Almighty answer them? You say, ‘If they had obeyed us...’, this means that their obedience to you would serve as a means of survival to them. So, you (O hypocrites) know the way to be safe from killing.

But the question to be asked here is: Does the person who knows how to be safe from killing, know how to be safe from death?! That is why Allah the Almighty scorns them saying, '... Then prevent death from yourselves, if you should be truthful.' (Al-'Imran: 168) As a matter of fact, this part of the verse is in response to their speech 'if they had obeyed us, they would not have been killed.'

Similarly, if you know a way to be safe from being killed, then use this particular way to prevent your deaths. You and your forefathers will surely die, and you cannot prevent death for yourself. So, you do not know how to be safe from death. How many fighters are those who safely came back from war! How many are those who fled from fighting but died? Even if some believers who were fighting in the Cause of Allah were killed, does this mean that they are of a lesser degree in the sight of Allah the Almighty? Of course, they are not! But those believers who were killed are more beloved to Allah than those who fled the battlefield.

We know for certain that an action is either praised or despised based on the goal behind it. In reality, every action that gets you closer to your gaol is praised, while every action that drives you away from the goal is despised. For example, if your goal is to travel to Alexandria, you may go there on foot, thus you will need more days; however, if you go there on a horse, a donkey, etc., you will need less time to reach there; if you use a car, you may reach it in a few hours. In the same way, if you use a plane to travel there, you may reach it in half an hour. That is to say that, the faster the means of transportation, the less time it needs to reach a destination. That is based on a rule stating that the active power is in adverse proportion with time. It also means that the more the power, the less the time. Since my goal is to travel to Alexandria, surely the means of transportation which takes less time is better than the ones that take more time, thus it is for sure the best means of transportation.

Since the ultimate goal (of the believer) is to meet Allah the Almighty and to live in His Company, then it is better for the believer if Allah hastens his death. But people improperly misunderstand the concept of death. It goes without saying that death gets the true believer closer to his goal, so why would he be sad?

‘And never think of those who have been killed in the cause of Allah as dead. Rather, they are alive with their Lord, receiving provision’ (Al-‘Imran: 169). You truly fear death, but those who are killed in the Cause of Allah are not dead because their lives continue. In fact, there is a big difference between death and martyrdom. The lives of those who are killed in the Cause of Allah are continuous and they will not experience the period of death that those who die normally suffer. We must understand that they are alive and in the Company of their Lord. This is totally done under the Law of Allah the Almighty so you must not judge things according to your own point of view. It is true that if you open the grave, you will find the martyrs with dismembered limbs, but this is your own judgment according to your point of view. As a matter of fact, those martyrs are alive with their Lord and receive provision.

Let us ask a very important question: what is the difference between life and death? Most surely when the soul leaves the body, one’s life is over and thus he will not get benefit from provision which is used by man to maintain life. In the same way, Allah the Almighty wants to give us some characteristics to prove that martyrs are indeed alive. It goes without saying that provision is one of the most essential elements for maintaining of life. Also, we must understand that the Company of Allah is totally different from that of others. Martyrs are alive with their Lord and are sustained by Him the Almighty in such a way that is destined by Him Glorified is He. We know perfectly well that the need for sustenance is the characteristic which distinguishes the alive from the dead. When we read the saying of Allah the Almighty,

وَلَا تَحْسَبَنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ قُتِلُوا۟ فِى سَبِيلِ ٱللَّهِ أَمْوَٰتًۢا ۚ بَلْ أَحْيَآءٌ عِندَ رَبِّهِمْ يُرْزَقُونَ ﴿١٦٩﴾

[Prophet], do not think of those who have been killed in God’s way as dead. They are alive with their Lord, well provided for [169] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 169)

We may say that it is possible to take a man, keep him alive and provide him with food and drink, but will that person be pleased with his situation? No, such a person will not be pleased. For this reason, we must realise that the life of the martyr is not in the grave, but in Allah’s Company, and he is pleased with his situation destined by Allah. That is why Allah the Almighty confirms the fact by the verse: ‘Rejoicing in what Allah has bestowed upon them of His bounty, and they receive good tidings about those [to be martyred] after them who have not yet joined them—that there will be no fear concerning them, nor will they grieve.’ (Al-‘Imran: 170)

All human beings are to die and this is a sign of justice, but it is due to Allah’s Favour that He the Almighty hastens the death of those whom He loves and moves them to live in His Pleasure and Bounty. This is confirmed by His Saying, ‘Rejoicing in what Allah has bestowed upon them of His bounty...’. However, we find that the fraternity they share with each other, as Muslims, turned into a form that is purer than the one that existed when they were alive. Belief entails that a believer must love for his fellow believer what he loves for himself and so is the case of martyrs with their Lord the Almighty. This clearly indicates that the life of martyrs is one that is full of provision and happiness, and every martyr believes that Allah the Almighty has favoured him with this bounty. That is why the martyr receives good tidings about the believers who did not join him yet and says,

فَرِحِينَ بِمَآ ءَاتَىٰهُمُ ٱللَّهُ مِن فَضۡلِهِۦ وَيَسۡتَبۡشِرُونَ بِٱلَّذِينَ لَمۡ يَلۡحَقُواْ
بِهِم مِّنۡ خَلۡفِهِمۡ أَلَّا خَوۡفٌ عَلَيۡهِمۡ وَلَا هُمۡ يَحۡزَنُونَ ﴿١٧٠﴾ happy with what God has given them of His favour; rejoicing that for those they have left behind who have yet to join them there is no fear, nor will they grieve [170]

(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 170)

The phrase yastabshirun is derived from Al-bushra, which means glad tidings/good news. The saying of Allah the Almighty, ‘... receive good tidings about those [to be martyred] after them who have not yet joined them,’ refers to the believers to be martyred after the already martyred ones. So, martyrs say, ‘They (our fellow brothers) will come to us, and we would like them to enjoy the same pleasure and bounty we are in.’ Besides, all of them love each other, for they know well the Hadith of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him, ‘No one of you becomes a true believer until he likes for his brother what he likes for himself.’ Ibn ‘Abbas Allah be pleased with him and his father narrated that the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him said, “When your brethren were struck at the battle of Uhud, Allah put their spirits in the crops of green birds which go down to the rivers of paradise, eat its fruit and nestle in lamps of gold in the shade of the Throne. Then, when they experienced the sweetness of their food, drink, and rest, they asked, “Who will tell our brethren about us that we are alive in paradise provided with provision in order that they might not be disinterested in jihad (fighting in the cause of Allah) and recoil in war?” Allah the Almighty then said, “I shall tell them about you”, so He Glorified is He sent down the verses “And never think of those who have been killed in the cause of Allah as dead. Rather, they are alive with their Lord, receiving provision,” and what comes next.

We know that the word Al-bishr has the meaning of happiness that appears on a man’s face. So, when someone is happy, this happiness appears on his face, and it becomes radiant. That is why we call it Al-bisharah because it causes the face of the person who receives glad tidings to be radiant and smiling.

‘... And they receive good tidings about those [to be martyred] after them who have not yet joined them—that there will be no fear concerning them, and nor will they grieve.’ (Al-‘Imran: 170) This verse means that those believers who were not martyred yet shall fear nothing because they may be involved in a battle and gain martyrdom. So, Allah the Almighty conveys to the believers who are still alive, the message of their fellow brothers who gained martyrdom before them, that they shall not fear because they will be moved to another life which is better than that worldly life. He the Almighty says, ‘that there will be no fear concerning them, nor will they grieve.’

Allah the Almighty then says,

يَسۡتَبۡشِرُونَ بِنِعۡمَةٖ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِ وَفَضۡلٖ وَأَنَّ ٱللَّهَ لَا يُضِيعُ أَجۡرَ ٱلۡمُؤۡمِنِينَ ١٧١

[rejoicing] in God’s blessing and favour, and that God will not let the reward of the believers be lost [171]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 171)

Most surely, Allah the Almighty will not waste the reward of those believers who fought in His Cause. He the Almighty then says,

ٱلَّذِينَ ٱسْتَجَابُوا۟ لِلَّهِ وَٱلرَّسُولِ مِنۢ بَعْدِ مَآ أَصَابَهُمُ ٱلْقَرْحُ ۚ
لِلَّذِينَ أَحْسَنُوا۟ مِنْهُمْ وَٱتَّقَوْا۟ أَجْرٌ عَظِيمٌ ﴿١٧٢﴾

Those who responded to God and the Messenger after suffering defeat, who do good and remain conscious of God, will have a great reward [172] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 172)

If you contemplate the higher position prepared by Allah the Almighty for the believers, you will know that the misfortune that afflicted them in the battle of Uhud has reinforced belief in the spirits of the believers. That is why Allah the Almighty wanted not to overextend the period of grief upon them (the believers). Also, He Glorified is He did not want to overextend the period of happiness for the disbelievers who felt happy about the misfortune that afflicted the believers in their last battle. So, the situation was like this: Al-mushrikun (ones who associate partners with Allah in worship) were happy, while the (defeated) believers were sad. We have already explained that as long as they were Muslims, they had the right of Islam, but they were only punished in return for the mistake committed. That is why He the Almighty punished them with defeat in Uhud as a result of their disobedience. However, they are still the superior by virtue of the right of Islam. As a matter of fact, He the Almighty destined their defeat in order to cultivate them, test them and check the veracity of their belief. So, He the Almighty did not overextend the period of grief on the believers. Also, He Glorified is He did not overextend the period of happiness for the disbelievers. The Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him then came and ordered his announcer to call upon people, 'None shall come out with us except those who attended fighting with us.'

Then, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him came out with a number of fighters that was not more than the number of believers who had already attended battle with Prophet. He peace and blessings be upon him did so in order for the disbelievers not say that Muslims received additional support. So, those who came out to fight were the ones who remained with the Messenger of Allah in the battle of Uhud, with the exception of the martyred and those whose serious wounds prevented them from fighting. Therefore, the number of believing fighters then was even less than the number of those who attended the main battle. So, Allah the Almighty wants to show us that purification has produced its desired result.

Even though they (the believers) were in an unpleasant situation due to their defeat, they obeyed the order of the Messenger to come out to fight. Therefore, it seems that the call for coming out served as a means to rehabilitate the believers who had attended the battle so that they would not experience weakness, and the misfortune would not become humiliation chasing them all the time either. Rather, they must realise that the battle of Uhud had finished. Also, they must learn the lesson from this battle very well.

Once the announcer of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him conveyed the message of the Prophet to people to come out to fight, they all answered: No. No one was allowed to join the Muslim army except Jabir ibn ‘Abdullah whose father who had been martyred in Uhud, ordered him to stay to take care of his seven sisters. Jabir explained the matter to the Messenger of Allah who allowed him to join the army.

As we explained before, Allah the Almighty wanted the misfortune that afflicted Muslims in the battle of Uhud to reinforce their belief, and since belief had been reinforced, they were well prepared to receive the Orders of Allah. That is why they answered the call of the Messenger of Allah in the blink of an eye and came out to Hamra’ Al-Asad (a location eight miles away from Medina). Then, Allah the Almighty supported the Muslim army with those who cast fear in the hearts of the disbelievers. One of those soldiers sent by Allah the Almighty said to the army of the disbeliever, ‘Muhammad has come out with a large army to fight against you.’

We notice here that Allah the Almighty uses the phrase ‘Those [believers] who responded...,’ to refer to the difference between ‘those believers who responded’ and ‘those who disobeyed the order of the Messenger of Allah’ (the archers). He the Almighty says, ‘Those [believers] who responded to Allah and the Messenger after injury had struck them.’ (Al-‘Imran: 172)

This verse means that the believers responded to the order of the Messenger of Allah eventhough they were in pain and severely wounded. Even though all of them suffered the pain and fatigue from fighting, they responded to Allah and His Messenger. The word al-qarh means pain or wound. He the Almighty says, ‘... after injury had struck them. For those who did good among them and feared Allah is a great reward.’ (Al-‘Imran: 172) The verse means that they did a good deed by their swift response, thus they deserved a great reward because they had already been punished for the disobedience they committed. Allah the Almighty then says,

ٱلَّذِينَ قَالَ لَهُمُ ٱلنَّاسُ إِنَّ ٱلنَّاسَ قَدۡ جَمَعُواْ لَكُمۡ فَٱخۡشَوۡهُمۡ فَزَادَهُمۡ
إِيمَٰنٗا وَقَالُواْ حَسۡبُنَا ٱللَّهُ وَنِعۡمَ ٱلۡوَكِيلُ ١٧٣

Those whose faith only increased when people said, ‘Fear your enemy: they have amassed a great army against you,’ and who replied, ‘God is enough for us: He is the best protector’ [173] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 173)

The hypocrites did not suffice with deserting the Muslim army. They rather spread false rumours that the polytheists had recalled a new number of the disbelievers of Mecca to fight against the Muslims. They (the hypocrites) did so with the intention of casting fear in the hearts of the believers whose belief remained steadfast and did not budge. ‘Those to whom the people said: Surely men have gathered against you, therefore fear them...’ (Al-‘Imran: 173) When you find that Allah the Almighty using the word an-naas (people) in this context, you must know that those people are away from belief, so they will fight against ordinary people like them. It is true that in such a battle, those who will gain victory will be the ones who are more skilful and exert greater efforts. But in the case where believers fight against disbelievers, Allah the Almighty provides believers with His Support.

Some people say, ‘Satan may take the form of a big gathering to terrify the believers. We know that Satan belongs to the jinn who can see human beings whence humans cannot see them. Allah the Almighty gave them the ability to take any form they want. So, they can take the form of human beings, animals or whatever. But once they are represented in any form, they are governed under the laws of the form they are content with. So, if they take the form of humans, the laws of humans will be applicable to them. That is to say that if you shoot them or stab them with a dagger, they will die. As a matter of fact, this is what keeps us safe from their terror. That is why we find that Satan appears for a brief moment and then disappears for fear that the person before him may be fully aware of the fact that the form he is in, governs him, thus that person may throttle him. For this reason, he fears man and does not appear except for brief moments.

In addition, we may interpret the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Those to whom the people said: Surely men have gathered against you...' (Al-'Imran: 173) in light of the narration that some of the disbelievers spread rumours that Abu Sufyan had gathered his people once again (to fight against the Muslim army). The phrase jama'u (they gathered) indicates that the disbelievers recalled other fighters or that their gatherings had reorganised. Irrespective of such two meanings for this particular word, it is clear that the gatherings of the disbelievers went out in defeat because defeated armies do not flee from the battlefield in an organized way; rather, each solider fled as far as possible. It is also true that the defeated gatherings may reorganise themselves once again or even call other fighters. We should take into account that the style of the verse may offer all these explanations.

'Those to whom the people said: Surely men have gathered against you, therefore fear them...' (Al-'Imran: 173) In fact, such a saying (by the hypocrites) may even weaken believers, but they (the believers) did not pay attention to such sayings, thanks to the process of purification through which they had been. Therefore, it becomes clear that believers learnt the first lesson perfectly well; they learnt that disobedience to the Order of Allah, clearly manifested in the order of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him, causes them weakness. They also recognised that the firm adherence to the orders of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him brings about the power of Muslims, and that is why they paid no attention at all to that threat and said, 'Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector.' (Al-'Imran: 173) This verse means that the believers paid no attention at all to the number of the disbelievers. Besides, they (the believers) understood that their belief in Allah and His Messenger entailed that they must fight against the disbelievers’ army so that Allah punished them by the hands of the believers. In reality, this is viewed as a lesson to all fighters; that is, when a fighter is in battle, Allah will make firm his feet if he is a true believer. This is clearly shown in the battle of Badr when Allah the Almighty told the Messenger that he peace and blessings be upon him was not the one who cast fear in the hearts of the disbelievers, but it was Allah the Almighty the One Who did that. (al-Anfal: 17)

It becomes crystal clear now that Muslims became fully aware of the mistake they committed, thus they were purified and their belief was reinforced. This matter is manifested in the fact that some people tried to frighten them, but they could not. The only reply from them was ‘and they said: Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector; this clearly indicates that the Muslims were fully aware of the fact that it was the Power of Allah the Almighty that gave them victory. They also fully realised that Allah the Almighty is the One Who supports them and protects them from all the troops of the enemy; He Glorified is He is the most excellent Protector. The word Al-wakil means that when one is unable to do a particular act, he entrusts someone else to do it on his behalf. So, when we entrust Allah the Almighty to do acts we are unable to do, it means that He the Almighty is the most excellent Disposer of affairs. Allah Most Exalted tells us about the result of the believers’ reliance upon Him,

فَٱنقَلَبُواْ بِنِعۡمَةٖ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِ وَفَضۡلٖ لَّمۡ يَمۡسَسۡهُمۡ سُوٓءٞ
وَٱتَّبَعُواْ رِضۡوَٰنَ ٱللَّهِۗ وَٱللَّهُ ذُو فَضۡلٍ عَظِيمٍ ١٧٤ returned with grace and bounty from God; no harm befell them. They pursued God’s good pleasure. God’s favour is great indeed [174]

(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 174)

This verse indicates that He the Almighty gave believers victory by casting terror in the hearts of the disbelievers. The Muslims did not engage in fighting with the disbelievers. Allah the Almighty favoured believers by casting terror and fear in the hearts of their enemies. (al-Anfal: 12)

Allah the Most High then states His reward to the believers when they realised their mistake and entrusted their affairs to Him the Almighty. ‘So they returned with favor from Allah and (His) grace, no evil touched them and they followed the pleasure of Allah; and Allah is the Lord of mighty grace.’ (Al-‘Imran: 174)

All believers, who underwent such purification of Allah the Almighty must be fully aware of this experience. Also, they all must always pay attention to the experience gained from the battle of Uhud. In fact, it was one particular night that made a big difference; the group of believers spent that night in the Company of Allah before they came out to chase the army of disbelievers. Also, since they learnt the lesson of Uhud very well, they performed wonderful acts. That is because when they chased the disbelievers, they paid no attention at all to the psychological warfare waged against them by their enemies; on the contrary, they increased in faith and said, ‘Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector.’

So, they became unattached to their own selves, strength, power, and troops, and from everything else, but to say, ‘Allah is the most Sufficient for us, and He is the best Guardian for those who are unable to achieve their aims.’ Thus, the believers fully realised the most important matter; that is, all of them must remain in the Company of His Lord all the time. As a matter of fact, Companions of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and his family members have used the lessons learnt through this experience to solve a lot of their problems.

In fact, the saying of Allah the Almighty ‘Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector’ reminds us of Imam Ja‘far As-Sadiq, son of Imam Mohammad Al-Baaqir, son of Imam 'Ali Zayn Al-‘Abidin. Imam Ja‘far was one of the most knowledgeable scholars who are well-versed in the understanding of the Quran. Besides, he was one of the most skilful scholars in deducing its secrets. Imam Ja‘far perfectly understood the saying of Allah the Almighty ‘Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector.’ He expresses surprise at people who feel afraid of anything. As a matter of fact, man does not fear anything but what causes him discomfort and worry as well as what threatens his life and safety. This fear must have a particular reason. So, when a believer faces any fear, he must remember the saying of Allah the Almighty

'Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector.' That is because this statement benefited the entire Muslim army in the battle with the disbelievers. So, when the individual believer utters this statement, he regains his composure. His heart will harden as well, thus he will not flee in times of terror and fear.

Imam Ja'afar As-Sadiq also drives our attention to this statement so that we resort to it in times of distress. He says, 'I am surprised at those people who do not resort to the saying of Allah the Almighty "Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector at times of fear."' The Imam is surprised at those people who do not have recourse to that particular statement in times of fear. He Allah be pleased with him then tells us the reason behind his surprise and says, 'Because Allah the Almighty followed it with His saying, "So they returned with favour from Allah and (His) grace, no evil touched them..."' If you contemplate the statement of Ja'afar As-Sadiq, 'Because Allah the Almighty followed it with...', you will find that he read it with the eyes of a true believer. As a matter of fact, when the believer reads the Quran, he must take into account that he is hearing Allah the Almighty speaking to him. Imam Ja'afar said, "Because Allah the Almighty followed it with His saying, 'So they returned with favour from Allah and (His) grace, no evil touched them.'" That is why Allah the Almighty instructs us to be very attentive, while listening to the recitation of the verses of the Quran (al-A'raf: 204).

So, when the Quran is being recited, it is Allah the Almighty Who is speaking to you, thus it is not right to ignore Him Glorified is He. Therefore, the wonder cure for fear is to say firmly, 'Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector.' You are supposed to heartily say it, because in case you do so, Allah the Almighty will confer His Favour upon you and no evil will touch you. He Glorified is He says, 'So they returned with favour from Allah and (His) grace, no evil touched them...' O Muslims! Consider this grace and bounty; they are from Allah. Allah may confer His Favour and Bounty upon a person, but he may realise these favours of Allah too late. So, Allah the Almighty explains that His Favour in this situation is not accompanied by any evil. This actually represents the true meaning of favour. So, if one understands the value of Favours from Allah too late, he is mistaken. He the Almighty says, 'So they returned with favour from Allah and (His) grace, no evil touched them...' It was due to the valuable experience of Uhud that the believers followed the Pleasure of Allah.' In reality, the experiment had borne its fruits.

Imam Ja'afar As-Sadiq then proceeds to prescribe the treatment for the fear and worry that may afflict the human soul, which is to say, Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector. Furthermore, he adds, I am surprised at the person who is afflicted by sorrow and does not hasten to read the Saying of Allah the Almighty uttered by Prophet Yunus (Jonah) peace be upon him when he was in the stomach of the whale. (al-Anbiya': 87)

The word 'sorrow' refers to that kind of worry afflicting a man's soul. As a matter of fact, the reasons for this worry are unknown and complex. Besides, it causes one's chest to tighten, and that is why one may say, 'My chest is tight; I am tired, but I do not know why.' This clearly means that there are no obvious reasons for such tightness in your chest; however, it may be the result of particular actions and events you do not remember at the moment. This is known as ghamm (sorrow). So, when man hastens to read the saying of Allah the Almighty uttered by Prophet Yunus peace be upon him (al-Anbiya': 87), he is confessing his sins and saying, 'I was afflicted with this sorrow only because I deviated the sound approach.' Imam Ja'afar As-Sadiq tells us that when one utters this statement, Allah the Almighty will surely respond to him and deliver him from sorrow and distress. (al-Anbiya': 88)

It is known for certain that Prophet Yunus peace be upon him is the one who uttered this statement. In addition, when he peace be upon him said it, Allah the Almighty responded to him and delivered him from the sorrow that afflicted him.

However, answering the call of Yunus peace be upon him in this regard was not something just for him; rather, it pertains to all the believers who may say it. This means that Allah the Almighty opens the door widely to all the believers who utter this statement. Imam Ja'afar then added, I am really surprised at the person who is plotted against and he does not hasten to entrust all of his affairs to Allah the Almighty as clearly mentioned in the Quran. (Ghafir: 44) Imam Ja'afar continues, 'Whoever does so, Allah the Almighty will protect him for the evil of their schemes.'

The Arabic phrase mukir bihi (he is plotted against) means that a conspiracy has been secretly organised against him. That is because Al-makru (evil plotting) means that your enemy is plotting an evil act against you, while you are supporting the truth. In reality, this act is viewed as an evil plotted against uprightness. It goes without saying that this kind of plotting is nothing but evil. Nevertheless, there is another kind of plotting, which is the good one. In the Quran, Allah the Almighty tells that evil scheming will engulf none but its authors. (Fatir: 43)

Therefore, it becomes clear now that there is another kind of scheming which is not evil. The good scheming is achieved when an upright person secretly makes a plot against an evildoer. As a matter of fact, this is known as 'the good scheming,' for it implies fighting against evil. So, Allah the Almighty explained the matter to us, 'O Muslims! Be aware of that point, for if they waved conspiracies and plots against all mankind, they cannot do so against Allah the Almighty Who is All Knowing and the Creator'. In reality, if Allah plots against them, they will never be able to uncover His Plotting, for He Glorified is He is the best of planners. So, all of their plots are surely known to Allah the Almighty thus all are weak. As for the genuine plotting, there is no particular way to discover it.

Let us continue with the opinion of Imam Ja'afar As-Sadiq on the treatment of the human soul. He Allah be pleased with him continues, 'I am surprised at the person who wants to acquire the adornment of this worldly life and does not hasten to the saying of Allah the Almighty in (al-Kahf: 39).

Whoever says this statement, Allah the Almighty will provide him with great provision as clearly shown in the story of the 'owner of the garden.' (al-Kahf: 39-40) In reality, Imam Ja'afar As-Sadiq Allah be pleased with him deduced that particular point from the story of the 'owner of the garden' (al-Kahf: 39-40).

As a matter of fact, when one says, 'It is as Allah has pleased, there is no power save in Allah,' he will easily obtain the adornments of this worldly life because he has already detached himself from his own power, his strength and means and entrusted his affairs to Allah the Almighty Who is able to do anything.

So, the different trials that may afflict the human soul include fear, worry, evil scheming, and seeking the adornment of this worldly life, all of which have cures. Concerning our particular cure here, it has to do with the saying of Allah the Almighty ‘...and they said: Allah is sufficient for us and most excellent is the Protector. So they returned with favour from Allah and (His) grace, no evil touched them, and they followed the pleasure of Allah; and Allah is the Lord of mighty grace.’

‘Favour’ means that Allah the Almighty will confer His Favour according to your work, whereas ‘grace/bounty’” means that He the Almighty will increase His Favour. As a matter of fact, no evil touched the believers who chased the fighters of Quraysh. Hence, those believers acquired all what Allah the Almighty had granted them including His Favour, Grace and Pleasure. In truth, those believers became fully aware of the lesson they learnt (from the battle of Uhud), thus He the Almighty describes them, ‘and they followed the pleasure of Allah; and Allah is the Lord of mighty grace.’

The hypocrites attempted to prevent the believers from meeting the disbelievers of Quraysh, but Allah the Almighty wanted to uncover their conspiracy and reveal the reasons behind their position. That is why Allah the Almighty told the believers about what the hypcorites said to them, ‘... Surely men have gathered against you, therefore fear them...’ He the Almighty then tells the believers with the real position of the hypocrites, saying, ‘It is only the Shaitan that causes you to fear from his friends...’.

He the Almighty tells the believers about the actual situation of the hypocrites, saying,

إِنَّمَا ذَٰلِكُمُ ٱلشَّيْطَٰنُ يُخَوِّفُ أَوْلِيَآءَهُۥ فَلَا تَخَافُوهُمْ وَخَافُونِ إِن كُنتُم مُّؤْمِنِينَ (١٧٥)

It is Satan who urges you to fear his followers; do not fear them, but fear Me, if you are true believers [175]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 175)

This verse may mean that it is the call of Satan that causes you to fear from his allies. In reality, Satan may do so, while taking the form of a human being. Satan may also do so to a person who, in turn, does the same to other people.

When we read the verses of the Quran very carefully, we can certainly understand their meanings correctly. So, who are the allies of Satan? In this context, the allies of Satan may be either the disbelievers of Quraysh or the hypocrites, or even both of them. 'The allies of Satan are those who support his ideas. Thus, Allah the Almighty wants to tell us that it was only Satan who said, 'Surely men have gathered against you, therefore fear them...,' but this Satan frightens none but his allies. From the first while, we understand that the context supposes that Satan was to frighten his enemies and not his allies. But we are here observing that Satan sows dissensions by causing them to be afraid, so the question to be asked is: who are those to be frightened and who causes them to fear? By reason, Satan is supposed to cause his enemies to fear.

As a matter of fact, in our daily lives we say, 'I caused someone to fear someone else.' Thus, Satan tries to take control over the believers and to cause them to fear his allies from the disbelievers and hypocrites. In Arabic, we understand that prepositions may be omitted from certain sentences, while the meaning remains the same. This is clearly shown in the Quran.

In the light of this rule of the Arabic grammar, we may understand the saying of Allah the Almighty 'It is only the Satan that causes you to fear from his friends' to mean that Satan causes you to frighten his allies and this meaning is supported by the mode of recitation adopted by Ibn 'Abbas and Ibn Mas'ud, both recited this particular verse as 'It is only the Satan that causes you to frighten his friends.' But Allah the Almighty instructs the believers not to fear them, saying, '... But do not fear them.'

This clearly means that Satan wants to cause the believers to fear his allies (the hypocrites and disbelievers). Some other exegetes of the Quran interpret this part of the verse... yukhawwifu awliyaahu... or '... frightens his allies...' (Al-'Imran: 175) as meaning that Satan frightens his allies so that they would not take part in fighting, thus he told them that they would be killed in case they came out to fight against the believers, but this meaning is not correct because if it applied to the hypocrites who did not come out to fight with the Muslims, then how could it apply to the polytheists who had already come out to fight against the believers?! Along the same lines, we understand from the Saying of Allah the Almighty '... but do not fear them, and fear Me if you are believers...' (Al-'Imran: 175) that the allies of Satan are not the ones who are afraid, but they are the ones who cause others to fear. 'It is only Satan that causes you to fear from his friends, but do not fear them, and fear Me if you are believers.' (Al-'Imran: 175)

In this verse, Allah the Almighty asks the believers to draw the following comparison: Should they fear the allies of Satan? Or must they fear Allah the Almighty? It goes without saying that it is Allah the Almighty Who must be feared because He Glorified is He is the One Who is able to defeat the allies of Satan. He the Almighty then says,

وَلَا يَحْزُنكَ ٱلَّذِينَ يُسَٰرِعُونَ فِى ٱلْكُفْرِ ۚ إِنَّهُمْ لَن يَضُرُّوا۟ ٱللَّهَ شَيْـًٔا ۗ
يُرِيدُ ٱللَّهُ أَلَّا يَجْعَلَ لَهُمْ حَظًّا فِى ٱلْءَاخِرَةِ ۖ وَلَهُمْ عَذَابٌ عَظِيمٌ ﴿١٧٦﴾

[Prophet], do not be grieved by those who are quick to disbelieve. They will not harm God in the least; it is God's will that they will have no share in the Hereafter – a terrible torment awaits them [176] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 176)

In the first battle between the believers and the disbelievers (the battle of Badr), the hypocrites were concealed and hidden. But when it was the battle of Uhud, the first sign of their deceit appeared, thus they were nearer to disbelief than belief. However, after that they hastened to disbelief as if there was someone lashing them with a whip to do so.

In this verse, Allah the Almighty defines the parties of the battle, or the forces of the battle, or the battlefield, or the soldiers of the battle, thus He the Almighty instructs His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him, 'And do not be grieved, [O Muhammad], by those who hasten into disbelief.' We should notice that He Glorified is He did not say, 'They cannot harm you at all' because the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him and the companions were not a real part in the conflict; rather, the enmity of the disbelievers was against Allah the Almighty and that is why He Glorified is He says, '... Indeed, they will never harm Allah at all.' This indicates that the battle of disbelievers was with Allah the Almighty and not with the believers. Since the battle was with Allah the Almighty the believers were His Soldiers and the means with which He the Almighty chose to defeat the disbelievers.

This meaning is clearly shown in another verse of the Quran in which Allah the Almighty orders the believers to fight against the disbelievers, and He the Almighty will punish them by the hands of believers, disgrace them, give believers victory over them and heal the hearts of the believing people. (at-Tawba: 14)

So, if the battle was between the disbelievers and believers, He the Almighty would have said: 'And do not be grieved, [O Muhammad], by those who hasten into disbelief. Indeed, they will never harm you at all.' But the case is not like that. As a matter of fact, both disbelievers and hypocrites wanted to enter into a battle with Allah the Almighty in spite of the fact that there is no power that is able to do so. That is why Allah the Almighty provides the believers with more assurance so that they would be more steadfast in their belief. It is taken for granted that all humans—be they believers or disbelievers—are similar to each other in terms of creation. In addition, some of the believers may deviate from the way for a, while, thus when the battle is between humans fighting against each other, one of the two parties may gain victory by virtue of its power.

In order to give further assurance, He the Almighty took the battle against disbelief into another level. He the Almighty obviously states that He is the One Who stands against the disbelievers. But the most important thing in this regard is that believers must be in the Company of Allah the Almighty. The Messenger was saddened that some people hastened into disbelief. Thus, did not the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him know that his own responsibility is to convey the Message of Allah?! Of course, he peace and blessings be upon him knew that for certain, yet he was keen to make all people believe so that they could feel the sweetness of belief. In reality, it was this keenness that made him peace and blessings be upon him feel sad. That is to say that when he peace and blessings be upon him saw a person who did not believe, he wished that particular person believed so that he would taste the sweetness of belief. In truth, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him was kind and merciful to the believers, and even to all humanity. Allah the Almighty tells this fact in the Quran; He Glorified is He tells that the Messenger of Allah was not sent but as a mercy to mankind. This is proved by the fact that when he peace and blessings be upon him was asked to choose either to pardon the people of Mecca or to order the angel of mountains to destroy them, he chose to pardon them. It was narrated that Jibril (Gabriel) called upon the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him and said, 'Indeed, Allah the Exalted heard what your people said to you and the response they made to you. And He has sent you the angel in charge of the mountains to order him to do to them what you wish.' The Messenger of Allah then said, 'Then the angel of the mountains called me, greeted me and said, "O Muhammad, Allah listened to what your people had said to you. I am the angel of the mountains, and Allah has sent me to you so that you may give me your orders. (I will carry out your orders). If you wish I will bring together the two mountains that stand opposite to each other at the extremities of Mecca to crush them in between.' But the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him said, "'No, but I hope that Allah will bring out of their offspring people who worship Allah alone with no associates."'

As a matter of fact, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him was keen not only on the disbelievers of his time, but on the next generation as well. In fact, Allah the Almighty fulfilled the wish of His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him because it was from the progeny of those disbelievers that Islam was supported with heroes, brave soldiers, callers to Allah and martyrs. As such, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him, as shown clearly in the verses of the Quran, felt sadness when there were some people who did not taste the sweetness of belief. Allah the Almighty says in the Quran: 'Then maybe you will kill yourself with grief, sorrowing after them, if they do not believe in this announcement…' (al-Kahf: 6).

He the Almighty then affirms this fact in another position in the Quran where He says: 'Perhaps you will kill yourself with grief because they do not believe. If We please, We should send down upon them a sign from the heaven so that their necks would remain humbled…' (ash-Shu'ara': 3-4).

But He the Almighty does not want their necks; rather, He Glorified is He wants that hearts came freely to Him out of love. As a matter of fact, He Glorified is He is fully able to create human beings in such a way that forces them to obey Him the Almighty as it is the case with the angels. We know for certain that all creatures glorify His Praise. Therefore, the Quran clearly shows that the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him was very keen on people's belief so that all of them would taste the sweetness of meeting their Lord the Almighty following the methodology of Allah and following such laws that would make them happy and satisfy all their faculties. But when things turned out contrary to what the Messenger of Allah liked, Allah the Almighty ordered him not to feel sadness, 'And do not be grieved, [O Muhammad], by those who hasten into disbelief.'

This indicates clearly that Allah the Almighty wants to convey the following message to mankind, 'O people! Out of the Messenger's great love for you, he is saddened by your disobedience and thus I told him not to grieve.' Undoubtedly, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him is merciful to the entire ummah as shown in that particular verse of the Quran in which Allah the Almighty states clearly that Muhammad was not sent but a mercy to mankind. (al-Anbiya': 107)

It is sufficient here to consider his position on the Day of Resurrection when every ummah will go to seek the intercession of its own Prophet or Messenger, but they will not help. Afterwards, all of them will come to the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him who Allah the Almighty will honour by accepting his intercession to Him the Almighty to hasten judging people's deeds and holding them accountable for them. As a matter of fact, this (intercession) is a mercy to all mankind because during that time people will wish the situation to be over even if they are to be thrown in the fire.

We have already explained that Allah the Almighty knows for certain how His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him loves his ummah, and how he is merciful to his followers, thus Allah the Almighty wants to assure him that He Glorified is He will never expose the followers of Islam to anything that displeases Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him. At that point, a very important Hadith may be quoted. 'Abdullah ibn 'Amr ibn Al-'As Allah be pleased with him narrated that the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him recited the saying of Allah the Almighty in the chapter of Ibrahim, 'My Lord, indeed they have led astray many among the people. So whoever follows me - then he is of me; and whoever disobeys me—indeed, You are [yet] Forgiving and Merciful.' He peace and blessings be upon him then recited the saying of Allah on 'Isa (Jesus) peace be upon him, 'If You should punish them−indeed they are Your servants; but if You forgive them indeed, it is You who is the Exalted in Might, the Wise.' Then he raised up his hands and said, 'O Allah! My ummah, my ummah,' and wept; Allah the Exalted said, 'O Jibril (Gabriel)! Go to Muhammad and ask him: "What makes you weep?" So Jibril came to him and asked him (the reason of his weeping), and the Messenger of Allah informed him what he had said (though Allah knew it well). Upon this Allah said, 'Jibril, go to Muhammad and say, "Verily, We will please you with regard to your ummah and will never displease you."'

There is yet another situation for the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him, which obviously indicates his infinite mercy towards his followers. After the revelation had come back to him peace and blessings be upon him at the very beginning of the mission, Allah the Almighty sent down the following verse, 'And your Lord is going to give you, and you will be satisfied.'

Concerning this verse, Imam 'Ali Allah be pleased with him is narrated to have said to the people of Iraq, 'You say that the most important verse in the Book of Allah is "Say, 'O My servants who have transgressed against themselves [by sinning], do not despair of the mercy of Allah. Indeed, Allah forgives all sins. Indeed, it is He who is the Forgiving, the Merciful.'" They said, 'Indeed we do.' The Imam then replied, 'But we−the members of the family of the Prophet−believe that the most important verse in the Book of Allah is His saying, "And your Lord is going to give you, and you will be satisfied."' Hence, it is narrated that when this verse was sent down, the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him said, 'In that case, I will not be satisfied, while any of my ummah is in the fire'.

Along the same line, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him is related to have said, 'There is, for every apostle, a prayer which is granted, but every prophet showed haste in his prayer. I have, however, reserved my prayer for the intercession of my ummah on the Day of Resurrection, and it would be granted, if Allah so willed, in case of everyone amongst my ummah provided he dies without associating anything with Allah.'(1) Now we can see how the members of the ummah of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him were at the forefront of his sentiments.

So, the saying of Allah the Almighty 'And do not be grieved, [O Muhammad], by those who hasten into disbelief' is a clarification from Allah the Almighty to His Messenger; he peace and blessings be upon him performed his role properly, and he was not to be blamed for the disbelievers' haste into disbelief. He the Almighty then adds, '... Indeed, they will never harm Allah at all.' We should notice that He the Almighty did not say, 'They will not harm you (O Muhammad), nor will they harm the believers; rather, He Glorified is He declared that the war of disbelief is with Him the Almighty and the All-Omnipotent. By this statement, He the Almighty wants to reassure the believers.

In addition, He the Almighty does not want to give any share in the Hereafter to those who hasten into disbelief, thus He the Almighty says, '...Allah intends that He should give them no share in the Hereafter, and for them is a great punishment.' (Al-'Imran: 176) In truth, since this is the Will of Allah the Almighty can those who hasten into disbelief prevent the Will of their Lord?! No, they cannot.

Indeed, He the Almighty wants His Sunnah to reach them (the disbelievers), and it is known for certain that He Glorified is He punishes whoever disobeys His Sunnah because He Glorified is He commanded Al-mukallafin (people obligated by law to discharge a legal duty) to apply the Sunnah He legislated for them.

In Arabic grammar, we should differentiate between lam al-'aqibat (an Arabic preposition) which is followed by a result different from that intended by man, and lam al-iradat wa al-t'alil (an Arabic preposition) which is followed by a result that is in line with that intended by man. We can give the following example for the latter when we say: 'The student studied his lessons to succeed.' This preposition is rendered by "to" in this example where the main reason behind the process of studying is to achieve success. Concerning the first kind of lam, which is lam al-'aqibat, we can offer the following example of a father who says to his son, 'I have pampered you, so you failed in your final exam.' This preposition is rendered by 'so' in this example. Hence the uses of those kinds of lam are totally different.

(1) [Muslim, Sahih]

Did the father pamper his son so that he failed? No, this did not happen. But the result of his son's exam was opposite to his own will because of a greater power. For further clarification note when Allah the Almighty tells us in the Quran, 'We inspired the mother of Moses, saying, "Suckle him, and then, when you fear for his safety, put him in the river: do not be afraid, and do not grieve, for We shall return him to you and make him one of the messengers."' (al-Qasas: 7)

We must pay attention to the Order of Allah the Almighty to the mother of Moses to cast him into the river. If an ordinary man said to a mother: 'If you fear for your son, throw him into the sea,' she would have never believed him. But the mother of Moses realised that what she received was a revelation from Allah, which could not be interrupted by Satan or any human thoughts. Therefore, the Inspiration of Allah is crystal clear in the verse where Allah tells explicitly that He Glorified is He inspired her. Since it was Allah the Almighty Who inspired her, no satanic incitement could come through, and that was why she carried out His the Almighty Order. Then He the Almighty assured her and asked her not to fear or grieve, for He the Almighty would give him back to her and make him from the Messengers.

Thus, He Glorified is He drives the attention of the mother of Moses that He would give him back to her, not because she loved him very much, but because He the Almighty would assign him to a particular mission. Speaking about the act of inspiration to the mother of Moses, He the Almighty says in another verse in the Quran, 'Saying: Put him into a chest, then cast it down into the river, then the river shall throw him on the shore; there shall take him up one who is an enemy to Me and enemy to him, and I cast down upon you love from Me, and that you might be brought up before My eyes...' (Ta Ha: 38-39).

Here, He the Almighty describes the moment when she fulfilled the task that she had been inspired to do. So, this description is different from the previous one which described the preparation for the task. In truth, when Allah the Almighty asked her to cast him into the river, it gave indication of the stage of preparation. Then, when it was the time to carry out the mission, He Glorified is He informed Moses of the inspiration He gave to his mother. This is a series of events that show that the action had taken place at the time when the soldiers of Pharaoh were taking away the children of the Israelites to kill them. He the Almighty wants to show us that He has countless soldiers, to the extent that the inanimate items understood the divine order and protected Moses. So, the word iqdhifihi (cast him) indicates that the matter took place swiftly. Moreover, when the river received the Order from Allah to throw Moses to the bank, it had to carry out the Order. Therefore, these are divine Commands issued to a creature that never disobeys Allah.

But how did Allah issue His Order to His enemy? Indeed, He Glorified is He casts them in the mind of Pharaoh to carry out His Will. So, the wife of Pharaoh asked him not to kill him because he would be a refreshment of the eye to both of them, or they could even take him as a son. (al-Qasas: 9) Hence, Allah's Command came in the form of a notion, and the family of Pharaoh took the child in, not in order to become the refreshment of the eye to the wife of Pharaoh, but to execute something willed by Allah.

When they took him in, did they think that Moses would be an enemy to them or a source of joy?! Here, lam al-'aqibah which is crystal clear in the saying of Allah the Almighty 'to be an enemy and grief for them.' As a matter of fact, man may want something, but the Ultimate Will of Allah wants something else.

When a person plans to do something for a certain purpose, the Unchallenged Power of Allah the Almighty may want it for another purpose, to the effect that He the Almighty may be the One Who inspired him to do that particular act. The reason why the family of Pharaoh took the child in is the best example for this. Pharaoh wanted the boy to be a refreshment of his eye, but Allah the Almighty wanted him to be the enemy of Pharaoh. This example shows us the big difference between lam al-'aqibah and lam al-i'radah wa al-ta'lil. When we see events like these, we cannot say: 'This is the Will of Allah;' rather, we should say: 'The result of their actions was not what they had planned for.' Allah the Almighty then says,

إِنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ ٱشۡتَرَوُاْ ٱلۡكُفۡرَ بِٱلۡإِيمَٰنِ لَن يَضُرُّواْ ٱللَّهَ شَيۡـٔٗا وَلَهُمۡ عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٞ ﴿١٧٧﴾

Those who sell their faith for disbelief will not harm
God in any way; agonizing torment awaits them [177]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 177)

Indeed, they could not harm the Messenger and his companions because they were in Allah's Company, and nor could they harm Allah the Almighty. This verse is viewed as assurance to the believers because Allah the Almighty tells them, ʿO you who faithfully believe in Me and trust in Muhammad! The battle with disbelief is not between the believers and the disbelievers; rather, it is a battle between your Lord and those disbelievers.' Undoubtedly, this verse provides the believers with further assurance.

ʿIndeed, those who purchase disbelief [in exchange] for faith...,' the word Ishtiraa' (purchase) indicates the existence of a transaction which, in turn, entails the existence of a ʿpriceʿ and a ʿcommodity'. The ʿprice' here is the belief, as indicated by the Arabic preposition ʿ*bi*' which has to do with the item left, whereas ʿthe commodity' here refers to disbelief, for it refers to what is to be taken. So, did they buy disbelief in return for belief? And does this mean that they were previously believers? Yes, they were previously believers, but their belief was that old one upon which Allah the Almighty created them in the very beginning, before they came to life.

In the Quran, Allah the Almighty says that He Glorified is He took from the children of Adam—from their loins—their descendants and made them testify of themselves that Allah is their Lord (al-A'raf: 172).

We can also say that by virtue of the human soul's ability to choose, they (the disbelievers) preferred disbelief to belief. That is to say that they took disbelief instead of belief. This replacement of belief for disbelief is crystal clear because the preposition bi, as I said before, is followed by the item to be left. They had already abandoned the intrinsic belief upon which they were created, and which is shown clearly in the Hadith of the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him where he states, ʿEvery child is born with a true faith (i.e. to worship none but Allah Alone); his parents then make him a Jew, or a Christian or a Zoroastrian.'

They slunk away from belief and paid it as a price for disbelief. So, when one of them embraced disbelief, he has taken it in place of belief, and yet they cannot harm Allah at all. Moreover, He the Almighty prepared for them a painful punishment. But why did He do so? Because if we suppose that the entire world became believers, this would still not benefit Allah the Almighty in anyway.

It is narrated in a Qudsi Hadith that Allah the Almighty says, 'O My servants, I have forbidden oppression for Myself and have made it forbidden amongst you, so do not oppress one another. O My servants, all of you are astray except for those I have guided, so seek guidance of Me and I shall guide you, O My servants, all of you are hungry except for those I have fed, so seek food of Me and I shall feed you. O My servants, all of you are naked except for those I have clothed, so seek clothing of Me and I shall clothe you. O My servants, you sin by night and by day, and I forgive all sins, so seek forgiveness of Me and I shall forgive you. O My servants, you will not attain harming Me so as to harm Me, and will not attain benefitting Me so as to benefit Me. O My servants, were the first of you and the last of you, the human of you and the jinn of you to be as pious as the most pious heart of any one man of you, that would not increase My kingdom in anything. O My servants, were the first of you and the last of you, the human of you and the jinn of you to be as wicked as the most wicked heart of any one man of you, that would not decrease My kingdom in anything. O My servants, were the first of you and the last of you, the human of you and the jinn of you to rise up in one place and make a request of Me, and were I to give everyone what he requested, that would not decrease what I have, any more that a needle decreases the sea if put into it. O My servants, it is but your deeds that I reckon up for you and then recompense you for, so let him who finds good, praise Allah, and let him who finds other than that, blame no one but himself.'

Therefore, people's belief in Allah will never benefit Allah at all, nor does their disbelief harm Him the Almighty at all. That is because man has come into existence in this world and he does not add anything new to it. That is to say that man is the creation of Allah, whom Allah created from the elements, existed in His Universe. The Hadith then continues to indicate that Allah the Almighty needs no time at all to do whatever He wants; rather, He the Almighty says to anything, '"Be!" and it is.'

The word 'Be' itself is the shortest form of commands – His commandments are too subtle and swift to be fully realised by any creature. But He the Almighty gives us the simplest form so that we, humans, can understand the matter. Hence, those who purchase disbelief in exchange for belief will never harm Allah the Almighty at all. In addition, He the Almighty prepared for them a painful punishment.

So, they will not be secure and safe from the punishment; rather, a painful punishment is prepared for them.

We sometimes notice that Allah the Almighty describes the abode of the disbelievers as having painful punishment; He the Almighty other times describes it as having great punishment. Furthermore, He the Almighty describes it as having humiliating punishment; why so? That is because punishment is of various kinds; eventhough the punishment may be very painful, the person being tortured may show patience for it; he feels awful pain, but they do not show it. At that point, the following poem may be quoted,

My endurance before those who hurt me shows them that I waver not before the misfortunes of fate! Endurance is a kind of resistance to reality. That is why Allah the Almighty tells us next that such people will have a humiliating punishment; that is, they will be afflicted by a humiliating and painful punishment, and none of them will be able to endure it. As a matter of fact, this kind of punishment does not stop at the limits of ordinary pain; it is rather, a great punishment in terms of degree and intensity. In addition, it is painful in terms of its nature, and is humiliating because it humiliates the human soul and removes its arrogance. So, when we see Allah the Almighty describing the abode of the disbelievers as having 'painful punishment,' 'great punishment' and 'humiliating punishment', it shows clearly that each of them indicates a different meaning.

Now, I would like to stop to shed more light on lam al-'aqibah because many people try to pose problems concerning it. As a matter of fact, those criticising the verses of the Quran search for these so-called weak points in the Quran, according to their own thinking. In truth, He the Almighty tells us that the disbelievers will ask Him to get them out of the fire so to obey Him all the time, but He Glorified is He will reject their request telling them that they had mocked the believers in the worldly life, but the believers are now in Paradise, while they are suffering great punishment. (al-Mu'minun: 107-110)

The disbelievers occupied themselves with mocking the believers; they used to do that either by scorning, mocking or even accusing them of backwardness or any different form of contempt, to the extent that they forgot the topic of belief. But what caused them to forget the Remembrance of Allah? Indeed, what caused them to forget was that they occupied themselves with mocking the people of belief all the time. The disbelievers spent all their time mocking the people of belief to the extent that they forgot that this universe has a Creator. Actually, this is what we call 'the consequence of actions'; it has nothing to do with the will or intention, for they did not mainly want to forget the Remembrance of Allah, but this happened eventually.

Indeed, Allah the Almighty will punish those disbelievers severely, greatly and humiliatingly. In truth, each description for these punishments in this context has been used to indicate a particular meaning; that is, they are prepared to include all different kinds of punishment. So, whoever suffers now with a light punishment will have a severe one, and so will the person who shows patience to the great punishment; he will be tortured with a humiliating punishment. Allah the Almighty then says,

وَلَا يَحْسَبَنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُوٓا۟ أَنَّمَا نُمْلِى لَهُمْ خَيْرٌ لِّأَنفُسِهِمْ ۚ إِنَّمَا
نُمْلِى لَهُمْ لِيَزْدَادُوٓا۟ إِثْمًا ۚ وَلَهُمْ عَذَابٌ مُّهِينٌ ﴿١٧٨﴾

The disbelievers should not think that it is better for them that We give them more time: when We give them more time they become more sinful – a shameful torment awaits them [178] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 178)

When we read the saying of Allah the Almighty 'And let not those who disbelieve ever think,' we at once realise that it indicates interdiction; but from what does Allah the Almighty prohibit the disbelievers? As a matter of fact, when a disbeliever survives at a battle with believers, he thinks that Allah the Almighty has left him because it is good for him. That is because he views his life as the most important thing in this world. Thus, as long as he is safe, this is the ultimate blessing according to him. But we say to such disbeliever that one's age is a particular period of time, and time encompasses all events. So, we cannot glorify time in itself, but rather, because of the events that take place within it; if the event to take place in a certain time is good, then that time will be good; but if the event to take place in a certain time is evil, then that time is evil. Since they are disbelievers, all of their actions and works are necessarily evil, not good, because they do not abide by the Guidance of Allah the Almighty. They may even be following a way which is the complete opposite of the Way of Allah. So, this is actually nothing but evil. Thus, He the Almighty does not extend their time to do them good; rather, He Glorified is He extends their time for them because, since they are disbelievers, they occupied their time with evil actions which are against His Guidance. In truth, every evil act has a defined punishment and torture. So, it becomes clear now that prolonging their life is nothing but bad for them.

When Allah the Almighty says, 'And let not those who disbelieve ever think that [because] We extend their time [of enjoyment] it is better for them,' we notice that the verb yahsabanna (think) is in the present tense, and its past form is hasiba (thought). In truth, the past form was used in another position in the Quran, where Allah the Almighty wonders about those people who though their utterance of belief would make them safe from tests. (al-'Ankabut: 2)

So, hasiba is the past form of the verb, while yahsabu is the present form. The same verb, with different vowels (hasaba/yahsibu), means to count the numbers.

As for the forms hasiba/yahsabu, they indicate the meaning of 'thinking', which, as we know, is a matter of conjecture. So, Allah the Almighty tells them that they were wrong when they thought that the continuation of their life was something good for them. As a matter of fact, their thinking was nothing but a matter of conjecture and guessing which do not lead to any certainty.

True is the fact that life is calculated in years. Moreover, it is to be seen in the light of actions; thus one's life cannot be judged as good or bad without looking at his actions. That is why we say: 'Life is judged as good or bad based on the actions done by the person. As for the actions done by a disbeliever, they are undoubtedly judged evil, even if he does what apparently seems to be good because he originally does these actions with the intention of opposing the Guidance of Allah.' So, we use the forms hasaba/yahsibu to indicate the counting of numbers; the form yahsibu is in the present tense to give the meaning of 'thinking', and yahsabu gives the meaning of 'to think.'

Allah the Almighty says: "... Innama numli lahum...," which means: "We grant them respite only that they may add to their sins." So the question to be asked here is: what is meant by numli'. It means to prolong time. That is why we find that Ibrahim (Abraham)'s father, as mentioned in the Quran, ordered him to leave him for a prolonged period of time. (Maryam: 46)

The father of Abraham, as shown clearly in this particular verse, orders him to leave him for a long period of time. This is the true and profound meaning of this verse of the Quran. So, this particular verse of Al-'Imran means that prolonging the periods of time of those disbelievers who were not killed in the battle with the believers is not something good for them, and nor should they think it is good for them. That is because Allah the Almighty does so with them 'so that they may increase in sin, and for them is a humiliating punishment.'

So, be careful, O believers, not to say that Allah has destined this in order to punish them. This is not right. That is because He the Almighty had laid down laws by means of which the affairs of the universe are run and these laws are undoubtedly to be applied upon those who do not abide by His Guidance. Whoever commits evil, Allah will punish him in return. Thefore, the Saying of Allah the Almighty 'We only extend it for them so that they may increase in sin...' means that they, the disbelievers, commit sins and evil all the time.

The word muhin in the saying of Allah the Almighty '... and for them is a humiliating punishment' is an entirely appropriate description for that kind of punishment. That is because the disbeliever, after the battle is over may feel proud and arrogant that no one beheaded him. So, the severe punishment in that particular case may not be sufficient because he may show endurance and patience with it. But when it is humiliating, this will be the most appropriate punishment for this situation. The One Who destined this is Allah the Almighty Who is fully aware of what fits every situation. Then, Allah says,

مَّا كَانَ ٱللَّهُ لِيَذَرَ ٱلۡمُؤۡمِنِينَ عَلَىٰ مَآ أَنتُمۡ عَلَيۡهِ حَتَّىٰ يَمِيزَ ٱلۡخَبِيثَ مِنَ
ٱلطَّيِّبِۗ وَمَا كَانَ ٱللَّهُ لِيُطۡلِعَكُمۡ عَلَى ٱلۡغَيۡبِ وَلَٰكِنَّ ٱللَّهَ يَجۡتَبِي مِن رُّسُلِهِۦ مَن
يَشَآءُۖ فَـَٔامِنُواْ بِٱللَّهِ وَرُسُلِهِۦۚ وَإِن تُؤۡمِنُواْ وَتَتَّقُواْ فَلَكُمۡ أَجۡرٌ عَظِيمٞ ﴿١٧٩﴾

Nor was it God's aim to leave you as you were, with no separation between the bad and the good. God would not show you [people] what is hidden; God chooses as His messengers whoever He will. So believe in God and His messengers: if you believe and stay mindful of God, you will have a great reward [179] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 179)

Upon hearing the saying of Allah ma kan, this clearly indicates that there is some sort of negation and denial; that is, there are some who deny this matter.

It is known that before the battle of Uhud, the hypocrites were intermingled with the believers. So, would Allah the Almighty leave the situation as such without revealing the hypocrites' real positions in terms of faith? No, He the Almighty did not accept this so that the hypocrites would no longer be able to cause harm to the believers. So, events must have come to reveal them. Hence, the battle of Uhud was meant to test those so-called believers, in order to separate those who are good from those who are evil, as shown clearly in the saying of Allah the Almighty where He Glorified is He states that the scum will pass away as a worthless thing, while that which benefits people will remain in the earth. (ar-Ra'd: 17) So, the occurrence of the battle of Uhud was essential.

As for the saying of Allah the Almighty 'On no account will Allah leave the believers...,' it means that He Glorified is He would in no way leave the believers in the condition they were in until He exposed the hypocrites for one reason or another, and so knowing about the hypocrites will not be confined only to Prophet Muhammad through the knowledge conveyed to him by Allah the Almighty. If Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, through the knowledge conveyed to him by Allah the Almighty informed the believers about the hypocrites, without the latter being actually tested, this experience would be viewed as a theoretical identification of hypocrisy from one direction. That is why Allah the Almighty wanted to expose the hypocrites by means of a real test. Therefore, they (the hypocrites) will not be able to object when they are called hypocrites. Also, their description of hypocrisy will not be a matter of telling a lie, thus the evidence for their hypocrisy will be concrete and convincing.

The hypocrites used to hasten to attend the first rows of the congregational prayers; they wanted to completely hide and conceal the matter of their hypocrisy, thus they were keen on performing such acts firmly adhered to by the believers. They (the hypocrites) were fully aware of the fact that the true believers hastened to attend the first rows of the congregational prayers, so they wanted to act like them. In the Quran, Allah the Almighty tells Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that if He Glorified is He willed, He would make him recognise them by their marks and by the tone of their speech. (Muhammad: 30) This means that if you think of their speech very carefully, you will be able to recognise them because they are merely hypocrites like all other hypocrites in the world. For example, when it is the time of the noon prayer, the true believer will say: 'Let us go pray', but the hypocrite will mock him and say: 'You can carry me on your wings to paradise on the Day of Resurrection!' As a matter of fact, such sentence refers to what Allah describes as lahn Al-qawl (or the tone of their speech). Another example is when a believer joins a gathering where there is a hypocrite, the latter will greet him with the following statement 'How are you doing Mr Sheikh?' This obviously means that he (the hypocrite) does not feel comfort with the existence of the believer, so he mocks him.

Such an act also falls under the category of the tone of the speech through which the affairs of the hypocrites are exposed. In reality, when the true and intelligent believer upon whom Allah the Almighty bestowed His Favour, undergoes such acts, his belief increased, and these acts served as a spur for him. That is because the true believer follows the Way and Guidance of Allah the Almighty thus he is able to control himself, whereas the hypocrite is unable to do so, and that is why he wants to misguide the believer to follow his path of hypocrisy. Hence, the believer must be fully aware of the fact that he will face such hypocrites who want to turn him back to disbelief; he will be confronted with those people who will mock him. Allah the Almighty tells us about this in the Quran when He Glorified is He talks about the guilty people who laugh and wink at the true believers whenever the latter pass by them. (al-Mutaffifin: 29-33)

The hypocrite or the disbeliever may say his family: 'Today, I saw a Sheikh, or clergyman, or religiously committed man and I mocked him and humiliated him.' By this, he wants to mock the believers among his corrupt followers, but Allah the Almighty exposes their hypocrisy to us in the Quran so that the believers will be assured and relieved from all the disasters afflicting them caused by the corrupt and the hypocrites.

In this regard, He the Almighty tells us that the believers, who will be observing, sitting on adorned couches, will laugh at the disbelievers on the Day of Resurrection. He the Almighty then tells us clearly that they (the disbelievers) truly deserve this punishment for the acts they used to do in the worldly life. (al-Mutaffifin: 34-36) So, He the Almighty will ask the believers on the Day of Resurrection, 'Have We adequately requited the disbelievers and hypocrites who mocked you in the worldly life?' The believer will then reply: 'Yes, O Lord of the Worlds, they have been requited and rewarded for their deeds fairly and equitably.' The hypocrites' and the disbelievers' sarcasm will undoubtedly come to an end within this worldly life, but that sarcasm of the Hereafter will never come to an end.

When we, the believers, think of the matter very carefully, we will realise that we are the prosperous, if Allah so wills. If they hypocrites were allowed to mix with the believers, while the believers knew nothing about them, remedy would be difficult. That is why Allah the Almighty tells Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that if He the Almighty willed, He would make him recognise them by their marks and by the tone of their speech. (Muhammad: 30)

Allah the Almighty did not stop at this point; rather, He Glorified is He revealed the reality of the hypocrites in a practical way so that none of them would say: 'I am not a hypocrite.' When Allah reveals and exposes the affairs of the hypocrites with a tangible, practical and ignominious event that clearly shows his hypocrisy, thus he is to be stigmatised as a hypocrite. As a matter of fact, Allah the Almighty will never leave those hypocrites, who spend their life practising the act of hypocrisy, relying on the fact that they apparently practice the rituals of Islam, without exposing their affairs. He Glorified is He will cause their hypocrisy to be exposed for a reason or another. As a consequence, the believers will recognise them and know their essence. That is because He the Almighty is the One Who says: 'On no account will Allah leave the believers in the condition which you are in until He separates the evil from the good...'

The word yazhhar means 'to leave' or 'to abandon.' Grammarians are fully aware of the fact that the following two verbs yazhharu and yada'u are never used by the Arabs in the past simple tense, thus they are used to indicate the present tense all the time.

In truth, Allah the Almighty would never leave the hypocrites intermingled and intermixed with the believers without revealing their affairs to the believers, and that is why He the Almighty separated those who are good from those who are evil.

So, He Glorified is He did not suffice with informing Prophet Muhammad about the affairs of those corrupt people; rather, He the Almighty exposed them with tangible evidence. Thus, He the Almighty says: '... nor is Allah going to make you acquainted with the unseen...' This means that if He the Almighty made the believers acquainted with the unseen so that they could recognize the hypocrites, the latter would have concealed their affairs from them. That is why He the Almighty wanted to separate the good from the evil based on tangible evidence and situations. As such, the hypocrite will himself admit his hypocrisy.

'... nor is Allah going to make you acquainted with the unseen, but Allah chooses of His apostles whom He pleases....' He the Almighty chooses whomever He will from among His Messengers to make him/them acquainted with some of the unseen so that the Messengers' trust in Allah increases due to the fact that He the Almighty never leaves them. This means that He the Almighty told Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him about the marks of the hypocrites so that he would be fully assured that He the Almighty has never abandoned him.

Allah's Mercy decrees that the unseen will never be revealed to all the believers because this may render corrupt the affairs of so many laws in the universe. So, if we imagine that Allah the Almighty informed man about the unseen matters of his life, including one thousand happy events and just one which is tragic, his continuous thinking of this one tragic event, which may occur twenty years later, will corrupt his happiness.

Also, if a person wants to be acquainted with the unseen matters of a particular person, will he be content with allowing others to know about his unseen? So, why do you want to be acquainted with the unseen matters of other people? Will any of us feel content when others know about his unseen? The answer is no. So, the concealment of information from people and involving them in the unseen are viewed as a great blessing.

Despite this, some people are eager to know the unseen. Furthermore, we see some people who hasten to the charlatans and soothsayers, who falsely claim that they are the Patrons of Allah, in order to know some of the unseen. At this point, we say that the true skill of a soothsayer is not to tell you what will happen to you in the future; rather, it is to inform you that an evil will afflict you and that he will protect you from it. In reality, none can fend off Allah's Fate, thus we are supposed to abandon thinking of the future and wait until it really occurs so that we will never live in sadness before the occurrence of that evil. So, the saying of Allah the Almighty '... nor is Allah going to make you acquainted with the unseen...' refers to one of Allah's Laws through which the affairs of the universe are run perfectly.

Everyone has their ups and downs. Also, a person may go through a time of weakness in some regard. If other people knew someone's point of weakness and vice-versa, everyone would see each other as weak. It is due to the favour of Allah the Almighty that He Glorified is He concealed the unseen from people; He the Almighty grants someone a strength we do not know and so on. Thus, the affairs of life run normally in a way that pleases Allah the Almighty '...nor is Allah going to make you acquainted with the unseen, but Allah chooses of His apostles whom He pleases...' This verse means that He the Almighty selects whoever He wants from among the Messengers; that is, He selects some of them and not all of them to make them acquainted with the unseen. Consequently, those Messengers will feel assured that Allah the Almighty supports them, for He Glorified is He did not send them to leave them alone; that is not the point. Rather, they are supported by Him the Almighty all the time, and that is why He makes them acquainted of the unseen. We have already explained that the unseen is of several types; that is, the absolute unseen, which is unknown to others. Yet, there is another kind of the unseen, which is unknown to you, whereas others may know about it. As a matter of fact, this is not considered as unseen.

A case in point is when one's wallet is stolen; the thief is unknown, and the place to which the wallet is taken is also unknown by its owner. But the person who steals it surely knows its whereabouts. So, the act is unknown to the person who has been stolen, but meanwhile it is known by the thief; therefore, it is not part of the absolute unseen. This is how charlatans are able to exploit naive people. Some corrupt charlatans may be in contact with the jinn or demons and thus they may tell the person who has been stolen about the stolen item. In reality, those charlatans are not acquainted with the unseen because none knows the absolute unseen except Allah the Almighty alone.

Another striking example is the many discoveries made by mankind in the universe. As a matter of fact, these discoveries were secrets before Allah the Almighty unveiled them to people to the extent that they may also be made at the hands of the disbelievers themselves. So, did anyone claim that they knew the unseen? The answer is definitely no. That is because there were reasons that led to this unseen. All these people did was exerting their utmost efforts to unveil Allah's Secrets in the universe. In doing so, Allah the Almighty guided them to depend fully on the means He made available in the universe. Moreover, it is noteworthy to mention that He the Almighty gives people, be they believers or disbelievers, the ability to understand how these laws act in the universe. So, as long as they make use of these divine laws, He the Almighty grants them reward (the ability to unveil the secrets of the universe) in return. For more clarification, I will offer the following example to make the topic very clear:

When a teacher gives a geometry problem to one of his students, can we claim that the solution the student will provide for that problem falls under the category of the unseen? The answer is no. That is because the student knows how to provide answers for geometry problems. He makes use of the problem's givens and rules and thus he knows the answer. So, as long as the student arrives at the solution to a problem by applying certain principles, this is not the knowledge of the unseen. For this reason, we must be fully aware of the fact that the absolute unseen is something that is unknown to everyone. As a matter of fact, no one knows this absolute unseen except Allah the Almighty Who may, as clearly shown in the Quran, make some of His Messengers acquainted with it.

In the Quran, Allah Glorified is He states that He will not allow any of His Creatures to know the unseen, with the exception of those Messengers whom He the Almighty allows to be acquainted with it. (al-Jinn: 26-27)

As for the secrets of the universe, some people knew nothing about them until they have been unveiled, we cannot declare ‘the act of unveiling them’ as knowing about the unseen. This point is previously explained in the commentary I made for the Verse of the Throne (Ayat Al-Kursi) in which Allah the Almighty affirms the following points: He the Almighty Alone is the One Who deserves to be worshiped; He, the Ever-living, the Self-Subsisting, is not overtaken by a slumber or sleep; He the Almighty owns all what is in the heavens and all what is in the earth; none can intercede with Him but by His permission; He the Almighty knows for certain what is before the creatures and what is behind them, while they cannot encompass anything of His Knowledge, except to whom He wills; His Throne extends over the heavens and the earth and He Glorified is He feels no tiredness in their preservation; and He is the Most High, the Most Great. (al-Baqara: 255)

This verse clearly indicates that Allah the Almighty may allow people to attain knowledge by His Permission. As a matter of fact, He the Almighty is the One Who allows the creation of secrets, exactly like the creation of people’s different descendants in a particular period of time.

In reality, every secret in the universe will be uncovered at a particular period of time predestined by Allah the Almighty. So, if mankind make use of the premises in their pursuit of unveiling a particular secret and the unveiling coincides with its birth, they will be viewed as the ones who unveiled it. But if the (predestined) time of unveiling this particular secret has not come yet, it would not be uncovered. However, in case the time of uncovering the secret already comes and there is no scientist to make use of the premises and reasons in revealing it, Allah the Almighty will cause a particular human to unveil it by means of chance. As such, it may be said that this secret has been unveiled by chance.

As a matter of fact, a lot of Allah's Secrets in the universe, which encompass the new discoveries, have been unveiled by chance. This is crystal clear in the fact that eventhough scientists may be planning to make a particular discovery, Allah the Almighty may cause them to make a completely different one. It becomes clear now that it is not a must for all discoveries to be the result of certain premises; rather, scientists may plan to make a particular discovery, but Allah the Almighty enable them to make a completely different one. That is because the predestined time for the unveiling of these secrets have come and people did not occupy themselves by uncovering them. It is due to Allah's Favour that He the Almighty enabled His creatures to uncover these secrets even without premises or expectations.

Continuing His address to the believers, Allah the Almighty says, '...therefore believe in Allah and His apostles; and if you believe and guard (against evil), then you shall have a great reward.'

It is at this point that a very important question may be asked: When Allah the Almighty addresses a particular people using a particular description, and then He Glorified is He asks them to fulfil this description, what does this truly mean? A case in point is that verse in which Allah the Almighty says: 'O you who believe! Believe...' (an-Nisa': 136).

They are truly believers and Allah the Almighty has already called them using this particular description. This means that He the Almighty asks them to firmly adhere to the characteristics of belief over the passage of time. This is based on the fact that belief requires certainty in all the matters pertaining to it in a particular period of time. It is taken for granted that time never stops, thus different periods of time follow one another. This means that the present, which was previously future, will change into past. It clearly means that the future turns into present which, in turn, changes into past. Time is a condition that never stops at any point; so it is changeable. Place, on the other hand, is something which is unchangeable. Therefore, Allah the Almighty wants to say, 'You were a true believer (in the past) before this address was delivered to you, and you must also remain a true believer in the life to come.

So, this style indicates that Allah the Almighty asks the believers to keep up their belief. He Glorified is He then concludes the verse with His saying, "...and if you believe and guard (against evil), then you shall have a great reward." Let us imagine how great the Favour of Allah the Almighty is; eventhough the believer's obedience benefits him alone, He the Almighty rewards him, as well. As such, when Allah the Almighty lays down a particular law, He Glorified is He does so for the good of people. As well, He is going to reward them for abiding by it. Allah the Almighty states clearly that whoever adheres to His Guidance, he will not go astray nor be unhappy; and whoever turns away from His Guidance, his life will be straightened and he will be raised blind on the Day of Resurrection. (Ta Ha: 123-124)

In reality, the person who follows the Way of Allah the Almighty will get the benefit of his obedience at once. In addition, He Glorified is He increases His Favour by rewarding him for this obedience. This is actually a pure Favour conferred by Him the Almighty. We have previously explained that prolonging the life of the disbelievers and the hypocrites is not something good for them. Therefore, people must consider events and times in the light of their consequences, impacts, and results.

He the Almighty then says:

وَلَا يَحْسَبَنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ يَبْخَلُونَ بِمَآ ءَاتَىٰهُمُ ٱللَّهُ مِن فَضْلِهِۦ هُوَ خَيْرًا لَّهُم ۖ بَلْ
هُوَ شَرٌّ لَّهُمْ ۖ سَيُطَوَّقُونَ مَا بَخِلُوا۟ بِهِۦ يَوْمَ ٱلْقِيَٰمَةِ ۗ وَلِلَّهِ مِيرَٰثُ
ٱلسَّمَٰوَٰتِ وَٱلْأَرْضِ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ بِمَا تَعْمَلُونَ خَبِيرٌ ﴿١٨٠﴾

Those who are miserly with what God has granted them out of His grace should not think that it is good for them; on the contrary, it is bad for them. Whatever they meanly withhold will be hung around their necks on the Day of Resurrection. It is God who will inherit the heavens and earth: God is well aware of everything you do [180] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 180)

We said previously that some of the hypocrites and disbelievers thought that prolonging their life spans is something good for them, however, this particular verse tells us about another kind of people who thought that the property they acquire is good for them; that is, the bigger the size of their properties, the more they rejoice. That is why He the Almighty says: ‘Those who are miserly with what Allah has granted them out of His grace should not think...’ This means that they got their property by Allah’s Favour, for they were born owning nothing at all. In addition, none of us has ever seen a burial shroud or a newborn baby’s diaper with pockets. Indeed, man comes to life with nothing at all and leaves it with nothing either. All the provision that comes to man is due to Allah’s Favour. In truth, there is not one man who creates things by which he is provided sustenance. However, one may make use of the existing provision to get another one by developing the means and reasons. As a matter of fact, man has a role to perform in the process of getting his provision. He may farm the land, but he has no ability to create the land himself, and neither does he have the ability to create the seeds nor the power to bring forth water. So, we can conclude that Allah is the Creator of the land to be farmed; the seeds are (exist) due to His Favour and water is from His the Almighty Provision. Man’s movement is even seen as a favour from Allah Glorified is He.

I swear by Allah that man does not know how many muscles move in his body when he picks his hoe to farm the land; does man know how many muscles move in his body when he picks the hoe up? And does he know how many muscles move when he puts it down?! Even when he breaks up the surface of the earth with his hoe, He tills the land of Allah. When a man wants to have a hoe, he has to go to the blacksmith to make it for him, but does this man ask himself ‘where does this iron come from?’ In the Quran, Allah the Almighty tells us the answer: ‘He Glorified is He sent down iron wherein is great military might and benefits for the people.’(al-Hadid: 25)

So, what do you create or produce (O mankind!)? You create nothing from nothing at all; rather, you make use of the movement granted to you by Allah the Almighty to change the raw materials into provision. So, everything (in this universe) is due to Allah’s Favour. You (o mankind) is a speculator in this universe of Allah. Who created the mind you use with which to think? It was Allah. And who created your body parts that carry out the orders of the mind? It was Allah. Thus, your body parts, which are created, break the surface of the earth, which is also created, with a tool (the hoe) and then you irrigate it with that water that comes down from the sky; so, what is the role you are due to perform in this regard, O mankind? Indeed, you must know that you have nothing to do with all of this; you are only a speculator in the Land of Allah. Therefore, you (o man) must perform the role of speculation commissioned to you.

In reality, He the Almighty requires nothing but a small amount of the crops and produce of the land. If the land is only watered by the rain falling down from the sky, then one-tenth of its produce is due; but in case it is artificially irrigated, then one-twentieth is due. The farmer ploughs the land every day and irrigates it once per two weeks. As for the trader, he is in need of continuous work. That is why the amount of zakat due upon him is estimated at 2.5%. Indeed, the more a person works, the less Allah the Almighty is the portion of zakat due upon him. This process is opposite to the nature of mankind; that is, the more a person works, the more they take from him!

In truth, Allah the Almighty wants the universe to be in continuous movement. That is because people get benefit from such movement. It is at this point that a very important question comes into existence, where to does the zakat taken from you go? It is given to your fellow Muslim brothers. So, as long as He the Almighty gives a portion from the produce of your work to your fellow Muslim brothers, this makes you feel assured and safe that, in case you become unable to earn your living, others will give you. This is an assurance against the vicissitudes with which Allah might afflict you. So, in case you are afflicted with a calamity, others will give a hand to you. Consequently, all the members of society shall help and support one another. This process of supporting one another clearly indicates “social security” in its highest meaning. So, all of this is due to Allah’s Favour.

He the Almighty says: ‘Those who are miserly with what Allah has granted them out of His grace should not think that it is good for them; on the contrary, it is bad for them...’ This verse indicates that misers think that miserliness is something good fort them as it enables them to hoard large amounts of money, but this is not true because Allah the Almighty tells that ‘Whatever they meanly withhold will be hung around their necks on the Day of Resurrection...'. This means that Allah the Almighty will change their money into a collar which will be hung around their necks. The moment the people see the collar hung around the neck of the miser, they will say: 'That person rejected to pay out Allah's Share in his property.'

Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him vividly depicts this topic when he informs us that whoever rejects to pay out Allah's Portion in his wealth, the wealth will turn into a white-headed serpent with a sac of venom in each cheek, which will seek him out until it encircles his head. Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: 'Anyone whom Allah has given wealth, but he does not pay its zakat, then, on the Day of Resurrection, his wealth will be presented to him in the shape of a bald-headed venomous male snake with two poisonous glands in its mouth, and it will encircle itself round his neck and bite him over his cheeks and say, "I am your wealth; I am your treasure."' Messenger Muhammad then recited the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Those who are miserly with what Allah has granted them out of His grace should not think...' Thus, the more the miser accumulates wealth and rejects to pay out zakat, the more the collar will tightly encircle his neck on the Day of Resurrection.

'It is Allah who will inherit the heavens and earth: Allah is well aware of everything you do.' It is true that He the Almighty will inherit the heavens and the earth and then He Glorified is He will put them wherever He wants. All what is in the universe is owned by Him the Almighty; thus He Glorified is He distributes it as He wills. Our belief entails that we must not delay the giving of charity until the soul reaches the throat. In this regard, Abu Hurayrah Allah be pleased with him narrated: 'A man came to Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and said: "O Messenger of Allah, which kind of charity is best?" Messenger Muhammad then said: "Giving charity (in a state when you are) healthy and close-fisted, haunted by the fear of poverty, and still hoping to live (as rich). And you must not defer charity (to the time) when you are about to die, and would then say: "This is for so and so, and this for so and so." That is because when the soul reaches the throat, man owns no wealth"'.

As for the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Allah is well aware of everything you do;' it refers to something which makes the heart of man tremble with fear and horror. Man may deceive others; for example, there are some people who evade taxes. In doing so, they may falsely keep two records; one for the exact amounts of money they gain, while the other is for keeping false information about their loss. This man who owns money and evades taxes shall know that Allah the Almighty is well aware of everything he does. He the Almighty then says:

لَّقَدْ سَمِعَ ٱللَّهُ قَوْلَ ٱلَّذِينَ قَالُوٓا۟ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ فَقِيرٌ وَنَحْنُ أَغْنِيَآءُ ۘ سَنَكْتُبُ مَا قَالُوا۟
وَقَتْلَهُمُ ٱلْأَنۢبِيَآءَ بِغَيْرِ حَقٍّ وَنَقُولُ ذُوقُوا۟ عَذَابَ ٱلْحَرِيقِ ﴿١٨١﴾

God has certainly heard the words of those who sneer, 'So God is poor, while we are rich'. We shall record everything they say, as well as their killing of prophets in defiance of all that is right, and We shall say to them, 'Taste the torment of the scorching fire [181] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 181)

As for the cause of the revelation of this verse, it is narrated that Sa'id ibn Jubayr narrated that Ibn 'Abbas Allah be pleased with them narrated that when the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Who is it that will offer of Allah a goodly gift, so He will multiply it to him manifold...' (al-Baqara: 245) was revealed down, the Jews said: 'O Muhammad! Your Lord is so needy that He asks His Creature to lend Him?' Thus, He Glorified is He revealed down the following verse 'Allah has certainly heard the saying of those who said: Surely Allah is poor and we are rich.'

The Jews experienced Islam in Medina. As we know, they used to brag and be proud of being the people of the Book and knowledge; they also used to be proud of being masters of economy, exactly as they do nowadays. People used to get everything they needed from the Jews. Furthermore, they used to build fortresses, which were well equipped with weapons, to show their power. But when Islam came, it deprived them from all these characteristics of leadership, but at the same time they enjoyed the same rights of Muslims including the protection of their property and life.

So, the question to be asked here is: Would Islam leave them (the Jews) enjoy the same rights of Muslims including safety, assurance, and the protection of their property and souls with nothing in return? That is why Islam obliged them to pay the tribute. As a matter of fact, it was inconceivable that Muslims paid out zakat, while the Jews, who were under the protection of Muslims, lived as such without paying for their protection. For this reason, Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him sent Abu Bakr to the place wherein the Jews used to receive knowledge. Ibn 'Abbas narrated that Abu Bakr entered into the place where the Jews used to receive knowledge. He saw them gathering around one of their scholars called Finhaas who was attended by another Jewish scholar called Ashia'. Abu Bakr then said to him: 'Woe to you, Finhaas! Fear Allah and surrender to Him, for I swear to Allah that you know that Muhammad is a true Messenger sent from Him the Almighty and he has been sent with the truth. As well, you found his characteristics in the Torah and the Gospels,' whereupon Finhaas replied, 'O Abu Bakr! By Allah, we are in no need for Allah, but He is in need for us. We (the Jews) do not beg to Him, but He begs to us. We need Him no more. If He was rich, He would not ask us for loans as your so-called Messenger claims. He prevents you from taking interest and meanwhile gives it to us! If He was rich, He would not give us such interest.' Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him became very angry and hit Finhaas severely on his face and said: 'By the One in Whose Hand my life is, I would cut off your head but for the covenant we made with you. So, prove us liars if you are truly faithful, O enemy of Allah!'

Then, Finhaas went to Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and said: 'O Muhammad! See how your companion hurt me.' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him then asked Abu Bakr, 'Why did you hurt him as such?' Abu Bakr replied, 'O Messenger of Allah! The enemy of Allah has said something very grievous about Allah the Almighty; he claimed that Allah is poor and that they are in no need of Him. So, when he said that, I hit his face.' But Finhaas denied the accusation of Abu Bakr and said: 'I said no such thing." Then, Allah the Almighty revealed down His Saying, 'Allah has certainly heard the saying of those who said: Surely Allah is poor and we are rich...' As a matter of fact, those Jews did not understand the great secret behind the divine order on offering up to Allah a goodly loan; an order shown clearly in (al-Hadid: 11).

In truth, this statement indicates that Allah the Almighty honours man's right of possession. But why does Allah the Almighty honour this particular right of man? That is because He the Almighty wants to spur the man who already works to exert more and more efforts in his work. Also, He Glorified is He wants to spur the person who does not work to start working. So, when He the Almighty asks man to pay out a portion of this money, He Glorified is He does not say to man: ‘Pay out (this portion from) what I gave you’; rather, He the Almighty says: ‘I really honour your toil, work, intellectual endeavour, body parts and energy, as well as all what you do. So, in case I ask you to pay out of a portion of the wealth I granted you, I will not say to you: ‘Pay out (this portion from) what I gave you;’ rather, I will say: ‘Lend it to me.’ In fact, when you do so, you do it for the benefit of your fellow man and not for My benefit. Similarly, I may ask the rich to lend Me for your sake in case you are afflicted with a calamity. But why do I do so? Because I am Allah the Almighty Who created all the worlds. Thus, I am in charge of providing them with sustenance.

When one invites two of his friends for food, he cooks food which suffices five or ten persons. Therefore, since it is Allah the Almighty Who created all the creatures, He the Almighty is responsible for providing them all with sustenance. This provision indicates that they must exert efforts to obtain it.

So, when creatures do so, He the Almighty guarantees that all of them will be provided with sustenance that makes him content, or at least providing them with the most essential requirements.

But due to the interference of humans in nationalizing the fruit of work represented in money, man got used not not exert more effort as usual. As a matter of fact, Allah the Almighty is fully aware of the fact that man is very keen on achieving his own interest, thus He Glorified is He spurs him to work more and more so that the entire society would get benefit from his work, intentionally or unintentionally. So, when Allah the Almighty borrows from some of His Creatures for the sake of others, He Glorified is He does not take back His provision. Rather, He the Almighty affirms that whoever offers Allah a beautiful gift, He the Almighty will multiply it to him manifold. (al-Hadid: 11)

I will offer the following example for clarification because we, human beings, may experience such a situation one day: Daily a father gives his children an amount of money to spend, and all the children used to save the change. One day, one of the children may undergo a particular condition which requires much more money which the father is unable to provide. So, the father says to his children: 'Lend me the money you collected and I will give it back to you manifold.' The man already took the money for their brother, but as long as it is the one who granted it, he did not take it back; rather, he asked them to lend him. When it is the beginning of the next month, he will give back the loan manifold. So, if such actions take place among human beings themselves, what about the Favour Allah the Almighty conferred upon His slaves?

He the Almighty asks people to offer Him beautiful gifts for the sake of their fellow humans, but the Jews did not understand it this way; rather, they stupidly interpreted the meaning of the verse in a materialistic way, thus said: 'Allah is poor and we are rich.' For this reason, He the Almighty revealed down, 'Allah has certainly heard the saying of those who said: Surely Allah is poor and we are rich. I will record what they say...'

But why does Allah the Almighty write down this eventhough He the Almighty is fully aware of all matters? This statement refers to the process of documentation; that is, when that person is going to read his record on the Day of Resurrection, he will find all his actions and sayings written down. So, writing down people's deeds is a matter of documentation so that they would not deny the acts they committed and the sayings they uttered.

In truth, eventhough Allah the Almighty is fully aware of the sins committed by the slave, the latter may, upon being inflicted with the Punishment of Allah, say: 'O Lord! You are the One Who (has the right to) punish and thus You can say whatever You like'. If, however, their deeds are written down, and they will read them themselves, this is considered a process of documentation that cannot be denied. In reality, this Jew (i.e. Finhaas) did not understand that by offering this loan to Allah the Almighty He Glorified is He wants to encourage humans to show mercy towards each other.

O Man! Allah the Almighty honours the efforts you exerted in possessing wealth. So, when you earn money, then it is yours. In this regard, it is important to know that He the Almighty did not say to you: 'Give your fellow brother'; rather, He the Almighty out of His Mercy and Kindness to His creatures, says: 'Lend Me', so the lender will feel assurance that his/her money will be repaid manifold by the One Who owns the treasures of the heavens and the earth. But the children of Israel were impolite with Allah the Almighty to the extent that He the Almighty cursed them for their saying 'the Hand of Allah is chained'; and stated clearly that His Hands are spread out and He spends as He wishes. (al-Ma'ida: 64)

The reason behind their accusation towards Allah the Almighty is that they experienced a year of drought and starvation as a result of their disobedience to Prophet Muhammad *peace and blessings be upon him. At this point, Ibn 'Abbas is quoted: 'Allah the Almighty abundantly provided the Jews with wealth to the extent that they became the richest of the world. But when they disobeyed Him the Almighty and disbelieved in Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, He Glorified is He made them lose all of their property, during the lifetime of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. That is why Finhaas ibn 'Aazuraa' and others said: "The Hand of Allah is chained...," and then Allah the Almighty revealed down this verse. They (i.e the Jews) said: "The Sky has been miserly to us (i.e. it does not rain at all or even it rains small quantities of water, and Allah's Hand is chained and, thus, we are not provided." As such, Allah the Almighty tells Prophet Muhammad that He, Himself, was not safe from their mocking. Thus, in case they (i.e. the Jews), Allah says, were rude to you (O Muhammad) and to your Companions, they had already been rude to Me, eventhough I am the One Who created them and provided them with sustenance; they said: "Surely Allah is poor and we are rich." They also said: "Allah's Hand is chained."' So, (as long as I informed you (O Muhammad) of their bad behaviour even with Me), you should not feel sad or sorrowful for their bad behaviour with you and with your Companions!

This solace offered by Allah the Almighty to His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is good. He Glorified is He then adds, '... I will record what they say...', but the question to be asked here is 'Why would Allah record their words, eventhough He the Almighty is fully aware of everything and never forgets?'

In the Quran, He the Almighty stresses the fact that He never errs nor forgets. (Ta Ha: 52) As a matter of fact, Allah the Almighty will record all of their deeds and actions so that they will not say on the Day of Resurrection that Allah held us accountable for things we did not commit (in the worldly life). So, their records will produce evidence against them. This indicates that the act of recording may include the process of recording voices and breaths, as well. Then, when it is the Day of Resurrection, everyman shall receive his/her own record in which all his/her actions and sayings are recorded. On the Day of Resurrection, all people will be asked to read their records, themselves, and to confess everything they did and said in this worldly life. (al-Isra': 14)

This aforementioned verse of the Quran indicates, obviously, that when *man reads what has been written down in his/her record, s/he will fully realise that these are the actions and sayings that had been committed and uttered by him/her (in the worldly life). Nowadays, we may record what our enemies say and do, so why do not we firmly believe that Allah the Almighty Who taught us to do that, is able to record all our breaths, voices and movements in such a way which forces them not to deny?!* Allah says: '... I will record what they say...,' and they said: 'Surely Allah is poor and we are rich.' In reality, this is viewed as one of the most sinful major sins and bad behaviour against Him the Almighty. But the Jews did not stop at this point, they, in addition, killed the Messengers whom Allah sent to guide them. That is why He the Almighty says: '... I will record what they say and their killing the prophets unjustly...'.

When Allah the Almighty *told Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, this is considered a kind of solace to him from Allah the Almighty. 'O Muhammad! They fabricated lies against your Lord and killed the Prophets before you, so if they abused you, do not grieve deeply because I will hold them accountable for the actions and sayings written down on* their records and for which they testified. I will say to them: "Taste the chastisement of burning."' In truth, burning people with fire, causes their souls to suffer severely.

One's sensation differs according to his/her different senses; sometimes it is done by the eye, while other times it is done by the ear. It may also be done with smelling, or* touching or tasting. Taste is the leader of all senses, for no one loses it at all. Even the blind, the deaf, the paralyzed and those who suffer from colds and, thus, are unable to smell, do not lose this* particular sense of taste. As such, taste is a sense* which comes from man's essence and, thus, the punishment will be extremely severe. In the Quran, Allah the Almighty gives an example of a town which was [once] secure and at ease, with its sustenance coming to it abundantly from all quarters, and which, thereupon, blasphemously refused to show gratitude for Allah's Blessings: consequently, He caused it to taste the all-embracing misery of hunger and fear as a result of all [the evil] that its people had so persistently committed. (an-Nahl: 112)

If we contemplate this Quranic expression 'Allah caused it to taste the all-embracing misery of hunger and fear,' we will find that Allah the Almighty used the word, 'adhaqaha/ Allah caused it to taste,' to refer to something which is not tasted, that is, libas (clothing). So, the question to be asked here is, 'Can clothing be tasted?' The answer is definitely, no. But He the Almighty wants to direct the attention of mankind to the fact that all the different senses of mankind, including that sense originating in his/her essence, perform their due functions properly. This, undoubtedly, includes man's different parts*.

According to the Quran, tasting completely encompasses man. He the Almighty tells us that He caused that particular town to taste the all-embracing misery of hunger and fear. As such, this verse tells how severe and painful the punishment is inflicted upon all the body part, to the extent that man felt it in every part of his/her body. The word, 'hareeq/burning,' in the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Taste the chastisement of burning,' refers to the blazing fire that burns. He the Almighty then says:

ذَٰلِكَ بِمَا قَدَّمَتۡ أَيۡدِيكُمۡ وَأَنَّ ٱللَّهَ لَيۡسَ بِظَلَّامٖ لِّلۡعَبِيدِ ﴿١٨٢﴾

That is on account of what you stored up for yourselves with your own hands: God is never unjust to His servants' [182]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 182)

The demonstrative adjective, 'dhalik/this,' in this context refers to the chastisement of burning. As a matter of fact, Allah the Almighty did not wrong them, but they were the ones who wronged themselves. Allah the Almighty says: 'This is for what your own hands have sent before'; so does this truly mean that all the sins and acts of disobedience are committed only by one's hands? As a matter of fact, there are different sins; there is a sin which may be committed by the eye; there is another sin which may be committed by the tongue, and so on. We can say that there is no definite number for the sins and the acts of disobedience. So, the question to be asked here is, "Why did Allah the Almighty limit the commitment of sins in this particular verse to hands? The answer is that most of our actions are usually committed by our hands. As such, Allah *the Almighty says, 'This is for what your own hands have sent before', means that (You will be punished) for all the sins committed by all your body parts.

Allah the Almighty then says: '... and because Allah is not in the least unjust to the servants'. This verse indicates that Allah the Almighty will have them taste the chastisement of burning as a result of their sayings and actions. They fabricated lies against Him the Almighty when they said: 'Surely, Allah is poor and we are rich'. As well, they killed the Messengers sent by Him Glorified is He and, thus, they deserve this punishment. In reality, it goes without saying that Allah the Almighty is not ever unjust to His servants. At this point, the orientalists- enemies of Islam- claim that the word "zhallam" in this verse indicates an exaggerative form of the word "zhalim/the one who wrongs others." The word "zhallam," itself gives the meaning of frequently committing injustice and wrong.

As a matter of fact, whoever wants to refute this misconception must be fully aware of, siyagh Al-mubalaghah (exaggeration forms). Linguistics believe that the following patterns of nouns derived from verbs give the meaning of exaggeration, that is, fa'aal, fa'il, mef'aal, fa'el and fa'ul. It becomes immediately clear now that the word, 'zhallam', takes the same pattern and form of, 'akkal/ the person who eats a lot'. It also comes in accordance with the pattern of the form 'qattal/ the person who frequently commits the crime of killing'. At this point, we must differentiate between the two forms, 'qatil/ the person who commits the crime of killing just one time', and, 'qattal/ the person who commits the crime of killing more frequently, to the extent that he takes it up as an occupation'. Similar to the aforementioned pattern are* the following two forms of, 'nahib" and 'nahhab;' the first refers to that person who commits robbery just one time, while the latter refers to that person who commits this crime of robbery frequently. These forms and patterns are known as the exaggeration forms. In truth, in case these forms are used in the affirmative, they indicate the bare minimum. For example, when one says: ‘Someone is “zhallam”, this obviously indicates that he is a “zhalim/a wrongdoer,”’ as well. That is because we have proved exaggeration in the form and, thus, its least is proved too. We offer the following example, as well. When we say, ‘This person is ‘allamah,’ this means that he is well-versed in a particular field of knowledge. If, however, we say that this person is an* 'alim’, this means that he is a* scholar, but not necessarily well-versed. As such, these forms indicate increase in the active participle forms because the action in these forms is strong or frequently repeated. So, if the increase form is proved, it is then necessary to prove the other* form. For example, when one says, ‘This person is akkal’, this includes the increase form of the verb, ‘eat’, and its bare minimum form, as well. But this is not the case in negation. In truth, if we negate the increase form, this does not mean that the bare minimum of this from is also negated.*

If we apply these rules to the verse in question, that is, ‘... and because Allah is not in the least unjust to the servants’, Orientalists believe that negation of this particular from in this verse is applicable only to ‘the exaggeration in injustice’ and that it (i.e. negation) does not apply to the bare minimum of the form. However, they (i.e. Orientalists) did not understand the reason behind the existence of exaggeration in this verse. In reality, Allah the Almighty says that He Glorified is He is never unjust to His Servants; He the Almighty does not say that He is never unjust to the servant, so what does this mean? This means that He the Almighty wrongs none of His servants from the very beginning of the time of Adam to the end of time because if He the Almighty wronged all of these people, Allah forbid, He would be described as, ‘zhallam’, even if He did not wrong them significantly. This is based on the fact that if this had been the case, the act of committing injustice against the servants would have been repeated frequently. So, let those who are obtuse understand that Allah the Almighty says here *that He Glorified is He is never unjust to His Servants. He the Almighty does not say that He is never unjust to the servant.

If the one who commits an offense *must be stronger than the one who is wronged, then every act of wrongdoing is facilitated by the power of the wrong doer. Thus, if Allah the Almighty allowed Himself to wrong, He Glorified is He would not be just committing a mere act of injustice; rather, He would be a ‘dhallam’, due to His Unchallengeable Power.

So, if the case is as exactly aforementioned, there will be no difference between the act and its repetition. So, the Orientalists' attempts to declare they discovered a mistake in the saying of Allah the Almighty '... and because Allah is not in the least unjust to the servants', clearly indicate that they are unable to understand the Arabic language properly, or even deceive those people who know nothing about Arabic. But Allah the Almighty enables some of His faithful servants to show the miraculous nature of this Noble Book.

Having finished His speech on the battle of Uhud, He the Almighty wanted to shed light on the characteristics of the *means by which the enemies of Islam are known. He the Almighty tells Muslims that the list of their enemies includes the people of the Book, the polytheists of Quraysh in Mecca*, and those polytheists who lived around * Medina, who used to raid it.

After talking about this battle of Uhud, which purified, educated, tested, tried, and taught people religious lessons, He Glorified is He wanted to highlight these characteristics, and He, in the Quran, ordered Muslims to *be aware of those people who fabricated lies against your Lord, who abused Prophet Muhammad and who killed the Prophets and Messengers before.

He the Almighty then says:

ٱلَّذِينَ قَالُوٓاْ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ عَهِدَ إِلَيۡنَآ أَلَّا نُؤۡمِنَ لِرَسُولٍ حَتَّىٰ
يَأۡتِيَنَا بِقُرۡبَانٖ تَأۡكُلُهُ ٱلنَّارُۗ قُلۡ قَدۡ جَآءَكُمۡ رُسُلٞ مِّن قَبۡلِى
بِٱلۡبَيِّنَٰتِ وَبِٱلَّذِى قُلۡتُمۡ فَلِمَ قَتَلۡتُمُوهُمۡ إِن كُنتُمۡ صَٰدِقِينَ ١٨٣

To those who say, 'God has commanded us not to believe in any messenger unless he brings us an offering that fire [from heaven] consumes,' say [Prophet], 'Messengers before me have come to you with clear signs, including the one you mention. If you are sincere, why did you kill them?' [183]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 183)

They (i.e. the Jews) falsely claim: 'Our Lord ordered us, in the Torah, not to believe in any messenger until he shows you a tangible miracle, that is, he should bring us an offering that fire [from heaven] consumes'. This was true.

We all know about the story of Cain and Abel mentioned in the Quran. Allah the Almighty tells us these two sons of Adam offered an offering to Allah the Almighty, but He Glorified is He accepted it from one of them and rejected it from the other. So, the son whose offering was rejected decided to kill his brother, whereupon the latter told him that Allah the Almighty accepts only the offerings of the pious. (al-Ma'ida: 27-28)

As a matter of fact, we are in* dire need of reflection regarding the meanings of the verses of the Quran; why did Allah the Almighty accept the offering of one of them and rejected the other? In truth, acceptance is something unique* to Allah the Almighty Alone, so how can we know why He the Almighty accepted this offering or not? He the Almighty must have made a particular sign to indicate His acceptance.

We know that someone may perform an act of worship that Allah accepts, while another person may perform an act of worship which Allah does not accept- we seek Refugee in Allah-; so, how can we know for certain that He the Almighty accepted the deeds and offering of a particular person, while rejecting those from the other? Just as acceptance is one of the secrets of Allah, we are unable to recognize its sign, unless there is tangible evidence. This is proved by this particular verse in which Allah the Almighty tells us that He accepted the offering presented by one of the two brothers, while rejecting the other. The one whose offering was not accepted by Allah said (to his brother): 'I will surely kill you'. This part of the verse indicates clearly that the person whose offering was accepted was fully aware of this fact, and so was the brother whose offering was not accepted. As such, a tangible sign must have taken place.

We explained previously that Allah the Almighty used to address His servants according to the capacity of their intellect*, corporeally and incorporeally. This is* the reason we find that the miracles He gave to the previous Prophets and Messengers were tangible. For example, Abraham's miracle was a fire which did not burn, while that of Moses was a stick that turned into a serpent. As for Jesus peace be upon him, he healed the blind and the leprous, and brought forth the dead, by the permission of Allah. Physical miracles are distinguished by the fact that they convince the senses, but their effects end the moment they are over. As for those miracles that address human* intellect, they are the everlasting ones. As such, the tangible miracles can in no way be everlasting.

So, this necessitates that the eternal miracle given to the seal of all the Prophets and Messengers (i.e. Prophet Muhammad), should* last until the Day of Resurrection, and must not be a physical miracle*. This* is because tangible miracles are confined only to those who see them, while others, who do not see them, will not believe in them, unless they have great trust in the one who saw them. Now, both of the two sons of Adam offered an offering.

The word, 'qurban', takes the same morphological pattern as, 'ghufran', and ''udwan'. Al-qurban is something by which the servant gets closer to Allah the Almighty. Acceptance of this good deed is a secret known only to Allah. So, the question to be asked here is: 'How did these people know that Allah accepted the offering of Cain and rejected that of Abel?" The sign, as such, must be a tangible one. The two sons of Adam must have differed, but the Quran did not tell us about the reason behind their discord. It only tells us that one of them is closer to Allah, but how? The Quran did not detail the matter for us. I believe if it was an important matter, He the Almighty would have told us. So, let us not conclude that they differed over marriage or something like this. That is because the Quran only tells us that there was a dispute between them and that they agreed to make Allah their arbitrator. It is taken for granted that no one can nullify Allah's Judgment. Both of the two brothers had their own claim against the other and, thus, there was no way, but to arbitrate.

In modern times, if we disagree about something, we draw lots, so no one yields to another's whim; rather, they both yield to what is predestined for them and, thus, each of them write on a card and ask a third person to pick one of the two cards. As for Cain and Abel, the Noble Quran tells us that they both made an offering to Allah the Almighty and that He accepted the offering of one of them and rejected the other. So, each of the two brothers had his own claim and neither* was able to convince the other. Accordingly, Cain, after having his offering rejected by Allah, told Abel that he would surely kill him, but how did Abel reply to him? He told him that Allah the Almighty only accept the deeds of those who are pious. So, the one whose offering was accepted by Allah would be the one killed, while the* one who was full of anger and whose offering was rejected by Allah would be the killer. But what did the one whose offering was accepted say?

He said to his brother that if you stretch forth your hand towards me to kill me, I will not do the same as you, for surely I fear Allah, Lord of the worlds. (al-Ma'ida: 28) So, the brother whose offering was accepted by Allah met those requirements that made his offering accepted. As a matter of fact, he was fully aware of the Divine Laws. We also should not believe that the other brother "Cain" was completely full of evil, for he was only under the control of his lust.

In truth, Allah the Almighty tells us that he was, to some extent, a good person. In the Quran, Allah the Almighty tells us that the soul (inner-self) of Cain permitted him to kill his brother and, thus, he became one of the losers. (al-Ma'ida: 30) This indicates that he hesitated before he committed his crime. In this regard, it is important to know that Arabs do not say: 'taww 'at al-maa*'; rather, they say: *'taww'at al-hadid' (*made the iron fillable/pliable). This clearly indicates that the belief that originated in the killer's soul tried to prevent him from killing his brother, but he finally responded to the temptation of the soul and killed him. When Cain killed his brother, and his anger and will for revenge abated, he saw his brother cast down in the open. It is at this point Allah the Almighty sent a crow that began scratching *the dirt, to show him how he should cover the corpse of his brother. Subsequently, Cain felt deep regret for the crime he committed. (al-Ma'ida: 31)

The Jews said, accordingly: 'Allah ordered us not to believe in any Messenger, unless he brings a tangible miracle'. But why did they say this? As a matter of fact, they said this because they knew, for certain, that the greatest miracle of Prophet Muhammad (i.e. the Noble Quran) had nothing to do with the tangible aspect. In reality, Prophet Muhammad had brought many tangible miracles. Due to the fact that the impact of tangible miracles ends the moment they are over, the Noble Quran is, thus, the eternal miracle which befits the last Message. As such, they (i.e. the Jews) asked for tangible miracles to occur, so they could give excuses for their disbelief. Consequently they said:

'To those who say, ''Allah has commanded us not to believe in any messenger unless he brings us an offering that fire [from heaven] consumes...''.

It is in this particular verse of Al-'Imran that Allah the Almighty tells us how the offering of Abel was accepted. We [then*] knew that it was consumed (burnt) by fire. This matter clearly proves that the Quran does not contain repetitions. Then, He Glorified is He refutes their allegation by means of persuasive evidence. He the Almighty says: 'Say [Prophet], "Messengers before me have come to you with clear signs, including the one you mention. If you are sincere, why did you kill them?"

This means that He the Almighty had, prior to the mission of Prophet Muhammad, sent Messengers with their own offerings, yet you killed them and disbelieved in them. If your allegation had been true, O, Jews, you would have believed in the Messengers who brought you offerings that were consumed by fire. Allah the Almighty accordingly, shows us that they lied to themselves and to Messenger Muhammad confirming that all their allegations are nothing but a matter of petulance and stubbornness, and persistence in dissension and hostility. That is why He the Almighty asks Prophet Muhammad to ask them: 'If you are sincere, why did you kill them?'

He the Almighty wants to tell us, by offering this example, that the era of tangible miracles is over, and that the period of humans' intellectual maturity and perfection has begun. That is why He the Almighty chose a miracle that addresses the intellect so that it would last to the end of time. If the sign were a material one, it would have been restricted to the time in which it took place. As well, it would have no impact on those generations who came afterwards. As for such a miracle that addresses the intellect, it is possible for any believer in our time to say: 'Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah, and this is his miracle'. If the miracle was a tangible one in the form of an offering consumed by fire, what impact would be left, then, on those who would come after in next eras?

As a matter of fact, Allah the Almighty wants to tell us that He Glorified is He is the One Who makes signs according to His Will, and not as humans wish. In addition, He the Almighty tells us that His signs are accompanied by evidence to prove their veracity. Thus, humans have no right to suggest their making of a particular miracle. That is because He the Almighty brings the miracle, wherein the evidence exists. But why does he do so? It is because some people said to Messenger Muhammad: ‘We will not believe in you, until you cause a fountain to gush forth from the earth for us, or you should have a garden of palms and grapes in the midst of which you should cause rivers to flow forth, or you should cause the heaven to come down upon us in pieces as you think, or bring Allah and the angels face to face (with us), or you should have a house of gold, or you should ascend into heaven and in spite of all of this, we will not believe in your ascending until you bring down to us a book which we may read’. (al-Isra’: 90-93)

What the disbelievers say to Messenger Muhammad clearly indicates that all the miracles and signs they asked for were material ones. He the Almighty tells Prophet Muhammad that the only reason He the Almighty did not* bring these miracles is that their forefathers denied them. In the Quran, He Glorified is He confirms this fact. He clearly states that the only reason that He the Almighty did not* bring these miracles is that their forefathers denied them. (al-Isra’: 59)

Even those Jews who said: ‘We will not believe until you bring us an offering that is consumed by fire’’, had Messengers with the same required miracles sent to them before Prophet Muhammad, yet they did not believe in them. It becomes immediately clear now that it was a matter of petulance and stubbornness, and persistence in dissension and hostility. Allah the Almighty then consoles Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him by offering him examples of what had happened with the Messengers before him. It is as when the Almighty calls on saying: ‘If they disbelieve in you, do not grieve (O Muhammad) for they had previously denied and rejected the Messengers who were sent to them himbefore you.’ He the Almighty says:

فَإِن كَذَّبُوكَ فَقَدْ كُذِّبَ رُسُلٌ مِّن قَبْلِكَ جَآءُو بِٱلْبَيِّنَٰتِ وَٱلزُّبُرِ وَٱلْكِتَٰبِ ٱلْمُنِيرِ ﴿١٨٤﴾

If they reject you, so have other messengers been rejected before you, even though they came with clear evidence, books of wisdom and enlightening scripture [184]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 184)

Allah the Almighty shows us how He raised Prophet Muhammad to the highest rank, a rank that no human being can attain. He Glorified is He tells him peace and blessings be upon him that He knows for certain that he is saddened with what the disbelievers say. He Glorified is He then tells him peace and blessings be upon him that the disbelievers know for sure that he is not a* liar. (al-An'am: 33)

In truth, it is not your problem, Muhammad, for they know perfectly well that you are truthful and never tell lies. The entire problem may be summarised in the following sentence, that is, '... but it is the verses of Allah that the wrongdoers reject'. This means that you are not the reason behind them denying My signs because the disbelievers do not say that you are a liar, rather, they call Me, Myself, a liar. As such, He the Almighty addresses His Prophet Muhammad to console him and to tell him of the stories of the Messengers before him so that he would not feel sad about the actions and sayings of the Jews. He Glorified is He says: 'If they reject you, so have other messengers been rejected before you, eventhough they came with clear evidence, books of wisdom and enlightening scripture.' (Al-'Imran: 184)

It is taken for granted that a condition is the cause for the existence of result. So, what is the case if the result occurred before the condition? He the Almighty says: If they reject your Message, they had already rejected and denied the Messages of the Messengers and Prophets who were sent before you. In other words, the result of the conditional clause happened before the condition itself. If any of those people, who superficially understand Islam, including the orientalists who do not understand the styles of the Arabic language properly, read this particular style in this verse, they may say: 'The result in this conditional clause has occurred before the condition itself.' We respond to these people by* asking the following questions, 'Is the saying of Allah the Almighty "... so have other messengers been rejected before you..." the resultant clause or is it an indication of it'? As a matter of fact, He the Almighty sent down this verse to say to His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: 'If those people reject and deny your Message, do not grieve, for Messengers before you had been denied and rejected by their people', indicating* that this statement is the reason for the resultant clause. As such, Allah the Almighty says: 'If they reject and deny your Message, do not grieve.' The statement in this context is not the true resultant clause; rather, it is only the reason leading to the resultant clause '... If they reject you, so have other messengers been rejected before you..."'etc.

When we say: 'Someone brought me such and such', this indicates that this particular person might be the one who brought the item himself; it might also indicate that he only accompanied the person who brought the item. For more clarification, let us imagine that there is an employee who was sent by his employer to deliver an envelope to another person. In this case, the employee will be viewed as accompanying the envelope. As such, it can be concluded that clear and conclusive evidence was sent down by Allah the Almighty to prove the veracity and authenticity of the Messengers accompanying them and, thus, He Glorified is He says: 'If they reject you, so have other messengers been rejected before you, eventhough they came with clear evidence...' This means that those Messengers were supported with such clear evidence that proved the veracity of their Messages. As a matter of fact, Allah's signs (in the universe) may pertain to natural phenomena or miracles.

We know perfectly well that all the miracles of the Messengers sent before Prophet Muhammad had nothing to do with their heavenly-revealed Book. The Scriptures of Abraham peace be upon him, for example, contain his Message, but they are not his miracle, for we know that his miracle is the fire that did not burn him. Similar is the case with Moses whose Book, the Torah, contains his Message, but it is not his miracle. In truth, the miracle of Moses is the stick that turned into a serpent, as well as, the sea that was divided into two parts. Similarly, Jesus peace be upon him, had the Gospel which contained his divine Message, yet his miracle was that he healed the lame and leprous, and raised the dead. As such, it becomes clear that all the miracles of the Messengers before Prophet Muhammad had nothing to do with their Books, with the exception of him peace and blessings be upon him whose Book represents also his miracle, but why?* It is because he peace and blessings be upon him was sent with the most important and complete Message, that is, the Noble Quran. As well, he peace and blessings be upon him is the seal Prophet and, therefore, the miracle must go hand in hand with the Message so that it establishes the evidence. So, the saying of Allah the Almighty '... they came with clear evidence...,' indicates that they brought miracles that prove their truthfulness.

As for the saying of Allah the Almighty '...books of wisdom and enlightening scripture', it refers to those Books that contain the Message. So, all the Messengers (before Prophet Muhammad) were in need of two important things, that are*, a Message and a miracle.

The word 'Al-Bayyinnat' refers to the clear evidence established by Allah the Almighty *and not by any of human. Then, He Glorified is He refers to the Message by saying, '... books of wisdom and enlightening scripture'. The word 'Al-zubur', means the (heavenly revealed) Book. Arabs say: 'This thing qad zubir (i.e. has been written down)'. This actually refers to a process of documentation, that being, as long as it is written down, it could not be erased. So, the word 'Al-zabru', means 'writing' or 'admonition' because it prevents the person from committing any sins or mistakes, and from falling prey to misguidance. It also gives the meaning of 'the intellect' because it protects man* from falling into ruin.

As for those who want to rely on intellect to have unrestrained liberty and licentiousness, we say to them: 'You should understand the meaning of the word, "aql/intellect", properly.' This particular word gives the meaning of restriction, for it prevents the person from doing any act, without taking its consequences into consideration." The word, "aql," is derived from the verb "aqal" which means "to tie". We must take into consideration all of these meanings. So, it means to prevent people from doing those actions for which s/he may be blamed. As for the word "Al-zubur", it can also mean, "walling up the well". For example, when we dig a well for water, we do not leave it as a hole; to the contrary, we build a rim of stone around it. In addition, we line the inside with stones so that it does not fill with soil. As a matter of fact, all the meanings given by the word "Al-zubur" have to do with each other, as follows: (When it is given the meaning of) "Al-maktubaat/the written items", it is qualified to be described as being "enlightening" because this description means that it shows the reader the consequences of the path s/he is in so that s/he would not deviate from*.

As such, Allah the Almighty consoles His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and says to him: 'Do not grieve if they deny and reject your Message, for they had already denied and rejected the Messages of the Messengers sent before you with both the Message and the miracle'. Having immunised Messenger Muhammad and the believers against the fabricated lies of the Jews, Allah Glorified is He then moves on to shed light on a very important topic. But it is important here to point out that making belief steadfast in the hearts of the believers, Allah the Almighty informs us of the challenges we may face so that we are not surprised by what they say and do.

By the way, we do the same thing in this worldly life. If we fear a disease like cholera, for example, what do we do? We take the microbe itself, weaken it in a particular way, and then inject it in the body of a healthy person so that it causes his immunity to resist the disease.

Allah the Almighty then highlights a very important topic pertaining to belief and which all believers must think about all the time. If they disbelieve in you, their disbelief will not last forever, for they will come to an end by death. So, their conflict with you is limited to a certain time, and they will be held accountable before Allah the Almighty. In this regard, He Glorified is He says:

كُلُّ نَفْسٍ ذَآئِقَةُ ٱلْمَوْتِۗ وَإِنَّمَا تُوَفَّوْنَ أُجُورَكُمْ يَوْمَ ٱلْقِيَٰمَةِۖ فَمَن زُحْزِحَ عَنِ
ٱلنَّارِ وَأُدْخِلَ ٱلْجَنَّةَ فَقَدْ فَازَۗ وَمَا ٱلْحَيَوٰةُ ٱلدُّنْيَآ إِلَّا مَتَٰعُ ٱلْغُرُورِ ١٨٥

Every soul will taste death and you will be paid in full only on the Day of Resurrection. Whoever is kept away from the Fire and admitted to the Garden will have triumphed.
The present world is only an illusory pleasure [185]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 185)

We notice that the word, 'taste', has come in this context too. As well, we know that there is a difference between 'the act of killing' and 'the death', as follows: the meaning of 'death' is more comprehensive, for it means the end of life, irrespective of the fact of whether it was because of being killed, or otherwise. So, those well-versed scholars who pay great attention to 'the meanings of' words say: "If this slain person had not been killed, would he have died?!" We say: 'Yes, because his predestined time for death has come'. But was the killer knowledgeable of the time of death? The answer is 'No'. Therefore, he is punished for committing the crime of separating the soul from the body. As for the slain person, Allah destined that they would part with life in this way.

So, every soul will taste death, either naturally or by killing. In spite of the fact that most of those who are killed are considered living martyrs [this statement is false], all mankind will die. In this regard, Allah the Almighty tells us that.

When the trumpet is blown, all those who are in the heavens and all those who are on earth will lose consciousness, except those who Allah pleases. (az-Zumar: 68)

If we reflect carefully on the accuracy of the saying of Allah the Almighty '... and you will be paid in full only on the Day of Resurrection...', we will realize that Allah the Almighty is warning the believers against waiting for the reward for their good deeds in this worldly life because this life will come to an end and consequently, you must be rewarded for your deeds in the Hereafter so that you will gain endless reward.

We know what happened during the Second Oath of Allegiance given to Prophet Muhammad in, Al-'Aqba, when he peace and blessings be upon him took the oath of allegiance from the Supporters. They said: 'How will we be rewarded for this (O Messenger Muhammad) if we keep our promise?' Messenger Muhammad did not say to them that they would defeat so and so, or you will own this and that, in this worldly life. Rather, he said: "Paradise". Whereupon they replied: 'O Messenger Muhammad! Extend your hand so that we can give you our pledge'. As a matter of fact, if he peace and blessings be upon him promised them any of the worldly life's adornments, those who are intelligent among them might have said: 'How lowly is this'! That is why when someone said to his friend: 'I love you exactly as I love this worldly life', his friend replied: 'Am I as worthless to you, as this?' As such, Allah the Almighty wants to tell the believers not to think that they are going to be rewarded for their deeds in this worldly life, because if they were to get it, as such in this present life, it would not be great and infinite. That is because reward comes from Allah the Almighty Who is infinite and, thus, it must be infinite, as well. Concerning the saying of Allah the Almighty '... and you will be paid in full only on the Day of Resurrection...', some well-versed scholars, relying on the word, 'tuwaffawn/you will be paid in full', understand that people will be rewarded or punished for all they did and said in this present life, before the Day of Resurrection. That is because the meaning of the expression, 'Waffaituhu Ajrahu/I paid him in full' implies that you gave him part of the reward and adjourned another part. That is true, because He the Almighty gave them those items necessary for their belief. This tremendous impact of belief on the faces of the believers is the best example of this. As such, the answer here must be consistent with the reason, for whoever listens to the verse because a person may die in battle shortly after hearing this particular verse and, thus, he took no spoil, nor did he obtain victory so what will be his reward? He will receive his reward in full on the Day of Resurrection. So, whoever obtains part of the reward in this life, like achieving victory over the disbeliever, what is comparable will be paid in full in the Hereafter, as clearly indicated from the word, 'tawfiyah' which means that the reward will be paid in full on the Day of Resurrection.

He Glorified is He then says: '... Whoever is kept away from the Fire and admitted to the Garden will have triumphed...' Abu Hurayrah Allah be pleased with him narrated that Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: 'A place in paradise equal to the size of a whip is better than the whole world and whatever is in it". Recite if you wish: "... Whoever is kept away from the Fire and admitted to the Garden will have triumphed...".

When you say: 'I kept someone away from this and that', it means that this person was in fear, so how could this happen in the fire? It goes without saying that disobedience is the main reason behind throwing people into the Fire. The sinful are attracted to committing acts of disobedience. When belief tries to pull them, they are fully attracted by disobedience and, thus, they will be punished in the fire. As such, the fire will have its own lure, for it will be in a state of terrible anger. Allah the Almighty informs us of that matter in the Quran when He stated clearly that the fire will burst with rage. (al-Mulk: 8)

The fire will burst with rage (to severely punish) the disbelievers. What does this mean? Have you ever seen a pot boiling over? When it boils, bubbles come out and what is inside comes out over the pot. This is the true meaning of the word, "tamayyazu/literally, "to separate". When a person is in a state of blind rage, something emerges from him like the bubbles of a boiling pot. These bubbles can burn whoever stands in front of them or touches them.

They come out because of the intensity of the boiling, coming out from the pot. This is exactly the same as for the fire. Why does it burst with rage? It does so because of the disbelievers who disobeyed Allah. It is known for certain that the fire, primarily, originally praises the Glory of Allah.

In the same vein, He Glorified is He tells us in the Quran that on the Day of Resurrection, He will ask the Fire whether it is filled with people or not. (Qaf: 30) The Fire, for its part, will ask Allah the Almighty for more and more people to be punished. (Qaf: 30) This indicates that the action of bursting with rage will take place, literally, by the fire. That is why Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him tells us that the fire has a particular kind of attraction. It is taken for granted that people will be thrown in the fire because of their disobedience, which, in turn, attracts and seduces the disobedient. In this regard, Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him says: ‘My example and your example is that of a person who lit a fire and insects and moths were attracted to it and began to fall in it, and he is making efforts to take them out; and I am going to hold you back from fire, but you are slipping from my hand.’(1) It is a very striking example. In fact, when someone lights a fire in an open area, the first thing to be seen around the fire will be those insects, moths and mosquitoes. That is why the Arabs said: ‘Many a soul yearned for its own ruin’. These insects were drawn to the light of the fire and came to it. When we light a fire in an open area, you find a lot of insects are killed around the fire. So, we say that these insects had yearned for their ruin; they came to the light, but the flames from the fire burnt them. This is exactly what happens to those people who are disobedient; they yearn for their ruin because they do not realise that these (forbidden) lusts will cause him to be thrown in the fire.

So, the saying of Allah the Almighty ‘... Whoever is kept away from the Fire and admitted to the Garden will have triumphed...,’ implies that just as the fire attracts people to it, as the acts of disobedience attract people to them. If a person is kept away from the fire to any other place between the fire and paradise, this will be good for him/her. So, what will be the state of the person who has been kept away from the Fire and admitted to the paradise? Such a person has undoubtedly triumphed.

(1) Muslim, Sahih

This is, indeed, a good thing. That is why there is a bridge over the fire that we will have to cross. Why? It is so that the believer will see the fire beneath their feet and, thus, s/he praises Allah for being a Believer because if they were not a believer, s/he would have fallen into the Fire. So, they will say: ‘Praise be to Allah Who saved me from the Fire’.

‘... Whoever is kept away from the Fire and admitted to the Garden will have triumphed...’. ‘Triumphed’ in this context means salvation from what you hate and receiving what you like. As a matter of fact, just attaining salvation from what you dislike is considered a blessing; and to be indulged after that is a blessing and is considered a triumph. The saying of Allah, ‘whoever is kept away from the fire ...’ indicates that there is someone else who has kept him/her away from the Fire. That is totally true because it is Allah the Almighty Who has conferred His Favour upon him/her by guiding them to belief in the worldly life, and by keeping them away from the fire in the Hereafter.

Allah the Almighty then concludes the verse by saying, ‘... The present world is only an illusory pleasure’. As a matter of fact, when He the Almighty describes the life in which we live as ‘dunia/of a lower rank’, this means that there is another life which is not like this (i.e. ‘ulia/of a higher rank”.’ That is why He the Almighty states in another verse that the Hereafter is the abode of eternal life, but people are unaware of the fact. (al-’Ankabut: 64) That is, it is the life that truly deserves to be called ‘life’ because the life-span of the person should not be calculated from the very beginning of the universe to the end of time, for this life span pertains mainly to the universe. As for mankind, every one of them has his own life span starting from their birth, and ending with their death; it is totally different from that of the universe.

As a matter of fact, one knows nothing at all about their life span; is s/he predestined to live for a moment, or a day, or a month or a century? All we know about that matter is that everyone has his/her own life span which is predestined for them.

Enjoyment of this worldly life is commensurate with the person’s allotment of enjoyment, that is to say, according one’s own abilities. If we contemplate this verse from this perspective, we realise that its enjoyment is simple and, thus, it is not right for a person to fall prey to its seduction. One must bear in mind that Allah the Almighty warns us in the Quran that man will transgress when he sees himself as self-sufficient. (al-'Alaq: 6-7)

As such, delusion of this worldly life is when a short-term pleasure distracts you from the endless pleasure. People must draw a comparison between these two pleasures so that they will not be deluded by the simple (enjoyment) and, consequently, leave the great (one) in the Hereafter. You must weigh the pleasure you obtain, according to your abilities, and the pleasure you will obtain due to the Bounty of Allah. That is why this present life is of an illusory pleasure.

In reality, Allah the Almighty accurately and exactly describes this worldly life as "an enjoyment". But He Glorified is He, meanwhile, directs our attention to the fact that man must not be deluded by this simple pleasure and, preferring it to the endless one in the Hereafter. After that, He the Almighty tells Messenger Muhammad and his followers, that belief alone is the best reward for them in spite of the fact that it may not result in pleasure in this worldly life. That is why He the Almighty informs us that belief will not be victorious all the time, for if it was, they would have been accustomed to it due to the fact that it ensures them a happy life. For this reason, He Glorified is He explains to them that they will be afflicted by trials. As such, He the Almighty says that belief entails that you (O, believers) will be afflicted with trials in yourselves and properties. He the Almighty says:

لَتُبْلَوُنَّ فِىٓ أَمْوَٰلِكُمْ وَأَنفُسِكُمْ وَلَتَسْمَعُنَّ مِنَ ٱلَّذِينَ
أُوتُوا۟ ٱلْكِتَـٰبَ مِن قَبْلِكُمْ وَمِنَ ٱلَّذِينَ أَشْرَكُوٓا۟ أَذًى
كَثِيرًا ۚ وَإِن تَصْبِرُوا۟ وَتَتَّقُوا۟ فَإِنَّ ذَٰلِكَ مِنْ عَزْمِ ٱلْأُمُورِ ١٨٦

You are sure to be tested through your possessions and persons; you are sure to hear much that is hurtful from those who were given the Scripture before you and from those who associate others with God. If you are steadfast and mindful of God, that is the best course [186] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 186)

How is one tested through possessions? This happens by consuming all of the person's properties and possessions through a calamity. It may also happen through monitoring how the person is going to spend their income; is s/he going to spend it charitably or not? In this particular verse, Allah the Almighty gives precedence to money over the soul because testing one through their soul is done either by killing, injury, or disease. As a matter of fact, not all people will be killed, but everyone will be tested with their possessions.

The saying of Allah the Almighty '... You are sure to hear much that is hurtful from those who were given the Scripture before you and from those who associate others with Allah...' indicates that there are two groups of disbelief, as follows: People of the Book and the polytheists. As a matter of fact, these two groups of disbelievers used to oppose Islam. In addition, they injured Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him severely, and his Companions, by such acts such as mocking him and his Companions. That is why Allah the Almighty asks the believers to prepare themselves to face these trials with pleasure.

People mistakenly think that all afflictions are inherently evil. This is not true. In fact, afflictions are nothing but a test and thus one may pass it or fail it. So, when Allah the Almighty says: 'You are sure to be tested', and this asserts that He Glorified is He is going to test His creatures just as a teacher says to his student: "I am going to give you a test".'

So, the phrase, 'We shall try you' means that we are going to test you, but does this mean that afflictions are bad or good? It is evil only for those who do not react well. Those who pass the trial of possessions say: 'Everything in this life will come to an end, and Allah the Almighty has lessened my own responsibilities. Even though I may have had a lot of money, I was not spending it in correct, lawful ways and, as a result, it would have led me to destruction. Consequently, He the Almighty has taken my money so that He will not throw me in the fire'. In the Quran, He Glorified is He tells us about human nature as it relates to money. He states that when He the Almighty is generous to him and favours him, he says, 'My Lord has honoured me'. But when He Glorified is He tries him and restricts his provision, he says, "My Lord has humiliated me". (al-Fajr: 15-16)

These aforementioned two verses of, the chapter of al-Fajr emphasize two issues as follows: when the person is given money, he says: 'My Lord has honoured me'; this is better than the person who reacted the opposite way. The story of that person is mentioned in the chapter of al-Qasas in which He the Almighty tells us about Qarun who claimed that he had acquired this money by virtue of his own knowledge and thus Allah the Almighty destroyed him completely. (al-Qasas: 78) Such a person, who believes that richness is an honour given to him and who believes that poverty is a kind of humiliation, is not fully aware of the fact that money is not the proof of honour, nor is poverty the proof of humiliation. But the question to be asked here is: 'When is money viewed as proof of honour?' This actually happens when one spends it charitably in its correct, lawful ways. But if one does not pay Allah's due portion of his/her money, it (i.e. money) will be proof of one's humiliation. As a matter of fact, sometime a person may be rich, but he does not pay the shares of Allah from his/her money and in this case, poverty may be better than richness. That is why He the Almighty comments in the following verse on these two types of people by clearly stating that these two positions are not right. This obviously means that having wealth is not an indication of honour, and nor is poverty an indication of humiliation.

He the Almighty thus, wants to provide the evidence to this point. So, He Glorified is He informs those who believe that having wealth is an indication of honour of their behaviour, as seen in what follows: 'You do not honour the orphans, nor do you encourage one another to feed the poor. As well, you consume inheritance, devouring [it] altogether'. (al-Fajr: 17-19)

As long as you do not treat the orphan kindly, how can wealth be an indication of honour? In this case, wealth is a burden on you and so , why do you, who do not honour the orphans, think that taking it away from you is an indication of humiliation? He the Almighty has saved you from being abased, so you do not have to bear the responsibilities that wealth entails. As such, it becomes instantly clear that wealth is not an indication of honour, and nor is poverty an indication of humiliation. But if even you do not have money, why did you not encourage one another to feed the poor? You do not even encourage one another even by words. If you do not even want to urge one another, how do you think that money is an indication of honour? You seize inheritance, taking both your own share and the share of others without even investigating whether this money is lawful or not. If this is the case, how can being given wealth viewed as an indication of honour and how is poverty viewed as humiliation? It is neither one, nor the other.

He the Almighty says: ‘You are sure to be tested through your possessions and persons; you are sure to hear much that is hurtful from those who were given the Scripture before you and from those who associate others with Allah...’ and thus these trials and afflictions will surely take place. O, Allah! We firmly believe that we are going to be tested, but what are the ways to overcome these trials and afflictions? The remedy is mentioned clearly in the saying of Allah, ‘... If you are steadfast and mindful of Allah, that is the best course’. You (O, believers) must show patience if you are afflicted by your possessions; you must also be patient if you are afflicted and tested in yourselves; and you must, furthermore, show patience for the harm you may face from the people of the Book and the polytheists. As such, if you do face difficulties from them, then patience for all these afflictions and trials is the best route for you. The word, ‘Al-‘azm/determination’ refers to gathering one’s strength to do a particular act. So, if you intend to do a particular action, and then set your intention in your heart, you gather your strength. The saying of Allah ‘that is the best course’ indicates that you are supposed to be steadfast and gather all your strength to do a particular act.

As such, the matter revolves mainly around testing the person through his/her possessions and self. Additionally, they (i.e the believers) will experience a great deal of harm from the polytheists and the people of the Book. In truth, all these afflictions and trials are in need of patience. We previously explained that patience is of three kinds: patience for a calamity that afflicts you, or an act of worship to be performed, and patience when being prevented from doing something. As such, the kind of patience is defined according to the preposition used with it. One may show patience when being prevented from committing a forbidden act. As well, s/he may show patience when performing acts of worship.

The saying of Allah the Almighty: ‘You are sure to be tested through your possessions and persons...,’ indicates that your enemy is not defined because you may be afflicted either in your property or in your person. But His Glorified is He says, '... You are sure to hear much that is hurtful from those who were given the Scripture before you and from those who associate others with Allah...,' which explicitly defines your enemy for you. So, when you see this enemy before you, you burst with rage. He the Almighty therefore, clarified the matter warning us to 'Be careful not to allow them to cause your anger to consume you, instead, you should control your anger and not be deceived by vain matters. Rather, you should be calm, and not respond, unless you are certain of victory'. That is why He the Almighty says: '... If you are steadfast and mindful of Allah, that is the best course'.

The phrase, 'ittaqu Allah/fear Allah' orders believers to prevent themselves from committing an action which brings the Wrath of Allah the Almighty. The Prophet peace and blessings be upon him rode a donkey having a saddle with a fadakiyya, a velvet covering. He mounted me behind him and went to visit Sa'd bin 'Ubada, and this was before the battle of Badr. The Prophet peace and blessings be upon him proceeded until he passed by a group of people in which 'Abdullah ibn Ubai ibn Salul was present. This was before 'Abdullah embraced Islam. The group comprised of Muslims, polytheists, i.e., idolaters and Jews. 'Abdullah ibn Rawaha was also present... When dust from the donkey covered the gathering, 'Abdullah ibn Ubai covered his nose with his upper garment and said, "Do not annoy us with dust". Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him greeted them, stopped and dismounted. Then, he invited them to Allah (i.e., to embrace Islam) and recited some verses of the Holy Quran to them. On hearing the verses, 'Abdullah ibn Ubai said, "O, Man ! There is nothing better than what you say, if it is true. Do not disturb us in our gathering with it, but return to your house, and if somebody comes to you, teach him there". 'Abdullah ibn Rawaha said, "Yes, O Allah's Messenger peace and blessings be upon him! Bring your teachings to our gathering, for we love that". So the Muslims, the pagans and the Jews started insulting each other until they were about to fight. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him kept on placating them until they calmed down. Subsequently, the Prophet mounted his animal and proceeded until he reached Sa'd ibn 'Ubada. He said to him: "O Sa'd! Have you not heard what Abu Hubab (i.e., 'Abdullah ibn Ubai) said?" He said such and such. Sa'd said: "O Allah's Apostle! Excuse and forgive him, for Allah has given you what He has given you. The people of this town (Medina) decided unanimously to crown him and make him their chief by placing a turban on his head, but when that was prevented by the Truth, which Allah has given you, he ('Abdullah ibn Ubai) was jealous, and that was the reason he behaved this way with you'. Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him forgave him.'(1)

Allah Glorified is He then says,

وَإِذْ أَخَذَ ٱللَّهُ مِيثَٰقَ ٱلَّذِينَ أُوتُوا۟ ٱلْكِتَٰبَ لَتُبَيِّنُنَّهُۥ لِلنَّاسِ وَلَا تَكْتُمُونَهُۥ
فَنَبَذُوهُ وَرَآءَ ظُهُورِهِمْ وَٱشْتَرَوْا۟ بِهِۦ ثَمَنًا قَلِيلًا ۖ فَبِئْسَ مَا يَشْتَرُونَ ﴿١٨٧﴾

God took a pledge from those who were given the Scripture – 'Make it known to people; do not conceal it' – but they tossed the pledge over their shoulders, they bartered it for a small price: what a bad bargain they made! [187]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 187)

We knew beforehand, that Allah the Almighty had taken the pledge to believe in the Message of Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and all the previous Prophets and Messengers. He Glorified is He states this matter clearly in the chapter of Al-'Imran. He the Almighty took the pledge of all the previous Prophets and Messengers that they must support and believe in the Message of Muhammad. (Al-'Imran: 81)

Here we are examining another pledge taken by Allah from the people of the Book who believed in the Prophets sent to them. Allah says: 'Allah took a pledge from those who were given the Scripture– "Make it known to people; do not conceal it..."'. So, the question to be asked here is 'What is that they must make known? And why did they conceal it?' Did they conceal the Scripture? Yes, because they forgot some of it which means that they paid no attention to it.

This is a fact that is supported by another verse in the Quran in which Allah the Almighty tells us that the people of the Book forgot a portion of that of which they were reminded. (al-Ma'ida: 14) But what did they do with that unforgotten portion of their religion? The answer to this question is provided by Allah the Almighty in the chapter of al-Baqara, when He Glorified is He states that those, who conceal clear proofs and guidance sent down by Allah, after He made it clear for the people in the Scripture, will be cursed by Allah and cursed by those who curse. (al-Baqara: 159)

---

(1) Al-Bukhari, Sahih

They concealed the clear evidence that Allah sent down in the Book. So, concealment is a matter of choice. As for forgetfulness, they may be excused, eventhough it is a blameworthy action because if they had occupied themselves with their religion, they would not have forgotten it. As for that which they did not forget, they concealed some of, and what they did not conceal, they altered with their tongues [meaning, they changed the words]. Did they stop at that point? No, they did not. They, in addition, fabricated lies from their own illusions and attributed it to Allah. In the Quran, He the Almighty tells us that He prepared a severe punishment for those who write a 'Book' with their own hands and then attributed it to Allah in exchange for a small price. (al-Baqara: 79)

The parts that were fabricated by the people of the Book are not accepted as being from Allah unless it can be verified by another unaltered book from Allah. As for the concept of 'exchanging this Book for a small price', we have to understand it from another perspective. It is taken for granted that we use money (price) to buy objects, so how can we buy the money (price) itself? This happens when you put a price on a commodity, and here appears the first contradiction in the matter. Originally, the description of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was mentioned in their Scriptures to the extent that they used to pray for victory over those who were determined to deny the truth, but when he peace and blessings be upon him was sent, they denied and rejected him. (al-Baqara: 89)

So, the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Latubayyinunnahu/to make it known', means to tell people about the description of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, as they are mentioned exactly in your Books, with neither alteration nor distortion. As a matter of fact, when they do so, they will be conveying the same message that was revealed in their Books, sent down to them from Allah the Almighty.

As such, the various meanings are interrelated. Accordingly, in case they (i.e. the people of the Book) showed the Book revealed from Allah, the characteristics of Prophet Muhammad would then be found within. As a result, we find a correlation between the meaning of "showing the Book" and that of 'showing the description of Prophet Muhammad.'

The word, 'nabadh/to toss', is in the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Make it known to people; do not conceal it'– but they tossed the pledge over their shoulders..."', means to toss something away in such a way that reveals hatred because the person who dislikes something wants to get rid of it quickly and completely. For instance, if a person gives another something to keep, but while holding the item, finds that it is an ember of fire, how will he act? He will undoubtedly, and unconsciously, throw it away. When one throws something away, they can throw it to right, left, or in front. But when he tosses it over his shoulder, this means that he never wants to see it again. So, if we contemplate the expression 'but they tossed the pledge over their shoulders', we will find that the act of tossing itself, indicates deep hatred. If a man throws something in front of him, he may want it when remembering it, but if he tosses it over his shoulder, this indicates a deep and intense hatred. That is why the Arabs used to say: 'Do not make my demand behind your back,' that is, do not ignore my demand. The saying of Allah the Almighty '...but they tossed the pledge over their shoulders...,' means that those who committed this crime were a group. Using the plural word 'shoulders', points out that every one of them did the act of tossing the pledge over his shoulder. This clearly signifies that they unanimously agreed to do this, as if they all agreed on misguidance. They (i.e. the people of the Book) did not stop there; rather, they exchanged it for a small price and, certainly, what a bad bargain they made! If we reflect carefully on this Quranic expression, we will find that the thing to be purchased here is 'the price'. This is used, in spite of the fact that we use 'the price' to indicate a purchase. As such, we may deduce that there are some people who may barter the matter for a meal, while others may do so for a beautiful piece of clothing; there are still some who may exchange it for some need. They simply say: 'We want money so that we can buy anything we desire with it'. This is the meaning of the saying of Allah '...they bartered it for a small price...'

Commenting on the item they purchased, Allah the Almighty says: '... What a bad bargain they made'! Why? It is because one may think that they can buy everything they want with money (referred to as the price in this particular verse). This is incorrect because meeting one's urgent needs is more important to him than money. We have actually explained this point before and said: 'Imagine that there is a person in the desert and he owns a mound of gold, but he is in a dire need for a glass of water.' It is true that we can buy items with money, but there are, in the meantime, some things which may be more useful than money and gold. In such a situation, that person will purchase a glass of water with all the property he has. Allah the Almighty then says:

لَا تَحْسَبَنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ يَفْرَحُونَ بِمَآ أَتَوا۟ وَّيُحِبُّونَ أَن يُحْمَدُوا۟ بِمَا لَمْ يَفْعَلُوا۟
فَلَا تَحْسَبَنَّهُم بِمَفَازَةٍ مِّنَ ٱلْعَذَابِ ۖ وَلَهُمْ عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ ﴿١٨٨﴾

Do not think [Prophet] that those who exult in what they have done and seek praise for things they have not done will escape the torment; agonizing torment awaits them [188]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 188)

The word 'al-husban/to think' means that a person thinks that something is not true. As a matter of fact, when one listens to something, they view it in the light of what is obvious, without even reflecting on the reasons behind it. So, those who exult in what they have done are of two kinds: the first kind includes those who exult in what they do to oppose the call of Truth. It includes the hypocrites who, pretending to be believers, exulted in their deception to the believers. This actually happened before Allah the Almighty exposed them to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and the believers. The other kind includes those who exulted in what they do to support the Call of Truth. As such, we have two kinds; the first are hypocrites, while the second have to do with the believers whose exultation is judged lawful. Allah the Almighty states in the Quran that the believers are allowed to rejoice in the Bounty and Grace of Allah. (Yunus: 58)

So, Allah the Almighty did not forbid all kinds of exultation; rather, they were permitted to exult in His Bounty. But in another place in the Quran, we find Him Glorified is He forbidding exultation, exactly as it happened in the story of Qarun.

In the Quran, He the Almighty states that the people of Qarun advised him not to exult, for Allah the Almighty does not like the exultant. (al-Qasas: 76)

As such, we find that there are verses in the Quran that declare exultation forbidden, and others allowing the believers to rejoice and exult. So, the essence of exultation itself is not detested, but what is detestable are the reasons behind the exultation. As for the believers, they rejoice the Victory of Allah and with making His Word supreme which are legal reasons. As for the forbidden reasons, they include expressing opposition to any divine law for the sake of eradicating it. As a matter of fact, this is what the disbeliever rejoices in. But the genuine exultation is that which is not followed by regret and, thus, the exultation of the believers is continuous to the end of time, and even after that. As for the exultation of the disbelievers, the hypocrites and the people of the Book, who lied to Allah the Almighty it is forbidden, and they will regret their actions. In reality, the person who shows his true feelings is always sad.

So, Allah the Almighty wants to protect the believers against the forces of disbelief that oppose them, and who exult in what they did against you, so what they did should not weaken you. As well, you should not think that they will be saved from the fire. As long as their exultation leads to their eventual punishment, it is, in effect, something which is worthless.

But what did those, who are referred to by Allah saying ‘Do not think [Prophet] that those who exult in what they have done...’ do? This verse may refer to the people of the Book who concealed the description of Prophet Muhammad in their Book because the previous verse says: ‘Allah took a pledge from those who were given the Scripture– ‘Make it known to people; do not conceal it’– but they tossed the pledge over their shoulders....”’ So, what did these people do? They concealed the description of Prophet Muhammad mentioned in their Book and revelled in what they did. In addition, they sought praise for things they had not done, by those disbelievers who are like them.

As a matter of fact, a person may sin but regrets committing the sin. However, if they persist in taking pride in what they did, this is considered another sin. As such, committing this (forbidden) act is viewed as sin and exulting in it is another sin because if they regretted the sin, it would be considered an indication of his repentance. As for that person who commits the sin, and then takes pride in what they did, is foolishness; they committed a sin, exulted in it and sought praise for what they did.

Was he to be praised for what he did not do, or for what he did? It goes without saying that he was to be praised for what he did not do because he deviated from the right path. If someone says that this verse was sent down concerning the hypocrites who left Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him during his war against the disbelievers of Mecca, it is also true. That is because those hypocrites were happy not to have the burdens and hardships of the journey, and Jihad with the believers. After the battle was over, they gave weak excuses to Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. If they regretted what they did, it would have been good for them. As for the believers, they were not aware of their lies and, consequently, they were praised. Those hypocrites committed the sin and were happy doing it; they were also safe from the hardships of war and were happy for that too; their apology was a kind of hypocrisy. In fact, this verse lays down a general principle, that is, opposing the truth is a sin and exulting in it is another sin. In addition, seeking praise for it is a third sin. So, it is a complex sin. As a matter of fact, they conceal the sin and show otherwise so that we thank them and praise them. That is why He the Almighty establishes an everlasting principle which is applicable for all times and places.

Concerning the saying of Allah the Almighty '... and seek praise for things they have not done...,' there are very important questions to be asked here: 'Are they blamed for seeking praise? Or are they blamed for seeking praise for that which they did not do?' In truth, they are blamed for seeking praise for that which they did not do. There is no blame if the person wants to be praised for an act they have done. When the Quran addresses the faculties of mankind, it knows perfectly well how to do it because it is the revelation of Allah the Almighty Who is fully aware of the nature and essence of mankind. The nature of man seeks praise from others because this act gives the person a sign of prestige which results, in turn, from one's own work. It is known for certain that people do not praise one's existence, except for their actions and deeds.

As long as people love praise, it will encourage them to do good deeds so that they will receive praise; and as long as they are praised, they will perfect their work. Accordingly, all people around them will benefit from their perfect work. As a matter of fact, Allah the Almighty wants benefit to spread an, hence, He does not prevent the act of praising others so that people will work more and more. If Allah the Almighty forbade the act of praising, this would necessitate that only those people with outstanding abilities would be the ones who work, while those with poor abilities would not benefit the society any more. As such, those people with poor abilities are in need of praise so that they work more and more, and so on. It goes without saying that the person who seeks the praise of people will not gain the rank of the person who seeks the praise of Allah the Almighty. However, we will praise them so that they will utilise their instinct for loving praise and, as a consequence, increase the number of workers. When Allah the Almighty tells us about the issue of praising the good and criticising the bad in the story of Dhu Al-Qarnayn, we find that He Glorified is He tells us through Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that He is the One that established him in the land and granted him means of access to everything. (al-Kahf: 83-84)

This verse clearly indicates that people have no power to establish themselves, but it is the Power of Allah the Almighty that does so. Therefore, if he is a true believer, he will not be deluded by those means that cause him to disobey. That is because belief makes the believer fully aware of the fact that means are established by Allah the Almighty. To conclusively prove that He the Almighty is the One Who makes means, He Glorified is He tells that He takes the Kingdom from whomever He wants, and grants it to whomever He wants. Accordingly, we say to such people who understand otherwise: ‘If the means were established by you, you should firmly adhere to them. But they are a gift from Allah the Almighty Who tells us in the Quran that He granted means of access to whomever He wants’. In reality, means are of various kinds; they are means that directly accompany actions, and means that precede them. For instance, if you wear a beautiful dress, this means that you brought a beautiful piece of cloth and gave it to a tailor who made it perfectly. But even before the tailor made it, it was woven from cotton which is the fruit of the processes of ploughing, planting and irrigating. If you reflect on the direct means, you should then follow them back to their source, and you will come to something which has no cause, a matter which obviously indicates that He the Almighty is the One Who makes and establishes causes.

If you carefully examine the chain of anything in existence, you must reach the most preliminary source which is Allah the Almighty. Electric light is a striking example of this. You will find factories that manufacture the special glasses for these bulbs, whereas another factory manufacture the wires within the light itself, and so on, until you will arrive at something human hands have nothing to do with, and as a result, you will admit that it is Allah the Almighty Who makes all causes. For example, when you sit on a chair, you may say: 'The carpenter made it after getting the wood from the dealer who, in turn, brought it from the woods. But how did the wood get into the woods?' You will say: 'I do not know'. Yet, if you are a true believer, you will say: 'Allah is the One Who created it'. As such, you will find, from examining the chain of anything in this life, that Allah is the One Who created everything. In the Quran, He the Almighty tells that He granted Dhu Al-Qarnyn the means of access to everything. Thus, when Allah gave him the means, he achieved the results. He the Almighty continues the story of Dhu Al-Qarnyn. He Glorified is He tells us that when Dhu Al-Qarnyn reached the place where the sun sets, he found it going down into a black sea, and found by it, inhabitants. As a matter of fact, when you are on a ship, you will see the sun at the time of sunset sinking in the sea, but when you reach that particular place, you will find that the sun is intact. That is because it never vanishes, it 'sets in a spring of dark mud'. He the Almighty continues the story of Dhu Al-Qarnyn, confirming that he found inhabitants by this place, and they asked him either to punish [them], or else adopt among them [a way of] goodness. (al-Kahf: 86)

If we carefully examine it, we will find that Allah the Almighty authorises Dhu Al-Qarnyn either to punish these people or to guide them to righteousness. Dhu Al-Qarnyn understood that this is an authorisation from Allah to him, but he chose to impose severe punishments on the people. He declared that he would punish those who did wrong in this present life so as to prevent evil from spreading among people. But this is not the only punishment they are going to be afflicted with; they will return to their Lord to be punished with a terrible punishment. We notice that Dhu Al-Qarnyn did not describe his punishment as "nukran/terrible," but he did so while describing the punishment afflicted by Allah; why? That is because when a human inflicts punishment on another, they do so according to their human ability. Accordingly, the punishment of Allah is in accordance with His Power. So, can we endure the punishment of Allah- we seek Refuge in Allah? Of course, we have no power to endure it. As for those who believed, Dhu Al-Qarnyn took another position. Allah the Almighty tells us that Dhu Al-Qarnyn gave a goodly reward to those who believed and did righteous deeds. As well, he spoke to them using his authority with ease. As such, those people who like to be praised ask: 'Why did he honour him?' Accordingly, he acted like one that should be honoured. It is for this reason that you will find youths competing with one another to play football, but why? That is because they see that people honour those who score goals and, therefore, they want to score goals.

Moreover, our pure religion instructs us to thank those who do us favours so that they are encouraged to continue to do favours. In this regard, the following athar (i.e. a statement said by pious people) may be quoted: ['He who does not thank people, do not thank Allah.'] So, the love of praise is something which is naturally and inherently embedded in man. In order to motivate people to work, you should ask them to do those kinds of jobs which fit their various abilities. But in case the excellence of work is confined to those people who do not like praise, we will reduce the number of the workers. That is why you will find the flawlessness of work where you find encouragement to those who perfect their work and determent for those who are careless. So, bosses should not reward those who act according to their own whims; rather, they should reward those who flawlessly perform their work. When others see that it is only those who perfectly do their work, who are rewarded and praised, they all will work hard. But if the opposite occurs, that is when disaster strikes.

Allah the Almighty says '... Do not think [Prophet] that those who exult in what they have done....' This establishes a principle and a constitution of belief applicable to all aspects of life including the relationship between the ruler and the subjects, the relationship between the individual and himself and those around him, and the relationship between a person and good deeds or sins. When a person sins, this means that they might relieve some emotion, by committing this sin. But when they realize what they did, they must regret that sin and not take pride in it.

This is the first stage. Then, they should not persist in committing the sin. But if they commit a sin and claim that they are doing a good deed to the extent that they want to be praised for this act; this sin, as such, is a compound sin. Such a person will fall under the category about which Allah says: '... never think them [to be] in safety from the punishment...'

The word 'Al-mafazah/escaping the punishment,' means to go to a place where a person thinks they are safe, i.e. that they will find success in this place. The word, 'Al-mafazah" in Arabic is used to describe the desert in terms of optimism. They do not call it 'mahlakah/a place of destruction' because the person who travels through it will die. So, they call it 'Al-mafazah to encourage optimism, or because the person who passes it will win, or because it is an open area and, by doing so, man will not be faced with any wild animals or enemies. All of these meanings are true, for one has escaped all the dangers. In reality, hills and valleys may not protect a person from the fierce attacks of the wild beasts that can injure him. But when he is in open land, he can see these wild beasts and animals and manages to be safe. Whoever believes that the desert is a place of destruction let him know that it has been called so to inspire optimism, exactly as Arabs call the person who is stung by a snake 'Al-Salim/The Healthy Person'.

Due to the fact that we are optimistic, our customs necessitate us to call an item by its opposite. For example, if you are someone's guest and you are offered coffee and after you finish, the servant comes and the employer says to him: 'Take the cups which are full', instead of saying: 'Take the empty cups'. This is a kind of optimism.

The saying of Allah the Almighty '... never think them [to be] in safety from the punishment, and for them is a painful punishment' indicates that those people think that they will escape punishment eventhough they do not believe in the Truth, and nor do they believe that it is Allah the Almighty Who is the One Who has control over all their affairs. As such, they wrongly think that their victory in this worldly life will not be followed by defeat. But Allah the Almighty follows this verse by saying: 'Walillahi mulku as-samawati' 'Control of the heavens and earth belongs to Allah...' He Glorified is He has control over what He possesses, and no one is beyond His possession. As long as Allah has dominion over the heavens and the earth, for instance, when He says: 'Do not think [Prophet] that those who exult in what they have done and seek praise for things they have not done; do not think they will escape the torment. An agonizing torment awaits them.' (Al-'Imran: 188)

This promise will certainly be fulfilled because no one can escape it. Due to this, people who have been granted insight, smartness and abundant wisdom say, 'Save your obedience for the One you cannot do without, and save your gratitude for the One Whose favour never leaves you, and save your submission for the One Whose dominion and sovereignty you could never leave, So Allah's words,

وَلِلَّهِ مُلْكُ ٱلسَّمَٰوَٰتِ وَٱلْأَرْضِ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ شَىْءٍ قَدِيرٌ ﴿١٨٩﴾

Control of the heavens and earth belongs to God; God has power over everything [189] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 189)

indicate that when Allah Glorified is He promises, He is quite able to enforce what He promises, and no one is able to evade Him. This confirms the meaning. If the enemies of the religion delight in the immediate aftermath of their apparent victory, the believers apprehend the end result and what it will be. For this reason, you find that the True Lord Glorified is He says: 'May the hands of Abu Lahab be ruined! May he be ruined too!* neither his wealth nor his gains will help him: he will burn in the Flaming Fire, and so will his wife, the firewood-carrier,* with a palm-fibre rope around her neck' (al-Masad: 1-5). This chapter was revealed about the uncle of the Messenger of Allah Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and it is one of the evidences of believing in the truthfulness of Muhammad's conveyance of the message of Allah, for Abu Lahab was a disbeliever. There were many disbelievers just like him. Was not 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him one of them? Was not Khalid ibn Al-Walid Allah be pleased with him one of them? Was not 'Ikrima ibn Abu Jahl Allah be pleased with him one of them? Was not Safwan Allah be pleased with him one of them? All of these people were disbelievers, and then became believers. Who informed Muḥammad peace and blessings be upon him about Abu Lahab when He said: 'May the hands of Abu Lahab be ruined! May he be ruined too!* neither his wealth nor his gains will help him: he will burn in the Flaming Fire, and so will his wife, the firewood-carrier,* with a palm-fibre rope around her neck.' (al-Masad: 1-5); this chapter of Quran was recited and memorised by many believers. After all that Abu Lahab would not say: 'I testify that there is no God but Allah and that Mohammad is the Messenger of Allah. He might have added, 'If Muhammad says that I will enter a blazing fire, I am a believer!' Who informed him peace and blessings be upon him that Abu Lahab would not do these, whereas ibn Al-Khattab and 'Amr ibn Al-'Aṣ, Allah be pleased with them, did? The One Who informed Muḥammad peace and blessings be upon him of this knew well that Abu Lahab would never choose faith, thus the Quran states this as evidence of its truthfulness. After that, indeed, Abu Lahab died a disbeliever.

It is as though Allah Glorified is He wants to emphasise this by clarifying: 'Do not imagine that this threat of punishment would fail to materialise, for I am the One, the Eternal Refuge and Self-Sufficing, and no one can oppose this judgement of Mine.' And so He says in the chapter of al-Ikhlaṣ: 'Say, 'He is Allah, [who is] One Allah,* the Eternal Refuge.* He begot no one nor was He begotten.* No one is comparable to Him.' (al-Ikhlas: 1- 4)

As long as He Alone is Allah, the One, what He says would not be contradicted by any other assumed god, and His word will last forever. So, when the True Lord Glorified is He after saying, 'Do not think they will escape the torment. An agonizing torment awaits them.' (Al-'Imran: 188), and says, 'And to Allah belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth' (Al-'Imran: 189), He wants to make it clear that He added the threat to this new fact of faith: 'And to Allah belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth' (Al-'Imran: 189). He mentions the heavens and the earth as if they are two brackets since the heavens overshadow, while the earth carries. Therefore, we are all enclosed between two things that belong to Allah Glorified is He. It is as if Allah Glorified is He says to mankind: 'As long as you are all surrounded by Allah's dominion, where can you go?' 'And to Allah belongs the dominion of the heavens and the earth' (Al-'Imran: 189). There might be someone who has dominion over something, yet has no power to rule it. As such, Allah Glorified is He clarifies this by saying His case is unlike that since He possesses both dominion and power: 'And Allah has power over everything.' (Al-'Imran: 189) Then, He depicts another image of faith, to help believers realise it in the souls. After the introduction which confirmed Allah's truthfulness in all that He says, which is witnessed in real-life events:

إِنَّ فِي خَلۡقِ ٱلسَّمَٰوَٰتِ وَٱلۡأَرۡضِ وَٱخۡتِلَٰفِ ٱلَّيۡلِ وَٱلنَّهَارِ لَأٓيَٰتٖ لِّأُوْلِي ٱلۡأَلۡبَٰبِ ﴿١٩٠﴾

There truly are signs in the creation of the heavens and earth, and in the alternation of night and day, for those with understanding [190] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 190)

Allah Glorified is He wants to build a religious conception on solid foundation in the human soul, amazed by this universe, in which there is a sky designed by Allah Glorified is He that has no pillars to support it, while beneath it lies the celestial bodies and the firm earth, would it not reflect on the One Who created these things? By Allah Glorified is He if someone were to wake from his sleep and find that a canopy had been erected in the field during the night, he would get up saying, 'What's going on?' So what about someone who opens his eyes and finds this well-organised universe which provides him with the means by which he lives?

For this reason, in another chapter, He explains this point in a way that clarifies to us the concept of faith in the human mind. We do not simply wait for the admonisher who comes to us with a message and a prophecy to show us the path chosen for us by the Creator. Rather, he made it mandatory that we use our natural disposition to be directly be aware of the Creator. As we said before, if a person's plane crashed in the desert, and he found no water, no trees or no people there, then, he fell asleep due to exhaustion and woke up to find a table laden with delicious food, by Allah Glorified is He, and before stretching out his hand to partake of it, would he not stop to wonder who it was that made or gave all this? His amazement at what had happened would make him wonder who it was that brought it. He would think about this for even tasting the food, before giving in to his hunger. The same can be said of those people who open their eyes to find this amazing universe in which not one of them would have claimed to have created it. If one of them had claimed to have created it, the argument would have been simplified; yet none have claimed this. Has anyone ever claimed to have created this universe which we all see in its wonderful order and with its sound laws? No, never. Therefore, whoever did indeed claim to have created it would be safe in his claim until someone else came along and claimed to be the one who created it. Yet this has never happened, despite the existence of atheists and fabricators who invent lies about Allah Glorified is He. For this, Allah Glorified is He says: 'Who created the heavens and earth?' (an-Naml: 60)

It is as though the True Lord says: 'If it were not Me Who created them, then who did?' No one has ever dared to ascribe the universe to himself, especially since atheists and disbelievers are unable to create even the most trivial of things out of nothing. For example, Allah Glorified is He chose not to create a drinking glass with its man-made shape in order that mankind would manufacture it with their hands; therefore they would understand that everything is accomplished by using the means of His creation. A drinking glass is a trivial matter that adds luxury to life. Before it was invented, we had been able to drink. There had been no tree that had borne glasses as its fruit; instead, a human being designed it simply out of a desire to make life easier. This small thing required a designer with great knowledge of different sciences and materials. He then searched the earth for the material that, when melted, resulted in this transparency and shine. He experimented with different elements of the earth and found that only sand would do.(1) He discovered this material and mixed it with other substances in order to melt it. The design of the drinking glass required skilled workers and scientists; all of this just for a little glass cup which could have been done without. Think about what was required to create it: great effort was needed to roam the earth, examining all its elements and many means of production. Then, people deduced the correct chemical proportions for the original materials and what was required to create them.

Every production needs matching requirements; as such, no one ever claimed to have created these. Thus, the True Lord asks who created all this. When He asks a question, He does not do so because He wants to find out the answer; He is perfectly able to say: ‘I am the One Who created the sky and the earth.’ So what would the one who is asked do? He would search for an answer, and eventually, would find no one but Allah Glorified is He.

(1) It is said that the sand of Sinai is one of the best materials for this production.

The questioner would not put forth a question like this unless he was sure that the answer could only be the one he intended. 'Who created the heavens and earth? Who sends down water from the sky for you— with which we cause to grow...' (an-Naml: 60). In this verse, He mentions the matter directly: ‘…with which We cause gardens of delight to grow…’ (an-Naml: 60), i.e. pleasing to the eye with their greenery, vigour, freshness, shade, flowers and fruits. He does not restrict His words to saying: ‘that you may eat therefrom’ because only the owner eats the fruits, whereas the beautiful view cannot be withheld from anyone to look upon it and enjoy what they see. When any of us sees a beautiful garden, it pleases us to see it. True, you cannot stretch out your hand to eat its fruits since it does not belong to you, but can anyone stop you from enjoying its view or its pleasing smell? No.

Thus, the True Lord Glorified is He mentions the bounties that are available to all, both those who own and those who do not, by saying: 'gardens of delight'. We know that when the True Lord Glorified and Exalted is He reminds us of the favours he bestows upon us, He does so to clarify to us that we should not mistake the purpose of these things as just with which to fill our bellies. In essence, there are many beautiful delights from a garden that we are capable of enjoying in other ways rather than simply eating. There are kinds of trees that produce no edible fruit, yet they must have other purposes: their beautiful leaves give shade, and they perfume the air with their scent and they produce needed wood. In addition to this, some trees also produce fine fruits that are beneficial.

For this reason, the True Lord Glorified is He says: 'It is He who sends down water from the sky. With it, We produce the shoots of each plant, then bring greenery from it, and from that, We bring out grains, one riding on the other in close-packed rows. From the date palm comes clusters of low-hanging dates, and there are gardens of vines, olives, and pomegranates, alike yet different. Watch their fruits as they grow and ripen! In all this there are signs for those who would believe.' (al-An‘am: 99)

Allah asks mankind: 'You have no power to make the trees grow in them— is it another god beside Allah? No! But they are people who take others to be equal with Allah.' (an-Naml: 60)

One of the orientalists gave the following shallow remark: ‘Does Allah censure and reproach His creatures for being just?’ Since the Arabic word ‘ya’diloon’ usually means 'to be just'; however in this verse it means 'take others to be equal with Allah '. He did not understand the true meaning since the meaning of the word ‘adl’ (justice) in this verse is to deviate and swerve away from the truth. Allah Glorified is He then says: 'Who is it that made the earth a stable place to live? Who made rivers flow through it? Who set immovable mountains on it and created a barrier between the fresh and salt water? Is it another god beside God? No! But most of them do not know.' (an-Naml: 61)

It is He Glorified is He Who created the earth and placed within it rivers and firm mountains. The True Lord Glorified is He explains the reason for the existence of the firm mountains in another place in the Noble Quran: 'Say, "How can you disregard the One Who created the earth in two Days? How can you set up other gods as His equals? He is the Lord of all the worlds! He placed solid mountains on it, blessed it and measured out its varied provisions for all who seek them - all in four Days without distinction for those who ask.’ (Fussilat: 9-10).

Why did you bless the earth, O, Allah? Allah Glorified is He blessed the mountains and determined therein the sustenance for the inhabitants of the earth. ‘Sustenance’ means anything that is useful to preserve life. We know that sustenance is derived from crops and that crops always grow in fertile land. We also know that fertile land exists in valleys and that a valley is land between two mountains. Why is a valley between two mountains fertile? It is because when rain falls from the sky, it lands on the mountains; and as we know, mountains are affected by factors of erosion. Hot weather comes after cold; heat makes the land expand, while cold makes it contract. This constant expanding and contracting makes the surface of the mountains split. Therefore, when rain falls, it sweeps through these cracks, so that the mountain's surface flows down from the summit powerfully and turns into a soft substance, which is called alluvial mud or silt. This is what used to happen to us (in Egypt) from Ethiopia and, in turn, caused the fertility of the Nile Valley.

Thus, mountains are stores of sustenance. Out of Allah's bounty, He made mountains firm. If they had been brittle, a small amount of rainfall would have been sufficient to bring them down entirely making the earth a single flat plane; as such, humanity would not have had the benefit of even half a metre of fertile land, thus causing famine to soon follow. We know that the True Lord the Exalted brought about, along with the manifold increase of humans, the increased manifold of the means of sustenance. How did the True Lord Glorified is He make sustenance increase?

We see that mountains have summits and bases and that between every two mountains there is a valley. We know that the narrowest part of a valley is the lowest part, and the widest part is the highest. Contrary to valleys, mountains are narrowest at the peak and widest at the base; in other words, the peak of a mountain is narrower than its base. When silt descends from the mountain by means of rain, it descends to the valley, raising the level of the valley floor and increasing the area of the valley. Every time rain falls on the mountain, the area of the adjacent valley increases, and the rain carries with it pieces of the mountain; this is silt. When the True Lord Glorified is He decides to bring about the end, every mountain will break into fragments, and He will bid the Hour to begin by saying, ‘Begin now.’

He says: 'Who set immovable mountains on it and created a barrier between the fresh and salt water? Is it another god beside God? No! But most of them do not know.' (an-Naml: 61) Elsewhere in the Quran, He says: 'He released the two bodies of [fresh and salt] water. They meet, yet there is a barrier between them that they do not cross.” (ar-Rahman: 19-20)

Water moves freely in its own course; Allah made it flow as springs and rivers in the earth. Man might dig in a certain place and find sweet water, while in another place, someone else digs and finds salt water. Why, then, does the salt water not seep into the sweet when they are both underground? It must be the case that salt water has courses different from those of sweet water, and, as such, neither one transgresses and mixes with the other. Why is this? It is due to the fact that we find that sweet water comes from above, and we find that the sources of rivers are always high up. Then, they flow down into the sea. The True Lord Glorified is He did not make the level of salt water higher the level of sweet water so that salt water would not flow into sweet water. Rather He wanted to allow people to quench their thirsts with water, and He wanted plants to grow. Thus, sweet water would flow into stores of water, whether on land or at sea. Then, afterwards when evaporation occurs, the water rises as vapour and turns into clouds, which, in turn, rains back down as fresh water. The amount of water that Allah Glorified is He created in the beginning remains the same, without increasing or decreasing.

A person drinks much water throughout his life. Does all this water he drinks remain in his body, or is it expelled as bodily waste? A person does not store up any water except the amount of water that is currently in him. The human body is around ninety percent water. After a person dies, the water evaporates from him, while the rest of his body goes beneath the ground. Therefore, the amount of water remains the same, but it submits to the different roles that Allah Glorified is He decrees for it.

After this, the True Lord Glorified is He says: 'Who is it that answers the distressed when they call upon Him? Who removes their suffering? Who makes you successors in the earth? Is it another god with Allah? Little is that you reflect. (an-Naml: 62)

The meaning of 'distressed' is the person who expended his human means yet finds nothing with which he can preserve his life. Due to this, the True Lord Glorified is He says: 'When trouble befalls man, he cries out to Us, whether lying on his side, sitting or standing, but as soon as We relieve him of his trouble, he goes on his way as if he had never cried out to Us to remove his trouble. In this way, the deeds of such heedless people are made attractive to them.' (Yunus: 12)

In this regard, the True Lord Glorified is He also says in another verse in the Noble Quran: 'When you get into distress at sea, those whom you pray to besides Him desert you, but when He brings you back safely to land, you turn away: man is ever ungrateful.' (al-Isra': 67)

When man is afflicted with a great calamity, he does not lie to himself, even if he is a disbeliever. When he finds that none of the material means before him can help him, he seeks refuge in Allah Glorified is He and admits that there is only one god, Allah and Creator. Thus, he calls, 'O, my Lord!'

So, the True Lord Glorified is He says: 'Who is it that answers the distressed when they call upon Him? Who removes their suffering? Who makes you successors in the earth? Is it another god with Allah? Little is that you reflect. Who is it that guides you through the darkness on land and sea? Who sends the winds as heralds of good news before His mercy? Is it another god with Allah? God is far above the partners they put beside him! Who is it that creates life and reproduces it? Who is it that gives you provision from the heavens and earth? Is it another god with Allah? Say, "Show me your evidence then, if what you say is true.' (an-Naml: 62-64)

All of these verses serve to emphasise the word of the True Lord: 'In the creation of the heavens and the earth and in the alternation of the night and the day there are indeed signs for men of understanding.'

These are phenomena of creation. The succession of night and day means that there is one thing that follows the other, or comes after it. So, the succession of night and day has two meanings: the coming of night after day means that they are in succession, i.e. each of them is the successor of the other. Such is the case with time. Another succession is represented by the fact that the day is bright, whilst the night is dark; the day is a time of activity, whilst the night is a time of inactivity. Therefore, the succession of night and day is not just one sign; the signs are manifold for many people.

It is as though the True Lord Glorified is He and explains to us: ‘A single individual is incapable of inferring all that lies in the signs. Rather, each one of you, O, humans, must perceive one sign, and everyone who perceives a sign can benefit from it, as with others and so on.’ Inferring that the signs are widespread for most people who possess insight and utilise Allah's Glorified is He means, this implies that the Truth can be spread. Inferring is among Allah’s secrets to all of His believing creatures till the coming of the Hour. By inferring, Allah Glorified is He shows us people of true intelligence, who are not distracted by any blessing from the Giver of all blessings. This is due to the fact that Allah Glorified is He grants help when He created everything out of nothing. He gives divine support when He lends aid to those who have nothing, and He grants help when He places extra blessings upon His favours. Those who receive Allah's favours, which had existed before they did, became heedless of the True Lord Glorified is He; the favours benefit them, yet, these favours lack His blessing.

The meaning of ‘blessing’ is whatever you derive from your effort that does not result in but every good to you and to other people as well. Allah Glorified is He might grant you many ways and means, but He does not give you any blessing if you take the favour and forget the One Who granted it. If only you mention Allah Glorified is He at all times, you would have been granted both the favour and the blessing. When you see that you have something that you love, you must therefore say, 'only that which Allah wills comes to pass. There is no power save in Allah.’ (al-Kahf: 39) It is not by your own doing; it is Allah's Glorified is He Will and Power.

For this reason, they say that if you see any favour that you have, whether wealth, children, character, or attire, you should say when you see it: 'Only that which Allah wills comes to pass. There is no power save in Allah.' (al-Kahf: 39) And you will never experience anything bad from it. This is due to the fact that you have returned it to the One Who created it, and you have been guaranteed Allah's protection for it by doing so; and what ensures this protection is the plain statement: 'Only that which Allah wills comes to pass. There is no power save in Allah.' (al-Kahf: 39)

Due to this, we see Allah's Glorified is He words: 'Tell them the parable of two men: for one of them We made two gardens of grape vines, surrounded them with date palms, and put corn fields in between; both gardens yielded fruit and did not fail in any way. We made a stream flow through them, and so he had abundant fruit. One day, while talking to his friend, he said, "I have more wealth and a larger following than you." He went into his garden and wronged himself by saying, "I do not think this will ever perish or that the Last Hour will ever come— even if I were to be taken back to my Lord, I would certainly find something even better there.’ (al-Kahf: 32-36) What did his companion say? 'His companion retorted, "Have you no faith in Him Who created you from dust, from a small drop of fluid, then shaped you into a man? But for me, He is Allah my Lord, and I will never set up any partner with Him. If only, when you entered your garden, you had said, ‘This is Allah’s will. There is no power not [given] by Allah Although you see I have less wealth and offspring than you, my Lord may well give me something better than your garden, and send thunderbolts on your garden from the sky so that it becomes a heap of barren dust.' (al-Kahf: 37-40)

He should not have allowed himself to be deluded by the presence of a favour; instead, he should have ascribed it and returned it to the One Who granted it. This explains for us the meaning of the True Lord's words: 'If you are thankful, I will give you more.' (Ibrahim: 7)

The means might grant you the ends, but without the increase above these ends that Allah Glorified is He bestows in the form of blessings. Rather, they might end up causing disaster for their owner, at first giving to him and then withholding from him so that they are for him a source of deep sorrow.

So, who are 'those with understanding' (Al-'Imran: 190)?

The True Lord's answer is the following:

ٱلَّذِينَ يَذْكُرُونَ ٱللَّهَ قِيَٰمًا وَقُعُودًا وَعَلَىٰ جُنُوبِهِمْ وَيَتَفَكَّرُونَ فِى خَلْقِ ٱلسَّمَٰوَٰتِ
وَٱلْأَرْضِ رَبَّنَا مَا خَلَقْتَ هَٰذَا بَٰطِلًا سُبْحَٰنَكَ فَقِنَا عَذَابَ ٱلنَّارِ ﴿١٩١﴾ who remember God standing, sitting, and lying down, who reflect on the creation of the heavens and earth: 'Our Lord! You have not created all this without purpose – You are far above that! – so protect us from the torment of the Fire [191]

(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 191)

They say: 'Our Lord, you have not created this universe in vain.' (Al-'Imran: 191) They believe that Allah is the Truth, and He has created the heavens and the earth with Truth. He ordained their laws and natural order with Truth; therefore, we must receive the favours that He created for us with Truth. If some people receive these favours according to other than the Truth, it will bring to them evil consequences. It is said that if a true believer of the sons of Israel, before the message of Jesus peace be upon him, worshipped Allah with sincerity for thirty years, a cloud would overshadow him wherever he went. When people were overshadowed with a cloud, others knew that he had worshipped Allah Glorified is He sincerely for thirty years.

One of them worshipped Allah[1] Glorified is He for thirty years, but saw no cloud had come to give him shade. He complained of this to his mother[2]. She said to him, 'Perhaps you were negligent of something.' He said to her, 'O, mother, I cannot remember anything of the kind!' She replied, 'Perhaps, you once looked to the sky and did not reflect upon it.' He said, 'Perhaps, this did indeed occur.' She replied, 'This is why this has happened to you.' This story reminds us of the importance of reflecting on Allah Glorified is He constantly.

It is narrated that our master 'Ali Allah be pleased with him said, 'When the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him woke up during the night, he would clean his teeth and then look to the sky.'

To look to the sky is to look to something high above. Looking to the earth is also a means of reflecting on the wisdom of the Creator, but looking to the sky makes one aware of the loftiness of the Creator. For this reason, the Arab who lies down on his back, while sleeping, and then wakes up to see the beautiful blue colour of the sky and the stars shining, and therein, says: 'I bear witness that you have a Lord and Creator. O, Allah, forgive me!' This man knows when to call upon Allah, and how to call, so Allah forgives him.

The books of Prophetic biography narrate that 'Once the Messenger of Allah Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him went to sleep one night, a night he happened to be spending with 'Aisha, Allah be pleased with her. 'Aisha said to 'Abdullah ibn 'Umar, Allah be pleased with them, "He slept next to me so that my skin was touching his, and then said, 'O, 'Aisha, do you give me permission to worship my Lord this night?'"[3]

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him asked her permission because the night was her right. 'Aisha Allah be pleased with her and then said, "O, Messenger of Allah, I love your closeness, and I love what your inclination, so I give you permission."

She graciously acted with cautiousness, for she loved Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and so she said, 'I love your closeness.' This statement has a nice meaning. It so happens that one of those who are stubborn in their opposition to Islam said that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was much older than ‘Aisha Allah be pleased with her and this statement of hers was due to her indifference to him. However, ‘Aisha Allah be pleased with her had already put this suspicion to rest by saying, ‘O, Messenger of Allah, I love your closeness, and I love your inclination, so I give you permission.’ This is a lesson that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him gave us in order that we would know how to behave with our spouses, even if the thing that keeps us from them is worship. He did not want believers, who perform everything that is obligatory upon them, to be distracted from taking care of their family, even by worship, except after obtaining their families' permission first.

Why is this? It is due to the fact that Allah Glorified is He requires that the wife not perform any supererogatory act of worship without obtaining permission from her husband first. If the wife wishes to offer a supererogatory prayer or fasting, she must ask her husband’s permission first. If he grants it, she can offer the supererogatory act of worship, but if he does not, she should not perform this extra act of worship. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘the best of you is the one who is best to your family, and I am the best of you to my family.'(1)

When the husband approaches his wife, he wants to fulfil her human needs. For this reason, when the wife wants to have her time, especially if she has co-wives, this time is her right. If the husband wants to use this time for supererogatory worship, he must, therefore, ask her permission first. A woman’s state of mind, when she has no co-wives, might make her more accepting whenever her husband asks her permission to engage wholly for worship. Because of this, we see that the scholars entitled to interpret Islamic law have successfully explained this issue: A woman(2) went to ‘Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him to complain about her husband because he would not be intimate with her. ‘Umar Allah be pleased with him was with another companion of the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him whom he asked to give her a legal opinion on the matter. The Companion said to the husband, 'Suppose that you had four wives. So, if that were to be your case, your wife has the right to one night out of every four.' If Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him asked permission of 'Aisha Allah be pleased with her to worship his Lord, this implies that this is a lesson to all husbands to treat their spouses well so that they do not leave them unfulfilled.

(2) The story of the woman who complained of her husband to ‘Umar ibn Al-Khattab peace be upon him

However, we find that many people do not ask their spouses for permission to offer supererogatory worship and may even spend their nights engaged in sin. This is what ruins households and families. Households are ruined because the husband is distracted from his wife, going to see his friends in cafes and other places, not caring about the members of his family.

Why does he not go home to comfort his family, fulfil their needs, and spend time with his wife and children? Would his wife not want to feel reassured that her spouse is with her and not somewhere else? This would make things stable. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him asked permission of 'Aisha Allah be pleased with her and she gave it to him. 'Aisha Allah be pleased with her then continued, 'He headed to the water skin and performed ablution. Then, he stood in prayer and wept. After that, he recited the Quran and wept more. He then praised and glorified Allah Glorified is He and wept more until the ground became wet. Finally, Bilal Allah be pleased with him came and said, "O, Messenger of Allah, it is time for dawn prayer!" He saw him weeping and asked, "O, Messenger of Allah, do you weep, while your past and future sins have been forgiven?" Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him replied, "Should I not be a grateful servant? O, Bilal, this night a revelation has been sent to me": "In the creation of the heavens and the earth and in the alternation of the night and the day there are indeed signs for men of understanding. Those who remember Allah standing, sitting and lying on their sides, and ponder over the creation of the heavens and the earth; and say, `Our Lord, you have not created this universe in vain. Holy are You. Save us then from the punishment of the fire. Our Lord, whomsoever you cause to enter the fire, him You have surely disgraced. And the wrongdoers shall have no helpers. Our Lord, we have heard a Crier calling us unto faith, saying, "You believe in your Lord," and we have believed. Our Lord, forgive us, therefore, our sins and remit from us our evils and in death join us with the righteous. Our Lord, give us what You have promised to us through Your Messengers and disgrace us not on the Day of Resurrection. Surely, You break not Your promise. So their Lord answered their prayers by saying, "'I will not allow the deeds of any one of you to be lost, whether you are male or female. You are from one another." Those, therefore, who have emigrated and have been driven out of their homes, and have been persecuted for My cause, and have fought and been slain, I will surely remit from them their evil deeds and will cause them to enter gardens through which streams flow - a reward from Allah, and with Allah is the best of rewards. Let not the moving about of the disbelievers in the land deceives you. This is only a brief enjoyment, after which hellfire will be their home– a miserable resting place! But those who were mindful of their Lord will have Gardens graced with flowing streams where they will stay as a reward from Allah. What Allah has is best for those who are truly good. Some of the people of the Book believe in Allah, in what has been sent down to you and in what was sent down to them,: humbling themselves before Allah., They would never sell Allah's revelation for a small price. These people will have their rewards with their Lord. Allah is swift in reckoning. O, you who believe, be steadfast and strive to excel in steadfastness. Be on your guard and fear Allah so that you may prosper.' (Al-'Imran: 190-200)

Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him then added, 'Woe unto him who recites it and reflects not upon it, and woe unto he who lets it pass between his lips and ponders it not!'(1) This is what has been told from our master Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him concerning the verses of the chapter of Al-'Imran, beginning with Allah's Glorified is He words: 'In the creation of the heavens and the earth and in the alternation of the night and the day…." (Al-'Imran: 190-200)

These verses contain guidance within them, sound reasoning and remembrance of the True Lord at all times, whether standing, sitting or reclining. The True Lord Glorified is He says: 'those who remember Allah standing, sitting and lying on their sides, and ponder over the creation of the heavens and the earth and say, "Our Lord, you have not recreated this universe in vain. Holy are You. Save us then from the punishment of the Fire.' (Al-'Imran: 191)

(1) Narrated by Al-Bukhari in (At-Tahajjud), and by Muslim and At-Tirmidhi in (As-Salat), and by An-Nasa'i in (Qiyam Al-Layl), and by Ibn Majah in (Al-Iqama), and by Imam Ahmad in (Al-Musnad).

In this verse, we see the requirement of 'those who are with understanding' is that they remember Allah Glorified is He sitting, standing and lying on their sides. Some of the scholars explain that the meaning of the True Lord's words 'Those who remember Allah standing, sitting and lying on their sides,' (Al-'Imran: 191) is the prayer, since those who are unable to pray standing pray seated, and those who cannot pray seated pray lying down. We say to these scholars, 'Why have you made the meaning of this statement so specific, when the occasion here is that of generalisation? The Quran does not contradict itself; rather, parts of it serve to explain others.' The True Lord Glorified is He says about the Prayer of Peril: 'When you [Prophet] are with the believers, leading them in prayer, let a group of them stand up in prayer with you, taking their weapons with them. When they have finished their prostration, let them take up their positions at the back. Then let the other group, who have not yet prayed, pray with you, also on their guard and armed with their weapons. The disbelievers would dearly like you to be heedless of your weapons and baggage, in order for them to take you in a single assault. You will not be blamed if you lay aside your arms when you are overtaken by heavy rain or illness, but be on your guard. Indeed, Allah has prepared a humiliating punishment for the disbelievers!' (an-Nisa': 102)

The believer should not misunderstand and think that he should remember Allah Glorified is He only during the five obligatory prayers. Thus, He says: 'And when you have finished your prayer, continue to remember Allah - standing, sitting, and lying on your sides - and once you are safe, keep up regular prayer, for prayer is obligatory for the believers at prescribed times.' (an-Nisa': 103)

In other words, the prayer is performed first, and then performed again, making the remembrance of Allah Glorified is He as a continuous state, obligated both within the prayer and outside of it. After that, believers reflect upon the creation of the heavens and the earth, realising that Allah Glorified is He did not create this in vain. They are required to say: 'Holy are You. Save us then from the punishment of the Fire.' (Al-'Imran: 191)

Why? Because all of this remembrance does not, in any way, fulfil our Lord's right upon us, and for this reason, they then say in the next verse:

رَبَّنَآ إِنَّكَ مَن تُدۡخِلِ ٱلنَّارَ فَقَدۡ أَخۡزَيۡتَهُۥۖ وَمَا لِلظَّٰلِمِينَ مِنۡ أَنصَارٖ ١٩٢

Our Lord! You will truly humiliate those You commit to the Fire. The evildoers have no one to help them [192] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 192)

This is the Greatness. They do not mention the suffering of those who enter hell; they mention the disgrace that Allah Glorified is He will envelope those who enter hell, as though the disgrace is worse than the torment of the fire. Then, who was it that gave us this bounty? It is He the Glorified Who helped us to remember Him and enabled us to reflect on the creation of the heavens and the earth. Is it right that we repay this with ingratitude? And what will happen to those people who enter hell? They will be disgraced [Allah is our refuge]. 'And the wrongdoers shall have no helpers.' (Al-'Imran: 192), i.e. they will have no one to protect them from the torment of the fire.

After this, the True Lord Glorified is He says:

رَّبَّنَآ إِنَّنَا سَمِعۡنَا مُنَادِيٗا يُنَادِي لِلۡإِيمَٰنِ أَنۡ ءَامِنُواْ بِرَبِّكُمۡ فَـَٔامَنَّاۚ
رَبَّنَا فَٱغۡفِرۡ لَنَا ذُنُوبَنَا وَكَفِّرۡ عَنَّا سَيِّـَٔاتِنَا وَتَوَفَّنَا مَعَ ٱلۡأَبۡرَارِ ١٩٣

Our Lord! We have heard someone calling us to faith, "Believe in your Lord", and we have believed. Our Lord! Forgive us our sins, wipe out our bad deeds, and grant that we join the righteous when we die [193] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 193)

It is as though before any messenger comes, mankind must use their hearts and intellects to recognise the signs inherent in the universe, and they must notice that behind the universe is a power, but this power is obscure to their minds. What is this power? They observe this amazing universe and say to themselves, 'It is impossible that this universe could have no creator. There must be a power behind it that has wisdom and omnipotence.' This is the least that the intellect should be able to arrive at, but can the intellect realise that the name of this power is Allah? Can the intellect realise what this power wants from it?

The answer is no. Therefore, it is necessary that a messenger should come to pass on this power's will. For this reason, we said that this is the error that the philosophers fell into, for it is they who sought for meaning behind the material world. We know that knowledge is of two kinds: material knowledge based on experiment and metaphysical knowledge that searches beyond the material realm. This kind of knowledge forms the labyrinth of philosophers; it is a confusing place, where no school agrees with another, along with no student in a school agreeing with another.

Why do they not agree? It is due to the fact that they are searching for what lies beyond the material realm, which is the unseen, and the unseen cannot enter a laboratory, whereas material things can. When a laboratory gives the results of an analysis, there is no bias in these results. If someone performs a scientific experiment in a laboratory with true impartiality, the laboratory will give him results. If he does so without impartiality, it will give him nothing.

Due to this, we always say that there is no difference in the material sciences between Soviet communist science and American capitalist science; there is no 'capitalist chemistry' or 'communist chemistry', or 'Russian electricity' or 'American electricity'. Chemistry is one, and electricity is one since they are the products of laboratories and material experimentation.

It is amazing that these deluded people do not realise that material science, which is subject to experimentation, laboratories and inanimate materials that do not prejudice, has become something that each side attempts to steal from the other. We find that spies travel from one power to the other to steal plans for aircraft and rockets, and they spy on one another so that they can gain knowledge of material science.

However, what about the science of desires and theories! We find that each side builds walls so that desires cannot infiltrate the society. They build barriers when it comes to desires, but when it comes to material science, they turn into thieves. Why do they not include desires along with material science? Each side is bent on enmity towards other's convictions in terms of law, society, and economics, but when it comes to material science, they steal from one another. This is due to the fact that theoretical convictions follow desires, while material sciences, as we have said, follow practical facts that cannot be biased.

So, when man uses his intellect, he will certainly conclude that there is an overwhelming power behind the universe. Arabs innately knew this by saying, ‘Camel droppings indicate the presence of a camel, and footprints indicate footsteps. Does all of this not indicate the presence of the Most Subtle, the All Aware?’

It is innate evidence, which proves the existence of power, but what is this power called? We do not know. So, the ear calls for someone to tell it the name of this power. If someone comes and says, ‘I have been sent from this power, and its name is Allah’, it is necessary that people should flock to him since he will have solved the puzzle that has absorbed them. For this reason, believers say: Our Lord, we have heard a Crier calling us unto faith by saying, "You believe in your Lord, and we have believed.' (Al-‘Imran: 193)

It was as though the intellect of each one of them was obsessed with the need to know the Creator. After this, they said: 'Our Lord, whomsoever You causes to enter the Fire, him You have surely disgraced. And the wrongdoers shall have no helpers.' (Al-‘Imran: 192)

The first thing they that came to their mind, was averting evil, since virtuous people always find fault in themselves. Thus, they said: Our Lord, forgive us, therefore, our sins and remit from us our evils and in death join us with the righteous.' (Al-‘Imran: 193)

When we look at the details provided in the Quran, we find that a dhanb (a sin) is one thing, and a sayyi’a (a misdeed) is another. A sin requires forgiveness, whereas a fault requires expiation; such is the expiation made when a believer swears an oath and then breaks it. This expiation is a compensation to make up for the breaking of the oath. As for things related to the servant disobeying his Lord, these are sins. A misdeed is when one goes against Allah’s guidance with respect to His other servants. When you commit an act of disobedience, regarding something between you and Allah Glorified is He; you have not harmed Allah in any way. In essence, what are you, O human, concerning Allah’s Glory? However, by this act of disobedience, you sin, and this sin is followed by retribution. As for going against Allah’s guidance, regarding His other servants, this is a misdeed since by committing it, you have wronged them. For this reason, the believers say: 'Our Lord, forgive us, therefore, our sins and remit from us our evils and in death join us with the righteous.' (Al-'Imran: 193).

Who was it that guided them to the knowledge that there is a difference between a sin and a misdeed and that sins require forgiveness, whereas faults require expiation? It was Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him who bore a message from Allah Glorified is He. It was he who taught us the difference between a sin and a misdeed. Once, when he was sitting with his companions, he became drowsy and took a light nap. When he woke up, he smiled. Anas Allah be pleased with him said, 'Once, when Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was sitting, we saw him smile until his incisor teeth showed. 'Umar Allah be pleased with him said, "What makes you smile, O, Messenger of Allah?" He replied, "Two men from my community will fall on their knees before the Lord of Might. One of them will say, 'O Lord, take recompense for me from the wrong my brother did me!' Allah will say, 'Repay your brother the wrong you did him.' He will say, 'O Lord, none of my good deeds remain.' (The other) will say, 'O Lord, he can take the burden of my sins from me.'" The eyes of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him filled with tears, and then he said, "Indeed that will be a grave day, the day when people will need their sins to be carried for them! Allah will say to the requester, 'Lift your gaze and behold Paradise.' He will lift his head and say, 'O, Lord, I see cities of silver and palaces of gold adorned with pearls. For which Prophet is all of this? For which man of truth is this? For which martyr is all of this?' He will say, 'It is for he who gives the price.' He will say, 'O, Lord, who owns its price?' The Lord will say, 'You do.' He will reply, 'What is it?' The Lord will say, 'That you pardon your brother.' He will say, 'O, Lord, I pardon him!' He will say, 'Take your brother's hand and enter Paradise.' "Then Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, "Be conscious of Allah and make peace between one another, for Allah will make peace between the believers on the Day of Resurrection."'(1)

This is the meaning of expiation: that we are born for. That's why we we were taught to say in the prayer, 'O, Allah, I ask you forgiveness for what is owed to you and ask You to bear for me (compensate on my behalf) for what is owed to Your servants.’ That is, the servant asks the True Lord to satisfy His servants (whom he may have treated unjustly) on his behalf, and His bounty has no limits.

---

(1) Narrated by Abu Ya'la and Al-Ḥakim, who declared it rigorously authentic, and by As-Suyutii in (Ad-Durr Al-Manthur) and by Ibn Kathir in (At-Tafsir)

The believing servants say: 'Our Lord, forgive us, therefore, our sins and remit from us our evils and in death join us with the righteous.' (Al-‘Imran: 193). That is, grant us the end that the virtuous enjoy. After this, Allah continues to convey to us their words:

رَبَّنَا وَءَاتِنَا مَا وَعَدتَّنَا عَلَىٰ رُسُلِكَ وَلَا تُخْزِنَا يَوْمَ ٱلْقِيَٰمَةِ ۗ إِنَّكَ لَا تُخْلِفُ ٱلْمِيعَادَ ١٩٤

Our Lord! Bestow upon us all that You have promised us through Your messengers do not humiliate us on the Day of Resurrection. You never break Your promise’ [194] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 194)

This can be said in another way, ‘Our Lord, give us that which you promised on the tongues of Your Messengers.’ Now listen to the True Lord’s reply to them:

فَٱسْتَجَابَ لَهُمْ رَبُّهُمْ أَنِّى لَآ أُضِيعُ عَمَلَ عَٰمِلٍ مِّنكُم مِّن ذَكَرٍ أَوْ أُنثَىٰ ۖ
بَعْضُكُم مِّنۢ بَعْضٍ ۖ فَٱلَّذِينَ هَاجَرُوا۟ وَأُخْرِجُوا۟ مِن دِيَٰرِهِمْ وَأُوذُوا۟ فِى سَبِيلِى
وَقَٰتَلُوا۟ وَقُتِلُوا۟ لَأُكَفِّرَنَّ عَنْهُمْ سَيِّـَٔاتِهِمْ وَلَأُدْخِلَنَّهُمْ جَنَّٰتٍ تَجْرِى مِن
تَحْتِهَا ٱلْأَنْهَٰرُ ثَوَابًا مِّنْ عِندِ ٱللَّهِ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ عِندَهُۥ حُسْنُ ٱلثَّوَابِ ١٩٥

Their Lord has answered them: ‘I will not allow the deeds of any one of you to be lost, whether you are male or female, each is like the other [in rewards]. I will certainly wipe out the bad deeds of those who emigrated and were driven out of their homes, who suffered harm for My cause, who fought and were killed. I will certainly admit them to Gardens graced with flowing streams, as a reward from God: the best reward is with God’ [195] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 195)

Look at the beautiful way the answer is phrased: 'So their Lord answered their prayers by saying, "I will not allow the deeds of any one of you to be lost, whether you are male or female. You are from one another."' (Al-‘Imran: 195) They used to remember Allah Glorified is He while standing, sitting, and lying down and reflect on the creation of the heavens and the earth, fearing the disgrace of entering hell. They prayed to Allah Glorified is He to forgive their sins and erase their bad deeds. They prayed to Allah Glorified is He to grant them what He had promised them on the tongues of His Messengers*, peace be upon them.*

Allah Glorified is He does not say: ‘I answer your prayer. 'Rather, His answer is the acceptance of their works by saying: 'I will not allow the deeds of any one of you to be lost, whether you are male or female.' (Al-‘Imran: 195) It is not a case of empty words being spoken; Allah Glorified is He wants believers to apply themselves to this verse and to incline towards always putting this in practice. It is not just a matter of wishing, for Allah Glorified is He has put a clear condition, which is work. Whosoever wants the True Lord to answer his prayers, he must be prepared to work. Reflection on Allah’s Glorified is He creation is not a replacement of work because the True Lord wants to be reflected upon, while believers are utilising His means, and the means granted by Allah Glorified is He should not distract believers from Him.

'So their Lord answered their prayers by saying, "I will not allow the deeds of any one of you to be lost, whether you are male or female. You are from one another." Those, therefore, who have emigrated, and have been driven out of their homes, and have been persecuted for My cause, and have fought and been slain, I will surely remit from them their evil deeds and will cause them to enter gardens through which streams flow - a reward from Allah, and with Allah is the best of rewards.' (Al-‘Imran: 195)

There are those who migrated from their countries, their families, their homes and their loved ones, and did so freely and without coercion. Their migration was driven out of a need to survive, along with being a move from one place to another in Allah’s cause. There are those who migrated and went out of their own free will, and there are those who left their homes and fought, and were hurt or killed in Allah’s cause, they will have their sins erased and will enter paradise.

In this verse, Allah Glorified is He shows a visible way in which faith is manifested, for man is busy with his possessions, families, homes and the preservation of his life; if he sacrifices all of this firstly for the sake of remaining firm on Allah’s Word and then secondly for the sake of raising and spreading Allah’s Word, then, as a believer, he extends this to people other than himself. He struggles in Allah’s cause to extend this way of life with all the goodness it contains to others. Int this way, he loves for others what he loves for himself.

As a result, we arrive from all of this with a clear perspective or conclusion: reflection alone is not enough. If someone were to say, ‘My faith is fine. Do not bother me with formalities’; we reply by saying, 'Allah does not need this. Rather, He requires that you make the universe flourish by means of your endeavours. The most blessed and best of endeavours is that you work to make Allah’s guidance firm on earth since this is the way to exist and preserve existence in a beautiful way.

After this, Allah Glorified is He says:

لَا يَغُرَّنَّكَ تَقَلُّبُ ٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُواْ فِي ٱلۡبِلَٰدِ ﴿١٩٦﴾

[Prophet], do not be deceived by the disbelievers’
[lucrative] trading to and fro in the land [196]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 196)

When we hear the words: 'Let not the moving about of the disbelievers in the land deceive you' (Al-‘Imran: 196) we should know that this requires the ability to act. A person’s ability to act lies within his domain and homeland. If someone’s ability to act widens and they move somewhere else, it is said about them, ‘So-and-so is widely active.’ i.e. the environment in which he lives is not equal to his capability; in fact, his capability is greater than his environment. Therefore, he leaves his homeland. This indeed happened with the idolaters of Quraysh who travelled from their homeland and journeyed abroad. For this reason, Allah Glorified is He says: 'Let not the moving about of the disbelievers in the land deceive you.' (Al-‘Imran: 196)

Movement, as we said, requires capability, activeness, expansion, and ambition. Allah Glorified is He wants to show us that life’s allurements might be granted to other than believers, for every enticement is only a pleasure of this worldly life and is connected with a person’s life span. No matter how much they take, they are only taking adornment of worldly life and its delusion. Allah Glorified is He says: 'And what is the life of this world except the enjoyment of delusion.' (Al-‘Imran: 185)

It is a life that has an end; as for the one who desires to increase the favours given to him by Allah Glorified is He and amplify their benefits, he works for the sake of a life that has no end. Disbelievers might take that which is immediately available yet ends, whereas believers take that which comes eventually and never ends.

When we compare one who seeks the life of this world with one who seeks The Hereafter, we see that the situation needs to be discussed from different aspects, which are as follows: do not measure the life-span of this world according to itself, but measure it in respect to the life span of a single individual; for the life span of this world with respect to each individual is no more than the time he remains in it. Suppose that the world still exists for other than yourself. What do you have to do with it? The life span of this world is as short as the time a person remains in it. Be careful not to measure it by saying, 'The world will remain for millions of years.' Indeed, it will remain for millions of years for millions of people – but not for you. The life span of this world, as far as you are concerned, is how long you live in it, and your life within it is limited. This is assuming that you will live an average life span. What about the fact that the length of your life is only a matter of speculation? Death comes at any age; it is not related to a particular reason or time. Due to this, a person has no guarantee that he will enjoy an average life span. The life span of the Hereafter is absolutely certain to be eternal.

The exact duration of the human life is unknown, and a person's exact life span in this worldly life is not definite. However, their life in the Hereafter is certain and definite. This worldly life is limited as opposed to the Hereafter in which life is unlimited or in other words, eternal. The pleasures a person relishes in this worldly life are dependent on his perception of them and the possibility of attaining them. However, the pleasures in the Hereafter are commensurate with the greatness of their Lord and His All-Encompassing Bestowal of abundant blessings. This is why Allah Glorified is He describes the worldly life as 'an illusory pleasure' in the concluding sentence of the verse reading.

'And what is the life of this world except the enjoyment of delusion.' (Al-'Imran: 185) He describes the worldly life with the demeaning description dunia which literally means 'the lowest'. There are no lower or more demeaning descriptions than this. Anyone who is deceived by the worldly gains obtained by those who abandon divine guidance through travelling and movement throughout the land should remember that the entire worldly life will eventually come to an end. We should compare their travelling and movement throughout the land (as well as their gains and achievements) with what Allah Glorified is He has promised us in the Hereafter. Such an analogy according to this criterion sounds fair.

For this reason, Allah Glorified is He continues His description of the disbeliever’s (lucrative) trading and travelling through the land by saying:

مَتَٰعٞ قَلِيلٞ ثُمَّ مَأۡوَىٰهُمۡ جَهَنَّمُۖ وَبِئۡسَ ٱلۡمِهَادُ ١٩٧

This is only a brief enjoyment, after which Hell will be their home – a miserable resting place! [197]
(The Quran, Al-’Imran: 197)

The Arabic word mahd used in the verse literally means a cradle in which an infant sleeps. This means that Allah Glorified is He will place them in hellfire wherever He wishes since he will be unable to do or object to anything. He shall be as helpless as an infant, who is placed in his cradle turned over, and moved by others from one place to another as they see pleasing. This is contrary to the situation of believers described in the following verse that reads:

لَٰكِنِ ٱلَّذِينَ ٱتَّقَوۡاْ رَبَّهُمۡ لَهُمۡ جَنَّٰتٞ تَجۡرِي مِن تَحۡتِهَا ٱلۡأَنۡهَٰرُ
خَٰلِدِينَ فِيهَا نُزُلٗا مِّنۡ عِندِ ٱللَّهِۗ وَمَا عِندَ ٱللَّهِ خَيۡرٞ لِّلۡأَبۡرَارِ ١٩٨

But those who were mindful of their Lord will have Gardens graced with flowing streams where they will stay as a reward from God. What God has is best for those who are truly good [198] (The Quran, Al-’Imran: 198)

The Arabic word nuzul used in the verse means a place allocated for guests. When such guest rooms are arranged by humans, the guests find repose and comfort therein according to their capability. I was once travelling with a group of people, and we stayed in a luxurious hotel. My companions remarked, 'How great and luxurious this hotel is. This is a manifestation of human greatness!' I responded, 'This is what human beings prepare for other human beings. Can you imagine what Allah Glorified is He has prepared for the believers in paradise?'

When you see the disbelievers lucratively trading, moving throughout the land and obtaining worldly gains and achievements as described in the verse, you should know that they do not believe that Allah Glorified is He would punish them during their lives in this world. He says: 'Say: Have you considered if the punishment of Allah should overtake you suddenly or openly? Will any be destroyed but the unjust people?' (al-An'am: 47) He also says: 'Or that He may not seize them in the course of their journeys, then shall they not escape.' (an-Nahl: 46)

The disbeliever surrenders to arrogance and delusion in their lucrative trading and moving throughout the land doing whatever he pleases and then suddenly the divine punishment befalls him. Sometimes the divine punishment strikes the sinners all of a sudden, and sometimes it may be expected. When the divine punishment befalls abruptly, people have expected at any time; it may also strike when it is least expected, which triggers greater fear within people. Allah Glorified is He says: 'And when you said, "O, Musa! We will not believe in you until we see Allah manifestly." So the punishment overtook you, while you looked on.' (al-Baqara: 55)

If death befalls people abruptly, they would not be aware of its horrors except at the very moment when it befalls them. However, if death befalls them, while they are mindful of it, they would face with a heart filled with terror and fear. Then, Allah Glorified is He says:

وَإِنَّ مِنۡ أَهۡلِ ٱلۡكِتَٰبِ لَمَن يُؤۡمِنُ بِٱللَّهِ وَمَآ أُنزِلَ إِلَيۡكُمۡ وَمَآ أُنزِلَ إِلَيۡهِمۡ
خَٰشِعِينَ لِلَّهِ لَا يَشۡتَرُونَ بِـَٔايَٰتِ ٱللَّهِ ثَمَنٗا قَلِيلًاۗ أُوْلَٰٓئِكَ لَهُمۡ أَجۡرُهُمۡ
عِندَ رَبِّهِمۡۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ سَرِيعُ ٱلۡحِسَابِ ﴿١٩٩﴾

Some of the People of the Book believe in God, in what has been sent down to you and in what was sent down to them: humbling themselves before God, they would never sell God's revelation for a small price. These people will have their rewards with their Lord: God is swift in reckoning [199]
(The Quran, Al-'Imran: 199)

Allah Glorified is He always relates honest and truthful historical accounts concerning past events in the Quran. The Quran is never biased against the people of the Book (Christians and Jews) because of their stubborn opposition to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him They showed enmity towards his call, and they contrived evil schemes to undermine his efforts and hinder the spread of his call.

The Quran speaks about some of them in all honesty: 'Some of the People of the Book believe in Allah …' (Al-'Imran: 199). We have underlined earlier that this is known as 'Preservation of Probability'. When Allah Glorified is He says: 'Some of the People of the Book believe in Allah …' (Al-'Imran: 199), and some of the people of the Book who were actually considering believing and following Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him listen to it. What would their position be since they were thinking about believing in what Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him preached? Concerning this, they would certainly ask themselves, 'These very thoughts were buried deep inside our souls. How could Muhammad possibly know of them? This proves that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did not speak based on whims and that Allah Glorified is He imparted to him the knowledge of what was hidden within people's very souls! These people of the Book would have said to themselves, 'As long as Allah Glorified is He is imparting to him the knowledge of things that have not been made open to anyone else, he (Prophet Muhammad) peace and blessings be upon him must be telling the truth (about being a Messenger of Allah)!' If the verse had been revealed after they had believed, it would not have had this effect.

Therefore, this statement must have been part of the glad tidings that many of the people of the Book were thinking about believing in Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him as the Messenger of Allah. This statement of Allah Glorified is He made the process of their believing come to fruition because they said, 'The Messenger of Allah who tells us such hidden things the knowledge of which must been imparted to him by Allah Glorified is He Who knows the treachery of the eyes and whatever the breasts conceal.'

Then, Allah Glorified is He says:

يَـٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا۟ ٱصْبِرُوا۟ وَصَابِرُوا۟ وَرَابِطُوا۟ وَٱتَّقُوا۟ ٱللَّهَ لَعَلَّكُمْ تُفْلِحُونَ (٢٠٠)

You who believe, be steadfast, more steadfast than others; be ready; always be mindful of God so that you may prosper [200] (The Quran, Al-'Imran: 200)

The chapter of Al-'Imran concludes with this beautiful verse. This chapter comes right after al-Baqara (Chapter 2), and they both address one of the fundamental doctrines, namely to believe in Allah Glorified is He Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and the Divine Message with which he was sent that concludes and supersedes all the past divine messages (sent with previous Messengers of Allah). This is why Allah Glorified is He speaks about faith, divine guidance, and revelation, and then mentions the remaining teachings of those who followed previous divine messages which had been distorted and deviated from the true divine guidance being affected by human whims. In the chapter of al-Baqara, Allah speaks about the Jews and in Al-'Imran He speaks about the Christians. Then, He illustrates a faith-related point pertaining to the position of those who believe in Allah Glorified is He and place their trust in His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. He also describes one of the situations in which believers were tested with a bitter adversity. He, then, mentions another faith-related point pertaining to the believers' return to the divinely revealed way of life set by their Lord after falling into the abyss of neglect. Allah Glorified is He says: 'O, you who believe...' (Al-'Imran: 200). He is addressing those who believe in all that which was mentioned above: Allah Glorified is He His Book and His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him He also addresses the actual and genuine purification of truth with the Jews (polytheists of Quraysh) and all the people of the Book in the Battle of Uhud. The verse means, 'O, you who have sincerely believed in Allah Glorified is He pay heed to Me. O, you who believe in Me, be patient…' (Al-'Imran: 200). This is the first commandment stated in the verse. The second is 'be steadfast,' the third is ' Be on your guard' and the fourth is 'fear Allah.' (Al-'Imran: 200)

These are four divine commandments listed in the verse and addressed to believers, and the ultimate objective is clearly stated in the verse as well: 'so that you may prosper.' Whoever yearns for attaining genuine happiness and prosperity must fulfil these four requirements: be patient, be steadfast, be on guard, and fear Allah so that he may prosper.

Allah Glorified is He refers to prosperity with a tangible term, reflecting that which is easily recognisable by all people. He does not say to you, 'Abide by such commands so that you that you may succeed' or 'win'; rather, He uses the word 'prosper'. As we have previously underlined, the Arabic word for prosperity is falah which is derived from the verb falaha which means to cultivate the land by tilling the soil and allowing air and water to penetrate the ground more readily. This opens up the soil structure, allowing air, water, and nutrients to penetrate more deeply, reaching the roots. When you till the soil, plant seeds and irrigate the land, what will be the results? Your efforts will yield the plants and crops as desired. It is a material with a tangible and visible outcome. The usage of the Arabic word "tuflihun" (that you may prosper) in the verse reflects this connotation.

Allah Glorified is He refers to prosperity in a tangible sense so that all people can grasp the intended meaning. What is the nature of the prosperity promised in the verse? It is the ultimate prosperity and genuine happiness in the worldly life and the Hereafter.

Prosperity in this worldly life could mean triumphing over one's enemies or leading a safe, secure, and pleasant life. On the other hand, prosperity in the Hereafter means obtaining one's share of the eternal and enduring bliss. Allah Glorified is He commands us to be patient, which indicates that hardships and difficulties are inevitable on the path of truth. Faith leads to paradise, and the path to paradise is filled with adversities; hardships are inescapable.

As we reflect over hardships and adversities a person faces on the path to truth, we come to realise that some of them may be related to personal concerns, whereas others are related to the broader society. As for personal concerns that are not connected to society, the enjoined steadfastness entails adhering to endurance, while performing acts of obedience and bearing the discomfort of abstaining from the prohibited acts, even if this prevents a person from obtaining some worldly pleasures and fulfilling his desires. A person should patiently abstain from surrendering to temptations. The struggle of believers is to be steadfast in abstaining from indulging in the fulfilment of the sinful desires and acts that Allah Glorified is He has deemed forbidden and to endure the tribulations that befall them in the process. Believers should patiently bear the personal hardships they shall inevitably face on the path to truth and abstain from pursuing the sinful pleasures, vices and the prohibited acts that Allah Glorified is He has prohibited.

It is as though Allah Glorified is He is saying to you, 'I have created you, and I know how your soul inclines towards sinful desires because you love them. Therefore, be patient and steadfast in abstaining from pursuing them. You should also adhere to endurance because carrying out acts of obedience will cause you some discomfort, possibly leading you to face hardships in the process, which you should bear patiently.' Thus, endurance is required in the adherence to the divine commandments, as well as the avoidance of prohibitions. This is related to the personal context. If a matter goes beyond the scope of personal concerns and into that of the broader society, Allah Glorified is He says: '…and the patient in distress and affliction and in time of conflicts- these are they who are true (to themselves) and these are they who guard (against evil).' (al-Baqara: 177).

Therefore, patience is required, while enduring unpleasant situations, abstaining from prohibited acts and withstanding misfortunes caused by society. Could they be afflicted with misfortune by society? Yes, they could be due to divine guidance and the way of life revealed to rectify the mistakes committed by society. The people, who benefit from such mistakes in society, do their best to lead astray those who wish to follow divine guidance. They do not hold back from hurting, ridiculing, harassing, and even fighting against them. This is the meaning of patience, while enduring misfortunes and hardships and in times of peril. If your opponent adheres to patience and endures your harm, Allah Glorified is He commands you to compete with him in patience and be more steadfast.

What does this mean? It means that the divine command 'be patient' is not the same as 'be more steadfast than others' (Al-'Imran: 200). Being patient is an attitude that can be further developed to enable you to cope better during hardships and unpleasant events. What would be the case if your enemy also endures your struggle against him patiently and has enough strength to face you? Allah Glorified is He commands you to be more steadfast than him. In other words, if your enemy adheres to patience, you must be more steadfast in patience. This meaning is conveyed in the Arabic root fa'il, which is a form for the exaggeration of description in the Arabic language, e.g. the Arabic verb nafasa means to compete with another party in doing something or obtaining a goal. The verb is used to describe competition between two parties who seek to accomplish the same goal. The one who strives more to attain the objective and beats the other party to it wins. This is the essence of competition; it is a struggle for victory. Allah Glorified is He says: '...So, for this let the competitors compete.' (al-Mutaffifin: 26)

The origin of the Arabic verb describes holding one's breath under water. The Arabic word nafasa is derived from the Arabic verb nafas 'to breathe'. 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him once said to Al-'Abbas Allah be pleased with him 'Would you compete with me in holding your breath under water?' He challenged him to hold their breath under water and see which of them could hold his breath under water longer. The wise skilful person in such a situation trains himself ahead and does not hasten to go into water. Rather, he takes a deep breath and fills his lungs with air so that he can stay under water for longer than his opponent can. The one who goes under water without taking these preparations will only be able to stay under water for a shorter period of time. Therefore, the Arabic verb nafasa means competing with another party in holding his breath under water. This entails that the two parties are able to take deep breaths and can hold their breath under water for a period of time. This is why a physician may examine the lungs of his patient by asking him to take a deep breath since he wants to see how long the patient would be able to hold it.

Thus, we come to realise that the verse encourages a Muslim to be patient and more steadfast than his opponent in adhering to patience. Thus, the whole society should collectively adhere to patience and enjoin one another to do so. Allah Glorified is He says: 'I swear by Time. Most surely mankind is in loss except those who believe and do good, enjoin on each other truth, and enjoin on each other patience.' (al-'Asr: 1-3).

This means that when you see one of your Muslim brothers lagging behind and his adherence to patience is undermined or fading away, you should wholeheartedly encourage him to be more steadfast in adhering to patience. This is because the human soul is innately prone to change. Sometimes a person is strong and can adhere to patience as due, and at other times, he may have weak willpower. However, a believer's willpower is fostered all the time since he has their fellow brothers' breathe steadfastness into their heart. The verse underscores that believers enjoin one another and does not state that there is one group of people enjoining others all the time. Rather, sometimes a person is the one being enjoined to adhere to steadfastness and patience, and sometimes he is the one enjoining others. We cannot uphold this mutual exchange of advice to adhere to patience unless we first enjoin one another to adhere to truth, the very pillar on which the struggle between those who compete with one another in patience is founded.

Allah Glorified is He says: ' O, you who believe, be steadfast, and strive to excel in steadfastness. Be on your guard and fear Allah so that you may prosper.' (Al-'Imran: 200)

We start to realise the meaning of patience and being more steadfast than others in patience. What does 'be on your guard' in the verse mean? It is to make your enemy feel that you are always prepared to meet him. Allah Glorified is He says: 'And prepare against them what force you can with horses tied at the frontier so as to thereby frighten the enemy of Allah and your enemy and others besides them whom you do not know (but) Allah knows them. Whatever thing you will spend in Allah's way, it will be paid back to you fully and you shall not be dealt with unjustly.' (al-Anfal: 60)

The verse means that they have their horses tethered and ready for riding whenever war is declared. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'The best lifestyle (at times of war) is that of the man who holds his horse's rein in Allah's Way and flies on its back to the places from whence he hears a war cry or the clatter of arms, seeking martyrdom or killing on the battlefield.'(1) This means that we should be ready before the unpleasant events occur so that when adversities suddenly befall, we are ready to face them. We should take the required preparations before any unexpected events take place. When your enemy knows that you are ready to meet him and well prepared at any time, they will fear you. [The preparation of military strength (and other aspects of material and spiritual preparation) serves as deterrent to possible enemy attack.] If, however, you are lax and heedless, your enemy can easily take you by surprise and defeat you. Until you prepare yourself, they are one step ahead of you. What is the benefit of preparation in this aspect? The benefit of such preparations is that it will be indicative of your awareness of your enemy and that you have not given up the duty of taking the required preparations in case he assaults you. Rather, you will be ready for his attack at all times. Being prepared and ready in the verse does not merely mean that you prepare the warhorses, weapons and equipment for material strikes and attacks of your enemy; it also means that you prepare yourself for any moral assaults in order to be able to ward off falsehood and defend the Truth. An aspect of the enjoined preparation is equipping the Muslim youth to redress atheism before it befalls the Muslim community. Why should this be considered part of the required preparations? It is due to the fact that the preparations in the verse are not confined to warhorses, weapons and equipment needed for the fighting on the actual battlefield. Rather, they are also required for any potential mental invasion of evil ideas spoon-fed to Muslims. Therefore, a believer must be equipped with the mental ability to redress any potential atheism-related ideas that might be introduced to Muslims so that all believers would be immune to such evils and able to remedy them as due.

(1) [Muslim]

We have previously underlined that the problem of the current educational curricula (in the Muslim world) is that they borrowed all the western scientific methodologies and concepts. Muslims study history in the light of the western methodologies and learn about nature just as the western scientists do, forgetting that we have been blessed with a religion that protects us from some misleading methodologies. For instance, when a western historian says that the French Revolution was the first to recognise human rights, we must pause, reflect, and ask ourselves when the French Revolution erupted. It erupted about two hundred years ago. These western historians are ignorant of the fact that Islam recognised human rights fourteen centuries ago as stated in the Quran and the authentic Sunnah of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him If every Muslim student upon hearing the inaccurate statement suggesting that the French Revolution was the first to recognise human rights, should respond by saying, 'No, this is not accurate. The French Revolution took place in the late 1700s. Did you not know that Islam recognised human rights fourteen centuries ago? The fact that you do not believe in Islam should not lead you to distort the truth.'

When a western biology student may say that nature has given a certain animal a skin colour suitable to its environment so that its enemies could not identify it, a Muslim should say, 'Nature does not give anything to any being. Nature itself is created by Allah Glorified is He. It is not true that nature has given any powers or abilities to any created being. Rather, Allah Glorified is He has created the whole universe and has caused all things to come into existence in such forms.' The required preparations, then, are not confined to military power; rather, they extend to include knowledge as well. The enemies of Islam have given up hope that they could eradicate the call of Islam with military force after the failure of the Crusades. Their only alternative was to invade Muslim communities with their distorted methodologies and ideas introduced by their orientalists and our occidentalists that export their cultures that are incompatible with the divinely revealed way of life to us. In fact, they are excused since they do not know the divinely revealed way of life. Thus, we have come to realise that the preparations must also and completely be on the military, mental, moral, spiritual, and scientific levels.

The enemies of Islam employ different techniques to implement their schemes, all of which we should educate the younger Muslim generation to them. They claim that European civilisation prospered, while Muslims lagged far behind. We may respond by saying, 'Was it because of Islam? The Muslim civilisation prospered and moved ahead to be the vanguard of civilisation for a thousand years, while Europe, about whose civilisation you boast, was living in the Dark Ages.' Either these people do not know our history, or they are speaking to people who are ignorant of their own history.

The enjoined preparedness entails that Muslims should be edified on their religion in order to be able to address such borrowed ideas and beliefs before they are equipped with military power to repel the military attacks of their enemies. Muslims should stand up to face the invasion of alien ideas and the attacks on the principles of Islam as devotedly as they stand up to face a military invasion. This is why Allah Glorified is He says: ' O, you who believe, be steadfast, and strive to excel in steadfastness.' (Al-‘Imran: 200) This divine command encompasses 'patience, while enduring hardships, abstaining from prohibited acts and being more steadfast than opponents concerning enjoining patience and making necessary preparations, on both the material and moral levels. Allah Glorified is He concludes the verse with saying: 'Be on your guard and fear Allah so that you may prosper.' (Al-‘Imran: 200)

The divine command 'fear Allah' is similar to the command 'fear Hellfire' because fearing Allah means to make a barrier between yourselves and your Lord’s wrath. What is this protective barrier? It is the obedience to your Lord. What does obedience mean? It means adhering to the commands of Allah Glorified is He and abstaining from committing the actions He has deemed prohibited. Those who interpret fearing Allah as obedience to His commands are correct because it is the means to protect oneself from the wrath and punishment of Allah Glorified is He. Some may interpret it according to the end. When it is said to you, 'Fear Allah', it means, 'Make a barrier between yourself and Hellfire', which is one of the tools of divine punishments. If it is said to you, 'Fear Allah', it means that you should obey His commands and avoid His prohibitions. What is the meaning of fearing hellfire and the wrath of Allah? It means the obedience to Allah Glorified is He. The fearing of Allah is sometimes interpreted by its means and at other times by its end.

We have previously underlined the 'prosperity' in the concluding statement 'so that you may prosper" as either attained in this worldly life or in the Hereafter. In this worldly life, prosperity means triumph of truth and faith and attaining victory over the enemies as opposed to being humiliated and becoming subservient to others. This is one aspect of prosperity. However, suppose that your opponents prosper, and you are weakened at some point in time. In this case, you should be assured that you are on the way to attaining another aspect of prosperity, namely the prosperity in the Hereafter. If this were not true, how did those addressed by this verse interpret prosperity before they witnessed the triumph of Islam over its enemies? How did those who had struggled and were oppressed in their unstable lives and died before Islam prevailed attain prosperity? Their prosperity lies in the Hereafter. This is why Allah Glorified is He prudently relates the story of the People of the Cave in the Quran. He says: 'And thus did We rouse them that they might question each other. A speaker amongst them said, "How long have you tarried?" They said, "We have tarried for a day or a part of a day." (Others) said, "Your Lord knows best how long you have tarried." Now send one of you with this silver (coin) of yours to the city, then let him see which of them has purest food. Let him bring you provision from it and behave with gentleness. By no means make your case known to anyone. Most certainly, if they were to prevail against you, they would stone you to death or force you back to their religion, and then you will never prosper.' (al-Kahf: 19-20) We notice that Allah Glorified is He says: 'They would stone you to death'. The verse continues: 'or force you back to their religion, and then you will never prosper.' (al-Kahf: 20)

If they were to stone them to death, this would mean they would triumph over them in this worldly life, but they would win the Hereafter. If they were forced back to their false religion, they would have never prospered in this worldly life or the Hereafter. So, all aspects of human prosperity in this worldly life, the Hereafter or in both lie in the obedience to the divine commandments in the verse that reads: 'O, you who believe, be steadfast, and strive to excel in steadfastness. Be on your guard and fear Allah so that you may prosper.' (Al-'Imran: 200)

The Chapter of

an-Nisa’

In the Name of God, the Most Merciful, the Dispenser of Mercy

In the previous pages, we shed some light in our reflections on the names of the Quranic chapters. Reflecting over the third chapter of the Quran, an-Nisa' which is chosen to honour the women, we see that it addresses a considerable number of Islamic rulings and provisions concerning women. In addition, Allah Glorified is He has touched upon women's rights in a number of Quranic chapters such as al-Ma'ida chapter (no.5), al-Ahzab (no.33), al-Mujadala (no.58), al-Mumtahana (no.60), at-Talaq (no.65) and at-Tahrim (no.66). All of these chapters of the Quran underline the religious rulings and rights of women who are the incubating bosoms of the human soul.

We know that the primary tasks of men in this worldly life mostly involve dealing with inferior species: with inanimate objects he uses in the laboratory, with animals he breeds and with plants he cultivates. Men mostly deal with these lower species as compared to women. We have four species: inanimate things, plants, animals, and humans. The working sphere of men is mostly restricted to inanimate things, plants, and animals. In contrast, women deal mostly with human beings. This is a means of honouring women. Reflecting over the childhood period of all animate beings, especially plants and animals, we realise that it is relatively short. There are animals that have relatively short period of childhood that does not extend beyond a month or even a few days. The childhood of some plants may extend to seven years, such as perennial trees. However, the childhood of humans continues from birth until the age of fourteen. It is a long period. The question is why Allah Glorified is He makes the childhood of humans that long.

The mission of human beings in life is refined. Therefore, the childhood of human beings requires extensive care. During childhood, the human being develops and acquires wisdom from those around him in order to form his own code of conduct. During this period, the child is nurtured mostly by his mother and thrives under the female's care and attention, while his father works to earn a living and provide for the family in whose company he relishes tranquillity.

It has been narrated in Islamic history books that a Muslim woman once sued her husband who wanted to take her son away from her. She said to the judge, 'He carried him effortlessly in his backbone (or loins) and brought him into being by satisfying his sexual desire (during the intercourse). However, I endured great hardship to give birth to him! I am worthier of custody over him!'

One of the anecdotes of classical Arab literature tells of how a mother fought before a judge for her son who was claimed by the father (some sources indicate that it was Abu Al-Aswad Ad-Du'ali); the child probably had reached the age of seven. She said, 'This is my son. My womb was a vessel for him. My lap was a courtyard to play for him. My breasts were milk springs for him. When he awakes, I care for him with delight. I protect him when he sleeps at night. For several years I have done this. Now, when he is fully weaned, his limbs are well formed, and his character has proved to be fine, his father wants to take this son of mine.' The judge then said to the husband, 'You have heard the words of your wife. What do you have to say in return?' The man replied, 'She has spoken the truth, but I carried him in me before she gave birth to him, and I placed him in her before she put him in the world. I will teach him knowledge and great wisdom.' The judge turned to the woman and asked: 'What is your answer to this, woman?' She replied, 'He is right in what he has said. However, he carried him when he was weak and light, while I was burdened with his weight. He put him in me yearningly, while I put him to the world with agony.' Her words were pleasing to the judge, and he ordered the man, 'Give her her son. She has more right to him than you.'

This is why Allah Glorified is He has revealed a chapter of the Quran about the family of 'Imran since they were an ideal role model, worthy of receiving the divine messages and religious missions. Some of the Messengers of Allah were among their descendants, and many of them were honest adherents to the divinely revealed way of life like 'Imran's wife. Neither she nor Maryam (Mary) Allah be pleased with them was a Prophet or a Messenger of Allah; however, each of them obeyed the commandments of their Lord.

When Allah Glorified is He addresses the believers specifically in the verse, we should know that He is issuing religious assignments and commandments for believers. He says to His believing slaves, 'I have granted you freewill to make your own choices in this worldly life and have never obliged you to comply with any religious assignments, except what you have voluntarily accepted when you believed in Me. Since you believe in Me as the All-Capable and Wise God, you must obey My commands.'

Allah Glorified is He does not force anyone to believe in Him. The Muslim willingly and voluntarily chooses to believe in Him. Therefore, he has to obey the One Whom He chose to believe in. We have previously emphasised that when someone chooses to go to any given physician, it is always because he thinks that this physician is the one who can treat them. Once he consults the chosen physician, he complies with their orders, takes the prescription, and immediately hurries to the pharmacy to buy the medicine. If he does not find the prescribed medicine, he may travel to get it. The patient follows the instructions of the physician and does exactly as ordered.

In this context, Allah Glorified is He says: 'O, People.' He is not commanding man to perform any religious assignments. Rather, He is commanding all human beings to believe in Him. He clarifies this meaning by addressing all people in the verse. He is calling upon all people and inviting them to believe in Him. What does 'O, People' in the verse mean? It refers to Prophet Adam peace be upon him and his posterity. Allah(1) Glorified is He opens the chapter with the following verse:

---

(1) The Islamic conception of 'Allah' is not the same as the Christian and Jewish conception of 'God.' However, the word ' Allah' does not refer to a tribal god or God of only Muslims, it refers to the Creator of the whole world, the One God (who has no son). We prefer, however, to use 'Allah' rather than 'God' as it has a unique character: it cannot be used to refer to any false gods and does not have any derivatives like goddess, gods, etc. It is a unique word used solely to describe the One God of this universe.

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلنَّاسُ ٱتَّقُواْ رَبَّكُمُ ٱلَّذِى خَلَقَكُم مِّن نَّفۡسٖ وَٰحِدَةٖ وَخَلَقَ مِنۡهَا زَوۡجَهَا وَبَثَّ مِنۡهُمَا رِجَالٗا
كَثِيرٗا وَنِسَآءٗۚ وَٱتَّقُواْ ٱللَّهَ ٱلَّذِى تَسَآءَلُونَ بِهِۦ وَٱلۡأَرۡحَامَۚ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ عَلَيۡكُمۡ رَقِيبٗا ١

O, People, be mindful of your Lord, who created you from a single soul, and from it created its mate, and from the pair of them spread countless men and women far and wide; be mindful of God, in whose name you make requests of one another. Beware of severing the ties of kinship: God is always watching over you [1] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 1)

In this verse, Allah Glorified is He addresses people and commands them to be mindful of Him. He says: 'O, People, be mindful of your Lord Who created you from a single soul' (an-Nisa': 1). The meaning of being mindful of Allah is to protect yourself from His wrath and punishment. How can one be mindful of Allah Glorified is He and what should one do to avoid His punishment?

The first step towards attaining mindfulness of Allah Glorified is He is to believe in Him as the Lord of the universe and to embrace this belief intellectually. Allah Glorified is He explains this fact to people and says: 'O People! Be mindful of your Lord.' (an-Nisa': 1) He does not say be mindful of your God because the concept of divinity is intertwined with worship. God, by definition, is the One worthy of worship and in this vein, He issues His commands and prohibitions. However, Allah Glorified is He does not address people as their God in this verse. They are still in the stage of grasping the concept of Lordship. The Arabic word Rabb (God), meaning Lord, is the One Who nurtures. The same root is the verb yurabbi which means 'to raise' (as in raise a child). Rabb also means 'the Creator' Who originates something from nothing and nurtures it. Is the One Who creates and nurtures all beings not entitled to set His own set of rules for preserving His creation? It is His right to set the laws and rules of the preservation of created beings. We see the inventor or craftsman setting the rules of maintenance for the things he invents. Would it not be senseless if Allah Glorified is He creates human beings out of nothing and then abandons them in the worldly life, allowing them to do whatever they wish with no limits or rules? Should He rather command them to do certain acts and refrain from others in order to fulfil their mission in this worldly life as due? Allah Glorified is He thus lays down the fundamental ruling of the promotion of faith. He says: 'O People, be mindful of your Lord

Who created you from a single soul…' (an-Nisa': 1). This means that people are required to be mindful of their Lord. The meaning of being mindful of Allah Glorified is He Who has created them, is to protect themselves from His punishment by obeying His commands. Why would Allah Glorified is He emphasise the fact that He has created people for a reason to be mindful of Him unless it was an established truth accepted by all of them? Allah Glorified is He says: 'Be mindful of your Lord Who has created you' (an-Nisa': 1); this attests the fact that Allah Glorified is He has created us is an established truth recognised by all human beings. Were it to be a doubtful matter, we would have retorted, 'But You have not created us!' Indeed, to Allah Glorified is He belongs the loftiest attributes.

You may hear someone saying, 'Be good to the one who did such and such favours for you.' You may, then, choose to acknowledge that this man did you such favours or not. If you admit that he did you such favours, you are assenting to this statement. The Divine Command 'Be mindful of your Lord Who has created you' implies that the creation of mankind is an established fact and not a disputable or controversial matter. Allah Glorified is He wants to remind us of the truth in which we all believe, namely that He has created us for the purpose that He has willed, i.e. receiving the divine guidance and the shares of His divine attributes that would protect us. Allah Glorified is He uses the Arabic word Rabb, e.g. Lord or Master instead of Allah or God. The concept rabb refers to the Supreme Being Who has created the whole universe out of nothing, has cared for His creatures and has nurtured them into a human perfection that they are intended to attain. He is the One Who has created the whole universe in the best and most perfect fashion and form. This is why Allah Glorified is He says: 'And if you ask them Who created the heavens and the earth and made the sun and the moon subservient, they will certainly say, "Allah" Whence are they then turned away?' (al-'Ankabut: 61)

Since the issue of the creation is established beyond doubt and you believe in Allah, the Creator, then we inevitably acknowledge that He has power and control over us. We believe that He is our Lord Who has nurtured us, and accordingly we recognise His wisdom in all matter. Familiarising ourselves with the God and Lord Who has such limitless abilities and infinite wisdom, we should be either afraid of His Power and Might or express our gratitude towards His Wisdom and acknowledge Him as the God and Creator of the universe.

The verse continues: 'O, People! Be mindful of your Lord Who created you from a single soul' (an-Nisa': 1). If Allah does not say 'and from it created its mate', the verse would not have been complete. The reason is that He elucidates about the purpose of creation: 'And of everything We have created pairs that you may be mindful.' (adh-Dhariyat: 49)

Allah Glorified is He has created mankind from a single soul and has created from it its mate. In interpreting the meaning of the creation in this context, some commentators were quite confused as whether the verse means that Hawwa (Eve) was actually created and fashioned from the rib of Adam peace be upon them. Some commentators asserted this view, while others held that it is not true adding that the reference 'from it' in this context means from the very kind. In support of their interpretation, they adduced evidence from another verse that says: 'Certainly, a Messenger has come to you from among yourselves…' (at-Tawba: 128).

Does the verse mean that Allah has created Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him from our souls? No. The verse means that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is a Messenger of Allah sent to all mankind from amongst themselves. Allah Glorified is He is underscoring a piece of evidence that would help us to understand the creation of Hawwa (Eve) Allah be pleased with her since her creation has not been detailed in the Quran. Allah Glorified is He has given us an account of the creation of Adam peace be upon him and how He has fashioned him out of clay along with the stages of his creation until he became a complete human being. It is plausible to assume that He intended the description of the creation of Adam peace be upon him to be an example of the creation of the human beings, in general, and that the creation of Hawwa (Eve) Allah be pleased with her would be just the same. In this context, Allah Glorified is He says: 'has created from it', which means He has created a being belonging to the same species of Adam peace be upon him. Hawwa (Eve) Allah be pleased with her was thus created of clay and then fashioned in the same manner Adam was fashioned.

Therefore, the verse did not repeat the creation process of Hawwa (Eve) Allah be pleased with her as done in the case of Adam peace be upon him. The verse could mean that Hawwa (Eve) was created from Adam's rib. Yet this was an event that was not witnessed except by the Creator, and in such a case, the proof should be taken only from the One Who witnessed it. Allah Glorified is He thus has conferred His Mercy upon us and relieved us of being entangled in doubts about the creation, how it happened, and how we came into being.

The human being has no say in the way in which he was created. The One Who has created Man teaches us about the creation. His account is the correct one because this matter goes beyond the scope of any empirical science. This is why when Darwin arrogantly tried to make conjectures about the evolution of mankind, he went astray, and later modern theories refuted his claims. Modern theories challenged his claims by posing the question as to why the factors that caused the first ape to evolve into a human being did not affect the rest of the apes as well and cause them to evolve into humans and accordingly led to the extinction of every species of apes. Darwin failed to respond to this question. For this reason, we emphasise that this matter was not witnessed by us, and therefore, we need to listen to the Creator in this regard. Allah Glorified is He says: 'I did not make them witnesses of the creation of the heavens and the earth nor of the creation of their own souls. Nor could I take those who lead (others) astray as helpers.' (al-Kahf: 51) Since there were no witnesses to the creation of the heavens, the earth or Man, none of the created beings can claim any knowledge about it. No one should thereby raise claims about the creation of Man. Allah Glorified is He responds to those who try to claim that they have knowledge about this matter by saying: 'I did not make them witnesses of the creation of the heavens and the earth nor of the creation of their own souls. Nor could I take those who lead (others) astray as helpers.' (al-Kahf: 51) The meaning of 'those who lead (others) astray' is those who will lead people astray as far as the question of the creation is concerned. In this verse, Allah Glorified is He is equipping us to address the false claims that could be arbitrarily put forth in this regard.

Thus, when He says: 'I did not make them witnesses of the creation of the heavens and the earth nor of the creation of their own souls, Nor could I take those who lead (others) astray as helpers.' (al-Kahf: 51) He has clarified to us the nature of those who lead people astray concerning the subject of the creation. They were not there to assist Allah Glorified is He in the creation of the universe or to claim knowledge of the creation and how it took place. Accordingly, if human beings want to know about the creation of Man, they should remember that Allah Glorified is He is the Only One Who can tell them how Man was created. Those who make unfounded allegations about the creation of Man are the ones who mislead people and divert them away from the truth.

Allah Glorified is He says: 'O, People! Be mindful of your Lord who created you from a single soul.' (an-Nisa': 1) Reflecting upon the verse, one wonders why Allah Glorified is He does not simply say that He has created human beings in pairs? The reason is that when He declares that Man is of two origins, a male and female, this means that each of them may have its own personal desires and inclinations. Thus, He is attributing all mankind to a single origin so as to imply that we should not have conflicting arguments since we all are from the same origin. In refutation of Darwin's theory of evolution, Allah Glorified is He has guided a group of non-Muslim scientists to defend Islam by finding evidence conforming to the narrative of the creation of man in the Quran. For instance, when the French scientist Monier wanted to refute such superstitious claims that the origin of Man was an ape, he said: 'I am astounded by those who think in such a way. Could chance cause human beings to exist in pairs of the same species, but differ in gender so that when they mate they would produce male or females?' How could such a process happen by chance?

Let us concede, for argument's sake, that Adam peace be upon him was created by chance. Was Hawwa (Eve) Allah be pleased with her created by chance as well? Could it happen by chance that Hawwa (Eve) Allah be pleased with her was created of the same species, yet differ in gender so that when they mate together, an emotional effusion flows between them, allowing the fertilisation process to take place, thus producing either a male or a female child? Does this also happen by chance? If this were true, it would be such a rational and remarkable chance! They may call it 'chance', and we call it the work of Allah Glorified is He.

Monier thought that he had found the evidence whereby he could refute Darwin's views. However, we would like to assert that the Quran has touched upon this very subject in the verse that reads: 'O, People! Be mindful of your Lord Who created you from a single soul and created from it its mate.' (an-Nisa': 1) This is wherein its greatness resides.

Allah Glorified is He has created males and females. The females are of the same species of males but differ in gender so that when they mate together. Allah Glorified is He would cause them to produce through their union new generations of men and women. It is a purposeful process entailed by His wisdom. Allah Glorified is He says: 'who created you from a single soul and from it created its mate' (an-Nisa': 1). This verse has adduced the evidence to which the French scientist Monier was guided to later. The verse continues: 'And from the pair of them spread countless men and women far and wide…' (an-Nisa': 1). Let us contemplate the greatness of the style used in the verse. How great is the word choice! Human beings need to spread throughout the earth in order to avail themselves of the divine blessings and bounties therein. 'Spreading', in this context, means to scatter something over a specific area. The verse means that Allah Glorified is He has spread (from the pair of them) countless men and women far and wide; the pair refers to Adam and Hawwa (Eve) Allah be pleased with them and the countless men and women are their offspring. Why did the verse not clearly state that He spread countless men and countless women? The number of males tends to be less than the females in all species. For instance, if you examined a field of palm trees, you will only find two male trees among a majority of female ones!

The relative increase in the number of males in all species is thereby intended because the male is the fertilising agent and can fertilise thousands of females. Many species are dominated by females, and the males have multiple female mates. Accordingly, when Allah Glorified is He says:' ... and from the pair of them spread countless men, and women far and wide.' (an-Nisa': 1), this means that the human species is mostly dominated by females. In this context, the Quran draws your attention to the implications of the words because the speaker is Allah Glorified is He. Let us contemplate the verse: 'And from the pair of them spread countless men and women far and wide.' (an-Nisa': 1) The pair in this verse refers to Adam and Hawwa (Eve) peace be upon them.

From this pair, He has spread countless men and women far and wide from a single pair.

We should properly understand this point to deduce from it the statistical evidence in support of the existence of the Creator, for He is the One Who '…and from the pair of them spread countless men and women far and wide…' (an-Nisa': 1) has spread more people from the posterity of the first pair of humans. Then, He produces a third generation from the second one, and so forth. The more we progress in time, the greater the number will be.

Thus, when you examine the population of any given country, we will find that it grows by the passage of time. For instance, the population of Egypt a century ago did not exceed five million, while two centuries before, it was even less, and ten centuries before it was even less, and twenty centuries even less, and so on. The further we go into the future, the greater the population becomes because Allah Glorified is He continues to spread from men and women countless generations who will in turn produce more humans, and so on. Accordingly, the further we go forward in time, the more the population increases. We notice this phenomenon on the level of the family. A family initially is made up of a pair, a father, and a mother. Afterwards, they produce sons and daughters who, in turn, will produce grandsons and granddaughters, and so on. Sometimes when the parents live long enough, they see the grandchildren of their own grandchildren. Thus, the more we advance forward in time, the more the population increases, whereas the more we retrogress into the past, the more it decreases.

Allah Glorified is He says that He has created Adam and Hawwa (Eve) peace be upon them. We can trace the entire human population to them. This makes us wonder about the origin of this first pair. Allah Glorified is He answers this inquiry by saying: 'O, People! Surely, We have created you of a male and a female and made you tribes and families that you may know each other. Certainly, the most honourable of you with Allah is the one among you most careful (of his duty). Verily, Allah is All Knowing, Aware.' (al-Hujurat: 13) He relieves us of pursuing statistical counting. This verse is, thus, necessary to solve such a statistical riddle in order to understand that the further we proceed into time, the more the population of the world increases, whereas the more we retrogress into the past, the more it decreases until it ultimately comes down to the first pair. We cannot say that mankind may be traced back to a single person because multiplication requires a pair. The question arises about the origin of this pair of humans. Someone who is capable of creation must have created them. Allah Glorified is He teaches us this and says: 'He has created you from a single soul, and from it created its mate, and from the pair of them spread countless men and women far and wide.' (an-Nisa': 1) Thus, we see the importance of the reference to 'spread far and wide' in the verse. If the verse did not state that, the contemporary minds would have gone astray and would have been confounded about the origin of the first pair from whom mankind descended. Therefore, we need to believe that someone must have created this pair. Allah Glorified is He says: 'and from the pair of them spread countless men and women far and wide' (an-Nisa': 1) because spreading in the land is mostly the activity of males. Allah Glorified is He says: 'But when the prayer is ended, then disperse abroad in the land and seek of Allah's grace, and remember Allah much, that you may be successful….' (al-Jumu'a: 10) He also says: 'He it is who made the earth smooth for you. Therefore, go about in the spacious sides thereof and eat of His sustenance. Unto Him is the return after death…' (al-Mulk: 15).

In many communities, females are mainly entrusted with the duty of taking care of the family, managing the household affairs, and making the home a proper dwelling, in which the husband and family can repose. The dwelling should be one in which a husband can savour peace of mind and serenity. If she does so, she has fulfilled her fundamental mission.

Allah Glorified is He says: 'Be mindful of your Lord,' and then says: 'And remain mindful of Allah…' (an-Nisa': 1). He initially puts forth the evidence that He is a Powerful and All-Capable God Who has created man from nothing, nurtured mankind and rendered the entire world subservient to man. He, then, brings forth the evidence concerning the spreading of people in the earth in order to clarify that He is the One and Only God and that we have to accept His commands and worship Him. This worship involves obedience, and obedience requires compliance with a prescribed way of life that lays out what you should do and what you should not do. Allah Glorified is He has revealed the Quran as the final and concluding way of life He will reveal to mankind.

He, then, says: 'Be mindful of Allah, in Whose name you make requests of one another. Beware of severing the ties of kinship. Allah is always watching over you...' (an-Nisa': 1). We should consider the discrepancy of the ungrateful created beings. After Allah Glorified is He has reminded them of bonds connecting them and by means of which they show mutual compassion and mercy towards each other, He explains to them the following: even though no Messenger of Allah was sent to you for a while, your innate natural disposition recognises Allah Glorified is He as your Creator.

If you want to convince someone with doing something for your own sake, you may say to him, 'for the pleasure of Allah, do such-and-such.' Allah Glorified is He has extracted the evidence from them. The fact that you say, 'For the pleasure of Allah, do this' means that you are invoking and appealing to the power of a Higher Being to make the addressee do as you wish. Thus, the glorification of Allah Glorified is He is instilled within the human nature. The thing that is concealed is the method and way of life or, in other words, the set of commands and prohibitions by which you need to abide. When man is oblivious to this truth, he ungratefully denies it even though when he asks someone for something important, he may say to him, 'Do this for the pleasure of Allah.' As long as he said, 'For the pleasure of Allah', this means that the innate natural disposition inclines to recognise the truth that Allah Glorified is He is the True Lord of the universe, that He is the One to be sought and that if he invoked Him, He would not fail him. Thus, you should invoke Allah Glorified is He to fulfil your needs. Sometimes you also invoke blood and familial relations by saying, 'For the sake of the ties of kinship bonding us together, I am your relative, so please do such-and-such for me.'

Why were familial ties mentioned in this context? The reason is that when people invoke familial relations, they remind the individual of his duty and responsibility towards his relatives by bringing it to his attention. In other words, as I may invoke these familial ties, I may say to you, 'As long as you and I descend from the same origin, you should do such-and-such for me.' Accordingly, sometimes you invoke Allah Glorified is He Who has created you, and sometimes you invoke the ties of kinship since blood ties are the direct reason for material existence. The example of this is the verse that reads: 'Worship Allah (alone). Join nothing with Him (in worship). Be good to your parents…' (an-Nisa': 36). Allah Glorified is He thus mentions the parents who are the cause of our existence, and as such, He wants us to show kindness to them and treat them well. However, we should contemplate our existence until we realise that the ultimate cause of our existence is Allah Glorified is He.

Allah Glorified is He then concludes this verse with the statement: ' Allah is always watching over you.' (an-Nisa': 1) The meaning of the Divine Command 'Be mindful of Allah Glorified is He as we have previously mentioned, is to avoid the punishment of Allah Glorified is He by means of obeying His commands and avoiding His prohibitions. The Divine Attribute ar-raqib means 'Watching' —or in this verse, as 'Ever Watching (over you)'—is derived from the Arabic verb raqaba which means to watch over, observe or monitor. Sometimes the word marqab is also used to denote the same meaning. We often find an observer or a watcher in the places that require security. In addition, there is often a booth or shack wherein the security guard sits and watches over the monitored area. This booth or shack is always higher than the guarded area. Moreover, the attribute 'Ever Watching' means intentionally observing and watching something or someone. When people say, 'This person is watching this other one', it means that he is intentionally observing this other person. It is true that people may see the person who is being watched unintentionally, but if this person is being watched, this means that someone is deliberately keeping track of their moves. Allah Glorified is He says: ' Allah is always watching over you.' (an-Nisa': 1) Allah Glorified is He is thus not only the All-Seeing, but He is also Ever Watching—and Allah Glorified is He is the supreme example.

Anyone of us may see what we do not intentionally want to see. For example, one may pass by many things and see them by accident, but one does not watch someone or something unless he intentionally wants to observe and monitor him or it. However, Allah Glorified is He is watching over all of us as is stated in His saying: 'Most surely your Lord is watching.' (al-Fajr: 14)

After Allah Glorified is He addresses the subject of creation and how mankind was created from a single soul and from it He has created its mate, and from the pair of them spread countless men and women far and wide throughout the earth, He wants to demonstrate how He organises His universe and protects those men and women whom He has spread all over the earth. Such men and women can be classified into two groups: a group who have been endowed with the strength and the capacity to realise their pragmatic interests independently and satisfy their needs, and a group who are weak and lack the capacity of fulfilling their needs independently. This is why Allah Glorified is He wants to establish a well-ordered society of mankind. He decrees that those who are capable and have sufficient power in the society should look after those who are weak. The question arises as to which segment of this weak group Allah Glorified is He is talking about in this context. The answer is that He is talking about orphans. Why does He speak of them in particular? The reason is that when Allah Glorified is He has created us from Adam and Hawwa (Eve) peace be upon them He decrees that human beings must go through a phase of childhood. During this phase, the father is usually the parent who strives and works to provide for the family and tend to their needs, while the mother nurtures and raises the children. Driven by the instinctive tenderness and affection that are instilled within their hearts as parents, both the mother and the father collaborate in the bringing up of their children. Such love, tenderness, and affection are always found in proportion to their children's needs. For instance, the father and the mother always devote more tenderness and affection to their younger child than their older ones. Justice entails this because if you consider how they treated their older children when they were younger, you will realise that the oldest children are the ones who were mostly given the majority of his parent's time and care. Thus, Allah Glorified is He wants to compensate the youngest child and motivate the father and the mother to give him an additional share of their affection. Moreover, the oldest child may dispense with his parents' care and assistance, as he grows older, while the youngest remains in need of their care and most of their attention. For this reason, Allah Glorified is He says about the brothers of Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him: '…When they said, "Certainly, Yusuf and his brother (Benjamin) are dearer to our father than we, though we are a (stronger) company. Most certainly our father is in manifest error….' (Yusuf: 8) The verse means that Prophet Yusuf's brothers were stronger (older) and thought that their father must, by default, like them more. Such a thought proves the fact that their father knew that they were greater in number and stronger, so he, therefore, assigned greater care and attention to the children who were young and weak. However, his attitude was the opposite of their expectations. Thus, they brought forth the evidence that was, in essence, against their argument.

Accordingly, given the fact that any young child needs the care, tenderness, and affection of the parents, we need regulations and provisions to protect the orphans who have lost the primary source of care and affection in their lives. In this verse, Allah Glorified is He divides the human society into segments and assigns to everyone the other segment for which he should care and be responsible. If each one of us takes care of the segment, for which he is responsible, the relation between the benefactors and beneficiaries will be properly defined so that each one will know his commitments towards his mother, father, and nephews, and so on, until a balance is reached in society. Thus, the entire society may live in mutual solidarity. Furthermore, Allah Glorified is He wants to make the means of expressing tenderness self-driven in every one of us, for as long as the orphan child is a member of the society, it is incumbent on all of us to take care of him.

An orphan is a person who lost their breadwinner. This is why some people may describe a pearl as 'Durrah Yatimah' (lone pearl). Likewise, an orphan is lonely and single. However, an orphan is defined in a different way for humans, animals, and birds. An orphan in the human species is defined as the person who has lost their father, whereas an orphan in the animal world is the animal that has lost its mother since animals have unrestricted sexual relationships with each other; the males fertilise the females and then leave them to suckle and take care of the baby animals. Furthermore, if another male animal approaches this female animal which has been fertilised, the latter keeps away. As for an orphaned bird, it is defined as the bird that has lost both its mother and father since the male and female pairs tend to develop affection and love towards each other. They build a nest together, alternatively take care of the eggs, and work together. Accordingly, birds lead a family life.

Allah Glorified is He wills to decree special regulations and rulings for an orphan as he represents the weakest in human societies:

وَءَاتُوا۟ ٱلْيَتَـٰمَىٰٓ أَمْوَٰلَهُمْ ۖ وَلَا تَتَبَدَّلُوا۟ ٱلْخَبِيثَ بِٱلطَّيِّبِ ۖ وَلَا تَأْكُلُوٓا۟
أَمْوَٰلَهُمْ إِلَىٰٓ أَمْوَٰلِكُمْ ۚ إِنَّهُۥ كَانَ حُوبًا كَبِيرًا ﴿٢﴾

Give orphans their property, do not replace [their] good things with bad, and do not consume their property with your own–a great sin[2] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 2)

How can we give an orphan child their wealth if he has not yet reached adulthood, not to mention that we are worried about giving them the money, fearing he should lose it? Allah Glorified is He uses precise wording in the following verse: 'Test orphans until they reach marriageable age; then, if you find they have sound judgment, hand over their property to them….' (an-Nisa': 6)

However, what should be done before an orphan reaches this age? Should we give them their wealth? Allah Glorified is He explains that an orphan's guardian should keep and preserve this wealth, and once he (an orphan) reaches adulthood, he should hasten to give them their wealth in full. Furthermore, he should beware of mixing an orphan's wealth with their own or replace anything thereof, especially by taking the beautiful or precious properties an orphan has and replacing them with cheaper and less useful properties. Thus, Allah Glorified is He says: 'Give orphans their property…' (an-Nisa': 2) which means that He has specified the money for an orphan, and their guardian should only preserve and keep it. Another important point to consider is Allah's saying, 'Test orphans…' (an-Nisa': 6) as some people want to prolong the period of guardianship so that they can take advantage of an orphan's wealth. Therefore, Allah Glorified is He explains that guardians should not wait until an orphan reaches adulthood and then ask them to wait until they know how to manage their wealth. Rather, a guardian should test an orphan's attitude in some situations and then decide whether he will act properly or not.

Allah's saying, 'Test the orphans…' (an-Nisa': 6), means to test them whether they can take care of their properties on their own or not. If they can do that when they reach adulthood, certainly they will act properly. It is worth mentioning that Allah Glorified is He distinguishes between an orphan and a feeble-minded person. The latter does not suffer from a deficiency due to his young age; rather, he suffers from a mental deficiency. Allah Glorified is He has addressed this subject by saying: 'Do not entrust your property to the feeble-minded…' (an-Nisa': 5). Is this money possessed by a guardian? No, it is not. A feeble-minded person will not be able to manage their wealth properly. Thus, the management of their wealth is transferred to person who can manage it properly and wisely. A guardian should manage the wealth of a feeble-minded person as if he was its owner since this person cannot manage their property properly. Conversely, when an orphan reaches adulthood and becomes rational enough, Allah Glorified is He says: '…hand over their property to them….' (an-Nisa': 5)

One notices that when Allah Glorified is He addresses the subject matter of guardianship, He uses the expression 'your money', but when He addresses the subject matter of giving the money, He uses the expression 'their money.' Allah Glorified is He does not want the money to be squandered. He wants a guardian to take care of an orphan's or a feeble-minded person's fortune as if it were their own money since a feeble-minded person needs a guardian to take care of their money, but without them regarding the money that is their own. They may only take a sum of money in return for managing the wealth during the period of orphanage or feeble-mindedness.

Then, Allah Glorified is He teaches those who do not manage the wealth of orphans or feeble-minded people well by saying: '… Make provision for them from it…' (an-Nisa': 5). Guardians may take provisions from the returns of this property, but they should not usurp it. Otherwise, what will be the value of your guardianship and taking care of the wealth of an orphan or a feeble-minded person? A guardian should increase the wealth of the orphan and should not plunder or misuse it in a manner that decreases it gradually. Concerning '…make provision for them from it…' (an-Nisa': 5), the phrase 'Warzuquhum fiha' in the Arabic text means that a guardian should make provisions for an orphan or a feeble-minded person under their guardianship from the yields of their wealth.

'Give orphans their property. Do not replace [their] good things with bad…' (an-Nisa': 2). Allah's saying, 'Bad things' in this verse refers to unlawful matters, while 'good things' refers to lawful matters. It also means that if the wealth of an orphan includes good and precious items, a guardian should not take them for themselves and replace them with bad and worthless items. For instance, if an orphan has a beautiful horse, while a guardian has a bad one, a guardian cannot replace the beautiful horse with the bad one. The same example applies to the replacement of a bad buffalo with a good one or a fruitless palm tree with a fruitful one. This meaning is clarified by Allah’s saying: '… Do not replace [their] good things with bad…' (an-Nisa’: 2). The saying of Allah Glorified is He ‘…and do not consume their property with your own for the good…’ (an-Nisa’: 2) means that a guardian should separate his money from that of an orphan's, and keep their money because failing to do so is a great sin.

Allah Glorified is He then moves to another subject concerning the weakness of an orphan that is coupled with the weakness of gender. The orphan whether male or female is weak, but if the orphan is a female, then the ordeal is by fargraver. The reason is that in the case of the female orphan there exists the weakness of gender together with the weakness of being an orphan. Sometimes, in the case of a female orphan, a guardian may think of marrying her in order to take her wealth, a situation which happens frequently. Therefore, Allah Glorified is He says:

وَإِنۡ خِفۡتُمۡ أَلَّا تُقۡسِطُواْ فِي ٱلۡيَتَٰمَىٰ فَٱنكِحُواْ مَا طَابَ لَكُم مِّنَ ٱلنِّسَآءِ مَثۡنَىٰ وَثُلَٰثَ
وَرُبَٰعَۖ فَإِنۡ خِفۡتُمۡ أَلَّا تَعۡدِلُواْ فَوَٰحِدَةً أَوۡ مَا مَلَكَتۡ أَيۡمَٰنُكُمۡۚ ذَٰلِكَ أَدۡنَىٰٓ أَلَّا تَعُولُواْ ٣

If you fear that you will not deal fairly with orphan girls, you may marry whichever [other] women seem good to you, two, three, or four. If you fear that you cannot be equitable [to them], then marry only one, or your slave(s): that is more likely to make you avoid bias [3] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 3)

In this verse, Allah Glorified is He asserts the aforementioned point about keeping away from the orphans’ wealth, especially when the weakness and vulnerability is doubled as pertains to the case of a female orphan. Wronging people in general is prohibited, but wronging a weak person, especially a female, is more drastic since she cannot defend herself. Only the full-grown woman can properly defend herself.

In the saying of Allah Glorified is He: '… If you fear that you cannot be equitable [to them]…' (an-Nisa': 3), the Arabic verb taqsitu (be equitable) is derived from the word aqsata. However, the Arabic noun 'Al-Qist' is among the words that is often confusing; in some instances, it is used to mean 'justice', if the letter 'qaf' in the Arabic word has a kasrah (vowel point that sounds like 'I'). Therefore, Allah Glorified is He says: 'Allah bears witness that there is no god but He, as do the angels and those who have knowledge. He upholds justice. There is no god but He the Almighty the All Wise…' (Al-'Imran: 18).

Accordingly, we know that the word 'qist' in the Arabic text of the versemeans 'justice' in some instances and means 'injustice' and 'wronging' in other instances. The Arabic words 'qasata', 'yaqsatu', 'qastan' and 'qusutan' with a fat-hah (vowel point that sounds like 'a') on the Arabic letter "qaf", which is represented by the English letter 'q', means 'wronging.' However, the word 'qist' with kasrah (vowel point that sounds like 'I') means 'justice', while 'qast' with Fat-hah (vowel point that sounds like 'a') means 'injustice.' There is another root of the word which is 'Qusut', but the verb is the same. Accordingly, when Allah Glorified is He says, '… If you fear that you cannot be equitable [to them]….' (an-Nisa': 3)

The Arabic word 'taqsitu' means 'wronging.' In Arabic language, there is a Hamza which can be attached to a verb and give it a contrary meaning. For example, when someone blames another or reproaches him for a particular thing he did, the Arabic word 'ataba' refers to this meaning, but when the one who was blamed, responds to the one who blamed him; the Arabic verb 'a'taba' refers to this case. Thus, the addition of Hamzah means that the blamed person conciliated the blaming person and removed the cause of the blaming. For example, 'Muhammad 'ataba 'ala 'Ali' (Muhammad blamed 'Ali), and ''Ali a'taba Muhammad ' ('Ali conciliated and appeased 'Ali). Another example is 'Jama Al-Kitab' which does not mean that a person has turned a book into a dictionary, but means that a person has removed the ambiguity and vagueness of the book. Similarly, 'aqsat' and 'Iqsat' mean 'removing injustices', but 'Al-Qist' means 'justice.' Accordingly, if justice comes after injustice has been removed, then the word 'aqsata' refers to this case. 'Aqsata' and 'taqsutu' also mean that there was a state of injustice which was removed, and then was followed by justice.

There is a verse which states: 'But those who go wrong will be fuel for Hellfire.' (al-Jinn: 15) The word 'Al-Qasitun' which is mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse is derived from the Arabic words 'Al-Qast' and 'Al-Qusut', meaning 'injustice.' There is another verse which says: '… but if you do judge between them, judge justly. God loves the just.' (al-Ma'ida: 42) This means that Allah Glorified is He likes those who remove injustice and replace it with justice. Allah says in the chapter of an-Nisa': 'If you fear that you will not deal fairly with orphan girls…' (an-Nisa': 3), this means that if a guardian fears that he will not be able to relieve an orphan from justice (fearing of not being able to remove justice implies that a guardian is righteous and pious and knows how to redeem himself from situations where he may slip into injustice), he should keep away from them. Each believer should block the means leading to sins so that he can prevent himself from wronging a female orphan. If a guardian wants to get married, he can choose a woman other than a female orphan under his custody. This means that there are many women, and it is possible for a guardian to marry any of them. In addition, Allah Glorified is He does not intend that a guardian should abstain from marrying a female orphan and marry only one woman; rather, He clarifies that by saying a guardian can choose any of the numerous women available. Mentioning the issue of polygamy befits the context since Allah Glorified is He wants to deter a guardian from marrying orphan girls under his custody lest he should wrong them. Therefore, He commands him to give up marrying a weak orphan since there are many other females. 'If you fear that you will not deal fairly with orphan girls, you may marry whichever [other] women seem good to you, two, three or four….' (an-Nisa': 3)

The saying of Allah Glorified is He, '… whichever [other] women seem good to you…' refers to marrying any woman whom a guardian is not forbidden to marry, as He has enumerated the women unlawful for him to marry in the following verse: 'Do not marry women that your fathers married with the exception of what is past. This is, indeed, a shameful thing to do, loathsome and leads to evil.' (an-Nisa': 22) He also says: 'You are forbidden to take as wives your mothers, daughters, sisters, paternal and maternal aunts, the daughters of brothers and daughters of sisters, your milk-mothers and milk-sisters, your wives' mothers, the stepdaughters in your care– those born of women with whom you have consummated marriage. If you have not consummated the marriage, then you will not be blamed– wives of your begotten sons, two sisters simultaneously– with the exception of what is past. Allah is most Forgiving and Merciful–Forbidden to you are women already married, other than your slaves? Allah has ordained all this for you....' (an-Nisa’: 23-24) Thus, any person can marry any woman, whom he is not forbidden to marry, as mentioned in the verse: “…you may marry whichever [other] women seem good to you, two, three, or four. If you fear that you cannot be equitable [to them], then marry only one or your slave….” (an-Nisa’: 3) Therefore, we must understand why the text of this verse is worded as such, and why the numbers two, three and four are mentioned in this context.

Allah Glorified is He wants to encourage people to abstain from marrying orphan girls so that no one wrongs another, as he may marry her due to greed. Allah Glorified is He orders a guardian to abstain from marrying a female orphan since there are many other women to marry, and he can marry two, three, or even four women. Allah orders him to keep away from a female orphan lest he covets her money or takes advantage of her weakness since she no longer has a guardian who accepts responsibility for her.

We should consider deeply the saying of Allah Glorified is He: '… you may marry whichever [other] women seem good to you, two, three, or four….' (an-Nisa’: 3) The word 'mathna' in the Arabic text of the verse mainly means two things. For instance, the sentence 'Ja’ Al-Qawm Mathna' means that some people walk in a line where each row consists of two people walking beside each other. The word thus implies unity. Another example is 'Ja’ Al-Qawm Thalath', which means that people walk in a line where each row consists of three people walking beside each other. Also, the sentence 'Ja’ Al-Qawm Ruba’; means that people walk in a line where each row consists of four people. The opinion that the words 'mathna', 'thulath', and 'ruba'' mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse mean that every person is allowed to marry nine women can be refuted by saying that this is a wrong understanding of the verse. Following this logic, the word 'mathna; would mean four people, 'Thalath' six people and 'ruba'' eight people. Therefore, the total sum would be eighteen. However, this is not the intended meaning since Allah Glorified is He is addressing a group and not a single individual. He thus says: 'If you fear that you will not deal fairly with orphan girls, you may marry whichever [other] women seem good to you, two, three or four….' (an-Nisa': 3)

Accordingly, if a teacher asks students to open their books, does this order mean that only one student should open all the books? No, it is an order for every student to open his own book. Ordering a group of people in the plural form means that each person in this group is addressed by this order. When the teacher asks students to get out their pens, this means that each student should get out his own pen. In addition, when a group of people are ordered to get in their cars, this means that each one of them is being addressed by this order and should get in his car. Thus, ordering a group of people in the plural form means that each person in this group is being addressed by this order. The saying of Allah Glorified is He, '…you may marry whichever [other] women seem good to you, two, three or four. If you fear that you cannot be equitable [to them], then marry only one, or your slave(s). That is more likely to make you avoid bias,' (an-Nisa': 3) refers to men in general, among whom one man may marry two women, another may marry three women and a third may marry four women.

When Allah Glorified is He enacts a ruling, He sometimes makes things obligatory, and on other times He makes other things permissible. In this context, Allah Glorified is He does not enjoin and decree polygamy on every man; rather, He makes it permissible. There is an evident difference between obligation and permissibility. Even marrying one woman is only a permissible and not an obligatory act. Accordingly, there is a difference between what Allah Glorified is He obligates and what He makes permissible. However, in the second case, the motive that directs a person's action is simply his desire.

Furthermore, if a person applies a particular ruling, he must make sure to follow all the conditions relevant to this ruling. For example, the person who follows the ruling on polygamy should deal with his wives fairly. If he does not, corruption will spread on the earth, and this will cause people to doubt Allah's rulings and wonder whether they are fair or not. If a person marries more than one woman and refrains from treating his wives fairly, then this means that he has followed only one part of the ruling and has left the other part which is relevant to justice. People always refrain from polygamy since many have suffered greatly from marrying more than one wife by abandoning Allah's ruling that stipulates treating one's wives fairly.

The divine course has to be taken as an indivisible whole. So, why does any married woman hate polygamy? The reason is that she knows that when any husband marries a new wife, he directs his complete attention, wealth, care, and even smiles to this new wife. Therefore, most women hate the idea that their husbands may marry other women. Those who follow Allah's ruling regarding polygamy have to strictly abide by His ruling of dealing with their wives justly. If they do not do so, they will cause people to rebel against Allah's ruling, and many will try to find reasons and pretexts for such rebellion and disobedience. Many will criticise this person for marrying a second wife and neglecting the first one, or leaving his children without care and directing all his attention to his new wife. How can this person follow Allah's ruling concerning something and disobeying it concerning something else? Whoever does so makes people doubt Allah's rulings and further incites them to rebel against them. People with shallow understanding may say that those who partially follow Allah's rulings may be excused. However, this is an unacceptable logic.

The major problem that occurs in dealing with any of Allah's rulings is to partially follow them without considering the conditions of these rulings. Allah's rulings must be followed as a whole. We can rarely find a person who has managed to achieve justice in marital life regarding his expenditures, housing and not favouring any of his wives over another. If the first wife objects, by any means, no one will give her any consideration. However, when a husband fails to treat his wives fairly, she will have justifiable reasons for objecting to polygamy. The complaints arising nowadays amongst married couples are caused by the fact that some people have used Allah's concession in practising polygamy and have not followed His ruling regarding the fair treatment of wives. Justice is enjoined concerning the matters in which man has choice, but this command is not enjoined concerning the matters in which Allah Glorified is He has not given him choice.

Some shallow-minded people may say that Allah commands men to treat their wives justly, and then He decrees that no one can achieve such justice. However, can this be considered proper legislation and ruling? Would Allah

Glorified is He give people things, and then take them away? Allah decrees legislation for the case of man's inability to maintain justice by saying: "You will never be able to treat your wives with equal fairness, however much you may desire to do so. But do not ignore one wife altogether, leaving her suspended [between marriage and divorce]. If you make amends and remain conscious of Allah…." (an-Nisa': 129)

Since Allah has decreed a ruling concerning inability to maintain absolute justice, He has not abrogated it. A true believer should not follow Allah's rulings in part, depending on his interests; he should not just follow the rulings which he considers in his interest and reject that which does not appeal to him. Allah's Guidance must be followed as a whole by all people due to the fact that if any Muslim deviates from this Guidance, he will cause harm to other people. What may be considered as someone's right may be considered as another one's duty. Therefore, a person should take his rights and perform his duties. Those who follow Allah's ruling with in regards to practising polygamy have to follow His rulings regarding justice. Otherwise, they will give the opponents of the religion strong pretexts to refute and alter Allah's legislation, depending on the situations noticed by them, which result from Muslims abiding by one ruling and neglecting another.

The fairness required of one who practises polygamy is primarily concerned with distributing different objects among his wives fairly, i.e. he should provide them with equally good residences; the time he spends with each of them should be divided equally; the furnishing of each of his wives' houses should be of the same quality, and his personal belongings should be divided equally amongst his wives. A husband should not keep valuable things with one of his wives, while keeping cheap things with the other one. For instance, a husband may keep pyjamas made of high-quality wool in the house of one of his wives, while keeping another one made of lower quality material in the house of his other wife. Equality should not only be observed with wives' properties and belongings, but also with a husband's belongings which are kept in each wife's house. Early Muslims used to strictly observe this rule to the extent that they would make sure that the shoes they wore in each of their houses were the same in kind, colour and shape so that none of their wives would show off among the others and boast that her husband wears better things when he is at her house than he does when he is in the other wives’ houses. The form of justice that a person is required to maintain is pertaining to the matters which fall under the realm of a husband’s choice. However, Allah Glorified is He does oblige a person to observe justice in matters in which He has not given him choice. Allah Glorified is He orders a husband to be just with his wives regarding their houses, the time he spends with each one of them, the properties he buys for one and his personal belongings which he keeps in each one’s house. However, Allah Glorified is He does not enjoin on a husband to be fair in his love and inclination towards his wives since this matter is not under his control.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him asserts this rule. ‘Aisha Allah be pleased with her says, 'Messenger Muhammad used to divide things fairly and say, "O, Allah, witness that this is how I divide things which I have control over and possess, so do not blame me for that which I do not have control over or possess (i.e. the heart)."(1)

This is the meaning of the saying of Allah Glorified is He: 'You will never be able to treat your wives with equal fairness, however much you may desire to do so….' (an-Nisa’: 129) The reason is that there are things that a person cannot control, such as feeling comfortable at one of his wives’ houses more than the other ones or feeling more sexually comfortable towards one than the other. Nonetheless, regarding the points which are apparent to people, equal division should be observed so that none of them boasts it and provokes another wife. If this is the case with multiple wives who are considered temporary (in the sense that the man can leave any of them at any time either by separation or divorce), then it is more likely that a husband treats his children from each wife justly.

Some people abstain from following Allah’s rulings when they find a man who has more than one wife taking advantage of polygamy which Allah has made lawful, yet he has failed to establish justice among his multiple spouses. Furthermore, they may find out that his children from one of his wives are neglected and displaced; therefore, they take this as a ground for censuring Islam. Those who changed the matrimonial laws in Egypt considered the egregious discrimination that some foolish parents cause when they prefer the offspring of a particular wife to the offspring of another in regards to food, clothing and education. Therefore, problems arise when a Muslim abandons his religion and exposes it to criticism and attacks by its adversaries. Every Muslim should pay attention to his behaviour and should not deviate from the righteous path in order that he protects his religion from criticism. He should not give a chance to the enemies of Islam to attack and censure Islam.

(1) Related by Imam Ahmad, Abu Dawud, and Al-Darimy

When a Muslim behaves in an inappropriate way that is unacceptable to Islam, he gives the adversaries of Allah Glorified is He the opportunity to attack His religion. Therefore, a Muslim should observe good behaviour in order to protect his religion. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him maintained justice amongst his wives to such an extent that was not restricted by his ability. When he was ill, his illness could exonerate him of any blame for staying in any of his wives' houses. However, he ordered some of his companions to carry him to the houses of the rest of his wives on the days specified for them. Therefore, he used the power and ability of others in order for him to maintain optimal justice. Furthermore, whenever he travelled, he used to draw lots to choose a wife who would travel with him; this is utmost justice.

When such a form of justice exists, people will believe that Allah's legislation involves only goodness, and this will dissuade all the opponents of the religion of Allah from attacking it since they will not find a gap through which they can make lawful what the religion of Allah Glorified is He prohibits. Accordingly, if a Muslim is incapable of maintaining justice properly, he should be content with one wife. However, this does not mean that if a Muslim restricts himself to only one wife the need for observing justice is obviated. It is completely unacceptable for a man to neglect his wife. This is why when a woman(1) complained to 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him that her husband did not approach her though he did not have other wives, he told one of the companions who was present to give her a Fatwa (the religious ruling applicable to such a situation). This Companion said that her husband should spend a night with her every three nights. The companion based his judgment upon the assumption that the man had three other wives. Therefore, she deserved the fourth night. Accordingly, ‘Umar Allah be pleased with him was pleased with this companion because he knew how to give proper judgement even in the case of having a single wife.

(1) The story of the woman who complained about her husband to 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him

Therefore, the saying of Allah Glorified is He 'You will never be able to treat your wives with equal fairness, however much you may desire to do so…' (an-Nisa’: 129) does not mean that a person is obligated to maintain justice among wives pertaining to the inclination of his heart and whereas love is concerned. Justice should be maintained only in matters over which a person has control. As for the matters which are not within a person’s capacity, Allah Glorified is He says, '…but do not ignore one wife altogether….' (an-Nisa’: 129) The shallow-minded who want to justify their deviation from the Guidance of Allah would claim that observing justice is required, whereas Allah Glorified is He has decreed that we are incapable of doing so. This opinion can be refuted by the questions, 'Will our Lord give us a concession then take at the same time? Does Allah ask husbands to be just even though He knows that they will not be able to be so?' This is impossible to imagine. When Allah Glorified is He says: “You will never be able to treat your wives with equal fairness, however much you may desire to do so….” (an-Nisa’: 129) He means that achieving justice does not involve matters a person cannot control such as his feelings and love. Therefore, He says: '…but do not ignore one wife altogether….' (an-Nisa’: 129)

We clarify this point to those who make judgments without understanding Allah’ sintention first and to those who understand this intention, but want to deliberately misconstrue it and falsely misquote religion. However, this is a serious matter to which any family may be subjected. For instance, if a man does not have any inclination towards his wife, what is the right course of action in this case? Would it be better to divorce and release her, or should he keep her and marry another wife with whom he feels comfortable? Or should he follow his sexual desires without any control? Allah Glorified is He has enacted an integrated religion which should be followed as a whole, and not observing certain rules of the religionand abandoning others.

The problems and crises that ailed countless non-Muslim societies have impelled them to apply many Islamic solutions. I do not like to elaborate on this subject matter, but it is worthwhile to mention that a number of countries have considered allowing polygamy not because Islam has decreed it, but due to the fact that their social conditions have demonstrated that it is the only solution for their problems, especially in order for them to eradicate the problem of mistresses. Mistresses are the women with whom men have illegitimate affairs and then have illegitimate children from them as a result.

It is preferable that a man's relationship with a second woman to be within the framework of marriage which should be known to the public. Furthermore, a man should undertake the responsibility of his family. Whoever wants to know more about these countries and their decision in this particular regard can refer to Dr. Muhammad Khafaja's interpretation of the relevant verse, as he has stated a complete list of the countries that have decided to allow polygamy.

We also have to heed an important fact: Allah Glorified is He has not enjoined polygamy; rather, He has allowed itonly. The man, who does not feel comfortable with having more than one wife, should abstain from doing it. Permissible matters are those concerning which a Muslim can choose whether to do them or not. If we consider the matter from a different perspective, we will find that if multiplicity is allowed for one party, and the two parties are equal in number, then the option for multiplicity cannot be attained. The following example illustrates this point. If ten people enter a room that has ten chairs, everyone can sit on a chair. No one can use a chair for sitting and another for stretching his legs. But if there are eleven chairs in the room, then one of the ten people can use a chair for sitting and another one for stretching his legs. Accordingly, multiplicity is allowed when there is surplus. If there is no surplus, then no multiplicity should be allowed because every man will marry only one woman, as then, he will not find any other woman to marry.

Therefore, the fact that Allah Glorified is He has allowed polygamy means that He knows that there is a surplus, as it is well known that the number of males in each species is less than the number of females. We have given the example of palm trees and the eggs that are produced when a roaster fertilises a hen, hens always outnumber roosters. Thus, the number of females in the realm of plants, animals and every other species exceeds the number of males. If this is the case, and every male will marry only one female, what will be the destiny of the remaining females? They will either try to be permanently chaste and suppress their desires or release them in their attitude towards men surrounding her, or they may unleash their desires with married men, spoiling social relations.

When Allah Glorified is He has allowed polygamy, He willed that it accommodates the excess number of women, but upon the condition of observing justice. Thus, when Allah Glorified is He says, 'If you fear that you cannot be equitable [to them], then marry only one…' (an-Nisa': 3), this means that if the person fears that he cannot observe justice (in matters that are under his control), then he should restrict to and be content with marrying only one woman.

Then, Allah Glorified is He says: '…or your slave(s)….' (an-Nisa': 3) Some people argue about the following verse, "…or your slave(s)…." (an-Nisa': 3) However, we are reassured regarding this by clarifying that there is no source of slaves now due to the fact that Muslims are passive and subservient, a fact which has emboldened infidels to attack them and seize parts of their land and countries. However, Muslims have not tried to defend their lands. Likewise, there is no longer a war between Muslims and disbelievers, so there are no captives or slaves. It must be noted that we support and defend this legislation when it was applicable in the past. The rationale underlying the permission for a Muslim to take pleasure in his female slave is that the abolition of slavery was among the main goals which Islam has intended to achieve, as it does not promote slavery.

Before Islam, the liberation of slaves depended solely on the will of their masters. Then, Islam came and introduced different ways for liberating the slaves. For example, a sinner may be asked to free a slave in order to atone for a sin or false oath. In addition, the man who has committed Zhihar (a man likening his wife to an unmarriageable relative) should expiate for this sin by freeing a slave, whereas a person who has broken his fast in Ramadan should free a slave.

Moreover, the expiation for murder is to free a slave. Thus, Islam offers several possibilities of freeing slaves, allowing for the eradication of slavery.

As for the believer who has not committed a sin that entails manumission of a slave and has women slaves, Islam has set rules for how he should treat his female slaves: he must feed her the same food from which he and his family eat along with providing her clothing like that which he and his family use. Furthermore, he should not ask her to do anything beyond her capacity. Accordingly, if he assigns her any work, he should assist her. The only thing that she misses is the satisfaction of her desire, especially when she resides in a house dwelled by a man and his wife, and she sees this wife beautifying herself for her husband and living a full marital life with her husband. Women are sensitive to these matters which may rouse their desires and feelings.

Since Allah Glorified is He allows a master and female slave to enjoy each other, He soothes her feelings, and this suggests that she is equal to her lady, the wife of her master, and is thus entitled to the same enjoyment. Allah Glorified is He wants to eradicate slavery gradually since He only allows the slave woman to marry a slave man, she will never escape slavery, and any child she may bear will be doomed to being a slave. However if she could copulate with her master and beget a baby, she would free herself and her child. Therefore, this act helps in annihilating slavery, that in addition to respecting a slave's desire and natural instinct. However, foolish people always want to censure and criticise Islam for this.

Allah Glorified is He says: 'If you fear that you cannot be equitable [to them], then marry only one, or your slave(s). That is more likely to make you avoid bias.' (an-Nisa': 3) This means if a person fears that he may not be fair, he should be content with only one wife or a slave in order to avoid bias. Some people say that it means to avoid the increase of children. Allah Glorified is He allowed a person to copulate with the slaves; therefore, there will be a greater chance for increasing the number of children. His saying '…that is more likely to make you avoid bias.' (an-Nisa': 3) means that this attitude should be adopted in order to avoid wronging anyone since the word 'Al-`Awl', which is the root of 'ta'ulu' and is mentioned in the verse, means inclination, and in the context of inheritance, it means the case in which the shares increase over the original assets. If the number of people sharing a particular property increases, each one's share will decrease.

Then, Allah Glorified is He says:

وَءَاتُواْ ٱلنِّسَآءَ صَدُقَٰتِهِنَّ نِحۡلَةٗۚ فَإِن طِبۡنَ لَكُمۡ عَن شَيۡءٖ مِّنۡهُ نَفۡسٗا فَكُلُوهُ هَنِيٓـٔٗا مَّرِيٓـٔٗا ٤

Give women their bridal gift upon marriage, though if they are happy to give up some of it for you, you may enjoy it with a clear conscience[4] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 4)

It means to give wome their dowries. The word 'sadaqatuhun' which is mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse means the dowry, and the word 'nihla' means gift. So, is the dowry considered a gift? No, it is a wife's right and a compensation for having sexual relations with her. However, Allah Glorified is He clarifies that giving dowries to women should be like giving a gift. Thus, it is based on religious motive, rather than a court judgement.

We should consider Allah's use of words and meanings in this context since what happens in reality is the following: a man marries a woman for satisfying each other's desire and for begetting children. If this is the case, this may not have entitled her to a dowry since she will enjoy relations as much as he does, and will have children. In addition, she will undertake the household affairs, while her husband will exert efforts to earn his livelihood. However, this gift was decreed by Allah Glorified is He in order to dignify women: 'Give women their bridal gift upon marriage….' (an-Nisa': 4) Who is commanded to give the gift? It is either the husband or the guardian as per His saying: 'Give women their bridal gift upon marriage….' (an-Nisa': 4) This implies that a woman has become his wife, and he has become obligated to pay her a dowry. This dowry may be considered as a debt if a husband has married without giving her the dowry due to financial problems, but he should pay it whenever he becomes financially capable. Allah Glorified is He may also be addressing the guardian of the bride since he may take the bride's dowry. Therefore, the command in this verse is, thus either addressing husbands or guardians. However, when Allah Glorified is He decrees legislation to protect rights, he always gives room for the one whom He has entitled to this right to voluntarily and gracefully give up part or all of it. Therefore, Allah Glorified is He says,

'…Though if they are happy to give up some of it for you, you may enjoy it with a clear conscience.' (an-Nisa': 4)

Allah has first defined the rights by asserting to the husband or the guardian of the bride that her dowry is exclusively hers since it is compensation for having marital relations with her. However, He Glorified is He has permitted voluntary concession. Thus, if a wife renounces her right, there is nothing wrong with her husband not paying her the dowry. Such a graceful act on her part is bound to strengthen the foundations of their marital life. What matters in this context is the voluntary accord and acceptance of a wife to renounce her right, but her guardian should not take advantage of her bashfulness and appropriate part of her dowry. The important matter is that she should voluntarily accept to renounce it: '… Though, if they are happy to give up some of it for you, you may enjoy it with a clear conscience.' (an-Nisa': 4)

The Arabic word 'hani" means the food that a person enjoys eating. However, one may eat something that he finds delicious, but it may cause many health problems. It may thus be enjoyable to eat but may not be healthy and generally good food. What is intended by the words 'Han'an Mari'a' which are mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse, is the generally good food that does not have bad health effects. It is different from the tasty food that may cause health problems that require treatment after eating. Accordingly, tasty and enjoyable food is not necessarily good and healthy. Therefore, we should make sure that we eat healthy and tasty food.

One day a man came to Imam 'Ali Allah be pleased with him complaining of pain. It is well known that 'Ali had profound and extensive knowledge and a great ability to issue legal opinions. Although he was not a physician, the man sought a remedy based on 'Ali's insights and great knowledge. He told the man to take two dirhams from the dowry of his wife and buy some honey, and then he advised him to dissolve it in some fresh rainwater and drink it. 'Ali advised him as such based on Allah's saying about rainwater: 'and how We send blessed water down from the sky….' (Qaf: 9) 'Ali Allah be pleased with him also said that he heard Allah's verse about honey: 'From their bellies comes a drink of different colours in which there are healing for people.' (an-Nahl: 69) 'Ali added that he heard Allah's verse concerning a wife's dowry: '… Though, if they are happy to give up some of it for you, you may enjoy it with a clear conscience.' (an-Nisa’: 4) Therefore, ‘Ali believed that if the medicine combines blessing, healing factor, good taste, and healthiness, Allah Glorified is He can cure the patient if He wills. ‘Ali Allah be pleased with him combined four elements into a medicine in the same way a physician cures patients by mixing different elements. In this case, ‘Ali Allah be pleased with him made a treatment from Quranic verses.

Then, Allah Glorified is He addresses the subject of orphans, feeble-minded people, money, guardianship, and sponsorship. Allah Glorified is He says,

وَلَا تُؤْتُوا۟ ٱلسُّفَهَآءَ أَمْوَٰلَكُمُ ٱلَّتِى جَعَلَ ٱللَّهُ لَكُمْ قِيَـٰمًا وَٱرْزُقُوهُمْ
فِيهَا وَٱكْسُوهُمْ وَقُولُوا۟ لَهُمْ قَوْلًا مَّعْرُوفًا ﴿٥﴾

Do not entrust your property to the feeble-minded. God has made it a means of support for you: make provision for them from it, clothe them, and address them kindly [5] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 5)

Who is the feeble-minded person? He is the one who does not have a sound mind and cannot manage his wealth wisely. Who would ever give his money to a feeble-minded person? Allah Glorified is He says this to teach us how to manage money and use it. For instance, Allah Glorified is He says: “… do not speak ill of one another…” (al-Hujurat: 11). Certainly, no one speaks ill of himself, but he may speak ill of his opponent or enemy, an act which may lead his opponent or enemy to speak ill of him, i.e., both of them speak ill of one another. Therefore, Allah’s saying, 'Do not entrust your property to the feeble-minded…' (an-Nisa’: 5) means that a feeble-minded person may have a fortune, but his feeble-mindedness precludes him from managing it properly, as unwise handling of wealth may lead to losing and wasting it. Thus, if a feeble-minded person has wealth, he should not manage it; rather, a proper guardian should handle and manage it for him.

Allah Glorified is He addresses a problem that existed in society: some men, whose children who were slightly grown up, gave the responsibility of their wealth to them in order to spare themselves the trouble of managing wealth, even if their children were incapable of doing so wisely. Allah Glorified is He warns these parents in this verse against giving their wealth to the feeble-minded based on the excuse that they are their children. Allah Glorified is He also warns parents against letting their feeble-minded children manage their sources of livelihood since He has made this wealth as a means of support for them. Therefore, they should not give this wealth to anyone else.

'Do not entrust your property to the feeble-minded. God has made it a means of support for you. Give provisions to them from it….' (an-Nisa': 5) Allah clarifies that the feeble-minded person should enjoy all aspects of living, such as food, clothes, etc. Allah Glorified is He commands Muslims: '… Give provisions to them from it, clothe them and address them kindly.' (an-Nisa': 5). This is a command to treat feeble-minded people well, not to mock them for their foolishness, as no one should increase the suffering of the feeble-minded.

Then, Allah Glorified is He returns to the subject of orphans:

وَٱبۡتَلُواْ ٱلۡيَتَٰمَىٰ حَتَّىٰٓ إِذَا بَلَغُواْ ٱلنِّكَاحَ فَإِنۡ ءَانَسۡتُم مِّنۡهُمۡ رُشۡدٗا فَٱدۡفَعُوٓاْ إِلَيۡهِمۡ أَمۡوَٰلَهُمۡۖ وَلَا
تَأۡكُلُوهَآ إِسۡرَافٗا وَبِدَارًا أَن يَكۡبَرُواْۚ وَمَن كَانَ غَنِيّٗا فَلۡيَسۡتَعۡفِفۡۖ وَمَن كَانَ فَقِيرٗا
فَلۡيَأۡكُلۡ بِٱلۡمَعۡرُوفِۚ فَإِذَا دَفَعۡتُمۡ إِلَيۡهِمۡ أَمۡوَٰلَهُمۡ فَأَشۡهِدُواْ عَلَيۡهِمۡۚ وَكَفَىٰ بِٱللَّهِ حَسِيبٗا ٦

Test orphans until they reach marriageable age; then, if you find they have sound judgment, hand over their property to them. Do not consume it hastily before they come of age: if the guardian is well off, he should abstain from the orphan's property, and if he is poor he should use only what is fair. When you give them their property, call witnesses in; but God takes full account of everything you do [6] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 6)

Allah Glorified is He orders guardians in the case of dealing with an orphan to test and train them on how to manage their wealth before they reach full age. This means that a guardian should not wait until an orphan reaches full age, and then try to test him. A guardian should rather test him before he reaches full age in minor matters. If an orphan shows proper action and wisdom, a guardian will readily give him his wealth as soon as he reaches full age and will not be forced to delay giving him his money until he tests him after having reached full age. When an orphan is tested before reaching full age, he will receive his wealth and manage it by himself once he reaches full age. Allah Glorified is He commands a guardian to do as such in order for the wealth not to be kept with the guardian for even a moment after an orphan reaches full age. Allah Glorified is He says: 'Test orphans until they reach marriageable age. Then, if you find they have sound judgment, hand over their property to them. Do not consume it hastily….' (an-Nisa': 6)

When an orphan reaches full age after being trained by his guardian on how to manage his wealth properly, and when the guardian is certain that he is perfectly capable of doing that, he should hand over his wealth to him and should not consume it hastily and excessively. Excessiveness means exceeding the proper limits allowed in spending money. A guardian may consume this wealth hastily since this wealth is not his own, as it is owned by the orphan. When a greedy man was asked, 'O, greedy, what do you want greedy man?' He said, 'I want a bowl of porridge that I can keep on eating in the same way that a bad guardian does with the wealth of an orphan.' May Allah Glorified is He save us from such a situation! Allah Glorified is He also says, '… Do not consume it hastily before they come of age. '(an-Nisa': 6) Allah Glorified is He warns us against squandering the fortune of an orphan before he reaches full age. This is in order that an orphan's wealth is not to be squandered by a guardian before he reaches full age. However, Allah's legislation is perfect and does not prevent a fair, poor person from being a guardian. Allah Glorified is He could have enjoined that guardianship should be assigned only to wealthy persons since they will not be in need of an orphan's wealth. Therefore, Allah does not preclude the honest, poor person who has both faith and expertise from being assigned as a guardian. Allah Glorified is He says about a guardian: '…If a guardian is well off, he should abstain from an orphan's property, and if he is poor, he should use only what is fair….' (an-Nisa': 6) So, nobody should say that if a poor person becomes in charge of an orphan's wealth, he will misappropriate it, as this judgement is based on human criterion. No one should prevent a poor believer from being assigned guardianship of an orphan since it is true that a person who has faith can rise above greed and avarice. Therefore, Allah Glorified is He says about a guardian who undertakes an evident responsibility towards an orphan's wealth: '… If a guardian is well off, he should abstain from an orphan's property, and if he is poor, he should use only what is fair….' (an-Nisa': 6)

Scholars have determined the fair amount that a guardian is entitled to take to be equivalent to fees which his counterpart may receive for the same job. The word 'Al-Ma'ruf' which is mentioned in the verse, means what is common and accepted among people. A guardian may receive an amount that is common for people to receive in such cases, or he may take as much as he needs. Allah Glorified is He says, '…When you give them their property, call witnesses in; but it is God Who takes full account of everything you do.' (an-Nisa': 6) Allah Glorified is He protects a guardian, as He knows well His creatures since their nature and feelings change. A guardian of an orphan has to manage his wealth wisely and carefully so that the orphan will not hate him. Sometimes a guardian gives an orphan everything he asks for, but this action is not recommended since an orphan should receive only what he needs, and not to be spoiled. A guardian may not give an orphan all the things he asks for since he may regard them as unsuitable for the orphan, an action which may lead the orphan to hate the guardian and lead him to accuse the guardian of misappropriating his wealth when he reaches full age. However, Allah Glorified is He protects a guardian when an orphan reaches full age in so much as the guardian has protected the orphan's wealth and managed him properly.

Therefore, a guardian should bring witnesses to oversee the transaction when he hands over an orphan's wealth since fluctuations of the human soul cannot be controlled. An orphan may hate his guardian for being strict regarding spending the wealth or for punishing him whenever he deviated from the right path. In this case, an orphan may hate his guardian and falsely accuse him. Therefore, a guardian must bring just and impartial witnesses when he delivers an orphan's wealth, in order for a guardian to be discharged from the wealth. However, anything else is left to Allah Glorified is He: '… it is Allah Who takes full account of everything you do.' (an-Nisa': 6)

Thus, you may notice that the chapter of an-Nisa' addresses the weaknesses of women and orphans due to the fact that in the pre-Islamic society, people used to refuse to bequeath women and children until they became adults. This was a strange rule. This was an extremely horrible form of subjugating the weak at the hands of those endowed with power. Indeed, a main underlying objective of the Islamic mission is to eliminate widespread injustices. An example of this is how Islam ruled that women and children must be given their rights. Allah says:

لِّلرِّجَالِ نَصِيبٌ مِّمَّا تَرَكَ ٱلۡوَٰلِدَانِ وَٱلۡأَقۡرَبُونَ وَلِلنِّسَآءِ نَصِيبٌ مِّمَّا تَرَكَ
ٱلۡوَٰلِدَانِ وَٱلۡأَقۡرَبُونَ مِمَّا قَلَّ مِنۡهُ أَوۡ كَثُرَۚ نَصِيبًا مَّفۡرُوضًا ٧

Men shall have a share in what their parents and closest relatives leave, and women shall have a share in what their parents and closest relatives leave, whether the legacy be small or large: this is ordained by God [by God] [7] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 7)

But who enacts this share? It is Allah Who is the only True Owner and Lawgiver. In this context, the martyr Allah rest his soul in peace Sayyid Qutb, the author of fi Zhilal al-Quran [In the Shades of the Quran] critically observes the injustices of depriving the deceased's children or women, for whom he was responsible, a share of their inheritance, yet they were denied it. Indeed, the young deserve to take more since the elder have grown up and become stronger. The young are worthy of more care and nurturing. Furthermore, if the heredity laws of Mendel demonstrate that children inherit features from their parents and grandparents, both the good and the bad, and even diseases, chastity and countenance, why should they not inherit their fortune?

When we listen to the Lord's statement: '… a share ordained' (an-Nisa’: 7), we conclude that there must be a lawgiver who ordains this law and a recipient who must obey it. The Lawgiver is Allah, the Possessor. In Arabic, there is a subtle difference between farada (ordained) and a*wjaba* (obligated). The 'ordainment' is issued by a higher authority, while the 'obligation' may originate from the person himself; anyone may place an obligation upon themselves to undertake a particular duty. The True Lord the Most High addresses the matter of the ‘prescribed share’ making it clear that it is a precisely known portion. The True Lord explained it only after mentioning those usually present, yet undeserving of inheritance, those around the deceased but are not legally specified heirs. Allah the Most High explicitly invites us to allot a portion of the legacy to those who have no prescribed share, forewarning against settlements that distribute ordained shares to those who have none. For this reason, Allah says:

وَإِذَا حَضَرَ ٱلْقِسْمَةَ أُو۟لُوا۟ ٱلْقُرْبَىٰ وَٱلْيَتَـٰمَىٰ وَٱلْمَسَـٰكِينُ
فَٱرْزُقُوهُم مِّنْهُ وَقُولُوا۟ لَهُمْ قَوْلًا مَّعْرُوفًا ﴿٨﴾

If other relatives, orphans, or needy people are present at the distribution, give them something too, and speak kindly to them [8] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 8)

When kinsfolk, orphans, and needy persons attend the distribution of inheritance and each legal heir receives their share, people who are not legal heirs may say that the heirs are effortlessly appropriating a fortune that fortuitously came to them. Such a situation may ignite bad feelings in the hearts of kinsfolk, orphans, and needy persons. It is true that kinsfolk, orphans, and needy persons are not legal heirs and, as such, are not entitled to take any share of inheritance. Nonetheless, they attended the distribution of shares. Therefore, Allah commands: '… give them something thereof for their sustenance and speak unto them in a kind way.' (an-Nisa': 8). Thus, had they not attended the division, the situation would have been different. Accordingly, Allah the Most High commands us to give to kinsfolk, orphans, and needy persons to eliminate any trace of envy or rancour towards the heirs or the deceased.

As a result, love, compassion and the joy of doing good deeds will be common amongst people since they all share the benefits. Furthermore, the True Lord the Most High not only commands us to bestow upon kinsfolk, orphans, and needy persons a portion of the heritage, but He also commands us to speak kindly unto them, e.g. invoking Allah to increase their sustenance, children and wealth, all of which could be inherited by their children. Such is the duty of the mature heirs endowed with wisdom and common sense. However, if the heir is an orphan, those present should tell kinsfolk, orphans, and needy persons that the heritage is for an orphan, thus, they do not have custody over it. Had they the custody over it, they would have surely given them more so as to soften their hearts and comfort them, Allah says, 'And when [other] near of kin and orphans and needy persons are present at the distribution [of inheritance], give them something thereof for their sustenance and speak unto them in a kind way.' (an-Nisa’: 8) In other words, you ought to bear in mind that if you were weak, or an orphan or one not entitled to inheritance, you would definitely be happy if you were allotted a share of inheritance. You should remember that Allah asks you to give a share to those who have no share to inheritance, for you may one day be in their position; Allah the Most High may recommend a share for you and your children. Consideration of Divine Laws should not be reduced to be a mere commitment and obligation on believers; rather, these laws should also commit others to fulfil some rights and obligations towards them.

The religious legal ruling simultaneously gives and takes away from you. For this reason, we advise those who pay zakat (obligatory charity to the poor) from entertaining the thought that it takes from the fruit of their work and effort to give others. Indeed, zakat (Alms) takes from you when you are capable of building security in your life, and when you are incapable; it takes your right from capable people. It is a wise, divine insurance. Subsequently, Allah says:

وَلْيَخْشَ ٱلَّذِينَ لَوْ تَرَكُوا۟ مِنْ خَلْفِهِمْ ذُرِّيَّةً ضِعَـٰفًا خَافُوا۟
عَلَيْهِمْ فَلْيَتَّقُوا۟ ٱللَّهَ وَلْيَقُولُوا۟ قَوْلًا سَدِيدًا ﴿٩﴾

Let those who would fear for the future of their own helpless children, if they were to die, show the same concern [for orphans]; let them be mindful of God and speak out for justice [9] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 9)

One who has weak children that he could leave behind is always worried about their future. Thus, if you, believers, have weak children and you are worried about them, be kind and show sympathy to all weak orphan children; in return for your care, others would be kind to your weak offspring if you were to leave them after death. O, believers know that our Lord is the Watcher and the All-Sustaining. He will repay the good that you have done to your offspring. We once mentioned that Mu‘awiyah and ‘Amr ibn Al-‘As Allah be pleased with them met towards the end of their lives. ‘Amr ibn Al-‘As asked Mu‘awiyah, 'O, Commander of the Believers, what worldly pleasure do you continue to enjoy?’ At that time, Mu‘awiyah was the Commander of the Believers or Caliph, that is the head of a strong and rich state. In response, Mu‘awiyah said, 'As for food, I have become bored of the luxurious kinds. As for clothes and apparel, I have become bored of the softest and finest of them. My pleasure in this world is a sip of cold water under the shade of a tree on a summer day.' Mu‘awiyah Allah be pleased with him then kept silent for a while before asking ‘Amr Allah be pleased with him ‘What about you ‘Amr? What worldly pleasure do you still desire?’ ‘Amr ibn Al-‘As, a great commercial genius, replied, ‘My fortune and pleasure is an endlessly flowing water spring in a fertile land that abounds with mooing cows and accrues a sufficient livelihood for me and my posterity.’ He asks for a continuously flowing spring of water in a land where animals and plants abound with benefits and fruits. They had a servant serving them something to drink. Mu‘awiyah looked at him and wanted to joke around and get him involved in the discussion. He said to a servant, ‘What about you, ‘Wardan’? What pleasure still appeals to you?’ In response, he said, ‘O, Commander of the Believers, it ardently appeals to me to do a favour for some noble people who would not repay it to me during my lifetime but bear it in mind for my children.' The servant has clearly understood Allah's saying: 'And let them stand in awe [of Allah], those [legal heirs] who, if they [themselves] had to leave behind weak offspring, would feel fear on their account, and let them remain conscious of Allah, and let them speak [to the poor] in a just manner.' (an-Nisa’: 9) Those who are conscious of Allah and take care of the weak posterity left behind by others guarantee that Allah will bestow upon them someone who is conscious of Him to look after their own weak offspring.

We have talked about the good servant and worshipper to whom Musa (Moses) peace be upon him went to visit, Al-Khidr Allah be pleased with him Musa (Moses) said to him, ‘May I follow you so that you can teach me some of the right guidance you have been taught?’ The man (Al-Khidr) said, ‘You will not be able to bear with me patiently. How could you be patient in matters beyond your knowledge?’ Musa (Moses) said, ‘God willing, you will find me patient. I will not disobey you in any way.’ The man said, ‘If you follow me then, do not query anything I do before I mention it to you myself.’ They travelled on. Later, when they got into a boat, and the man made a hole in it. Musa (Moses) said, ‘How could you make a hole in it? Do you want to drown its passengers? What a strange thing to do!'' (al-Kahf: 66-71) 'He replied, ‘Did I not tell you that you would never be able to bear with me patiently?’ Moses said, ‘Forgive me for forgetting. Do not make it too hard for me to follow you.’ And so they travelled on. Then, when they met a young boy and the man killed him, Moses said, ‘How could you kill an innocent person? He has not killed anyone! What a terrible thing to do!' (al-Kahf: 72-74) After that, they arrived in a village where they asked its people for food. When a traveller who is passing through asks you for food, it is always for a pressing need. Simply, if he begs for money, you may think he is doing so just to amass wealth. However, if he asks for some food to eat, then it is incumbent upon you to meet his need. How was the response of the villagers when the righteous servant and Musa (Moses) peace be upon him asked them for food? Allah says: 'And so they travelled on. Then, when they came to a town and asked the inhabitants for food but were refused hospitality, they saw a wall there that was on the point of falling down, and the man repaired it. Musa (Moses) said, “But if you had wished you could have taken payment for doing that.” (al-Kahf: 77) It was a mean village. The good servant then found a wall on the verge of collapsing and he rebuilt it. Musa (Moses) peace be upon him objected him doing this since he had a reservation about the people of the village who denied them simple hospitability. Musa (Moses) peace be upon him in essence, said: 'If you wished, you could have asked for a payment for rebuilding the wall. The people of the village are mean, and you should not have rebuilt the wall for them unless you had received a payment for your effort.'

Musa (Moses) peace be upon him was oblivious to facts that Allah did not let his good servant (Al-Khidr) miss. By Allah, if the wall had collapsed, and those wicked people, who did not feed them when they had asked for food, had found the treasure left for the poor orphans, they would have definitely taken this fortune for themselves. Therefore, when the righteous servant saw that the wall was about to collapse, he erected it so that he would hide the treasure away from the wicked, mean people. Thus, he says: 'The wall belonged to two young orphans in the town and there was buried treasure beneath it belonging to them. Their father had been a righteous man, so your Lord intended them to reach maturity and then dig up their treasure as a mercy from your Lord. I did not do [these things] of my own accord: these are the explanations for those things you could not bear with patience.'' (al-Kahf: 82)

This process aims to protect the two orphans. We have to be careful and meticulously examine the text. The good servant repaired the wall in a manner that gave it new life so much so that it would be on the brink of collapsing by the time the two orphans would reach the age of wisdom and rationality. This way both of them would find the treasure. The wall was well timely rebuilt so that when the two orphans reach the age of wisdom and rationality, they could take their treasure. It is the timing willed by Allah since the father of the two orphans was a good man. He was ever conscious of Allah and carried out his responsibilities well. In return, Allah sent them soldiers and made arrangements to protect and preserve the treasure of the man's two orphan boys. Therefore, we need to understand well the wisdom in these words of Allah that we may know how to deal with our children and protect them: 'And let them stand in awe [of Allah], those [legal heirs] who, if they [themselves] had to leave behind weak offspring, would feel fear on their account, and let them remain conscious of Allah, and let them speak [to the poor] in a just manner' (an-Nisa': 9). Why? Simply, when one is young, his egotism is strongly present. The older he becomes, the more he cares for the interest of his children in so much that he would deprive himself of pleasures he enjoys just to meet the needs of his children. Furthermore, when he sees that his offspring are still weak and feel his death is nearing, he grieves at the thought of for leaving his offspring in a weak position. The Lord the Most High clarifies the best way for all His servants to deal with this situation: while you are still alive, give strength and support to your children when they are in a weak state; and how to emanate this strength is by adhering to the way of Allah, especially by caring for the orphans under your custody. In this way you secure the livelihood of your children after your death and should find rest after death.

The proper advice to guardians is the following: 'Never harm orphans! You should address them in the same kind and welcoming manner in which you address your own children. Call them ‘dear child’ and ‘dear kid.’ ' When a believer is conscious of Allah and seeks to avoid His punishment, Allah the Most High graces their children with a pious person to care for them. The Divine Law concerning orphans continues:

إِنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ يَأۡكُلُونَ أَمۡوَٰلَ ٱلۡيَتَٰمَىٰ ظُلۡمًا إِنَّمَا يَأۡكُلُونَ فِي
بُطُونِهِمۡ نَارٗاۖ وَسَيَصۡلَوۡنَ سَعِيرٗا ﴿١٠﴾

Those who consume the property of orphans unjustly are actually swallowing fire into their own bellies: they will burn in the blazing Flame [10]
(The Quran, an-Nisa’: 10)

Why does the Quran focus on this matter? It does due to the fact that Allah the Most High wants His creation to accept His decreed plans contently regarding their beloved ones, as well as those whom they need for support. A young child may lose his father who strived to care for him and provide him with everything beautiful in life. However, the child subsequently finds the entire society of believers hastening to take care of them and alleviate the loss of their father with multiple fathers in faith. If the case is as such, the father of the child would die and accept the Divine Plan and trial without feeling any fear. What makes people react towards times of difficulty in fear, despair and horror is that they often see that the loss of fathers turns children hopelessly helpless. Children may tell themselves, 'When our father dies, we will be lost.' However, when society protects the rights of orphans and every believer finds it incumbent upon himself to become an alternative father/mother, the situation will radically change. In this case, when the Divine Decree wills to take away the soul of a father, the child will receive it in patience and contentment. 'Behold, those who sinfully devour the possessions of orphans do fill their bellies with fire, for [in the life to come] they will have to endure a blazing flame!' (an-Nisa’: 10) Devouring is repeatedly happening as a result of stealing and appropriating what is not one’s own. Eating is different from wearing clothes. In every season, one needs clothes that suit them, but eating is an everyday practice. For this reason, any stealing is intended for devouring. This is why we say in our popular proverb about avaricious people. Such and such has ‘a big stomach’ because it is but an act of devouring. The True Lord the Most High has explained the matter of eating the fortune of an orphan by saying: 'O, eaters, of the money of the orphan, you fill your stomach with fire!' In other words, you are eating what will lead you to hellfire in the Afterlife. Nevertheless, punishment may take place immediately in this world; the devourer of the fortune of orphans may be plagued with lethal painful diseases. On the Day of Judgment, believers will see the traces of the crime of devouring the fortune of orphans on faces with smokes coming out of perpetrators' mouths. Do not think that the stomach will only be filled with fire, while eyes are relieved. No, fire in stomachs occurs while they are exposed to burning flame. The True Lord the Most High says:

يُوصِيكُمُ ٱللَّهُ فِيٓ أَوۡلَٰدِكُمۡۖ لِلذَّكَرِ مِثۡلُ حَظِّ ٱلۡأُنثَيَيۡنِۚ فَإِن كُنَّ نِسَآءٗ فَوۡقَ ٱثۡنَتَيۡنِ
فَلَهُنَّ ثُلُثَا مَا تَرَكَۖ وَإِن كَانَتۡ وَٰحِدَةٗ فَلَهَا ٱلنِّصۡفُۚ وَلِأَبَوَيۡهِ لِكُلِّ وَٰحِدٖ مِّنۡهُمَا
ٱلسُّدُسُ مِمَّا تَرَكَ إِن كَانَ لَهُۥ وَلَدٞۚ فَإِن لَّمۡ يَكُن لَّهُۥ وَلَدٞ وَوَرِثَهُۥٓ أَبَوَاهُ فَلِأُمِّهِ ٱلثُّلُثُۚ فَإِن كَانَ
لَهُۥٓ إِخۡوَةٞ فَلِأُمِّهِ ٱلسُّدُسُۚ مِنۢ بَعۡدِ وَصِيَّةٖ يُوصِي بِهَآ أَوۡ دَيۡنٍۗ ءَابَآؤُكُمۡ وَأَبۡنَآؤُكُمۡ لَا
تَدۡرُونَ أَيُّهُمۡ أَقۡرَبُ لَكُمۡ نَفۡعٗاۚ فَرِيضَةٗ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ عَلِيمًا حَكِيمٗا ﴿١١﴾

Concerning your children, God commands you that a son should have the equivalent share of two daughters. If there are only daughters, two or more should share two-thirds of the inheritance, if one, she should have half. Parents inherit a sixth each if the deceased leaves children; if he leaves no children and his parents are his sole heirs, his mother has a third, unless he has brothers, in which case she has a sixth. [In all cases, the distribution comes] after payment of any bequests or debts. You cannot know which of your parents or your children is more beneficial to you: this is a law from God, and He is all knowing, all wise[11] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 11)

Exalted is our Lord, the Creator, the Most High. The Lord of the Great Throne tells us how to handle inheritance with our kids, as if we were more loved by Allah than we are by our parents. His noble saying, 'concerning [the inheritance of] your children, Allah enjoins [this] upon you…' (an-Nisa': 11) shows His Mercy and Love for us. If we explore the way Allah expresses advice in the Quran, we conclude that the content of the advice is often accompanied by the ba' (lit. with) letter. Thus, Allah the Most High says: 'All this has He enjoined upon you so that you might remain conscious of Him.' (al-An'am: 153)

Allah the Most High says, 'In matters of faith, He has ordained for you that which He had enjoined upon Nuh (Noah)….' (ash-Shura: 13) He the Most High also said: 'We have enjoined upon man goodness towards his parents. His mother bore him by bearing strain upon strain….' (Luqman: 14) All these Quranic verses are associated with the ba’ letter; it indicates company and association. However, when He advises parents to be good to their children, Allah the Most High says: 'concerning [the inheritance of] your children, Allah enjoins [this] upon you….' (an-Nisa’: 11) The Arabic preposition 'fi' (which literally means 'in' but contextually means 'concerning') is indicative of being firmly imprinted and connected to the nature of children. Whenever you see the matter of advice which in this case is the child, you remember it. What is the advice then? It is 'the male shall have the equal of two females’ share….' (an-Nisa’: 11) We said before that the True Lord the Most High says: 'Men shall have a share in what parents and kinsfolk leave behind, and women shall have a share in what parents and kinsfolk leave behind….' (an-Nisa’: 7).

In this verse, Allah the Most High did not specify the share of the male immediately after this verse; He only did so after mentioning the matter of orphans and forewarning people against devouring their money. Why? The answer is simple: the course of discussion creates curiosity and craving in readers for the correct judgment. When a reader yearns for a ruling, it comes forth when the reader's soul is ready to apply it. Conversely, when a ruling is enjoined without prior request, the human psyche may either accept or reject it. Allah does not reveal rulings abruptly to His servants, but He prepares them first so they may be eager to receive them, and this is noticeable in the way He reveals to us the rulings of inheritance. At first, Allah the Most High said: 'Men shall have a share in what parents and kinsfolk leave behind, and women shall have a share in what parents and kinsfolk leave behind…' (an-Nisa’: 7)

Subsequently, He the Most High prescribed the rules of distributing the inheritance and the laws requiring kind treatment of orphans, needy people, and family members. Therefore, Allah enjoins due care for the properties of orphans and warns against appropriating them. He the Most High says: 'concerning [the inheritance of] your children, Allah enjoins [this] upon you….' (an-Nisa’: 11) The first part of this Divine instruction reads as follows: 'The male shall have the equal of two females’ share….' (an-Nisa’: 11) But why did He not say, 'Two females shall have a share equal to that of a male' or 'The female shall have the equal of half the share of the male'? All these phrases express the same apparent meaning. However, Allah the Most High wants the criterion, or the yardstick, for measurement to be the share of females, so the share of males is determined in the light of his female counterparts. If He the Most High says that the female shall have the equal of half the share of the male, the criterion for measuring would be 'the male', but Allah the Most High wants the criterion to be defined in terms of 'the female.' Therefore, He says: 'The male shall have the equal of two females' share….' (an-Nisa': 11)

Some may claim that this ruling is the first injustice against women. In reply, look at the justice in this context. A male needs a wife to support, and a female needs a husband who must support her. Therefore, half the share of the male is enough for her if she lives without a husband. If she gets married, her share will continue to be hers and, in addition, her husband will support her. Which one has a better share in this distribution of inheritance? Actually, it is the female who has a better share. For this reason, Allah the Most High made her the basis and the criterion for distribution by saying: 'The male shall have the equal of two females' share....' (an-Nisa': 11) What does this mean? Is it a form of injustice against women or a favour for women? Indeed, it implies a favour for them. Simply, her share is made the criterion for the distribution process. Furthermore, a male must support his female, while a wife shall receive support from her husband. Accordingly, half the share of a man is entirely for her. Therefore, people should have said, 'Why did Allah the Most High favour women? He favoured her because she is divinely honourable, and Allah wants to protect her. In the case when she is not married, she has enough means to support her; yet, if she has a husband, her share will be a grace from Allah.

The True Lord the Most High then says: 'But if there are more than two females, they shall have two-thirds of what [their parents] leave behind; and if there is only one, she shall have one-half thereof….' (an-Nisa': 11) Here, I want the dear readers to focus on understanding the meaning intended by the True Lord the Most High and the methods the Quran uses in grasping the attention of minds to receive the words of Allah. Allah the Most High has honoured mankind with reason, but reason needs to be exercised. The exercise signifies the intellectual training of the mind to gain the ability to solving problems. Having said this, when a problem emerges, the mind is prepared to solve it and has the capacity of deduction and evaluation; these are among the tasks of minds. The True Lord the Most High thus assigns a creative task to the mind in two serious areas of great significance to man: religion and Quran, as guide and preserver of the religion.

Allah the Most High does not give laws in articles like the ones of criminal laws concerning misdemeanours and felonies. Rather, Allah gives a part of the ruling in a particular place, while the remaining part appears in another place within another matter to evince the Divine Course as one integrated unit; it takes you from a context to another and prescribes the details of a single ruling in various places of the Quran. As such, you may recognise the Divine way as a whole. Furthermore, if you explore a specific Divine Ruling, you should not think that it solely stands for the Divine Course. Indeed, many things interfere with the matter from which you seek a relevant ruling. A good example is the matter of orphans, which interferes with the laws of inheritance. The verse in question illustrates this matter. However, why are Divine rulings expounded in this way? It is simple: Allah the Most High wants you to exercise and train your mind to understand the general framework that encompasses life as a whole. Anyway, what should matter in the first place is your religion, so exert your mind in it. If you employ your mind to understand the religion, you give it the energy it needs for other fields.

Conversely, if your mind gets carried away by any partial matter, it is deviated from the general framework of life and becomes engrossed in details that have no relevance to the universal objective of life. Our children could teach us from their experiences with games. A child may play hide-and-seek game with other kids in which many conceal themselves in places, while one searches for them. We also play a game with our children wherein we hide something in one hand and fold both hands for our children to guess by intuition in which hand the thing is hidden. It is a kind of training and deductive exercise. If a child has some kinds of mental agility, is quite observant, and is full of intelligence, he would look at the hands of his father and see which one shakes a bit or which one does not look normal when folded in order to choose correctly. This way, a child's wit excels his father's. This is a process of training a child on deduction and understanding through which he learns not to take things for granted without enough reflection or experience. The True Lord the Most High wants His rulings to be interspersed amongst different places. In this respect, we should understand His saying: 'Concerning [the inheritance of] your children, Allah enjoins [this] upon you: the male shall have the equal of two females' share; but if there are more than two females, they shall have two-thirds of what [their parents] leave behind; and if there is only one, she shall have one-half thereof….' (an-Nisa': 11) It means that if the deceased leaves no boy but has more than two girls, they are entitled to two thirds of the inheritance. However, if they have a brother, each of them is entitled to half of his share. To reiterate, if an inheritor is a single girl, the verse entitles her to half of the inheritance, 'and if there is only one, she shall have one-half….' (an-Nisa': 11) Yet, there is a case for which Allah the Most High did not decree a ruling, namely, when the deceased has two girls. In this case, we find that the Lawgiver has guaranteed for the two girls a share equal to three or more girls; they share two thirds of the inheritance. This is what scholars said, but why did He not state this explicitly? He left this out this situation for a reason. When a girl shares the inheritance with a brother, she takes one third of the wealth, and when there is another sister without a brother, she takes one third as well.

If she has a brother who would be, in such a case, responsible for earning the livelihood required to sustain them, she would be entitled to the third. For this reason, it is logical that each female would be entitled to one third of the inheritance if the deceased has two daughters. To illustrate further Quranic coherence, there is another verse (an-Nisa': 176) that discusses another part of the same subject matter for the mind to work and investigate. Allah the Most High says: 'They will ask you to enlighten them. Say: 'Allah enlightens you [thus] about the laws concerning [inheritance from] those who leave no heir in the direct line: If a man dies childless and has a sister, she shall inherit one-half of what he has left, just as he shall inherit from her if she dies childless. But if there are two sisters, both [together] shall have two-thirds of what he has left; and if there are brothers and sisters, then the male shall have the equal of two females' share.' Allah makes [all of this] clear unto you, lest you go astray; and Allah knows everything.' (an-Nisa': 176) In this context, Allah the Most High mentions the two sisters of the deceased and shows that they are entitled to two thirds of the wealth if the deceased has no child, a son, or a daughter. However, if the two sisters are entitled to two thirds of the deceased's wealth, we should wonder who is closer to the person: daughters or sisters? If the deceased has two daughters, they are definitely closer to him than the two sisters. For this reason, the two daughters are entitled to two thirds. Furthermore, if the daughter has a brother, she is entitled to one third, and if she is the only child, she is entitled to half of the wealth. On the other hand, if there were more than two inheriting daughters, they share two thirds of the wealth together.

If there were two daughters, each takes one third. Why? In response to this, Allah the Most High has entitled the two sisters of the deceased to take two thirds of the wealth if the deceased has no children. It is also quite intriguing that Allah uses the plural form in the first verse concerning the inheritance of daughters and the dual form in the verse concerning the inheritance of sisters. Allah guides us to apply the ruling in the verse concerning the inheritance of two sisters to two daughters and the ruling on the inheritance of daughters to sisters.

The True Lord the Most High challenges our minds to a task of searching, investigating and deducing so we can accept the rulings wholeheartedly, using our understanding. When Allah the Most High says: 'They will ask you' (an-Nisa’: 176), He means that they are asking you to give them your legal opinion. This is evidence that a believer who asks for a legal opinion loves Allah's assignment; he likes to know the ruling of Allah in the cases when He does not specifically state a ruling. In this respect, the early believers asked and requested legal opinions about different matters since they loved Divine Laws: 'They will ask you to enlighten them. Say: “Allah enlightens you [thus] about the laws concerning [inheritance from] those who leave no heir in the direct line….” (an-Nisa’: 176) The Arabic word kalalah (a childless person who has no heir in the direct line) is etymologically derived from ikleel which is a crown or diadem, an object that surrounds the head. In this context, the word kalalah also means family members who are related to a person but are not direct descendants from the same blood lineage. 'If a man dies childless and has a sister, she shall inherit one-half of what he has left, just as he shall inherit from her if she dies childless. But if there are two sisters, both [together] shall have two-thirds of what he has left; and if there are brothers and sisters, then the male shall have the equal of two females’ share. Allah makes [all this] clear unto you, lest you go astray; and Allah knows everything.' (an-Nisa': 176) This verse conveys the same meaning as the earlier one. In reference to the details of the first verse currently in question: 'And as for the parents [of the deceased], each of them shall have one-sixth of what he leaves behind, in the event of their having [left] a child; but if he has left no child and their parents are their [only] heirs, then their mother shall have one-third…' (an-Nisa': 11) the meaning of this part of the verse is that if the deceased is childless, the mother is entitled to one third and the father to two thirds. However, if the deceased has full brothers or maternal/ paternal brothers, the mother is entitled to only one sixth, according to the literal text of the Quran: 'If he has brothers and sisters, then their mother shall have one-sixth after [the deduction of] any bequest he may have made or any debt [he may have incurred]….' (an-Nisa': 11)

The distribution of inheritance under the prescribed system should be carried out after deducting any bequests the testator makes along with settling all of their debts. Bequests come first in the text even though repayment of debts takes priority over bequests since creditors may ask for the repayment of the money owed to them. On the other hand, no one will come forth and ask for the bequest. Allah the Most High has thus given bequests priority by mentioning them first so as to pay more attention to it. Allah the Most High then concludes the verse by saying: 'As for your parents and your children – you know not which of them is more deserving of benefit from you: [therefore this] ordinance from Allah. Verily, Allah is All Knowing, Wise' (an-Nisa': 11).

Do not determine shares of inheritance following your own estimation and pragmatic value of parents or children. The value of parents becomes clear when one says that my father has raised me, and he is the one who made all my future opportunities possible. The value of children becomes clear when one says that my father will die, but my children will cling to my memory and bear my name. The future is still ahead of them. In this verse, the True Lord the Most High forbids biased personal prejudgments since you do not have a say in this matter: 'You know not which of them is more deserving of benefit from you: [therefore this]…' (an-Nisa': 11). Since you do not know the better source of value and benefit to you, adhere to the Divine Law of Allah Who knows the best interest of all and knows how to best achieve it through the proper division of shares.

In these verses, 'Verily, Allah is (literally 'was') All Knowing, Wise' (an-Nisa’: 11) or 'Verily, Allah is (literally 'was') All-Forgiving and Most-Merciful' (an-Nisa’: 106) kana (was) which is the Arabic past tense of the verb to be, was used, making us bear in mind that Allah is unchangeable. He has eternally been All Knowing and All-Wise and He will continue to be so for eternity. Vicissitudes cannot be attributed to Allah. His Omniscience, Wisdom, Awareness, Forgiveness and Mercy are all eternal. He does not change, and His Attributes are unchangeable. Therefore, when a Muslim hears, ' Allah is (literally 'was') All Knowing, Wise' (an-Nisa’: 11) or ' Allah is (literally 'was') All-Forgiving and All-Merciful' (an-Nisa’: 106) expressed in the past tense, he should say, ‘And Allah is still so.’

Then, Allah the Most High says:

وَلَكُمۡ نِصۡفُ مَا تَرَكَ أَزۡوَٰجُكُمۡ إِن لَّمۡ يَكُن لَّهُنَّ وَلَدٞۚ فَإِن كَانَ لَهُنَّ
وَلَدٞ فَلَكُمُ ٱلرُّبُعُ مِمَّا تَرَكۡنَۚ مِنۢ بَعۡدِ وَصِيَّةٖ يُوصِينَ بِهَآ أَوۡ دَيۡنٖۚ
وَلَهُنَّ ٱلرُّبُعُ مِمَّا تَرَكۡتُمۡ إِن لَّمۡ يَكُن لَّكُمۡ وَلَدٞۚ فَإِن كَانَ لَكُمۡ وَلَدٞ
فَلَهُنَّ ٱلثُّمُنُ مِمَّا تَرَكۡتُمۚ مِّنۢ بَعۡدِ وَصِيَّةٖ تُوصُونَ بِهَآ أَوۡ دَيۡنٖۗ وَإِن كَانَ
رَجُلٞ يُورَثُ كَلَٰلَةً أَوِ ٱمۡرَأَةٞ وَلَهُۥٓ أَخٌ أَوۡ أُخۡتٞ فَلِكُلِّ وَٰحِدٖ مِّنۡهُمَا ٱلسُّدُسُۚ
فَإِن كَانُوٓاْ أَكۡثَرَ مِن ذَٰلِكَ فَهُمۡ شُرَكَآءُ فِي ٱلثُّلُثِۚ مِنۢ بَعۡدِ وَصِيَّةٖ يُوصَىٰ
بِهَآ أَوۡ دَيۡنٍ غَيۡرَ مُضَآرّٖۚ وَصِيَّةٗ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِۗ وَٱللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ حَلِيمٞ ١٢

You inherit half of what your wives leave, if they have no children; if they have children, you inherit a quarter. [In all cases, the distribution comes] after payment of any bequests or debts. If you have no children, your wives’ share is a quarter; if you have children, your wives get an eighth. [In all cases, the distribution comes] after payment of any bequests or debts. If a man or a woman dies leaving no children or parents, but a single brother or sister, he or she should take one-sixth of the inheritance; if there are more siblings, they share one-third between them. [In all cases, the distribution comes] after payment of any bequests or debts, with no harm done to anyone: this is a commandment from God: God is all knowing and benign to all [12] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 12)

The Quranic verses continue in the same stream, clarifying that the share of a male is equal to the share of two females. Justice indeed is this distribution.

When a woman dies, her husband may get married and rebuild his life. Similarly, when a woman's husband dies, she takes her share of the wealth he left behind and at the same time she may get married and receive support from her new husband. This Divine Plan for the distribution of inheritance achieves perfect justice in the case of kalalah. The kalalah refers to the deceased who is childless deceased, thus having no agnate heirs, e.g. father or child who could inherit from them. In such a case, when the deceased has a brother or a sister, each is entitled to one sixth of the inheritance, but if they are more, their total share is the third after carrying out the bequests left and settling debts. We see that much emphasis is placed on this subject matter. Why? Simply refer to the other verse on kalalah: 'If there are two sisters, both [together] shall have two-thirds of what he has left; and if there are brothers and sisters, then the male shall have the equal of two females' share. Allah makes [all of this] clear unto you, lest you go astray; and Allah knows everything' (an-Nisa': 176).

The first verse being discussed prescribes that each brother/sister shall be entitled to one sixth of the inheritance, but if there are two or more brothers/ sisters, their share is one third of the inheritance when they are maternal brothers/sisters. As for the verse wherein the True Lord the Most High assigns two thirds of the inheritance to the two sisters when they have no brother, it refers to the paternal sisters left without full/paternal brothers. In this manner, the Quran sets out the details precisely. What does the following verse mean '…neither of which having been intended to harm [the heirs]. [This is] an injunction from God: and Allah is All Knowing, Forbearing' (an-Nisa': 12). Allah the Most High wants to establish justice. No one is ever harmed if the law of Allah is implemented; harm always arises from the pursuits of self-interests that corrupt the Divine distribution.

In this context, someone may not desire to debar the uncle from the inheritance of his full/paternal brother's daughters or to exclude the children of the male brothers, full or paternal, from the legal heirs of an aunt, or daughters of a full/paternal uncle. Replying to those who follow their personal desires, we say that the profits expected is proportional to the loss risked. If you die leaving daughters behind, would it not be the duty of the uncle to bring up the daughters? Why does the True Lord the Most High compel the uncle to look after the daughters of his brother if the brother died without leaving any wealth? To understand this, you have to pay attention to the rationale behind assigning the uncle a share in the inheritance. We have to understand that there is always a profit corresponding to an expected loss.

When it comes to the legal regulations, we say that the Noble Quran must be considered in its entirety. For example, the issue of kalalah is explored in two verses. Allah the Most High says: 'They will ask you to enlighten them. Say: ‘Allah enlightens you [thus] about the laws concerning [inheritance from] those who leave no heir in the direct line. If a man dies childless and has a sister, she shall inherit one-half of what he has left, just as he shall inherit from her if she dies childless. But if there are two sisters, both [together] shall have two-thirds of what he has left; and if there are brothers and sisters, then the male shall have the equal of two females’ share.’ Allah makes [all this] clear unto you, lest you go astray; and Allah knows everything' (an-Nisa': 176).

What is the difference between this verse in which a sister receives one-half and two sisters receive two-thirds and the other verse in which a sister receives one-sixth and two or more brothers/sisters receive one-third collectively without differentiation between males and females? We have to distinguish between the two cases of kalalah. They have in common is that the deceased is childless, but they differ in the relationship of brothers and sisters. In the first verse, the brother/sister concerned is a full or paternal brother/sister. If the brother is either a full or just a paternal brother, he is an agnate heir as discussed in the Quran (an-Nisa': 176). Concerning the other verse (an-Nisa': 12) in which the shares of one-sixth goes to a sister or a brother, and one-third to two or more brothers or sisters, it only pertains to maternal brothers/sisters. Accordingly, the case of kalalah takes place when a childless person dies leaving full, paternal or maternal brother(s) and/or sister(s). Therefore, the two rulings are different since the case to which each applies is also different. If an orientalist reads these two verses related to the inheritance of kalalah with malicious intent, hoping to find an excuse to attack the religion and the Quran, they might say, (Allah forbid), 'The Quran contains contradictions. In one verse, it states a ruling that the heirs of kalalah case should receive one-sixth, while in another verse, it gives them one-third, and in a third one, it assigns one-half and two-thirds, while the male is entitled to twice the share of the female. To silence their argument, it is obvious that they do not realise the meaning and purpose of the context of each case of kalalah. Consequently, they grasp certain things while missing others.

Allah the Most High then says: '… after [the deduction of] any bequest that may have been made or any debt [that may have been incurred]' (*an-Nisa': *12). Obviously, this ruling is applicable to all cases of inheritance. Accordingly, the distribution of the inheritance should be undertaken after carrying out the bequests made by the deceased and paying his debts. So, which step takes priority: the bequest or the repayment of debts? Indubitably, the payment of his debts takes priority. The reason is simple: the debt is a binding obligation, while the bequest is voluntarily made. How can the bequest which is voluntary and is, although, mentioned before the debt, come before the debt which is an obligation? When Allah the Most High says: '…neither of which having been intended to harm [the heirs]…' (*an-Nisa': *12), we understand that the Divine Law never intends to harm anyone.

This verse addresses the testator who may hate that some of their legal heirs with prescribed shares in the inheritance he is leaving behind may write a bequest to preclude them from inheritance or to diminish their shares. The testator may also bequeath their wealth to some foreign person whom he wants to give a share of the inheritance to preclude the undesired family members and kinsfolk from their inheritance as legally prescribed. In such a case, the testator may claim that he owes a debt to a person to whom he makes a bequest. If he claims that the debt is equivalent to the entire wealth, then this creditor will take the debt before giving the prescribed shares to the legal heirs and, accordingly, the heirs are without any share in the inheritance.

This case happens and is witnessed in reality. In certain cases, some people, who only have daughters, may say to themselves that their daughters' uncles and cousins will take a portion of the wealth, so they may think that it is wise on our part to distribute their wealth amongst their daughters. People who do this may claim that they are indebted to their daughters. We forewarn them by saying, 'Do not be unfair.' They could fall prey to a shortsighted plan. Instead they should consider the opposite scenario of them dying and leaving nothing to their daughters. This would raise the question, 'Who would be responsible for them?' It is definitely the duty of paternal uncles. Thus, the loss incurred is commensurate with the gain accrued. To further explain this point, the girls may sue their uncles in the court to force them to pay the familial aids if their father dies without leaving enough means for their sustenance. So what is the benefit of precluding their brothers from their divinely prescribed shares of inheritance?

Moreover, someone may want to divest uncles or brothers of their shares in his wealth for any reason. What does he do in such a case? He writes a bequest to persons not entitled to the inheritance. Therefore, Islam limits the scope of bequest to be within one-third of the wealth to avoid injustices or harmful plans. However, some people may try to falsely claim that their debt is equivalent to their entire fortune, so their legal heirs would not take anything. In such a situation, they should bear in mind that Allah carefully watches over them every moment of their lives until their deaths; they are accountable for all personal actions. For this reason, Allah the Most High said: 'As for your parents and your children – you know not which of them is more deserving of benefit from you: [therefore this] ordinance from Allah. Verily, Allah is All Knowing, Wise.' (an-Nisa’: 11)

Allah the Most High warns us against harmful behaviours. It is Divine Advice concerning the complete rulings of inheritance, the bequests of the testator and the repayment of debts. It is Divine, and not human, Advice. Therefore, it is mandatory and binding. Allah the Most High says: 'In matters of faith, He has ordained for you that which He had enjoined upon Nuh (Noah)…' (ash-Shura: 13). This advice signifies religious duties. He the Most High also says: 'Do not take any human being’s life – [the life] which Allah has declared to be sacred, except through [due process of] law. That is what He enjoins you that you may comprehend' (al-An‘am: 151).

Since this is a Divine Ordainment from Allah the Most High the Lord of all dominion, it is compulsory. Allah concludes the verse being further explored by saying: 'Verily, Allah is All Knowing, Wise' (an-Nisa’: 12). It is a warning! Do not take any action against the Divine Law; even though judicial authorities may authorise what you want, you will still be guilty before Allah. For example, a debtor may die, so the debts must be repaid. However, if this man forges a false document of debts in order to deprive some legal heirs of their inheritance, he has to realise that Allah knows the intentions behind all actions. If one escapes earthly justice, he will not be able to escape the judgment of the Heavens. This matter requires profound knowledge and insight to perceive the truth of intentions.

Actually, the subject of litigation is a matter of dispute amongst human beings, but religion and religious duties form a different issue between the Lord and His servants. In his Honourable statement, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him says, 'Verily, I am only a human! You refer your disputes to me for judgment. Some of you may be more eloquent in their plea than others are, so I declare a judgment on their behalf according to what I hear from them. As such, if I slice off anything for a person from the right of his brother/sister, he should not accept that, for I sliced off for him a portion from Hell.'(1)

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him teaches us that he is a human being; he neither knows the unseen, nor does he know the secrets of disputes. When Muslims resort to him for judgments concerning disputes, some may be so eloquent that they turn falsehood into truth, while others stand helpless. The Messenger of Allah passes the judgment, relying upon the judicial evidence, even if the unknown realities go against that evidence. Thus, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him forewarns us that he is a human being; when we seek his judgment on disputes and controversies, none of us should use the power of speech to take what is not his right. If one does take what is not his right, even after the judgment of the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him he just takes a piece of fire.

In other words, we must be careful not to deceive or mislead anyone or take something by abusing the power of judicial authority and neglecting religious warnings. A believer should not try to tamper with religious matters. Do not think that the judgment of any judge can render something forbidden to becoming something permissible or making something permissible to becoming forbidden. This never happens! The permissible is evidently clear, and so is the forbidden. The judge only passes the judgment based on explicit evidence. For example, assume that you borrowed a thousand pounds from someone who took from you a promissory note. The borrower then repaid the loan he owed and told the lender, ‘Kindly send me the note as soon as you go back to your house.’ However, the lender soon died and his family said, ‘We have the promissory note!’ They then referred it to the judicial authorities to take back their debt. The judicial authorities may rule that the debt must be repaid anew. However, the ruling of religion in this case is different. The man, the borrower, has already repaid the debt, making it improper for heirs to take it again if they know that the deceased had already taken it.

That is why Allah the Most High says: 'Verily, Allah is All Knowing, Forbearing' (an-Nisa’: 12). We can understand the difference between the stance of religion and the one of judicial authorities. The True Lord the Most High says 'He is Forbearing,' so do not be lured if one does an injustice, and Allah does not avenge it immediately in life. His refraining from revenge in this world does not imply that the action is right or permissible. The Divine Wisdom and Patience is decreeing to postpone the punishment till the Afterlife. Allah then says:

تِلْكَ حُدُودُ ٱللَّهِۚ وَمَن يُطِعِ ٱللَّهَ وَرَسُولَهُۥ يُدْخِلْهُ جَنَّٰتٍ تَجْرِى
مِن تَحْتِهَا ٱلْأَنْهَٰرُ خَٰلِدِينَ فِيهَاۚ وَذَٰلِكَ ٱلْفَوْزُ ٱلْعَظِيمُ ﴿١٣﴾

These are the bounds set by God: God will admit those who obey Him and His Messenger to Gardens graced with flowing streams, and there they will stay – that is the supreme triumph! [13] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 13)

All the past rulings and laws are simply laws set by Allah. When Allah the Most High sets a law, it is a limit to keep a right from being confused with another or preclude the confusion of rights with falsities. Surely, He is the One Who sets the laws and separates rights from one another. When we separate certain rights from others, whether they are related to homes or lands, we set certain demarcation lines. A limit or a bound is the demarcation line that separates two rights from each other so that none of them would encroach upon or overlap with the other. The bounds that we set in our daily life are of two kinds, even though some people may not notice this distinction. The first kind cannot be trespassed since it is concretely constructed and delineated.

For instance, someone may want to construct a building. He can only do so on a certain piece of land he owns with distinguishing bounds from his neighbours' land. When he erects the building, the wall will be adjacent to the building of his neighbours. Similarly, a farmer may cultivate a piece of land beside another farmer; each of them plants their own piece of land, and there is usually a boundary between the two pieces of land.

In this manner, each person achieves his own interests. Now, suppose that a farmer wants to grow rice, and their neighbour will plant it. The land of the one who will not plant rice may be flooded with much water; water is good for rice, but it may harm other crops. Under these conditions, the ruling should be that the farmer should construct a boundary called the ‘neighbourhood boundary’ to prevent any harm from their neighbours. This border is different from the ‘ownership border’ since the one who grows rice should cut down the cultivated land by two metres and make this space the ‘neighbourhood boundary’ so that the water used for irrigating would not overflow on the land of their neighbours. It is thus a boundary preventing harm and is different from the one preventing ownership. When it comes to protecting others from harm, injury, or damage, one must pay heed to the clear statement: ‘Do not let the scope of your right extend to the periphery of your boundary with others; rather keep it away from such a boundary.'

This is in the case of ownership. Your utilisation of your ownership should not harm or cause any damage to your neighbour. Allah the Most High treats us in the same way as well. In respect of Commands, He says: 'These are the bounds set by Allah; do not, then, transgress them' (al-Baqara: 229). Likewise, He says about following proscriptions: 'These are the bounds set by God; do not, then, offend against them' (al-Baqara: 187). Accordingly, if you receive a command, you should not violate it. Likewise, if you receive a proscription, do not approach it. In the case of the proscription of intoxicants, Allah the Most High does not say: ‘Do not drink wine.’ Rather, He says: 'Intoxicants, games of chance, idolatrous practices and the divining of the future are but loathsome evils from Satan’s doing. Shun them, then so that you might attain to a happy state' (al-Ma‘ida: 90). In other words, do not approach the places of these vices and separate yourself physically from them.

And as we have asked before—when talking about the story of Adam's eating from the tree—does Allah[1] Glorified is He say, 'Do not eat from this tree' or does He say,' Do not approach this tree'? Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…but do not approach this tree…' (al-A'raf: 19). This represents a limit which is called 'the limit of avoiding harm.' It is a command to not even approach that specific tree so that one may not desire to eat some of its fruits. The same holds true for drinking gatherings: we are commanded not to attend them because we may be lured into drinking. In the course of decreeing His Commands, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…These are the Limits set by Allah; do not, then, overstep them…' (al-Baqara: 229). This denotes that Allah Glorified is He owns or possesses these Limits.

In decreeing His Prohibitions, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…These are the Limits set by Allah do not, then, approach them…' (al-Baqara: 187). In this regard, Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him says the following Hadith: 'What is lawful is clear and what is unlawful is clear, but between them are certain doubtful things which many people do not know. So, he who guards against doubtful things keeps his religion and his honour blameless. But he who falls into doubtful things, falls into that which is unlawful, is just like a shepherd who grazes his cattle in the vicinity of a pasture declared prohibited (by the king); he is likely to stray into the pasture. Mind you, every king has a protected pasture and Allah's limits are those which He has declared unlawful. Verily, there is a faculty in the form of a piece of flesh in the body: if it is healthy, the whole body is healthy, and if it is corrupt, the whole body is corrupt. Verily, it is the heart.' [2]

Thus, we must keep away from transgressing the Limits of Allah Glorified is He. We can see an example of this when Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…Do

(1) 'The Islamic conception of "Allah" is not the same as the Christian and Jewish conception of "God". However, the word "Allah" does not refer to a tribal god or God of only Muslims, it refers to the Creator of the whole world, the One God (who has no son). We prefer, however, to use "Allah" rather than "God" as it has a unique character: it cannot be used to refer to any false gods and does not have any derivatives like goddess, gods, etc. It is a unique word used solely to describe the One God of this universe.'

not lie with them (your wives) during the nights of your devotional retreat in the mosques: these are the Limits set by Allah, so do not approach them. In this way Allah makes His Verses clear to people, that they may guard themselves against doing wrong.' (al-Baqara: 187)

The True Lord Allah Glorified is He commands Al-Mu'takif (meaning 'the one who devotes himself to worship for a specific number of days in the mosque') not to sleep with his wife in the mosque in case she comes to discuss any matters with him. Further, he should not do anything related to intimate contact during these days because this represents encroachment upon the Limits of Allah as He the Glorified and Exalted says: '...these are the Limits set by Allah, so do not approach them.' (al-Baqara: 187)

Similarly, Allah the Glorified and Exalted states following the verses of inheritance: 'These are the Limits set by Allah, and whoever obeys Allah and His Messenger [Muhammad]will be admitted by Him to Gardens [in Paradise] from under which rivers flow, and there they abide eternally– that is the supreme triumph!' (an-Nisa': 13)

It would have sufficed had Allah Glorified is He —after demonstrating the Limits—said, '…and whoever obeys Allah…', but He says: '…and whoever obeys Allah and His Messenger Muhammad..' This is to clarify that Messenger Muhammad himself peace and blessings be upon him may set limits of what is permissible and other limits of what is prohibited. This is an authorization from Allah Glorified is He to his Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to legislate; so, do not say in every matter, 'I want the (religious) ruling in question from the Quran.'

We sometimes encounter some people who say, 'The Book of Allah Glorified is He (i.e. the Quran) is the judge between you and us; whatever it permits, we will take as permissible and whatever it prohibits, we will consider prohibited.' These people do not notice that Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is authorized to legislate as Allah the Glorified and Exalted is the One Who says: '…so accept what the Messenger [Muhammad] gives you, and abstain from whatever he forbids you…' (al-Hashr: 7). He peace and blessings be upon him is empowered by Allah Glorified is He; and those who call for referring only to the Quran as the sole source of legislation in Islam want to cast suspicions on the Sunnah of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. They resort to the Book of Allah Glorified is He and forget or do not even acknowledge that the Glorious Quran includes an authorization from Allah Glorified is He to His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to lay down legislation.

They say, ‘The Book of Allah [i.e. the Quran] is the judge between you and us; whatever it permits we will take as permissible and whatever it prohibits we will consider prohibited.’ Such words on their part are evidence of the truthfulness of what Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him says. If they had not uttered such words, we (Muslims) would have wondered why the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him said the following words in a Hadith narrated by Al-Miqdam ibn M‘ad Yakrib, Allah be pleased with him: Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him prohibited things on the Day of Khaybar [the day when Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and his Companions fought against the Jewish at the fortress of Khaybar] including eating of domestic asses. At that time, Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘soon a Hadith from me will be conveyed to a man while he is reclining on his couch, and he will say: ‘The Book of Allah is [sufficient] between us and you. Whatever it states is permissible, we will take as permissible, and whatever it states is forbidden, we will take as forbidden.’ Verily, whatever the Messenger of Allah Muhammad has forbidden is like that Allah has forbidden.’(1)

What would have happened if nobody had repeated such words of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him? As we can see their foolish words are evidence that supports the veracity of what Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him says. The True Lord Allah Glorified is He uses those people to voice such a statement so that we can be fully certain of the veracity of the Ahadith (plural of Hadith) of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him through the phrases of his adversaries.

The True Lord Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: ‘…and whoever obeys Allah and His Messenger Muhammadwill be admitted by Him to Gardens [in Paradise]...' (an-Nisa': 13) The one who obeys Allah Glorified is He and His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him in this world is the one who accepts the assignment of Allah Glorified is He and fulfils it. This person will be rewarded with the enjoyments of the Gardens of Paradise in the Hereafter. But does one's admission to the Gardens represent the core purpose of the religion or is it a reward for adhering to the religion? It is a reward for adhering to the religion. And the test of the religion is placed in this life. Whoever follows the Path of Allah Glorified is He is admitted to the Gardens of Paradise in the Hereafter. The Hereafter is not, then, the place where the test of the religion is placed; the test of the religion is placed in this life. Thus, when you tend to isolate this life from the religion, we immediately tell you that you missed the point. Do not say that the test of the religion is placed in the Hereafter because the Hereafter is the place of rewarding and punishing.

Throughout the year since they are the subject of exams? In fact, syllabi learned by students contain the material they will be tested on in exams and not vice versa. Similarly, the worldly life is where the test of the religion is placed and the Hereafter is where the reward is given to the one who succeeds and the punishment is given to the one who fails. So, do not put this life against the religion; there is no barrier between this worldly life and the religion because this life is the subject of the religion. This worldly life is put against the Hereafter, and the religion is for the good of both. This life is the place of sowing and the Hereafter is the place of harvesting. This is how we respond to the one who says that the worldly life is separated from the religion. Will each person obeying Allah Glorified is He and His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him be admitted to a Garden, to two or more? Another question related to this verse: Does 'man'—an Arabic relative pronoun translated as 'whosoever' or 'whom'—imply one person? No. it may refer, in Arabic, to the singular, the dual form, or the plural. For example, we say, 'The one whom I met yesterday came.' We can also say, 'The two people whom I met yesterday came.' Further we can say, 'The people whom I met yesterday came.' In these three cases, we use the Arabic pronoun 'man' translated here as 'whom.' The True Lord Allah Glorified is He does not talk here about a singular or a plural, as we have said when explaining the chapter of al-Fatiha, when Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'It is You we worship; it is You we ask for help.' (al-Fatiha: 5) Though it might be argued that it is logical to say,'It is You I worship; it is You I ask for help', Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'It is You we worship; it is You we ask for help.' (al-Fatiha: 5) to clarify that all the believers are a single unity in relation to worshipping.

Some say that we should examine the form when the Arabic relative pronoun 'man' refers to the singular, whereas we should examine the meaning when it refers to two persons or more. But this statement is not academically valid because no scholar has ever said that 'man' refers to the singular only; it is rather related to singular, dual and plural references.

One of the kind audience members asked me the following question in one of the sessions: 'Why does Allah the Glorified and Exalted say in the chapter of ar-Rahman: 'For those who fear [the time when they will] stand before their Lord there are two Gardens [in Paradise]' (ar-Rahman: 46)? I answered that Allah the Glorified and Exalted starts the chapter of ar-Rahman as follows: 'It is the Lord of Mercy who taught the Quran. He created man' (*ar-Rahman:*1-3) Afterwards, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'He created mankind out of dried clay, like pottery, [and] the jinn out of smokeless fire.' (ar-Rahman: 14-15) Then Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '[One day] We shall take you to task, O you sin-laden two [of jinn and mankind].' (ar-Rahman: 31) Allah the Glorified and Exalted also says: 'O jinn and mankind, if you (think that you) can pass beyond the regions of heaven and earth, then do so: you will not pass without Our Authority' (ar-Rahman: 33).

The one who fears the presence of his Lord belongs to either jinn or human beings. If he belongs to jinn, he will have a Garden in Paradise; and if belongs to mankind, he will also have a Garden. So, the two beings of jinn and mankind (expressed by the Arabic relative pronoun 'man') who fear the presence of their Lord will have two Gardens.

Some Scholars say that this verse means that there will be two Gardens to every human and every jinn, for Allah Glorified is He does not lack adequate spaces. When He Glorified is He willed to create mankind, He Glorified is He counted them all from the time of Adam peace be upon him until the Day of Judgment. He Glorified is He considered as if all His servants would be obedient believers, and accordingly prepared for each of them his/her place in Paradise. In the meantime, He Glorified is He considered as if all His servants would be disobedient sinners, and accordingly prepared for each of them his place in the fire. Allah Glorified is He did such a thing to prove that Allah Glorified is He is Fair and that man has free will to choose the path of good or evil so that no one should think that He Glorified is He may find difficulty in accommodating all the human beings in either Paradise or the Fire. Thus, when a believer is admitted into his Garden in Paradise, the Garden that is prepared for a disbeliever, who is supposed to be a believer, remains uninhibited. So, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: These are the Gardens (in Paradise) you are given as your own because of what you used to do.' (az-Zukhruf: 72) Hence, the believers will inherit what had been originally prepared for the infidels had they chosen to believe.

Accordingly, the meanings imparted by the Quran are always consistent, regardless of the style used to convey them. Here Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '...will be admitted by Him to Gardens [in Paradise] from under which rivers flow…' (an-Nisa': 13) We should understand that a river is a stream into which water flows and is not the water itself. The True Lord Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…Gardens [in Paradise] from under which rivers flow…' (an-Nisa': 13), so where do the rivers run? Do the rivers run under the plants or under the buildings of these Gardens? We know that plants need water, whereas buildings need to be kept away from water. How come these two things meet together? We have to bear in mind that there is nothing impossible before the Will of Allah Glorified is He because everything is ultimately governed by Divine Design.

When people dig to change the flow of a river, we may find the surrounding buildings affected by water leakages. But the Designs of Allah Glorified is He are the result of His Infinite Power which Makes Rivers run under the Gardens in Paradise with no damage, whether beneath the buildings or the plants of these Gardens. Whoever cherishes the Words of his Lord Allah Glorified is He and asks Him to be able to understand them in the best way, will be bountifully taught by Him. The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted says in many verses says: '…Gardens [in Paradise] from under which rivers flow…'—using the Arabic preposition '(min') meaning 'from'—whereas He Glorified is He says in one single verse: '…Gardens [in Paradise] under which rivers flow…' (at-Tawba: 100) without using the preposition 'min.' Both structures are linguistically possible in Arabic. The verse wherein Allah the Glorified and Exalted says, '…Gardens [in Paradise] under which rivers flow…' (at-Tawba: 100) —without using the preposition 'min'—may indicate that these rivers come from another place and only run under the Gardens. But in fact, these rivers spring from the Gardens themselves. When Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…Gardens [in Paradise] from under which rivers flow…' (an-Nisa': 13) —using the preposition 'min'—He Glorified is He does this so that no one would think that there may be a power that can keep the water from reaching you from a higher place. They are indeed self-acting rivers.

When we learn that the rivers run under the Gardens together with their inhabitants and contents, including palaces, a person may ask, 'Can I, as an engineer concerned with creating designs of buildings in this life, draw on this concept and produce designs of buildings under which rivers run, as stated by Allah Glorified is He?' Actually, humans have adopted this outstanding approach. We construct dams which are buildings under which rivers run. And when we are committed to sound building specifications, including those related to cement and bricks, we usually find no leakages or cracks. Building flaws often result from cheating and embezzlement. Then, rivers could run under the palaces of the Gardens of Paradise that contain what has never been seen by an eye, or heard by an ear, or imagined by a human being. Could the Muslim engineer be inspired and urged by such Divine Knowledge to erect buildings under which rivers may run? If this engineer has faith enough to learn from his Lord Allah Glorified is He how to invent, he will succeed with the Support of Allah Glorified is He.

Let us speak about Egypt which suffers from a housing crisis. We find that the area covered by the Nile River, its branches, small canals or waterways occupy a large space. If there were faith-motivated engineers, so to speak, the people would benefit from unused spaces and surfaces to construct buildings that would accommodate all state offices. Such buildings could be erected over roads, watercourses, or channels. This does not mean that we should use all the areas in building until they get blocked with construction. Rather, we should use only one third of the area for building and leave the other two thirds in order not to spoil the landscape and encroach upon the agricultural land. Anyway, the Muslim engineer should pay attention to those faith-based hints in the Glorious Quran.

A city like Cairo needs a wide variety of utilities, a fact which urges us to build on vacant areas whether they are around the Nile or in other places provided that we leave enough spaces for open air and maintain sufficient greenery to preserve the beauty of the environment and prevent pollution. Or shall we build under the ground? We can further benefit from desert-land reclamation in this regard. Perhaps if we tried all these methods, there would be no housing crisis.

The True Lord Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…Gardens (in Paradise) from under which rivers flow and there they abide eternally...' (*an-Nisa': *13) It is true that paradise will be bliss which you cannot imagine as it is created by the Perfect and Sublime Omnipotence of Allah Glorified is He. Man has always experienced pleasure according to his capacity to imagine the elements of such pleasure. We narrated earlier that a village mayor once said: 'I want to build a guesthouse, a phone room, and an outdoor stone bench and furnish them.'(1) This is the concept of pleasure as seen by the mayor. In this life, we are always afraid of losing pleasure because of death or any other reason. But what is pleasure in the view of the Creator of all concepts? Hence, the Gardens of Bliss are everlasting, as there you neither die, and nor do they vanish.

'Eternal abidance' here has clear significance: it indicates persistence and continuation that is never followed or disrupted by cessation of being. Allah the Glorified and Exalted says, '…that is the supreme triumph!' (*an-Nisa': *13) But what does fawz—translated in this verse as 'triumph'— mean? In general, the word fawz means victory, triumph, success, or attainment of one's goal. When we win something in this life, our joy and pleasure with such winning could last for one's lifetime in this world. If this is the case in the worldly life, what about winning in the Hereafter, i.e. the eternal winning in the Gardens of Paradise created by our Lord Allah Glorified is He? Is this not supreme triumph?

In our worldly life, we rejoice over moderate wins and gains, so what about those wins and gains granted by Allah Glorified is He which are commensurate with His Might? If we compare the wins and gains of this worldly life to those of the Hereafter, we will immediately realize that those of the Hereafter are of absolute greatness. Thus, however much the believer sacrifices for the sake of the Hereafter, there will be gains that greatly over compensate all those sacrifices.

(1) [The story of 'Na'im Al-'Omda' (Mayor's Pleasure)]

Someone might say: would not it have been better if Allah had said, ‘that is the most supreme triumph’? This is a narrow-minded understanding of things. If Allah Glorified is He had put it this way, this would have indicated that the triumphs and gains of the worldly life are great or supreme. As we may know, the greatest or most supreme thing is always compared to a great or supreme thing, and a great or supreme thing is always compared to a small or petty thing. Thus, when Allah Glorified is He describes the triumph of the Hereafter as great, this means that the triumph or gain of the worldly life is small and petty. The description of the triumph in the Hereafter is thus a Divine one as it is given by Allah Glorified is He. Then Allah the Glorified and Exalted talks about the opposite case:

وَمَن يَعْصِ ٱللَّهَ وَرَسُولَهُۥ وَيَتَعَدَّ حُدُودَهُۥ يُدْخِلْهُ نَارًا
خَٰلِدًا فِيهَا وَلَهُۥ عَذَابٌ مُّهِينٌ ﴿١٤﴾

But those who disobey God and His Messenger and overstep His limits will be consigned by God to the Fire, and there they will stay – a humiliating torment awaits them! [14] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 14)

Earlier we spoke about Limits when Allah the Glorified and Exalted says, ‘These are the Limits set by Allah…’ (an-Nisa’: 13) These Limits show either the Commands of Allah or His Prohibitions. These Commands and Prohibitions may be obeyed by some people and disobeyed by others. If you obey them, you will be rewarded for your obedience and granted eternal abidance in the Gardens of Paradise, which is the supreme triumph. But what will be of the disobedient? They will get the exact opposite. They will be punished by being consigned to torment: ‘But those who disobey Allah and His Messenger [Muhammad] and overstep His Limits will be consigned by Him to the Fire, and there they will abide eternally– a humiliating torment awaits them!’

(an-Nisa': 14) Note here that the word 'Fire' is in the singular, whereas the word 'Gardens' is in the plural. When we pay more attention to the verses of Allah Glorified is He —bearing in mind all the time that the Speaker is Allah the Glorified and Exalted —we notice another point represented in the eternal abidance of the believers in the Gardens of Paradise. As for the disbelievers, they will be thrown into the fire. Here Allah Glorified is He does not say 'Fires', nor does He Glorified is He say that they will eternally abide in it. Why? This is because in the Gardens of Paradise, the believers will sit on couches face-to-face and they will exchange visits, enjoying one another's Gardens. Another point may be mentioned here: When a person does a lot of good deeds, while his children—who share their father (or mother) in Faith—are not as righteous as he, Allah Glorified is He reunites him with his offspring as a sign of honour, and lets them rejoice together in the bliss of the Gardens and enjoy each other's company.

As for the disbeliever, the situation is quite different. Allah Glorified is He will not reunite him with any of his family. Every disbelieving person will have his own share of the fire; none will enjoy the company of other partners or human beings in torment, just as is the case in solitary confinement, so to speak. Again, Allah Glorified is He speaks about a lot of Gardens versus a single fire; He Glorified is He uses the plural form when talking about eternity in paradise, while He Glorified is He uses the singular form when mentioning eternity in the fire. Every use of certain words here has its own purpose. So, the obedient person will be rewarded with Gardens in which he will enjoy the company of his offspring and believing brothers and sisters for eternity. Meanwhile, the disobedient sinner will be eternalized in the fire in isolation of others, and'…a humiliating torment awaits them!' (an-Nisa': 14)

Though torment may be extremely painful, one sometimes endures it when it comes from an enemy, for instance. In this case, the tormented person does not want to see the one who tortures him rejoice in his suffering. In this context, Abu Zu'ayb Al-Huzalli, an old poet, says to that effect:

I have the patience of a saint before those who rejoice in my misfortune

So that they may learn that I never surrender to the calamities of life

Such a person may thus hide his pain and torment in this worldly life so that his enemy may not notice it. But in the Afterlife, torment and suffering involve debasement of the human self as the punishment of Allah Glorified is He and combines pain with debasement. So, do not think that someone will be capable of enduring this torment and pain, as may be the case in the worldly life. Torment and suffering in the Hereafter are extremely sever and humiliating for the self.

Thus, we find that the chapter of an-Nisa' deals with mankind as fathers and as mothers. It shows how Allah Glorified is He has spread from the pair of them countless men and women, far and wide. Furthermore, this chapter talks about the changes that happen when Allah Glorified is He ordains that some people die and leave helpless children. In this regard, Allah Glorified is He wants to ensure a noble life for the human soul. So, He Glorified is He orders us to be benevolent and affectionate towards orphans and guides us to the proper way of dealing with them according to the Islamic Faith. If we were to serve as guardians of orphans, we must undertake this responsibility honestly and administer their wealth in a sound and modest manner until they become of age and take charge of it.

The chapter of an-Nisa' also addresses another issue: securing a decent life for women and children as an integral part of social fabric. It is well known that the Arabs used to prevent women from getting their share of inheritance. The same thing applied to children who did not engage in war or drive away attacks, using spears, daggers, or swords. Allah Glorified is He wanted these debased, persecuted segments of society to restore their rights so that they could lead an honourable and dignified life. Thus, Allah Glorified is He allots specific shares—big or small— of inherited fortune to women, which differ from those dedicated for men. Allah Glorified is He shows us in this chapter the shares of inheritance determined by Him to different heirs. So, whoever desires to be admitted to the paradise of Allah Glorified is He must obey Him and His Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him through observing the Limits they have set. And whoever does not desire paradise may disobey Allah Glorified is He and may commit sins that lead him to eternal torment in the Fire.

Human life is a gift from Allah to His servants. Allah Glorified is He is Most Generous and prepared the components of a decent life for mankind before He created him. Thus, man came into being after the environment appropriate for his life had been established and not the other way around. In other words, Allah Glorified is He did not create man first and then the sun, the moon, the earth and other elements. No, Allah Glorified is He had already created first all the elements that serve man and prepared them to receive this newcomer—the human being—that Allah Glorified is He has chosen to be His vicegerent on the earth. Again, the components of human survival preceded the creation of man. This is verily Divine Providence from the Giver of Mercy to his creation.

In addition, Allah Glorified is He created for man a means of reproduction accompanied with a feeling of pleasure and gratification. This way of reproduction is different from other ways in plants and some animals, which are only aimed to preserve species. Allah Glorified is He wills that the process of human reproduction is associated with delight and pleasure to cope with the numerous hardships and troubles entailed in giving birth to and raising offspring. Allah Glorified is He provides the process of reproduction with a feeling of pleasure and gratification to urge man to reproduce and bear whatever difficulties are related to such a process.

The Wisdom of Allah Glorified is He ordains that weak people (e.g. orphans) come into being and lead a normal life. Allah Glorified is He commands us to be compassionate towards orphans. Someone may say: Since Allah Glorified is He commands us to benevolently help orphans to be good people, why then does Allah decree the death of an orphan’s father? We respond as follows: Allah Glorified is He decrees such fate so that we may learn that Allah Glorified is He is the only One Who controls man's life. He Glorified is He sets a certain age for every man. This age is only known to Allah Glorified is He while man has nothing to do with it. A man may die when he is an embryo, a child, a teenage boy, a grown up or an old man. We sometimes see very old men who are still alive but have lost their great-grandchildren already. Why so? Allah Glorified is He wants to conceal the timing of death from people so that no one may know how long he will live or when and where he dies. Hence, man tries to always be ready for death at any moment. As a man learns that he may die at any moment during his lifetime, he often feels ashamed of meeting Allah Glorified is He while committing sins. Another point needs to be explained in this regard. The Islamic Faith aims to make all the believers as if they were a well-compacted wall the bricks of which support one another. Thus, when a man dies and leaves an orphan child behind, that child will find new fathers from among the community of believers to take care of him. At that time, this child's heart will be filled with faith and peace. Furthermore, the fact that no one can learn the time of his death makes children trust and depend on Allah Glorified is He and not feel too dependent on their parents—or their power and fortune, which are also granted by Allah Glorified is He.

While Allah Glorified is He has granted us the means of preserving our life and shown us how to act on this earth in ways that guarantee the continuity of life, He Glorified is He has guided us to a decent way to protect the species and has made some people exert efforts for the benefit of their relatives. Thus, Allah Glorified is He not only entices man to work and seek his own livelihood, but He Glorified is He also encourages him to work and toil to meet the needs of those he supports. The True Lord Allah Glorified is He sends a Message to man: 'Your efforts in this life will benefit your children as well.'

So, Allah Glorified is He has implanted the instinct of love and tenderness in the soul of every father (and mother, of course). Being one of Allah's signs, this instinct is deeply ingrained in the souls of parents. Driven by this instinct, every father strives in life to earn his livelihood so that both he and his children are satisfied. When a man works hard and exerts every effort in life, he may reach a stage at which his wealth granted by Allah Glorified is He may suffice to support him for the rest of his life. Another man may work for twenty years or more and amass for himself and his children a huge fortune. A third man may toil and strive in life and generate wealth sufficient for him, his children, and his grandchildren.

Thus, we find that those who work hard in life and are destined by Allah Glorified is He to earn much money not only benefit themselves; but they benefit the entire society as well. The Most Exalted Wisdom of Allah Glorified is He decrees that wealth be distributed according to Divine laws so that all people—children in particular— may have their own shares. Hence, the Muslim community gets used to this smooth distribution. For example, imagine a man owns one hundred feddans (a measurement of land in Egypt which equals 4,200.81 square metres) of agricultural land and has got a number of sons and daughters. When this man dies, his sons and daughters will inherit all his fortune. Thus, the fortune is distributed among the children in a normal and smooth way, away from coercion that leads to enmity and envy. Allah Glorified is He wants us to respect the efforts exerted by the breadwinner to earn a living and ensure that the fruit of his endeavours will go to him and his dependent relatives. Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…the life of this world is only a game, a pastime, but if you believe [in Allah] and are mindful of Him, He will recompense you. He does not ask you to give up [in His Cause all] your possessions.' (Muhammad: 36) Allah Glorified is He does not tell anyone, 'Give me back the money that I have bestowed upon you.' Rather, as I have said before, Allah Glorified is He evokes the compassion of His Slaves towards one another. He the Glorified and Exalted says: 'Who is it that will offer up to Allah a good loan, which He will amply repay? Such a person will further be generously rewarded [by Him].' (al-Hadid: 11)

Allah Glorified is He appreciates the toil and strife of His servants who earn their living via exerting efforts. The True Lord Allah Glorified is He commands His rich servant to share his wealth. He says, in effect: 'Your poor brother is in need; lend Me — Allah— by giving zakat and sadaqa (alms and charity) to your poor brother.' Allah Glorified is He does not say to this rich servant, 'Lend your brother'; but, He says, 'Lend Me.' Why? The reason is that Allah Glorified is He is the One Who has brought all creatures into being and He is the All-Providing for all of them—the believers and the disbelievers. So, He Glorified is He guarantees the livelihood of all and makes it easy even for the disbelieving person to earn a living because He Glorified is He is the One Who has created him.

Allah Glorified is He legislates this inheritance system to ensure the smooth distribution of inheritance. Such a system is aimed at precluding any arbitrary divisions that might suddenly render some of the children—who have led a good life—impoverished, needy and deprived. By contrast, the fair and smooth division of wealth makes everyone contented and satisfied with his fixed share. In this context, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: ‘…the life of this world is only a game, a pastime, but if you believe [in Allah] and are mindful of Him, He will recompense you. He does not ask you to give up [in His Cause all] your possessions.’ (Muhammad: 36)

Allah Glorified is He does not say, ‘I have granted you this fortune to be yours’, nor does He say, ‘I have provided you with livelihood’—even though Allah Glorified is He is indeed the One Who has given you this fortune to be yours. Rather, He Glorified is He highly evaluates your efforts in life. Then Allah the Glorified and Exalted in the same chapter of (Muhammad) says: ‘…you would withhold if He were to ask you and press you for them [all your possessions], and so He would bring your ill-will to light.’ (Muhammad: 37) Even if Allah Glorified is He pressed you to donate all your money, you would withhold as you feel that you earned it through exerting huge efforts. Now let us see the difference between someone who has not been a squanderer, has led a moderate life and so left a fair fortune to his children, and another one who has spent all his money on things prohibited by Allah Glorified is He such as drugs. What makes one person different from another? The difference lies in the status given by Allah Glorified is He to the efforts and endeavours made by a man in life. For this reason, He Glorified is He indicates: ‘I do not ask you to give up your money because if I ask you to do this, you will not give it up since it is the fruit of your toil.’

The True Lord Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: ‘…and so He would bring your ill-will to light.’ (Muhammad: 37) If ill will appears and is brought to light in one community, the entire community will greatly suffer. So, we find that coercive actions always lead to the emergence of animosity and hatred in the whole community. Once such animosity and hatred prevails, all positive aspects come to an end. Hence, Allah Glorified is He sets the foundations and instruments of maintaining a decent life.

Allah Glorified is He sets foundations for the protection of the weak as well as the women who were deprived of their inheritance before the advent of Islam. Furthermore, Allah Glorified is He sets Limits and Rules for the inheritance of young children and women. ‘These are the Limits set by Allah….’ (an-Nisa’: 13)

So beware of overstepping or transgressing these Limits since if man does so, he will condemn himself to the fire— Allah forbid. To sum things up: Allah Glorified is He decrees these Limits for safeguarding your life and the lives of those you support.

There is another form of preservation which is the preservation of the species. Since man has a finite age and his life comes to an end, he must preserve his existence through others. How so? We get married to be endowed with offspring (children and grandchildren) by Allah Glorified is He. Hence, the line of mankind continues. The True Lord Allah Glorified is He wants the preservation of mankind to be noble. Therefore, Allah Glorified is He commands us to preserve the species by choosing for our seeds (semen) a sacred vessel—the uterus of our wives. So, beware of preserving the human race through an evil vessel wherein the semen of different people is mixed so that no one may know to whom a child is ascribed. Being of unknown parents, such a child will be rejected by the society. Thus Allah Glorified is He explains to man that he must select for himself a sacred vessel to keep mankind dignified.

Obtaining sacred vessels is made through marriage alone. A man has to choose a modest female who has religious faith and accepts him as a husband in a public ceremony. It thus becomes well known for everyone that this is the wife of this man and that he is her husband. He may comfortably enter and leave his wife's home whenever he wants. Their coming offspring will be surely attributed to him. A good man is always ashamed of his children being in need of clothes, humiliated, hungry or unrecognized; for this reason, the good father endeavours to ensure that his children get all their rights so that they can lead a decent life, with no one daring to affront and offend any of them by asking, ‘Where have you come from?’ Or ‘Who is your father?’ Thus, the child will not live as a humiliated, broken-hearted person throughout his life. Accordingly, Allah has willed to preserve the human race through a legitimate bond that everybody recognizes.

It is quite surprising that we find this issue has evident effects in our life. The woman who tries to remove the traces of the crime of adultery is often impelled by instinctive love ingrained in her as a mother not to throw her baby into the sea; but rather to put it in front of a mosque gate. A child is always attached to his mother's tenderness, but here such tenderness is illegitimate. This is why the adulteress would throw her baby in front of a mosque gate so that a good person might pick him up. The adulteress knows well that only good people go to the mosque and one of them may pity her baby and carry him home.

In contrast, she would not leave her infant at an inn or a movie theatre; rather, she would leave it in front of a mosque. Love drives her to put her illegitimate child at such a place to be secure from any dangers. She would thus wrap him in the nicest clothes, and if she was rich, she would put with him some money as her instinctive love pushes her to do so, whereas shame of guilt pushes her to get rid of the child.

The adulteress—as we have said— is keen to put her baby at a place that is frequented by good people so that a good man might find this baby and care for him. Thus, even a disobedient sinner who deviates from the religion of Allah Glorified is He seeks refuge in this religion; and this is quite strange.

Allah Glorified is He intends the preservation of the human race to be based on modesty, purity, and chastity, and does not want evil and corruption to prevail in the homes of Muslims. For this reason, He Glorified is He decrees marriage to be the only legitimate sexual relationship between man and woman since a man must marry a woman through the Shari'a (Law) of Allah Glorified is He.

Let me give an example: A man lives in a house that overlooks a street, and he has a beautiful daughter attracted by a lot of young men. What would the father's reaction be if he learned that a young man comes to the house and deliberately looks at his daughter? He might hire someone to beat this young man or report this incident to the authorities out of his rage.

By contrast, what would this father's behaviour be when a good man's family came to his house and expressed their son's desire to propose to his daughter? He would surely be pleased and immediately ask his daughter about her feelings, congratulate the mother, fetch drinks and send out invitations for the wedding party. Can you see the difference between the two reactions? Why should the father be upset and enraged by the one who sneaks to gaze at his daughter? The reason is that such a young man does not want to have a sound relationship with the father's daughter according to the Shari'a (Law) of Allah. On the other hand, the other young man who comes to seek the daughter as a lawful wife as decreed by the Shari'a would delight the heart of the father and bring him peace and happiness. Afterwards, matters would proceed smoothly and the wedding party would get concluded. Then the father would visit his happy daughter the next morning to congratulate her.

The difference between the two cases is shown in the Hadith of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: ‘Take care of your prayers and the slaves you rightfully possess; do not burden them with what they cannot endure. Be conscious of Allah when dealing with the women (wives) who are at your disposal as if they are held captive by you; you have taken them under the custody authorized to you by Allah and their private parts have become permissible to you by the authority of the Word of Allah.’ (1)

Allah Glorified is He has created both man and woman and decreed their joint life through marriage. He Glorified is He ordains that when a young man proposes to a girl and says to her father, ‘I want to marry your daughter’, such words should fill the father’s heart with peace and happiness. All people would joyfully celebrate a wedding party since it is a matter of chastity and purity. Allah Glorified is He intends the preservation of the human race to be a moral, pure process that neither brings shame upon the one who gives birth to children, and nor does it disgrace the society. If we preserve the human species in this manner, this will be a supreme form of preservation. The preservation of mankind is the goal for which sexual intercourse has been created. Allah Glorified is He has decreed that this process be a legitimate and permissible one recognized by all people.

Someone once asked me the following question when I was in Algeria: ‘How come that the relationship between any two spouses is originally based on wordsor promises? A woman’s guardian may marry her to a man by saying, ‘I have agreed to let you marry the woman I am responsible for.’ Alternatively, a woman may marry herself to a man by saying, ‘I marry myself to you.’ Consequently, the man accepts the marriage. Also, the relationship between any pair of spouses is terminated with a single sentence: ‘I divorce you.’ I answered that man as follows: Why does man agree to seek pleasure with the wife and her private parts with a couple of words and then find it hard to accept that she might be released from his custody with a couple of words as well? So, words determine both marriage and divorce.

(1) Related by An-Nasa’i and Ibn Majah

As Allah Glorified is He has preserved life via old elements, He Glorified is He intends to preserve the human race through new elements. He explains to us that every organism that reproduces needs to do so by means of fertilization. Fertilization means that the sperm goes from the male to the ovum of the female so that the reproduction process may occur. As for the procreation of non-human organisms, it is made through a compulsory process. A female animal such as a cow, for instance always cries out when an ovum drops down in her womb. Whenever this happens, people realize that the cow desires to be fertilized. When her owner takes her to a bull to fertilize her, she calms down and never allows another bull to approach her while she is pregnant. In this manner, the species is preserved in animals.

As for plants, the female is fertilized even if the male is miles away. While we may distinguish the male from the female in certain plants, like palm and sycamore trees, we might not be able to discern the difference in other plants; only specialists can make such a distinction. Some plants may have the male and female parts in the same stem, like corn, for instance: the petals of the corncob represent the female part, while the male parts are located in the spike that is moved by the air so that it may bend down and fertilize the female part. The same holds for wheat. There are also plants whose male parts are not known to us. Could you tell me about a male mango tree or a male orange tree?

So, there are a lot of things that we do not know about organisms. They, either way, have to pollinate and fertilize one another so that reproduction would occur. Our Lord Allah Glorified is He thus explains: ‘Be comforted. I have made the wind carry the means of pollination (pollen) to plants.’ Allah Glorified is He has also made certain insects in the service of the plants that cannot be reached by the wind. These insects find nourishment in special places in these plants. In addition, they are attracted to particular colours and fragrances in such plants. Thus, an insect may be attracted to a red colour, while another may be attracted to a white colour. When an insect moves to the male part of a plant, this part sticks to it; then, it goes to the female part which is beautified with colours and fragrances. This process occurs while we are not aware.

Who causes pollination to happen? Who teaches these helpless organisms? It is Allah, the Lord of all existence Who neither slumbers, nor does sleep overtake Him. He Glorified is He has preserved the different species through a compulsory and instinctive process about which we do not fully understand. Even rain would not fall unless the pollination process happened. Here Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'We send the winds to fertilize (plants), and we bring down water from the sky for you to drink–you do not control its sources.' (al-Hijr: 22)

The True Lord Allah Glorified is He has thus secured the essentials of your life, O human being, while you are absent-minded. He has made the processes needed for this purpose involuntary so that each organism would play its role and accomplish its mission. Having granted man the freedom of choice, Allah has linked the protection of the species with pleasure and gratification in view of the numerous troubles involved in the reproduction process and the preservation of the human race. Accordingly, do not separate the preservation of mankind from pleasure. If you had sexual intercourse solely for the purpose of gratifying yourself, you would be then concentrating on a less important goal. A more important goal of having sexual intercourse through marriage is to preserve the race to which you belong.

Hence, make sure that you throw your sperm in a sacred vessel (womb) that is only yours so that you can evade fatal diseases that may destroy you and others. This way we can avoid the emergence of impure, humiliated generations with no clear origin. Here we speak about the persons engaged in abnormal cases of sexual intercourse, such as lesbians (women having sex with one another), gays (men having sex with each other) and adulterers and adulteresses who seek pleasure away from legitimate marriage decreed by Allah Glorified is He. We may say to that woman who has an affair with another woman or that man who sleeps with another man for pleasure: O woman, you have received pleasure and relinquished the straight path of having sex; and O man, you have committed the same crime.You both must learn thatthe true Lord Allah Glorified is He intends that you seek both the pleasure and the preservation of the race. Thus, Allah Glorified is He explains that sexual pleasure has to be obtained in the light of the religion of Allah Glorified is He. Listen to what Allah the Glorified and Exalted says:

وَٱلَّٰتِى يَأۡتِينَ ٱلۡفَٰحِشَةَ مِن نِّسَآئِكُمۡ فَٱسۡتَشۡهِدُواْ عَلَيۡهِنَّ أَرۡبَعَةٗ مِّنكُمۡۖ فَإِن
شَهِدُواْ فَأَمۡسِكُوهُنَّ فِى ٱلۡبُيُوتِ حَتَّىٰ يَتَوَفَّىٰهُنَّ ٱلۡمَوۡتُ أَوۡ يَجۡعَلَ ٱللَّهُ لَهُنَّ سَبِيلٗا ﴿١٥﴾

If any of your women commit a lewd act, call four witnesses from among you, then, if they testify to their guilt, keep the women at home until death comes to them or until God shows them another way [15] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 15)

Here (allati) is an Arabic relative pronoun of feminine-plural, translated as ‘those.’ I believe that this verse refers to lesbian women. But what does Allah Glorified is He intend by saying: ‘…bring against them four [witnesses]…’ (an-Nisa’: 15)? Allah Glorified is He intends to protect the honour of people so that no one would injure or offend the honour of others. Thus, Allah Glorified is He sets necessary precautions to safeguard people’s honour and chastity. Again, why does He Glorified is He stipulate the testimony of ‘four’ people? This is because there are two women having sex with each other, and so two persons are needed to testify against each one; thus the total number would be four. Anyhow, what would we do if we saw the incident with our own eyes and made certain that it had occurred? Allah the Glorified and Exalted says ‘…confine them (the guilty women) to their houses…’ (an-Nisa’: 15), i.e. lock them up and restrain their movement in order that they cannot meet each other until they die ‘…or Allah opens for them a way [through repentance].’ (an-Nisa’: 15) Allah Glorified is He indeed opens a way for such people.

We may say to those who contend that this verse refers exclusively to the sexual intercourse between man and woman: the pronoun (allati) is a relative pronoun of the feminine-plural. If the intercourse occurred between a man and another man, Allah Glorified is He would use ‘alladhan’—the relative pronoun for the masculine-dual in Arabic, rendered in the following verse as ‘both.’ ‘If two men commit an immoral act [i.e. sexual intercourse], punish them both; if they repent and mend their ways, leave them alone– Allah always accepts repentance, He is the Giver of Mercy' (*an-Nisa': * 16) The verse here concerns an affair between a man and another man. Meanwhile, the preceding verse is surely related to an affair between two women. Why would the punishment in the case of the affair between two women for the sake of pleasure be the confinement in the houses up to the moment of death? The reason is that this act is an evil and plague that must be eradicated from society. It verily represents total corruption since women tend to meet each other freely as far as clothes are concerned. Thus, the seizure of lesbians in their houses till they die is much better than having them accustomed to this awful, immoral act. We do not know how big the harm brought about by such an obscene practice might be. We have only been given a little knowledge. For the One Who has created us is verily the One Who has decreed that a male and a female must have sex with one another within the framework of marriage, with all its legitimate requirements, including two witnesses and the dowry. In this respect, Allah Glorified is He has created the woman as a receiving party, while the man has been prepared as a sending party; this is quite obvious. If the two parties were not compatible, dissonance would inevitably occur.

If the relation between both sexes is not based on the legitimate path that has been decreed by our Creator, Allah Glorified is He, something wrong and harmful must happen. Similarly, when we connect an electric wire with another of the same kind—i.e. a positive wire with another positive one, or a negative wire with another negative one—a fire will break out. Were this to happen, we would say there is an electric short circuit, i.e. there is a fault in the connection of wires. Seeing the big damage resulting from a small fault in the connection of few wires, what do you think of the harm caused by those faults arising from misconnection in sexual relations among humans? Note well what I am going to say: science will sooner or later discover that there is a secret kept by Allah Glorified is He in this context. When a man wants to have a relationship with a woman in the way decreed by Allah Glorified is He he proposes to her, asking, 'Will you marry me?' She answers, 'I agree to marry you.' Through this process, Allah Glorified is He makes the relationship between them normal and smooth. But if there was a defect in this relationship between the receiving and sending parties (sexes), there would be a shocking fatal 'short circuit', plaguing the entire society.

I assert what I have just said so that it may be transferred as a testimony to the coming generations. The truthful faith of our ancestors guided them to enjoy the Gifts of Allah and recognize His Signs. The True Lord Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'We shall show them Our signs in the horizons (of the universe) and in themselves, until it becomes clear to them that this [revelation] is the Truth….' (Fussilat: 53)

Since we have been guided to the fact that if wires are connected in a correct way, the light will be good, and if wires are misconnected, there may be a short circuit and a fire, we should note that it is the same case in humans. The relation between a male and a female is similar to that relation between positive and negative charges in electricity. The True Lord Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'And We created pairs of all things…' (adh-Dhariyat: 49) If we learn that light is the result of a correct connection of positive and negative parts in inanimate objects, whereas fires break out if the connection is wrong, then what about misconnection among humans?

During some of our trips abroad, we were asked the following question: Why do you allow man to have more than a wife, while you do not allow the woman to have more than one male spouse? In raising this question, those want to provoke women and arouse anger against the religion of Allah Glorified is He so that a naïve woman—who tends to be rebellious against her religion—may say, 'There is no justice in this religion.' So, I asked those who had just asked me, 'Do you have special resorts for the sexually liberal youth?' They answered, 'Yes, there are places in some states.' I said, 'What precautions have you taken to protect the health of these humans?' They said, 'We have periodical, unexpected medical check-ups.' I asked, 'Why?' They said, 'So that we may isolate those who are infected with any disease.' I asked, 'Do you use this method for married men and women?' They said no, they did not. I asked why not, but they kept silent and did not answer. So I said, 'The fact is that married women are exclusively devoted to their husbands; they are vessels dedicated to their spouses, and thus no diseases emerge. Meanwhile, diseases would result from having the semen of several men in the same womb.'

Thus, Allah Glorified is He intends to preserve the human species in a clean way. He the Glorified and Exalted says: 'And as for those of your women who become guilty of an immoral act [i.e. unlawful sexual intercourse], bring against them four [witnesses] from among you; and if these bear witness thereto, confine them (the guilty women) to their houses until death takes them away or Allah opens for them a way [through repentance].' (an-Nisa': 15) '…Your women…' refers to the Muslim women because we do not decree laws for others since they do not believe in Allah Glorified is He. As to the testimony, it must be requested from four Muslims because true Muslims appreciate the value of justice and honour. Thus, if they testify, the Punishment of Allah Glorified is He must be enforced and the guilty women must be confined in their houses.

In our modern age, this is known as quarantine where some people or animals are kept for a period of time apart from others in case they are carrying an infectious disease. There is, of course, a difference between those who have infectious illnesses and those who feel a deep sense of shame for bringing dishonour on themselves. Since we isolate those who suffer from infectious diseases, do not we do the same thing with those who bring shame and scandals? Thus, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '…confine them (the guilty women) to their houses until death takes them away or Allah opens for them a way [through repentance].' (an-Nisa': 15) This means that each woman must stay in isolation until she dies. Books on Islamic legislation tell us that Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him interpreted this verse to be concerned with the adultery that might happen between a man and a woman, not between two women.

'Ubadah ibn As-Samit related that Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: 'Adhere to what I say…Adhere to what I say. If a virgin commits adultery with another virgin, each must be punished with a hundred lashes and banishment for a year. If a married person commits adultery with another married person, each must be punished with a hundred lashes and then stoning.' (1)

Afterwards, upon the Revelation of the chapter of (*an-Nur:*24), the punishment set for adultery became as follows: whipping for those virgins having sex with each other, and stoning for those married persons having sex with each other. Some people argue that stoning is not mentioned in the Quran. We may answer:

---

(1) [Related by Muslim as narrated by 'Ubada ibn As-Samit]

who dares to say that legislation in Islam is confined to the Quran? The Quran is a miraculous Book concerned with the fundamentals of the religion. As we have said before, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: '...so accept whatever the Messenger [Muhammad] gives you...' (al-Hashr: 7). Let us examine this issue: if there is a text that decrees a particular ruling, we may or may not understand this ruling from the text. If we understand it, then it must have an application in the life of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

If Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him issues a ruling regarding a specific violation in Islam and applies it, the priority here is for the action because actions are stronger than words. Indeed, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him may make a statement, but such a statement may not be applied because it is superseded by another one, for instance. By contrast, actions are practical examples. Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him stoned Ma'iz and Al-Ghamidiyya for committing adultery. He also stoned a Jewish man and a Jewish woman when they asked him to modify the ruling related to stoning in the Torah. Thus, the actions of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him are stronger and more binding than the texts, particularly that he peace and blessings be upon him is a legislator.

Once, someone said: stoning, as a penalty, is only meted out to adulterous married people. But what will we do to a married man who has committed adultery with a virgin girl? In this case, the proper ruling is to stone the man and whip the girl. Thus, if both the man and the woman have the same status, then the same ruling applies to them. If not, each must get the ruling that matches him or her.

When Allah Glorified is He speaks about the limit (punishment) of slave women—those who are rightfully owned by others—He says: '…their punishment will be half that of free women.' (an-Nisa': 25) What is implied here is whipping only because stoning cannot be divided into two halves. A slave woman receives half the punishment of a free virgin woman who is whipped a hundred times for committing adultery; so, a slave woman is whipped fifty times.

Since the punishment meted out to a slave woman is half that inflicted on a virgin, such punishment must be divisible and stoning is indivisible. Evidence has in this regard become final via the actions of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him who is a legislator, and does not merely deduce rulings, as any Muslim scholar may do. The fact that he actually stoned several people, demonstrates that Islam has decreed stoning. But why must a slave woman receive half the penalty of a free woman? The reason is that slave women do not have dignity while free women do(1). So, Hind, the wife of Abu Sufyan once said: How come a free woman commits adultery? She said so even at the apex of her disbelief and opposition to Islam. This means that adultery is not something that a free woman with dignity would do. But a slave woman does not have dignity because she may be the possession of anyone.

For this reason, a slave woman receives only half the penalty prescribed for free women. Some would ask, 'What punishment should a married slave woman get for committing adultery?' Stoning means killing, and such a punishment cannot be halved. The answer is: the prescribed punishment of stoning ends in death of the punished sinner, so such a punishment can never be reduced to a half. Rather, the words of Allah(2), '…they shall suffer half the 'adhab (punishment) which is inflicted upon free women…' (an-Nisa': 25) refer to the physical torture, not the stoning to death. The Arabic word ''adhab' does not refer to death, or punishment that leads to death, but to physical torment only, as Almighty Allah says in the Quran, quoting Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) when he was checking the birds and did not find the hoopoe: '[If so,] I will (punish him most severely) or will kill him….' (an-Naml: 21)

The word ''u'adhebannahu', derived from the noun ''adhab' (meaning 'torture') does not denote killing, or the latter would not be mentioned along with that word in the same sentence. Likewise, 'adhab in the verse we are dealing with refers to torture or infliction of pain and not to stoning that leads to death. This refutes the argument of those who claim there is not such a punishment in Islam for adultery as stoning to death, for slave women get half the punishment prescribed for free women, and stoning to death cannot be halved. To those people who say this, we respond as follows: what you use as evidence to substantiate your argument is false because the word used in the verse is ''adhab' and Allah has distinguished between that word–which means torture–and death or execution. As we have said, Allah quotes Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) as saying: '[If so,] I will (punish him most severely) or will kill him…' (an-Naml: 21) this verse differentiates between 'adhab (torture) and 'killing.' Similarly, in the versewe are dealing with, 'adhab refers to physical torture and not to killing through stoning. Let us not interpret Quranic text to mean something different from what it actually intends to convey. Now, let us discuss the matter rationally.

(1) Slavery was common before the coming of Islam which Islam has put an end to it gradually. The reason behind the fact that a slave woman was receiving half the penalty of a free woman is that slave women do not have freedom, and so they are not fully responsible for their actions since responsibility necessarily requires freedom.

(2) "The Islamic conception of "Allah" is not the same as the Christian and Jewish conception of "God". However, the word "Allah" does not refer to a tribal god or God of only Muslims, it refers to the Creator of the whole world, the One God (who has no son). We prefer, however, to use "Allah" rather than "God" as it has a unique character: it cannot be used to refer to any false gods and does not have any derivatives like goddess, gods, etc. It is a unique word used solely to describe the One God of this universe.'

If a man commits fornication with a virgin girl, what is the scope of offense done to her honour? It is relatively narrower than that done to a non-virgin because the latter is often married. In the case of a virgin, the assault is against her honour, but not a husband's. As for the non-virgin, the offense includes the honour of her husband as well. Thus, the scope of offense is wider since the non-virgin has two families instead of one: that of her parents and siblings and that of her husband and offspring. In the case of the virgin fornicator, the disgrace may be forgotten by the death of her parents and those of their generation who knew about it. Disgrace of a married fornicator, however, is likely to outlive her, so long as her children are alive. Shame in the case of a married woman can be thus perpetuated. It would be unfair to make the punishment for such perpetuated shame equal to an offense which is not that wide in its effect. If the two offenses were equal in punishment–whipping for both–it would mean the wide range of the injury done to honour in the case of a married fornicator has not been discerned. The injury done to honour in the case of a virgin fornicator is relatively limited and may not take long to end, being often confined to the generations of her parents and siblings. Think, on the other hand, of a married fornicator whose shame will continue to the generation of her children and grandchildren. The scope of offense is wider and its effect deeper and more lasting. So, would Allah, the Just, decree the same punishment of whipping for virgin and non-virgin fornicators? This could never be.

The matter must be dealt with in the way Prophet Muhammad did. He was the Messenger of Allah who did not only understand the Quranic text perfectly, but also had the authority and responsibility to clarify the rulings not explicitly expounded in the Quran. Allah has commanded us to abide by what Prophet Muhammad did, and he actually executed the punishment of stoning to death and declared it as a final ruling: a non-virgin adulterer should be stoned and a virgin fornicator should be whipped, provided that the conditions for applying the ruling are fully satisfied. These rulings are meant to preserve the life and purity of humankind in general and, therefore, protect the entire existence of human beings. Preservation of life encompasses both protection of individuals—through disciplining them, providing for them by lawful means, etc—as well as protection of family lineages through forbidding sexual relationships outside marriage.

When people stray from the ordinance of Allah, He sends them signs that attract them back to it, and such signs may be sent by means of those who disbelieve to prove its truth. We have repeatedly dealt with this divine norm, and will repeat it still so it may be ingrained in the minds of people. Allah says: ‘It is He who has sent His Messenger with guidance and the religion of truth, to show that it is above all [other] religions, however much the idolaters may hate this.’ (at-Tawba: 33)

Some would say the Quran makes a claim that has nothing to do with reality, for Islam has not been proved to be above all other religions. To anyone who may thus contend, we respond: This is the result of a faulty understanding of the words of Allah. He says in one verse, ‘... to show that it is above all [other] religions, however much the idolaters may hate this’ (at-Tawba: 33) and in another verse, ‘... however much the disbelievers may hate this.’ (Ghafir: 14) So the fact that Islam will prevail over other religions does not mean abolition of all those who hate it: the idolaters and the disbelievers. Allah does not say that Islam will preclude the existence of anyone who is against it.

Since they do not believe in Islam, the disbelievers hate to see Islam prevail over all other religions, but does Islam prevail over other religions by abolishing them all and having every one of their adherents convert to it? No. Allah has explained in the Quran and proved by reality that this is not the way Islam gains victory. Rather, the manifestation of this victory is that life events will force those who hate Islam to resort to it for relief of disasters; they will not find a way out of their crises except by applying one or another of the rulings of Islam which they hate, perhaps without even knowing it.

When life forces someone to follow the opinion of his rival, this is evidence of the truth of the latter. This is how Islam prevails over all other religions, however much the disbelievers may hate it. We have seen this happen in our modern age. Since 1981, the USA—that major world power—has been suffering under the crisis summed up in these four letters: AIDS. Islam has established a law that organizes sexual relationships to protect and preserve humankind. Through its system of legal and publicly recognized marriage, Islam has guided us to the best and purest form of sexual relationships. Through defiance of this divine law, America has been suffering terror of the aforesaid disease, which proves the truth of Islam as the timeless religion of God. AIDS, or 'Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome', is transmitted mainly through genital fluids in sexual relationships outside marriage. Scientists are still studying the formation of the virus causing AIDS. That virus secretes poisons and cause severe pains, and until today, the western world withal its advancement is still unable to defeat this disease. It is worthy of mention that the HIV virus that causes AIDS is transmitted through sexual man-woman relationships outside of marriage as well as homosexual relationships. They are a punishment from Allah to all those who practice sex outside the lawful limits set by Him.

Allah has made marriage the valid channel through which a man and a woman can have a clean relationship. It is the process of offer and acceptance through which both parties- the man and the woman through her guardian- give their consent, the groom pays the mandatory marriage dowry, and the union is announced at the presence of witnesses. This is the system of marriage decreed by Allah; it goes perfectly in line with the chemical constitution of the human soul and is the best manner in which human bodies can enter into an intimate union.

Ponder this example: when positive and negative electric wires are properly connected, they produce light. However, when they are connected in the wrong way, a short circuit and perhaps a fire will ensue. In the same manner, when masculinity and femininity are brought together by the lawful bond of matrimony, the result is perfect harmony between the natural chemical constitution of the human soul that transmits, i.e. the male, and that of the soul that receives, i.e. the female. Naturally, the outcome of this pure union is a light, not a fire.

It is enough to enrage a man to see a stranger sneaking glances at a woman under his guardianship. If that stranger follows the legitimate path of proposal decreed by Allah, the guardian of the woman, who would have otherwise been enraged, would be elated and a wedding ceremony would be held to announce the blessed union.

Adherence to the law of Allah positively affects the chemical constitution of the human soul, whereas rage and resentment are the inevitable result of disobeying this law; abidance by it brings happiness and creates solid relationships among people. Following the guidance of Allah is what works this wonderful effect in the human soul and lets happiness and peace replace rage and enmity through a clean and honest relationship.

Every relationship between a man and woman that exists beyond the limits of purity and chastity ordained by Allah must result in an unbalance in the constitution of human life that ultimately leads to psychological and physical diseases difficult to be treated. This happens nowadays already. Let us reflect on the following verse: ‘And those of your women, who commit illegal sexual intercourse, take the evidence of four witnesses from amongst you against them; and if they testify, confine them (i.e. women) to houses until death comes to them or Allah ordains for them some (other) way.’ (an-Nisa’: 15) This was intended as a preliminary stage until Allah revealed to Prophet Muhammad the prescribed punishment for fornication. Allah also says:

وَٱلَّذَانِ يَأْتِيَـٰنِهَا مِنكُمْ فَـَٔاذُوهُمَا ۖ فَإِن تَابَا وَأَصْلَحَا
فَأَعْرِضُوا۟ عَنْهُمَآ ۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ تَوَّابًا رَّحِيمًا ﴿١٦﴾

If two men commit a lewd act, punish them both;
if they repent and mend their ways, leave them alone – God is always ready to accept repentance,
He is full of mercy [16] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 16)

As the aforesaid verse tells, Allah always accepts repentance and is full of Mercy. When an adjective form is used to describe Allah, it does not have the same quality or degree as when it is used to describe human beings. We should not think that the Attributes of Allah are sometimes manifested in a higher degree than others are; rather, all the Attributes of Allah have the same Absolute Perfection. When we describe a person as an ‘excessive eater’, it is an exaggerated depiction of this man’s appetite or eating habits. However, it does not tell whether he eats a lot in every single meal or he eats more meals than others normally do. Perhaps, instead of eating three times daily, he eats five times, for example. Thus, he is an ‘excessive eater’ in the sense that he eats more meals than usual, even though the size of each meal is not really larger than usual. It may also mean that he eats in every single meal much more than what a normal person would eat. Instead of one piece of bread, he would perhaps eat four pieces. Therefore, when an exaggerated expression or adjective form is used to describe a human being, it may indicate either that the stated quality manifests itself intensely every single time, or the rate of recurrence of that quality is higher than usual.

This is different when an adjective is used to describe an Attribute of Allah. When we say that Allah is the Accepter of Repentance, this refers to both, the repetition of the manifestations of this Attribute as well as the uniquely high degree and quality of the Attribute each time it is manifested. Allah accepts repentance of millions of human beings, and moreover, He forgives even grave acts of disobedience. It means both the rate of recurrence and the degree of the Attribute are characterized by the same unique and absolute perfection. He is the Accepter of Repentance, the All-Merciful, and the All-Wise Lord and Creator of all things. He has created humankind and decreed laws to regulate their lives. The establishment of laws necessarily entails condemnation of whoever violates these laws and prescribing punishments to deter violators.

Ordaining laws rules out excuses. Since Allah has revealed to us His laws, no one may be excused to say, ‘I did not know such-and-such was forbidden.’ The fact that Allah forbids something and prescribes a punishment for it is itself a proof that Allah knows that the human soul may be so weak as to contradict divine ordinance; our Creator knows we are not angels. Prescription of prohibitions and punishments leaves no excuse for violators. As we have pointed out, prohibition of a specific deed implies that it is likely to be committed; otherwise, Allah would not mention it, let alone set punishment for whoever commits it. Some acts are worthy of condemnation, yet the Ultimate Legislator and Law-Giver does not set punishments for them, not due to any deficiency on His Part—the Exalted above every failure or deficiency!—but Allah has not mentioned the punishment for some condemned acts in His Ordinance for a reason. Let us illustrate this. Allah knows that human beings may be prone to commit theft, for example, or fornication. Therefore, He prescribes a punishment to be applied in case someone is too weak to resist the temptation of such acts. However, there are other acts, also worthy of condemnation, that Allah does not set punishments for. By such deliberate overlooking, Allah wants to implicitly tell us that no rational human being should even conceive of the possibility of doing such evil acts. An example of this is homosexuality.

Allah has not decreed a particular punishment for it because a sound natural disposition would never even think of committing it. Let it suffice as evidence that homosexuality does not exist in the worlds of animals, for they have natural dispositions that have not been contaminated, unlike human beings.(1)

It is very important to understand, though, that the fact that Allah has not prescribed a particular punishment for an evil act does not mean that one will not be held accountable on the Day of Judgment for committing it. Rather, one may receive severer reckoning on account of this evil act. When Allah condemns an act and rules a punishment for committing it, this indicates that such an act is likely to be committed, given to human weakness. However, if an act has no prescribed punishment, this is only meant to suggest that it is neither natural nor normal for a sound human disposition to be inclined to do such an act. For this reason, no punishment has been decreed for it. The matter in such cases was left to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him who was authorized to legislate proper punishments for such abnormally evil acts.

Thus, the absence of an explicit text in the Quran that prescribes punishment for a certain crime does mean that one will not be recompensed for committing it. It is quite the reverse: punishment for such crimes may be severer than the ones explicitly established in the Quran. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him ordered that both parties engaging in a homosexual relationship should be thrown off a mountaintop, which is severer than the stoning punishment prescribed for fornicators. From this we understand that not decreeing a specific punishment for a certain bad deed is only meant to indicate that it is very inconsistent with reason and a sound natural disposition, not that such a deed is by any means admissible. When Allah overlooks certain matters, it is meant as an indirect intimation that these matters should not be practiced among human beings; they are not even practiced by animals even though they belong to a lower class.

(1) This information is according to the knowledge and belief of Sheikh Ash-Sha’rawi may Allah rest his soul and it was stated by him to further clarify certain points, but it does not necessarily conform to the scientific facts and information proven true.

Some would describe such an atrocious act as ‘animalistic lust.’ However, animals are certainly vindicated from such a groundless accusation! In actual fact, animals would never do such an abnormal thing. No female of any animal species would mate with another female, nor would two male animals ever copulate with one another. Furthermore, if a female animal conceives, it would never allow any male animal other than her mate to approach her. Therefore, practicing sexual relationships beyond the legitimate process set by Allah should better be called a ‘humanistic’ desire, not an animalistic one! Animals would not commit such anomalous acts. Whoever describes such lewd practices as animalistic actually does grave injustice to animals. Despite the fact that human beings commit such ugly sins, Allah asserts that He is the Accepter of Repentance, the All-Merciful. Why? Consider the wisdom underlying repentance and Allah’s acceptance of it. If the believers did not commit any sins, the notion of obligation to fulfil the commands and duties we are assigned by Allah would lose its essence and meaning. Abidance by the Divine Ordinance involves a continuous process of fighting against one’s self, on the one hand to prevent it from sliding into error, and on the other hand, to compel it to endure the difficulty of undertaking the enjoined acts of worship.

A believer should resist the temptation of committing sins in the course of his attempts to submit to the assignments of faith, and this is the essence and meaning of obligation; otherwise, Allah would have created us like angels and there would be no need for obligations. Allah has decreed repentance since He knows that human beings are weak. Even a believer may be too weak to resist one sin or another, one day or another, but this does not mean that Allah will banish him from His Mercy. Rather, the fact that Allah has decreed certain punishments for sinners is itself evidence that those who choose Islam but then commit sins out of ignorance or weakness are not altogether excluded from the realm of faith. Were it not for the Mercy of Allah Who has prescribed repentance for us–a sinner would be doomed to damnation, and would therefore give himself free rein to rebellion and disobedience ever after. Knowing that Allah already deprived him eternally from His Mercy, desperation would drive him to go on offending the honours of people, spreading corruption, and committing all evils with no deterrent.

By prescribing repentance, Allah has foreclosed the door to desperation that would make a sinner persist in error since he knows there is no hope for him to be forgiven. Just as Allah has prescribed repentance for sinners, He has also made Mercy for those who guard themselves against sinning. He says: '…Allah is Ever All-Forgiving (the One Who forgives and accepts repentance), (and He is) Most-Merciful.' (an-Nisa': 16) If Allah described Himself as 'the Acceptor of Repentance' only, each one of us would have to sin in order to attain pardon from Him through this Attribute. However, Allah says: '… Ever All-Forgiving (the One Who forgives and accepts repentance), (and He is) Most Merciful.' (an-Nisa': 16)

So, He has made repentance for those who sin and has made Mercy for those who guard themselves against sinning. Therefore, one does not need to necessarily be a sinner to attain the Forgiveness of Allah: one of the manifestations of His Mercy is that He will bless some of His servants so they will not sin to need repentance. Then, in the following verse, Allah explains the issue of repentance:

إِنَّمَا ٱلتَّوۡبَةُ عَلَى ٱللَّهِ لِلَّذِينَ يَعۡمَلُونَ ٱلسُّوٓءَ بِجَهَٰلَةٖ ثُمَّ يَتُوبُونَ مِن
قَرِيبٖ فَأُوْلَٰٓئِكَ يَتُوبُ ٱللَّهُ عَلَيۡهِمۡۗ وَكَانَ ٱللَّهُ عَلِيمًا حَكِيمٗا ﴿١٧﴾

But God only undertakes to accept repentance from those who do evil out of ignorance and soon after- wards repent: these are the ones God will forgive, He is all knowing, all-wise [17]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 17)

The precision of the Quran has left no room for misunderstanding. Since Allah accepts the repentance of sinners, someone may think that he can commit as many sins as he wishes and then repent to Allah. Such conduct is the result of heedlessness of the wisdom underlying Allah's concealment of the time of each one's death. Can anyone be sure that he will live until he decides to repent? Anyone of us may die while sinning, so ponder again the words of Almighty Allah: 'But Allah only undertakes to accept repentance from those who do evil out of ignorance and soon afterwards repent: these are the ones Allah will forgive, He is All Knowing, All-Wise.' (an-Nisa': 17) 'Doing evil out of ignorance' means to commit a sin without bearing in mind, at the moment of committing it, the punishment assigned for it. If one recalls the punishment Allah has made for the sin he is about to commit, he will refrain from yielding to its temptation. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him explained this when he said: 'A fornicator is not [truly] a believer at the moment when he is committing fornication. A thief is not [truly] a believer at the moment when he is committing theft, and he who drinks an intoxicant is not [truly] a believer at the moment when he is drinking.'(1)(2)

If he bore in mind, at the moment of committing fornication, for example, that he is a believer and faith prescribes the punishment of whipping or stoning for fornicators, he would not commit that sin.

Allah clearly states that repentance is accepted only from those '… who do evil out of ignorance and soon afterwards repent...' (an-Nisa': 17) Some may plan to commit a particular sin, rejoice in doing it at the transient pleasure they gain, and even talk proudly about having committed that sin and the time when they did. On the other hand, some may fall prey to a sin, out of weakness, and immediately sink under remorse and self-reproach for committing it; they wish they had not done that act of disobedience and wonder how they dared commit it.

Let me give an example to distinguish between the two cases: Assume that two people were preparing to travel to Paris. One of them inquired from those who lived there before about the places of extravagant entertainment and debauchery. Once he arrived in Paris, he indulged himself in such a wasted, obscene life and, and when he returned home, he took pride in talking about his delicious adventures! By contrast, the other person travelled to Paris to pursue his studies. During his stay there, he could not combat the temptations and fell a weak prey to a sin; he did not plan it, but it happened. Once the ecstasy of desire was extinguished, he became severely overcome by regret and self-reproach. When he returned home, he was far from proud of what he committed, and was just anxious to conceal news of it from all others. The difference between one who plans for a sin and one who weakly falls prey to sinning without intending it is remarkable.

(1) In the version cited by Imam Muslim and Imam Ahmed, there is the addition: "…He who dishonestly takes something of the battle gains is not [truly] a believer at the moment when he is doing this sin, so beware of these deeds! Beware of these deeds!" In the version cited by Abd Al-Razzaq, there is another addition: "…And he who usurps a right that is not his is not [truly] a believer at the moment when he is doing so".

(2) Cited by Imam Al-Bukhari on the authority of Abu Hurayrah

By decreeing repentance for his servants, Allah has bestowed His Mercy on all humankind. Otherwise, the entire world would be immersed in endless evils, with people who, by deviating once from the right path, are doomed to desperation of His Mercy and, therefore, take deviation as their lifetime vocation. So Allah accepts the repentance of him who has done a sin, ignorant or heedless of punishment, then repents before his time runs out. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him clarified the exact meaning of ‘running out of time’ when he said: ‘Allah accepts the repentance of His servant as long as the death-rattle has not reached his throat.’(1) (2)

As the Quran relates, this dialogue took place between Allah the Exalted and Satan: ‘[Iblis (Satan)] said: “O my Lord! Because you misled me, I shall indeed adorn the path of error for them (mankind) on the earth, and I shall mislead them all, except Your chosen, (guided) slaves among them.”’ (al-Hijr: 39-40) Satan thought he would destroy all humankind and lure them into committing sins, except the few servants of Allah whom He the Glorified and Exalted selected, elevated above all others, and made them devoted to Him. However, Allah disappointed Satan and decreed repentance for His servants so they can always return to Him so long as the death rattle has not reached their throat. At the moment when the soul is leaving the body, what benefit would society reap if the dying person repents then? Society will not benefit anything from such a repentance that comes at a time when the person is already stripped of any power to either do harm or do good. For this reason,

Allah gives a sinner respite to repent and spare society the evils of his sins so long as his soul has not reached his throat. 'But Allah only undertakes to accept repentance from those who do evil out of ignorance....' (an-Nisa': 17) Now, does one repent first and then Allah accepts his repentance and forgives him? Allah says: '… He turned to them in mercy in order for them to return [to Him]. Allah is the Ever-Relenting, the Most-Merciful….' (at-Tawba: 118)

Here scholars posed a good question: Does a servant repent first and then Allah accepts his repentance, or does Allah turn to His servant in mercy first and then the servant repents as a result? The aforesaid verse explicitly states: '…He turned to them in mercy in order for them to return [to Him]….' (at-Tawba: 118) No one has invented repentance. Rather, Allah first prescribed repentance and made it possible for his servants; accordingly, His servants repent to Him whenever they sin, and He accepts their repentance.

Repentance then revolves around three aspects: First, Allah has decreed repentance for His servants; no one invented repentance and then imposed it on Allah. Rather, the One Who has created us knows that we may be too weak to resist our desires, so He has decreed repentance for those who sin in ignorance then regret their misdoing. This is what Allah means by saying, '… He turned to them in mercy….' (at-Tawba: 118) It means that Allah, out of His Mercy, has prescribed repentance so that His servants may turn to Him again if they slide into error: '… in order for them to return [to Him]….' (at-Tawba: 118) When they do turn to Him, Allah accepts their repentance, as He says about Himself in the Quran: 'Forgiver of sins and Accepter of repentance….' (Ghafir: 3)

Ponder these words of Allah: '… Allah… undertakes to accept repentance….' (an-Nisa': 17) The expression denotes endless bounty. If a wealthy person tells a poor one in debt, 'I undertake to repay your debt to your creditor', the debtor would be elated for the favour bestowed on him. What elation and reassurance, then, we should feel when Allah–to Whom all Perfection and Majesty belong– says He 'undertakes to accept repentance'! Allah ascribes acceptance of repentance to Himself and not to any of His creatures. He commits himself to accept sinners who turn to Him in regret, and no one can change what He has decreed. Allah then says: '…and soon afterwards repent…' (an-Nisa': 17). No one knows when he will die, so one should not delay his repentance. So those who do wrong in ignorance and soon after turn to Him, regretting their sins, Allah promise them: '… these are the ones Allah will forgive...' (an-Nisa': 17). Indeed, He is the One Who accepts repentance and forgives sins.

Allah concludes the verse with His words: '… He is All Knowing, All-Wise.' (an-Nisa': 17) We know that establishing laws requires vast knowledge of what was, is, and can possibly be in the future, and this is the reason for the confusion constantly arising regarding man-made laws. What makes people enforce a law on one day and amend it on the following day? Things arise which they had not expected due to their limited knowledge. A law is issued, and when an unexpected thing happens, the legislator has to amend that law. When the legislator is ignorant of all the past, present, and future implications and circumstances associated with those subject to his legislations, the result is a defective legal code. Knowledge of a human legislator does not encompass the past, except just the limited scope of events that has taken place in his own environment or other places whose news has reached him.

Needless to say, human knowledge is also limited by the boundaries of the present and cannot trespass them to know the future. Even with regard to the present, no one can have a full account of it since the present associated with a particular environment and context can be quite different from that associated with another. We know that realms of the unseen are three: First, the past: people of a certain time do not witness events of the times that went before them. The past is hidden from people due to the fact that its events happened at a time preceding their existence. In the Quran, Allah draws our attention to this fact as evidence for the truthfulness of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: 'You [Muhammad] were not present on the western side of the mountain when We gave Our command to Musa (Moses)…' (al-Qasas: 44). Prophet Muhammad was not present when Allah revealed His law to Prophet Musa (Moses). Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was also illiterate and was therefore incapable of reading history and learning it. Allah also says: 'This is an account of things beyond your knowledge that We reveal to you [Muhammad]: you were not present among them when they cast lots to see which of them should take charge of Maryam (Mary); you were not present with them when they argued [about her].' (Al-'Imran: 44) Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did not witness these events. Furthermore, as everyone knows, he was illiterate and never learnt history from any teacher. This is sufficient evidence that it was Allah Who unveiled the past to the Prophet and made known to him those events. Second, the present: events of the present time can also be part of the unknown, not due to a difference in time of course, but a difference in place. At any present moment, I may know what happens in my place, but I cannot know what happens in other places. Besides difference in place, we cannot know what others hide in themselves. Allah says: '… and they say to themselves, 'Why does not Allah chastise us for what we are saying?'…' (al-Mujadala: 8) In this verse, Allah tells Prophet Muhammad about a thing that belonged to his time, yet it was concealed in the hearts of his enemies. If they had not harboured that feeling in themselves, would they have believed the Messenger of Allah when he told them about what lurked in their minds as was revealed to him by Allah? Allah has thus removed the veils of place and the inner self of his enemies and exposed their secrets to His Messenger. Third, the future: Allah says in the Quran: 'Their forces will be routed and they will turn tail and flee.' (al-Qamar: 45)

This verse was revealed in Mecca at a time when Muslims were a small, persecuted, powerless group. When Companion 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him heard this verse, he asked Prophet Muhammad with eager interest: 'What forces will be defeated?' Muslims then confronted the 'forces' in the Battle of Badr and they were indeed defeated. News of that defeat was foretold in Mecca; then, it took place after the Immigration to Medina. Can it be plausible that Allah would say, 'Their forces will be routed and they will turn tail and flee' (al-Qamar: 45) unless he knew this would actually happen? Had events contradicted the foretold news, those who have believed would have forsaken faith.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him confidently delivered the revelation of Allah who thus foretold the future to be evidence against the adversaries of His Messenger. When the truth of what has been foretold is proven, those adversaries should immediately realize that they were truly revelations of the One Who has created all things and Whose Knowledge encompasses all events.

Al-Walid ibn Al-Mughirah was a huge man among the nobility of Quraysh, a man who was surrounded by an aura of awe and fame. With all his grandeur, Allah said about him: 'We shall brand him on the snout!' (al-Qalam: 16) Allah foretold that he would receive a blow that would leave an indelible mark on the highest point of his nose. In the Battle of Badr, Al-Walid got struck on his nose. Allah foretold Prophet Muhammad of it and events came to confirm it. When reality corroborated the news foretold in the Quran, the believers were established more firmly in faith; they grew assured of the truth of whatever the Messenger of Allah told them. Such an incident, even though minor in itself, constituted solid grounds for believing whatever Prophet Muhammad told them regarding the Afterlife. If he could foretell events that would happen in this life, then he is truly the Messenger of Allah and whatever he told about the Afterlife must certainly be true.

Back to the verse we are dealing with, we say Allah concludes it by saying: '…He is All Knowing, All-Wise.' (an-Nisa': 17) His knowledge encompasses all things, and this is why He has decreed repentance for His servants. Allah knew that without repentance, the world would be rife with evils committed by desperate sinners who have lost all hope of deliverance once they committed their first sins. It is out of His Mercy that He has prescribed repentance for His servants. He is the All-Wise Who has not only saved sinners, but saved the entire world from woes and trials that desperation would push hopeless sinners to cause. In the Arabic text of the verse, the verb used is in the past-tense form—which literally translates as 'He was All Knowing, All-Wise.' However, this should not be understood to denote what the past tense linguistically denotes typically; indeed, when it comes to Allah, nothing should be understood or interpreted based on the norms and limits that govern mortals. Rather, 'There is nothing like Him.' Time is but one of His creations; He controls time and it does not control Him.

A sceptic may contend that using a past-tense verb form proves that the Knowledge of Allah is confined to the past. However, the fact that Allah does not change is sufficient to refute this unfounded claim. Allah has always existed with no beginning and no end, so all His Attributes, including Knowledge and Wisdom, have always been His, with no beginning and no end. Wisdom is putting everything in place. Allah has created and decreed everything based on His Omnipotent Knowledge, so everything goes exactly in accordance with the predestined course, and this is the peak of Wisdom. Let us recite again the words of Allah: 'But Allah only undertakes to accept repentance from those who do evil out of ignorance and soon afterwards repent: these are the ones Allah will forgive, He is All Knowing, All-Wise.' (an-Nisa': 17) Allah has decreed repentance so His servants may repent to Him, and He accepts their repentance. This is based on His Omnipotent Knowledge and Absolute Wisdom. In the aforesaid verse, Allah obviously declares that He 'undertakes' to accept repentance of His servants who sin in ignorance and repent soon after. In the following verse, He tells us about the other category of sinners whose repentance will not be accepted:

وَلَيْسَتِ ٱلتَّوْبَةُ لِلَّذِينَ يَعْمَلُونَ ٱلسَّيِّـَٔاتِ حَتَّىٰٓ إِذَا حَضَرَ
أَحَدَهُمُ ٱلْمَوْتُ قَالَ إِنِّى تُبْتُ ٱلْـَٰٔنَ وَلَا ٱلَّذِينَ يَمُوتُونَ وَهُمْ
كُفَّارٌ ۚ أُو۟لَـٰٓئِكَ أَعْتَدْنَا لَهُمْ عَذَابًا أَلِيمًا ١٨

It is not true repentance when people continue to do evil until death confronts them and then say, 'Now I repent,' nor when they die defiant: We have prepared a painful torment for these [18]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 18)

This verse tells us about those who persist in wrongdoing and do not think of repentance. Allah accepts repentance of those who live in accordance with His ordinances, yet human souls may at times are too weak to resist the lure of sins. As for those whose repentance is not accepted, they are those whose hearts and souls have deviated from the path of Allah and who give free rein to themselves to enjoy unlawful pleasures. They did not just fall prey to a particular sin out of weakness, but they persisted in sinning and indulged themselves however they wished, irrespective of what Allah has commanded.

One may be too weak before a certain sin, yet he tries so heartily to improve and meanwhile struggles in other aspects of worship in an attempt to compensate for his weakness.

Some, for example, give themselves over to charity projects. Seeing weakness in themselves in a certain aspect, they try to compensate for this weakness by pursuing good deeds through as many channels as possible. They do more good in the hope that Allah may eliminate the sins they have repented from.

No one can be cunning in dealing with Allah. Trespass the limits of Allah in a certain aspect and see how He will employ your efforts in other aspects and make you devoted to His service through righteous deeds. Allah puts fear in the heart of a sinner concerning the destiny they will meet if they do not repent from their sins, which makes them hasten to do good deeds. It is like a message He sends to the one who committed evil deeds: you pursued pleasure and violated the limits set by Allah in a certain aspect, so He has employed you in the service of His path in several other aspects, like building mosques and schools and giving generously to the poor. This is one way how sins are expiated.

No one can deceive Allah. The Quran describes the one who has weakly fallen prey to a sin as one who does ‘evil’ whereas the one who is engrossed in deviating from the path of Allah is described as one who does ‘evil deeds.’ The latter does not just have a certain weak point he cannot control or deal with, but he commits several evil deeds and persists in straying from the Way of Allah. He does not stop there, but he continues to delay repentance until just the moment before his soul is about to be severed from his body. Even the good deeds he may have done were not purely for winning the Good Pleasure of Allah, but he thinks religion is confined to rituals and has nothing to do with real life, as do atheists and those ignorant of the meaning and essence of the religion of Allah.

An example of this is the tradition of the Masons. It is said that this sect was founded by the Jews. Apparently, the behaviour of the Masons gives the impression that they only mean to collaborate to do good to serve the interests of society. However, the undeclared aim of the Masonic faction is to serve the Zionist aspirations. Unaware of the real objectives, some Muslims may join them only to participate in community work. I say to every one of them: your religion is sufficient for you! It already urges you to do these good things, so why do you then turn to the Masons and do not do these good deeds based on the commands of Islam? Why do you not ascribe doing this good to Islam instead of ascribing it to other doctrines and beliefs?

Another example is Rotary Clubs. Someone may boast: ‘I am a member of the Rotary Club.’ Asked why he is so proud of that, he would answer: ‘These are clubs that boost collaboration, communication, affection, and compassion among people.’ This poses a question: does Islam not command the same things? Why then do you need to belong to this group or that? This sounds like hostility to the religion of Allah.

So, Allah does not accept repentance of those who defy Him by persisting in sinning. They are like a man whose soul incited him to break his fast during Ramadan by drinking a glass of wine for the price of a stolen pig! The first sin he commits is neglecting fasting in Ramadan even though it is mandatory. Second, he breaks his fast by drinking wine even though this is forbidden. He also wants to buy the glass of wine for the price of a pig even though Muslims are forbidden from eating pork. In addition, the pig itself is stolen! When he was asked why he committed all that, he answered: ‘To defy divine ordinance through a complex act of disobedience’!!

This is a flagrant infringement of the laws of Allah and a complete deviation from His Path. Will Allah then accept him if he professes repentance just at the moment of death? No. ‘Whereas repentance shall not be accepted from those who do evil deeds until their dying hour…’ (an-Nisa’: 18) having indulged in countless unlawful pleasures, when death comes, the daring sinner is overcome by cowardice. Why does he not insist on his disobedience till the end? When death comes, this is the moment when one cannot deceive himself anymore: ‘… until their dying hour and then say, ‘Behold, I now repent’….’ (an-Nisa’: 18) Such repentance is not fit to be accepted, and what benefit would society or the world gain from it? What is the use of declaring repentance at a time when the evildoer is no longer capable of doing any mischief?! This shows disrespect for Allah; therefore, repentance will not avail him.

The verse makes a distinction between two types of sinners: those who embrace faith but persist in sinning and those who die as disbelievers. Now, ponder the mercy of Allah towards the former and His respect for their declaration of faith by testifying that there is no god but Allah and that Muhammad is His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him.

Allah gives sinners from among the believers a less-severe recompense than that of the disbelievers. His torment will be commensurate with the sins he committed. He will not be treated like the disbelievers, and this is why Allah adds: '…nor from those who die as deniers of the truth…' (an-Nisa': 18). The disobedient believers will receive torment in proportion to their acts of disobedience, but they will finally be admitted to paradise as a reward for their having kept their faith. This is why Allah does not conclude the verse by saying, for example, '…They will be the dwellers of Hell; there to abide.' Rather, He says: '…it is these for whom We have readied grievous suffering…' (an-Nisa': 18). Suffer they will–both disobedient believers and the disbelievers–but the torment of each will be commensurate with his sins. Allah says in the following verse:

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا۟ لَا يَحِلُّ لَكُمْ أَن تَرِثُوا۟ ٱلنِّسَآءَ كَرْهًا ۖ وَلَا تَعْضُلُوهُنَّ لِتَذْهَبُوا۟
بِبَعْضِ مَآ ءَاتَيْتُمُوهُنَّ إِلَّآ أَن يَأْتِينَ بِفَٰحِشَةٍ مُّبَيِّنَةٍ ۚ وَعَاشِرُوهُنَّ بِٱلْمَعْرُوفِ ۚ فَإِن
كَرِهْتُمُوهُنَّ فَعَسَىٰٓ أَن تَكْرَهُوا۟ شَيْـًٔا وَيَجْعَلَ ٱللَّهُ فِيهِ خَيْرًا كَثِيرًا ﴿١٩﴾

You who believe, it is not lawful for you to inherit women against their will, nor should you treat your wives harshly, hoping to take back some of the bride-gift you gave them, unless they are guilty of something clearly outrageous. Live with them in accordance with what is fair and kind: if you dislike them, it may well be that you dislike something in which God has put much good [19]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 19)

We have said before that when Allah calls upon His believing servants, saying: 'O you who believe', it means He tells them that since they have voluntarily chosen to believe in Him as the One God Who is the All Knowing, Almighty, All-Wise, and Self-Subsisting, then they must obey His ordinance. Using this special and honourable form of address indicates that non-believers are not included. Rather, Allah calls upon those who have willingly embraced faith. He says: 'There is no compulsion in religion…' (al-Baqara: 256). In the verse we are dealing with, Allah wants to address a problem that has to do with women and the way they are oppressed and mistreated. In the pre-Islamic era of ignorance, women suffered from injustice and bias. Allah says: 'O you who believe! You are forbidden to inherit women against their will…' (an-Nisa': 19). The context of the verse refers to inheritance, or a thing which a deceased person has left behind to an heir. The command in the verse is addressed to heirs and it forbids them from taking hold of a thing that belonged to the deceased person yet is not fit to be inherited. Allah has made it lawful for heirs to inherit the wealth of a deceased person and set laws for just distribution of wealth among heirs. However, not everything left behind by a dead person is fit to be inherited. What is that? Allah says: '…You are forbidden to inherit women against their will…' (an-Nisa': 19). Is this meant to refer to slave women? No, an heir is entitled to inherit the slave women left behind by the deceased person. Bear in mind that when the word an-nisa' (Arabic for 'women') is used in an indefinite way, it is taken to refer to free women since slave women are considered to be rightful possessions of men and therefore can be inherited by heirs. Allah says: '… You are forbidden to inherit women against their will…' (an-Nisa': 19). How can a woman be inherited?

In the pre-Islamic era of ignorance, when a man died, his heir would come and throw his gown over the deceased man's wife heralding that she has become his. If the woman then refused, he would take her against her will. If he had no desire for her, he would lock her up in his house until she died and would then inherit her wealth. Alternatively, he would marry her to a man and take her dowry for himself. In short, he treated her as if she had been a possession of his. For this reason, Allah revealed His clear command: '…You are forbidden to inherit women against their will; and you should not 'ta'duluhunna' (treat them with harshness)…' (an-Nisa': 19). The Arabic word 'ta'duluhunna' is derived from the root ''adala' which denotes 'forceful prevention.' We say a woman ''addalat' (constrained) her fetus, which refers to muscular contractions which prevent her from delivering her baby. This is the etymological root of the word. Out of the Grace of Allah, when a woman delivers a baby, her muscles expand and contract; they expand so there would be a large enough space that allows the baby to get out. However, these muscles may contract during delivery, which prevents the baby from coming out. In such a case an operation is conducted to get the baby out, like the well-known Caesarian section.

So the Arabic word ''adala' refers to a difficult childbirth, and it also refers to an egg having difficulty leaving a chicken's body due to muscular contractions resulting from a defective movement. But what makes the muscles move at odds with the expansion process required for delivery? Allah has willed that things do not always happen as expected as if everything were functioning mechanically. Rather, Allah wants us to bear in mind that He is the One Who disposes all affairs and who brings effects and results. Causes have no power in themselves, so if He wills, He may suspend them and prevent them from producing the anticipated outcomes.

When we see anomalous and exceptional events happening contrary to what their causes usually lead to, this is evidence of the infinite Power of Allah. If everything happened as expected, people would perhaps think that the mechanical order of the world is so precise that it may never falter. Allah draws our attention to the fact that He possesses full power and control over His Kingdom. Contrary to the beliefs of Deists, Allah did not only create the universe and then leave it to function mechanically through the interaction of material causes. No, Allah is the All-Sustaining One Who never slumbers or sleeps; He orders the causes to operate or not to operate, and He is the One Who holds control over all things.

Allah shows us these abnormalities in the universe so that we will not be allured by the monotony and constancy of natural causes and in order that we will continuously remember Allah and the fact that He is the One Who has created all causes and means and conferred power on them so they can produce effects. This is meant to protect us from becoming indifferent or heedless of the Creator due to the constant monotony of the process of causation and results. Allah reminds us of His existence through the various instances in which He diversifies natural causes or suspends them. He thus teaches us that these causes are not autonomous actors; they have no power in themselves. Rather, they act the way they do because Allah has created them and ordered them to act in this manner, and if He wills, He may suspend them.

We have addressed this matter while discussing the miracle of Prophet Ibrahim (Abraham) peace be upon him. His people threw him in the fire, but he was not burnt. Allah could have saved Prophet Ibrahim in a different way, but was it only about the survival of the Prophet peace be upon him? If this had been the case, Allah would not have let him fall into their hands at all, but He did let them capture Ibrahim and did not enable him to escape from them. Allah could have ordered the sky to rain when they threw him in the fire to extinguish it. However, it did not rain and the fire was inflamed and got fiercer. By this, Almighty Allah wanted to send us one of His signs: ‘But We said, “Fire, be cool and safe for Ibrahim (Abraham).”’ (al-Anbiya’: 69) Was this not a provocation and defiance of those who wanted to burn Prophet Ibrahim (Abraham)? It was indeed! They were indeed capable of catching him and throwing him in the fire. No rain fell to extinguish the fire, while he was in it. Still, the fire did not burn him. This is the greatness of the Might of Allah.

Back to the verse at hand; Allah says: ‘…and you should not ‘ta’duluhunna’ (treat them with harshness)…’ (an-Nisa’: 19). What does ‘harshness’ here refer to? As we have clarified, the Arabic word ‘ta’duluhunna’ is derived from the root ‘‘adala’ which denotes ‘forceful prevention.’ We say a woman ‘‘addalat’ (constrained) her fetus, which refers to muscular contractions which prevent her from delivering her baby. What does this word mean then when it is used to refer to women? It means forcefully preventing a woman from her natural right (when her husband dies) to marry whomever she wants or whoever proposes to her after the widow’s prescribed waiting period is over. To stop that pre-Islamic habit, Allah has sent down this command to prohibit keeping a woman under such constraint. Allah commands us not to lock them up in our homes and deny them access to their legitimate rights, but why would a man do so? What is the practice against which the Quran here means to caution? Allah explains the reason in the same verse: ‘… that you may take away part of the Mahr [mandatory marriage dowry] you have given them….’ (an-Nisa’: 19) The verse then presents two distinct rulings: do not inherit women as if they were your property, and women should not be prevented unjustly from marrying whom they want.

A good example of the latter is when a man who hates his wife decides not to live in a healthy marriage with her, but also never to divorce her, and instead, leaves her suspended between marriage and divorce; so he is neither a husband to her, nor does he divorce her and let her marry another man. A bad man may choose to do so because he wants to force his wife to free herself from constraint by waiving her alimony and all or part of her dowry. Islam thus protects women by prohibiting such deeds.

When are men allowed to exercise such constraint on their wives? Here is the answer: '…unless they commit open illegal sexual intercourse…' (an-Nisa': 19) In this case, the man is allowed to lock his wife up and prevent her from leaving home. This was prior to prescribing the punishment for adultery, namely stoning to death. Some scholars of Islamic jurisprudence have said a husband may take from his wife whatever she is willing to give in order to free her. This was in the form of money or any other thing if she was guilty of adultery, or if she was a bad companion to him. This is different from what we call khul', or the divorce granted in return for a compensation paid by the wife to the husband. The latter is a gift to women who want to end their marriages even without any reasons at all. This is unlike the aforesaid punishment that was prescribed for adulteresses before the stoning punishment was ordained.

Allah continues: '… and live with them 'bil ma'ruf' (honourably)...' (an-Nisa': 19). The Arabic word 'ma'ruf' (here rendered as 'honourably') is wider in its meaning than the word 'mawadda' which denotes 'affection.' The latter refers to being good and kind to someone to whom you are bound by affection and intimacy. The word 'ma'ruf', on the other hand, means treating someone in accordance with what is fair and kind even if you dislike them. Some orientalists who are antagonistic towards Islam have scrutinized the Quran only to find anything that may be used as a proof that the Quran involves contradictions. They argue: 'Your Quran says, '[Prophet], you will not find people who truly believe in Allah and the Last Day 'yuwadduna' (giving their loyalty to) those who oppose Allah and His Messenger, even though they may be their fathers, sons, brothers, or other relations...' (al-Mujadala: 22). This includes a command to the believers that they should avoid 'yuwadduna' (be affectionate/ loyal) towards a son, father, or anyone of their clan just because the latter is a disbeliever.' Contrarily, those orientalists argue, 'The Quran says in another verse: 'If they [your parents] strive to make you associate with Me anything about which you have no knowledge, then do not obey them. Yet keep their company in this life 'ma'rufa' (according to what is right)…' (Luqman: 15). So how come the Quran forbids the believers in one verse to 'yuwadduna' (give loyalty to) their relatives if they are disbelievers, yet meanwhile orders them in another verse to keep company of their disbelieving parents based on 'ma'ruf' (what is right/ fair/ kind)?'

That allegation is founded on a failure to understand the difference between mawada (affection/ loyalty/ friendship) and ma'ruf (honourable treatment, i.e. based on justice and goodness). The former denotes love that leads to loyalty and friendship, whereas the latter refers to treating others based on justice and goodness irrespective of our love for them. If you find a hungry person and you give him food and try to satisfy his material needs, this is an example of ma'ruf (just and kind treatment). As for mawadda, however, it involves showing kindness or advocacy to someone based on your affection towards them. When a believer is good towards his disbelieving father, it is not affection that really drives him, but keenness to abide by the command of Allah to treat him based on justice and goodness. A Muslim is ordered to treat his disbelieving parents well, but as to advocating for them, taking their side, or giving them loyalty–as disbelievers–this is a completely different thing, and this is what we are forbidden to do.

Did Allah not blame Prophet Ibrahim (Abraham) for turning down a guest when he found out he was a disbeliever? Our Lord told Prophet Ibrahim peace be upon him: 'Do you want to change his religion to host him for only one night whereas I have been sustaining him for forty years while he is a disbeliever?' What did Prophet Ibrahim (Abraham) do then? He ran after the man, and when he reached him, the man asked Prophet Ibrahim what made him change his attitude so suddenly. The Prophet peace be upon him answered: 'By Allah, my Lord has reproached me because I have behaved in this manner towards you', so the man told him: 'Your Lord blamed you even though you are a Prophet and I do not believe in Him; the Lord Who justly blames the ones who love Him for the sake of His enemies must be a great Lord!' The man embraced faith as a result! This is what we mean by the word ma'ruf (treatment based on justice regardless of feelings). These are the values Allah has enjoined on spouses in the course of their marital lives. Muslims should heed this so they do not destroy their homes. Some believe that families are built only on the basis of love, yet in case love is absent, Allah tells us to '…live with them bil ma'ruf (honourably)...' (an-Nisa': 19). Even if you do not love your wife, treat her based on what is fair and kind. Some men dislike their wives only because they are not beautiful enough on the outside and therefore do not arouse sexual desire in their husbands. Here is a serious misunderstanding: Allah has not prescribed marriage for a man to have a woman who would arouse his desire. Rather, marriage is meant to give you a spouse with whom you can lawfully practice the intimate relationship whenever your desire is excited chemically due to its nature. For this reason, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: 'If any of you sees a beautiful woman and feels his desire aroused, he should hasten to have intercourse with his wife. His desire will be equally quenched this way since his wife has what that other woman has [the same physical form, natural ability, etc. required for intercourse].' (1)

This means that women are of the same nature as to the satisfaction of one's sexual lust. That is why when a man came to 'Umar Allah be pleased with him and said, 'O Commander of the believers! I hate my wife and I want to divorce her', 'Umar replied: 'have families been built only on love?! What about values?' The man thought that his wife would continue capturing his heart until the end of her life, to the extent that he believed that he would kiss her or have sexual intercourse with her as often as he liked. But, 'Umar drove the man's attention to the fact that even though such a thing may happen at the very beginning of marriage, later, the family is built upon the mutual respect between the husband and his wife.

That is why Allah the Almighty says: '… Live with them in accordance with what is fair and kind…' A man might have hated his wife for a particular reason, yet she may perfect her character later on in such a way that enables her to remedy and correct any deficiency she may have had. So, a man should not shape his opinion about this issue on the idea that he wants a woman who looks like a fashion model and who can constantly excite his instinctive desires, even when he has no desire at a certain moment. In truth, Allah the Almighty created woman to offer a man companionship, and this includes satisfying his sexual desire when he is naturally aroused. But if a man believes that a woman is nothing but something through which he can arouse his sexual desire, this denigrates her to the status of a live-in prostitute to be with him for the sake of sex only. This is a great wrong because there are various factors that constitute the relationship between a husband and his wife. Thus, a man should not mould his opinion about a woman on the idea of sexual desire only; rather, he should consider other aspects.

(1) Narrated by Al-Khatib on the authority of 'Umar

In the same vein, a man should know for certain that Allah the Almighty conferred His Favour on His creatures in different ways; He Glorified is He may cause a woman to be beautiful while giving another a sound mind. He the Almighty may grant wisdom to a woman while causing another to be honest and trustworthy. He may grant success to a particular woman and not another. So, the Provision of Allah is distributed to His creatures in so many ways. If you want to be fair and wise, you should take all of these different aspects into account. Thus, to believe that woman serves only as a means to arouse sexual desire is a vast misjudgement. That is why He the Almighty concludes the verse with His saying '… if you dislike them, it may well be that you dislike something in which Allah has put much good.'

If you contemplate over the Quranic verse, you will find it extremely succinct. That is because you may rightfully or wrongfully dislike something, but if you dislike something about which Allah the Almighty says that He has put much good in it, Allah will compensate you in full in other ways, so long as you are patient with her and if your hatred of her is not pertaining to her religion. Because Allah Glorified is He is the One Who causes this good, one must be assured that He the Almighty will compensate him in other respects if he shows patience for his hatred of certain things about her.

Even though the context of the Divine Speech has to do with the affairs of the family, He the Almighty lays down general rules and principles here. He the Almighty could have said, "If you dislike women, it may well be that you dislike them even though Allah has put much good in them", but He did not say this. Rather, He Glorified is He wants to generalize the matter to include everything that a man may dislike. It goes without saying that reality proves the truthfulness and veracity of the Quran, for there are so many things that man dislikes even though they are good for them and vice versa. This clearly indicates that man does not judge things correctly all the time because he may wrongfully dislike something even though it is good for him. As well, he may like something which is evil or bad. As such, it becomes clear that Allah the Almighty causes matters to be contrary to man's own judgment. So, when He Glorified is He says: '… if you dislike them, it may well be that you dislike something in which Allah has put much good', this means that man should all the time believe that the act of dislike, stems from him himself, while good is put into woman by Allah. So, you should not let your hatred overcome the good put into the woman by Allah. He the Almighty then says:

وَإِنْ أَرَدتُّمُ ٱسْتِبْدَالَ زَوْجٍ مَّكَانَ زَوْجٍ وَءَاتَيْتُمْ إِحْدَىٰهُنَّ
قِنطَارًا فَلَا تَأْخُذُوا۟ مِنْهُ شَيْـًٔا ۚ أَتَأْخُذُونَهُۥ بُهْتَـٰنًا وَإِثْمًا مُّبِينًا ﴿٢٠﴾

If you wish to replace one wife with another, do not take any of her bride-gift back, even if you have given her a great amount of gold. How could you take it when this is unjust and a blatant sin? [20]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 20)

If you have exhausted all means of tolerance and endurance in an endeavour to live with your wife in a reasonable manner and it transpired that the marital life cannot continue in a manner satisfactory to Allah—to the extent that you became afraid of losing control of yourself and doing things that Allah has prohibited—what should you do, then? Allah the Almighty says: 'If you wish to replace one wife for another…', this means that you have the right to replace your wife with another in the event you fear falling prey to committing what Allah has forbidden. While doing so (replacing the wife with another), you are supposed to adopt the path of belief which is indicated clearly in the statement of Imam Al-Hassan Allah be pleased with him to a man who consulted him concerning the engagement of his daughter: 'Marry your daughter to the good and pious man, for if he loves her, he would treat her gently and kindly; and if he dislikes her, he would not wrong her.'

As such, when Allah Glorified is He says: 'If you wish to replace one wife for another…', this means that your desire has been totally diverted away from the first wife and that you cannot overcome this desire except by deviating away from the Path of Allah. It may also happen that a man may get fed up with his wife even though he does not feel any aversion towards her. He thus divorces her and does not get married to anyone else immediately. So, the question to be asked here is, "What are the stipulations and conditions laid down by Allah the Almighty in this regard?"

He the Almighty says: '…do not take any of her bride-gift back, even if you have given her a great amount of gold….' Linguistically, the two words "qintar" and "qantarah" refer to a thing which is great. The word "qintar" itself gives the meaning of money. It was estimated in the past to be equivalent to the amount that could fill the skin of a cow. When a cow is skinned, its skin looks like a big bag, and the particular amount that can fill such a bag is called qintar. The qintar that is known to us today is a measure of weight. When Allah the Almighty uses the word qintar, He wants to give us an example of a big dowry: that is, even though you might give your wives big dowries, you are not allowed to take anything back from it in the case of divorce, but why? That is because the dowry you give your wife is in return for enjoying her in sexual intercourse even for a moment, and not for the entire period of time you spend with her.

Therefore, the dowry (even if it is equal to a qintar) cannot be taken back after the moment the marriage is consummated. By the way, this verse reminds me of that particular incident where 'Umar ibn Al-Khatab Allah be pleased with him upon addressing the topic of high dowries, said: "'Umar made a mistake and a woman was right." 'Umar asked the Companions not to give high dowries to women, whereupon a Qurayshi woman answered him, 'how can you say that even though Allah the Almighty says: "…even if you have given her a great amount of gold"?'

It is narrated that 'Umar Allah be pleased with him while delivering a speech at the pulpit, forbade people to give more than four hundred dirhams as a dowry to their wives. Upon descending the pulpit, a woman from Quraysh went to him and said: 'Did you not hear the saying of Allah the Almighty

"…even if you have given her a great amount of gold…"?' 'Umar then replied, 'I seek pardon from Allah. All people understand religion better than 'Umar.' He Allah be pleased with him went up to the pulpit once again and said: 'I have already forbidden you to give them (women) more than four hundred dirhams as dowry, but now you are allowed to give whatever you want from your money.'(1)

In the same vein, it is narrated on the authority of 'Abdullah ibn Mus'ab that 'Umar said: 'Do not pay dowries to women more than forty uqiyyah (one uqiyyah equals forty dirhams), and whoever does so, the excess will be put in the treasury of Muslims.' A woman then said: 'You do not have the right to do so.' 'Umar replied, 'Why?' The woman answered, because Allah the Almighty says, "… even if you have given her a great amount of gold…"', whereupon 'Umar said: 'A woman told the truth and a man made a mistake.'

The Quran then indicates clearly that it is even forbidden to think of taking the dowry back from the wife. He Glorified is He says: 'How could you take it when this is unjust and a blatant sin?' But, why does the Quran impose such a ruling? Because the dowry you give your women is not paid in return for enjoying her for a long period of time; rather, it is for consummating the marriage with her, a matter which is resolved the moment the two have enjoyed sexual intercourse together. So, man will be sinful if he takes back any portion of the dowry from his wife after their marriage is consummated, unless she freely consents to that. The saying of Allah 'ithman mubina' (or "a blatant sin") means that this sin is manifest and destructive.

He the Almighty does not even suffice with describing this act as a blatant sin; rather, He Glorified is He makes another firm and strong denial in His saying: 'How could you take it?' In this verse, He the Almighty strongly and firmly denounces the act of taking back anything from the dowry.

He Glorified is He says:

---

(1) Narrated by Sa'id ibn Mansur and Abu Ya'la

وَكَيْفَ تَأْخُذُونَهُۥ وَقَدْ أَفْضَىٰ بَعْضُكُمْ إِلَىٰ بَعْضٍ
وَأَخَذْنَ مِنكُم مِّيثَٰقًا غَلِيظًا ﴿٢١﴾

How could you take it when you have lain with each other and they have taken a solemn pledge from you? [21] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 21)

If you try to consider all the acceptable ways to take any portion of the dowry back, you will find nothing at all. But why? Allah the Almighty says: ‘How could you take it?’ He Glorified is He states clearly that the main reason behind this prohibition lies in the fact that both of them have lain with each other. So, it becomes crystal clear now that the dowry is paid to the woman in return for sexually pleasing one another. Since the Quran is Divinely inspired by Allah, the meaning of the word “ifdaa” (meaning “lying with each other”) includes all the possible meanings of sexual intimacy between the man and his wife. In reality, the word “afda” is derived from the verbal noun “al-fadaa” which gives the meaning of “a spacious place.” Thus, the saying of Allah “afda ba‘dukum ila ba‘d” (meaning “lying with each other”) indicates that you have given yourself to each other in a way that was not restrained or forced. As such, al-ifdaa means that you have revealed yourselves to each other in the widest and most comprehensive sense, to the extent that she had enabled you to see her private parts which she concealed from her father and brother, and even her mother and sister. As a matter of fact, this represents the climax of giving oneself to another. You have given yourselves to one another in the truest sense of the word; you touch each other; you are in contact with each other; you have sexual intercourse with each other; you use the same entrance and the same exit of your shared home; you use the same bathroom and the same kitchen. This clearly means that all your life implies the giving of oneself to another. So, as long as you gave yourself to her and she gave herself to you—in accordance with the fact that Allah the Almighty described in the chapter of al-Baqara that man and his wife are clothing for each other (al-Baqara: 187) —there is nothing greater than this. So, when a woman harshly and badly treats her husband, he may get angry, but we ask him: “Is it not enough for you that Allah the Almighty has allowed you from her what He Glorified is He forbade to others? Did she not allow you to have sex with her?” So, when she acts and behaves like this, do not get angry and remember the Hadith of the Messenger Muhammad, Peace and Blessings be upon him: ‘The best of you is the one who is best to his wife, and I am the best of you to my wives.’(1)

The word “mithaq” (meaning “solemn pledge”) in the Words of Allah the Almighty ‘How could you take it when you have lain with each other and they have taken a solemn pledge from you?’ gives the meaning of a pledge made between two parties. This pledge has been made when you asked the guardian of the woman to give her in marriage to you and the guardian consequently accepted and approved your request. It goes without saying that this solemn pledge of “marriage” will constitute the nucleus for the establishment of a new family. At this point, it is of great importance to know that any pledge made between people themselves is viewed as ordinary, apart from that pledge made between the man and the woman concerning marriage, which is judged as a “solemn” pledge. As a matter of fact, throughout the Quran this description is never applied to any other pledge except that Pledge made by the Prophets. (al-Ahzab: 7) In this verse, Allah the Almighty describes the relationship between a man and his wife as giving oneself to another, while He Glorified is He in another place in the Quran describes both the husband and the wife as clothing for each other; and that is why the pledge of marriage is described as “solemn.” In truth, this solemn pledge obliges you to treat her kindly and gently in case life becomes difficult. In addition, if a peaceful life with her becomes impossible, you are allowed to replace her with another, yet you are not allowed to take anything back from the dowry you gave her. That is because this dowry is paid in return for giving oneself to another. It actually has nothing to do with the period of time a man spends with his wife, be it short or long.

Concerning this particular verse in which Allah the Almighty says: ‘How could you take it when you have lain with each other and they have taken a solemn pledge from you?’ It is of great importance to know that Allah Glorified is He establishes rights but He the Almighty meanwhile does not forbid the conferment of favour, a fact which is definitively proven and clearly indicated in the same chapter when He Glorified is He states clearly that it is allowed for men to take in satisfaction and ease what their women give up to them willingly. (an-Nisa': 4)

---

(1) At-Tirmidhi, Sahih

As such, there is a difference between the due and basic right owed to a woman and the favour to be conferred by the woman. It is at this point that the following story may be recounted: One day a judge said to his people, "You have chosen me to settle the conflict taking place between you, so how do you want me to judge? Am I to judge you based on justice or on what is better than justice?" The people said to him: "Is there anything which is better than justice?" whereupon the judge replied, "Yes, grace is better than justice, because justice entails that everyone shall take his due right whereas grace means that both of the two parties may waive their rights. Thus, grace is better than justice." In the same vein, when Allah the Almighty establishes rules, He issues guarantees that secure the fulfilment of these rights, yet He Glorified is He does not stop people from conferring favours to each other. This is a fact which is clearly indicated in the Quran.

He the Almighty orders both of the parties in marriage not to forget this act of grace between them. (al-Baqara: 237) He the Almighty also orders us in the chapter of al-Baqara to write down debt owed, for this process of writing it down protects not only the creditor but the debtor, as well. That is because when the creditor knows for certain that the money is legally documented, he will not be able to deny it. Yet, in case the debt is not documented, he may deny it. As such, Allah the Almighty protects the rights of both the creditor and the debtor. In fact, this is the due right to be fulfilled. This does not mean that He the Almighty makes no room for favour and grace. As a matter of fact, when one borrows a sum of money from someone else, the debtor may ask for no legal documentation for the loan, an act which is not prohibited by Allah the Almighty if both of them trust one another and fear Allah. Since He the Almighty makes room for grace and favour in the light of the obligation of rights, you, Oh Muslims, should not forget that.

So, what about the "solemn pledge"? In truth, there is no pledge which is as solemn as that made by the Prophets to Allah and that made between the wife and her husband. That is because it implies the establishment of a relationship which is not eligible except between both the husband and his wife. A man is duly obliged to fulfil the rights of his wife. He is not allowed to take anything from her unless she willingly approves it. This is based on the verse mentioned previously in the beginning of this chapter where Allah the Almighty states clearly that in case the wife gives up anything from her dowry to her husband willingly, he is thus allowed to take it in satisfaction and ease. (an-Nisa': 4)

As long as the woman gives up her dowry freely and willingly, this indicates that consent is existing between the two parties, a matter which deeply expresses the affection and mercy that existed between the married couple. Even though the dowry is the woman's due right, it is not a must to pay it to her in full. It is allowed for the husband to delay the payment of the dowry. This means that he can pay it in full at the beginning of marriage, but he is also allowed to pay some of it and delay the payment of the other part. However, in case the marriage ends in divorce, she is entitled to receive all of her due dowry if the husband did not pay it at all, or to receive the rest of it if he did not pay it in full. When the ownership of the dowry moves to the wife, she may give up some portion from it willingly and freely to the husband in a way that lays emphasis the continuity of affection, mercy, and love between the married couple.

It is on this point that we wish to shed light: what if the dispute between the man and his wife flared up to the extent that the woman strongly dislikes her husband and wants to redeem her freedom? If this is the case, the man will likely get married to another woman and thus he is allowed to receive back some of the dowry he gave her, as proven by the Quran. Allah the Almighty states that in case the two fear that they will not keep within the limits set by Allah, then there is no blame upon either of them concerning that by which she excuses herself from the marriage–her dowry. (al-Baqara: 229)

Stressing the fact that the woman must receive her due right, Allah the Almighty uses the exclamation style to refer to that very issue on the impermissibility of taking anything from the dowry of the wife, except in the above case. He Glorified is He says: 'How could you take it when you have lain with each other and they have taken a solemn pledge from you?'

This exclamatory style indicates clearly that man has no right to take anything from the dowry given to his wife. So, using the interrogative style in this particular Quranic verse implies the absolute and total prohibition of such an act. As well, we previously explained that all the pledges made between people do not particularly tarnish one’s honour, apart from that particular solemn pledge made between the husband and his wife. Pledges or covenants made between any two parties may have to do with money, or providing a service, or blood money or even giving a hand to someone who is in need; these are different forms of pledges and covenants which have nothing to do at all with the topic of honour (chastity) which represents a solemn pledge between the married couple.

Allah the Almighty then sheds light on a very important topic by means of which the purification, dignity and nobility of the family is maintained. As well, it is through this topic that love, mercy, and affection are preserved and kept among the family members and thus there will be no room to break off or damage this relation. He Glorified is He says:

وَلَا تَنكِحُوا۟ مَا نَكَحَ ءَابَآؤُكُم مِّنَ ٱلنِّسَآءِ إِلَّا مَا قَدْ
سَلَفَ ۚ إِنَّهُۥ كَانَ فَٰحِشَةً وَمَقْتًا وَسَآءَ سَبِيلًا ﴿٢٢﴾

Do not marry women that your fathers married – with the exception of what is past – this is indeed a shameful thing to do, loathsome and leading to evil [22] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 22)

This verse indicates that this act used to be practiced before the advent of Islam, so there was no blame for the son to get married to the wife of his dead father if she was not his real mother. For example, Safwan ibn Umayyah*,* one of the leaders of Quraysh, got married to the wife of his late father Umayyah ibn Khalaf. Her name was Fakhitah bint Al-Aswad ibn Al-Muttalib. Allah the Almighty wants to put an end to such an act, but the question to be asked here is “Why does He the Almighty want to do so?” That is because the fatherson relationship is characterized with affection, mercy, love, kindness, and righteousness. As well, the son is obliged to show submissiveness and politeness towards his father. When a man gets married to a woman while having a son, this clearly indicates that the man was married to that son’s mother before this new marriage. In this regard, Allah Glorified is He does not want the son to be too emotionally attached to the wife of his father. The son may like her and thus say, “After the demise of my father, I will get married to her." As such, he may be happy with the death of his father due to having this hope of getting married to his wife. He may even think of getting rid of his father. All of you know for certain how strong the sexual desire is. That is why Allah the Almighty wants to block the means for the son so that he would not even think of that matter; rather, he should consider his father's wife as his mother. In reality, if the son firmly adheres to the Divine Guidance in this regard, he will be able to protect himself from the seduction of Satan.

In this verse, He the Almighty says: 'Do not marry women that your fathers married.' The word "nikah" (usually meaning "marriage") in this context refers to sexual intercourse. It may also give the meaning of making and concluding the marriage contract. But, its indication to sexual intercourse is viewed as the most correct opinion in this regard, a point which is proven by that particular verse of the chapter an-Nur in which Allah the Almighty states clearly that the fornicator shall not marry any but a female fornicator; that is, fornication involves unlawful sexual intercourse by two unmarried people. (an-Nur: 3)

Here, Allah the Almighty says: 'Do not marry women that your fathers married, except for what is past…', so what is meant by salafa ("what is past")? This means the act of marrying a woman who was previously married to one's father used to be practiced before the advent of Islam. But, when Islam came, it was prohibited completely. Allah is saying that even though you used to practice this act before the advent of Islam, you are no longer allowed to practice it now. That is why He the Almighty says "illa ma qad salaf" (meaning "except what is past"); the relative pronoun refers to the past tense. This means that such act can in no way happen in this new era (that of Islam).

Let us imagine that there is someone who got married to the wife of his father before the revelation of this ruling: can this marriage be judged sound and valid after its revelation? The answer is no, because the time during which this act was practiced is over. As such, the saying of Allah the Almighty "illa ma qad salaf" (meaning "except what is past") refers to that particular period of time during which this act was practiced. Since that time is over, this new period of time shall in no way witness the existence of such practices. For this reason, He the Almighty used the relative pronoun "ma" instead of "man." It is of great importance to know that if He Glorified is He used the relative pronoun "man" in this context, this would mean that all the marriages of this kind that took place before the revelation of this ruling were valid. But, He the Almighty did not use it; rather, He used the relative pronoun "ma," to indicate that this kind of marriage shall never be practiced in the future. As well, it is a must to nullify marriages of such kind.

In truth, Allah Glorified is He wants to tell us that all of His Laws and Decrees go hand-in-hand with sound human nature. In this context, He the Almighty did not say that the practicing of this act falls under the category of fornication, even though people in the past used to call it so. Sound human nature can in no way accept such practice. However, when people became misguided from the right path, they married the former wives of their fathers. People in the past used to call this kind of marriage "nikah al-maqt" (meaning "hateful marriage"). In addition, they used to call the offspring produced from this marriage "al-maqti" (meaning "the detested offspring").

Allah the Almighty says "innahu kan" (meaning "indeed it was") referring to this act of getting married to your fathers' former wives. It is as if He is saying "It was prohibited even before I (i.e. Allah the Almighty) declared it as a shameful thing to do, loathsome and leading to evil." Therefore, He the Almighty wants to tell us that all of His Legislations are in accordance with sound human nature which may be plainly evident in some matters and completely obliterated in others. Cases in point are when someone got married to his mother, or his daughter, or even his sister. It becomes clear now that there were certain acts that none dared to practice even in the pre-Islamic period. Therefore, He the Almighty laid down this rule which nullifies and invalidates this act (getting married to the former wives of their fathers) practiced by people in the pre-Islamic period and which is against sound human nature. He Glorified is He says, 'Do not marry women that your fathers married, except for what is past….' He the Almighty describes this act of getting married to one's father's former wives as a shameful thing to do, loathsome and leading to evil (i.e. having detrimental repercussions on the family).

He the Almighty then starts telling about those other women to whom that man cannot get married. Here, it is very important to know that even though people in the pre-Islamic period also prohibited marriage to these women, Allah Glorified is He did not tell us about this ruling because of that; rather, He the Almighty does so because it is in line with sound human nature. Concerning the fact that people in the pre-Islamic period did not commit this act, this clearly means that it is a sound nature that the period of ignorance was unable to change. Allah the Almighty says:

حُرِّمَتْ عَلَيْكُمْ أُمَّهَٰتُكُمْ وَبَنَاتُكُمْ وَأَخَوَٰتُكُمْ وَعَمَّٰتُكُمْ وَخَٰلَٰتُكُمْ وَبَنَاتُ ٱلْأَخِ وَبَنَاتُ
ٱلْأُخْتِ وَأُمَّهَٰتُكُمُ ٱلَّٰتِىٓ أَرْضَعْنَكُمْ وَأَخَوَٰتُكُم مِّنَ ٱلرَّضَٰعَةِ وَأُمَّهَٰتُ نِسَآئِكُمْ
وَرَبَٰٓئِبُكُمُ ٱلَّٰتِى فِى حُجُورِكُم مِّن نِّسَآئِكُمُ ٱلَّٰتِى دَخَلْتُم بِهِنَّ فَإِن لَّمْ تَكُونُوا۟ دَخَلْتُم
بِهِنَّ فَلَا جُنَاحَ عَلَيْكُمْ وَحَلَٰٓئِلُ أَبْنَآئِكُمُ ٱلَّذِينَ مِنْ أَصْلَٰبِكُمْ وَأَن تَجْمَعُوا۟
بَيْنَ ٱلْأُخْتَيْنِ إِلَّا مَا قَدْ سَلَفَ ۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ غَفُورًا رَّحِيمًا ﴿٢٣﴾

You are forbidden to take as wives your mothers, daughters, sisters, paternal and maternal aunts, the daughters of brothers and daughters of sisters, your milk-mothers and milk-sisters, your wives' mothers, the stepdaughters in your care – those born of women with whom you have consummated marriage, if you have not consummated the marriage, then you will not be blamed – wives of your begotten sons, two sisters simultaneously, with the exception of what is past: God is most forgiving and merciful [23] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 23)

But the question to be asked here is, "Who is the One Who has the absolute right to legislate?" It is undoubtedly Allah the Almighty. It is of great importance here to know that even though people in the pre-Islamic period had deviated from the pure religion, they had still declared marriage to those women mentioned in this verse as prohibited. In other words, there are certain prohibited acts which are not acceptable even by non-Muslims, a point which is crystal clear in the fact that the disbelievers in the pre-Islamic period had forbidden marriage to one's mother, daughter, sister, etc. So, the question to be asked here is, "Why did they do so?" Allah Glorified is He gives us the answer in the Quran where He the Almighty states clearly that there is no people group which has existed without having been sent a Messenger from Allah to warn them. (al-Ahzab: 24)

Guidance revealed by Allah the Almighty, is as old as the creation of mankind itself; it is a point of view which is proved by the Quran. Allah Glorified is He while telling us about the story of expelling Adam and Eve from the paradise, told us that He would reveal to them Guidance from Him. In addition, He the Almighty asserted that whoever follows this Divine Guidance will not go astray nor suffer total misery. (Ta Ha: 123)

This clearly indicates that the moment Allah the Almighty created Adam and his wife, He Glorified is He sent them down the Guidance they must follow and adhere to. The elements of this Guidance are incontrovertibly complete and perfect. Thus, to find some practices from the pre-Islamic period which are in line with the teachings of Islam mean that all religions are of one Divine Source, although some people may think that these practices are associated with customs and traditions and not Divinely inspired in the previous religions.

Modern science undoubtedly helped us gain profound and deep understanding of many rulings revealed by Allah the Almighty. Scientists discovered that the greater the variation of blood relation between parents, the stronger the offspring. This pertains to plants, animals, and even mankind. When the parents of male and female are close relatives of each other, their offspring will be weak. That is why scientists of agriculture and zoology devised a new technique to keep the offspring strong called “outbreeding.” In this regard, Prophet Muhammad Peace and Blessings be upon him is narrated to have said: “Get married to women who are not from your relatives so that the offspring would not be weak.” As well, he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him said: “Do not get married to women who are from your relatives, for the offspring will be weak.” (1)

Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him orders us not to marry from among our relatives because the offspring will be weak. It is well known that the offspring of these families whose members are accustomed to getting married to each other are weak to the extent that they may be afflicted with mental retardation, or sexual impotence, or even weakness in the immune system. That is why Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him orders us not get married to our relative women. The word “dawi” implies weakness. So, if you want your offspring not to be weak, you must keep away from getting married to women to whom you are closely related. Arabs were fully aware of this fact even before Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him declared it. A poet in the pre-Islamic period is related to have said:

---

(1) Ihyaa’ ‘Ulum Ad-Din, Gharib

I advise whoever wants to marry his children to their cousins no to do so
For if he did he would never be safe from weakness and illness

When the Egyptians want to praise the strength of a person, they say that he is a futuwah (or a "well-built man"), that is, he was not bred by a female paternal cousin. The same applies to plants: if you want to grow corn in Al-Gharbiyyah Governorate, you are supposed to bring the seeds from Ash-Sharqiyyah. In the same vein, the seeds of the sweet Chilean watermelon are imported from America. But, some people may refuse to buy from such seeds due to its high prices and thus take seeds from the previously planted watermelons. It is for this reason that the yielded crop is always weak. But if he continues to import the seeds from outside –even if the price of the kilo reaches a very high price –he will harvest a good crop.

The same applies to animals and humans. That is why the Arabs used to say, "Only foreigners can overcome heroes because they come from a different race." This means that this hero inherited the complete and salient characteristics of another race. Indeed, the cross-exchange of the good attributes in each race yields better attributes.

The prohibition of getting married to the mother, the sister, etc. may also be seen from an organic angle. Why did Allah the Almighty forbid marriage to the mother, the sister, etc.? It is because mothers represent our origin and sisters are descended from them. Brothers and sisters are descended from the same origin. The same ruling applies to getting married to paternal and maternal aunts, the daughters of brothers and daughters of sisters, your milk-mothers and milk-sisters, etc. Thus, the reason behind this prohibition is complex and has to do with family relations. Allah the Almighty wants human offspring to be strong.

In addition, He Glorified is He wants to draw our attention to the fact that marital relations are prone to psychological fluctuations. A man may get married to a woman, but after a period of time, disagreements begin to emerge between them due to psychological fluctuations, to the extent that he may dislike her so much that they cannot live in peace. How would the relationship between a mother and her son be if they were to marry one another? Naturally, the mother-son relationship obliges the son to be permanently loyal to her. The same applies to his relation to his daughter, sister, paternal aunt, maternal aunt, etc. For this reason, Allah the Almighty orders us to stay away from this main source of discord.

Sound human reason decrees that we must not engage in reciprocal marriage, an arrangement wherein the sister of a particular man gets married to another man provided that the sister of the latter marries the first man. In such a case, if disagreement occurs between one married couple, it will extend to afflict the other one even though they may usually live in harmony. That is why sound reason requires that a man must not marry his sister to another one in return for marrying the latter's sister. We should also consider they how the stance of the mother will be when she sees that there is disagreement between her daughter and her husband, while her son lives in happiness with his wife (i.e. sister of the mother's daughter's husband)? It goes without saying that the area of disagreement and discord has unreasonably widened.

In truth, we should know that Divine Wisdom is not only pertaining to one particular topic; rather, it is comprehensive and covers all different topics. That is why when He the Almighty says: 'You are forbidden to take as wives your mothers, daughters, sisters…', it is taken for granted that the prohibition of marriage to the mother includes the grandmother, be she paternal or maternal, as well as whoever descends from her. In the same vein, one is not allowed to get married to the mother of his wife. The prohibition of marriage to the daughters includes the daughters of one's son and whoever descends from them. The same applies to the daughters of one's daughter.

He the Almighty declares that it is prohibited for a man to get married to his sisters, his paternal and maternal aunts, his brother's daughters and sister's daughters, and his milk-mothers, but the question to be asked here is, "Why does He the Almighty forbid marriage to the milk-mother?" That is because the body of that particular man who wants to marry her had been formed somewhat by her milk and thus he is viewed as part of her. It is for this reason that a man is not allowed to get married to his milk-mother. It is of great importance here to quote scholars' different opinions concerning this point as such: a group of scholars holds the position that it is not allowed for the man to get married to such a woman who nursed him since it is likely that the milk of that woman had participated in the formation of his cells. Another group of scholars yet opines that it is allowed for the man to get married to that woman who nursed him, so long as it was only once or twice. Imam Abu Hanifah is of the opinion that it is not allowed for the man under any circumstance to get married to any woman who nursed him. But the most correct opinion in this regard is that a man is not allowed to get married to the woman who nursed him for five or more different sessions. As well, he is not allowed to get married to that woman who nursed him for a day and a night. The last two rulings are to be put into practice in case the act of nursing takes place in the period fixed for breast-feeding which is estimated by two (Hijri) years. (al-Baqara: 233)

It is historically recorded that ‘Ali ibn Abi Taleb Allah be pleased with him had discussed this topic with ‘Uthman ibn ‘Affan Allah be pleased with him. It is narrated that a woman had given birth to her child after a six-month period of pregnancy. It is known that women usually deliver their babies after nine months of pregnancy. In some exceptional cases, they may do so after seven months of pregnancy. When the woman was brought before ‘Uthman Allah be pleased with him, he wanted to afflict the legal punishment on her on accusation of committing fornication because if she delivered her baby six months after conception, this means that she committed fornication. It was at that point that Imam ‘Ali Allah be pleased with him explained the matter to Caliph ‘Uthman. He said, ‘Oh Commander of the Believers! Why are you going to punish her?’ ‘Uthman replied, ‘Because she has given birth to her baby after six months!’ Here, Allah the Almighty provided Imam ‘Ali with deep and profound understanding of the issue. Sometimes, a man may not pay attention to a subtle observation mentioned in the verses of the Quran. This subtle observation yet may be understood from one particular text or from two or more texts. Imam ‘Ali Allah be pleased with him reviewed the Book of Allah and extracted that particular verse that provides solution for this issue. He said to ‘Uthman, ‘Allah says otherwise’ (That is, she has committed no major sins and thus she did not deserve any punishment).’Uthman said to him, ‘What did Allah say in this regard?’ Imam ‘Ali consequently told him about that verse in the chapter of al-Baqara in which Allah Glorified is He states clearly that mothers should nurse their babies for two whole years. (al-Baqara: 233) Based on this aforementioned verse, the child must be nursed for two whole Hijri years, i.e. twenty-four months. In addition, He the Almighty says in another place that the period of pregnancy and breast-feeding altogether extends to thirty months. (al-Ahqaf: 15) 'Ali Allah be pleased with him explained that point, as follows: the sum total of the period of pregnancy and breast-feeding is thirty months, while the complete period of breast-feeding is twenty-four months, so if we deduct the latter period from the total sum, this will clearly indicate that pregnancy may last for just six months. Imam 'Ali Allah be pleased with him extracted the legal ruling from the Quran. One may not have profound understanding about all the subtle observations mentioned in the Quran. In the same way, He Glorified is He did not specify a particular period of time with prominent scholars while depriving other times from them; rather, His Revelations cover all ages and places. Someone yet may say that Muslims nowadays do not reach the rank of the companions. But, whoever holds this position is unaware of what Allah the Almighty said in the chapter of al-Waqi'a. He Glorified is He states clearly that there will be a group of people at the end of time not deprived of being close to Allah, and so will be able to deduce rulings from the verses of the Quran.

As we have said, scholars differed concerning the issue of breast-feeding: some scholars hold the position that one suckling or two may entail prohibition of marriage; another group is of the opinion that there is no prohibition except in the case of suckling ten times; there is still a third group of scholars who opine that prohibition is entailed by nursing the baby for five separate sessions within the period fixed for breast-feeding. So, if the child was nursed by a woman in a period of time other than that one fixed for nursing, it may be said that he became in no need of milk as he was sustained with solid food. Clearly, the issue of breast-feeding is complicated, for Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him said: 'What becomes unlawful (for marriage) through breast-feeding is that which becomes unlawful through lineage.'(1)

The list of those women who are prohibited through breast-feeding includes the milk-mother, the milk-daughter, the milk-sister, the milk-paternal aunt and the milk-maternal aunt. Thus, due to the complexity of this topic of breast-feeding, all Muslim families must pay it full attention. If we consider things more deeply, we may see one of the deeper reasons why we are not perfectly happy in our homes.

(1) An-Nasa'i, Sahih

All people must be attentive to the Instructions and Teachings of Allah the Almighty and they must hurry to work upon them and implement them. The Divine Transmission is continuous; we just need sensitive reception systems to receive it, for if the reception system is defective, one will not avail him/ herself of the transmission even if the latter continues to flow. Assume that a radio broadcasting station was trying to air a program using a defective microphone: how would the transmission reach the people? As such, the Support and Blessing of Allah are sent down all the time, but there are some people who do not receive them because they have certain problems that prevent them from doing so. It goes without saying that the first and foremost reason for attaining the Blessings of Allah is that all the corners of the family must be founded on obedience to Allah; the husband-wife relationship must be a lawful one. In fact, there are a lot of people who may unintentionally commit prohibited acts as a result of paying no attention to that complex issue of breast-feeding. Some women may nurse the children of each other without taking into account the subsequent legal ruling. We say to such people: “You have taken all precautions to guarantee the soundness of the biological health of your children. You keep a record for each child that includes his birth certificate and the dates on which he should take his vaccinations against Polio and Diphtheria. So, why did you not insert a paper in this file including the name of those women who nursed the child other than his mother so that when he is going to get married, we may inform people of authentic information on that point.” If we do this, we will be able to build new families on solid and concrete foundations. If we do not do so, we may be extremely surprised when it transpires that a man and a woman who got married and had kids are milk-brother and sister and thus, religious, civil, and social problems ensue because people no longer heed the Divine Guidance as much as they do the material one.

Muslim families must insert a piece of paper in the file of their sons and daughters including the names of those women who nursed them. Anyway, this becomes no longer a necessity since the dry milk that comes from animals can suffice and put an end to the problem. We thus may be able to avoid this complex issue which may cause a man to get married to his milk-sister, or milk-mother, etc. A marriage like this (wherein a man marries his milk-mother or milk-sister) would consequently not attain the Blessings of Allah. He the Almighty says: 'You are forbidden to take as wives your mothers, daughters, sisters, paternal and maternal aunts, your brother's daughters and sister's daughters, your milk-mothers and milk-sisters…' On the same topic, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him is narrated to have said: 'What becomes unlawful (for marriage) through breast-feeding is that which becomes unlawful through lineage.' (1)

The Quran sheds light on these major issues only. So, when one gets married to a particular woman, is he, under any circumstance, allowed to marry her mother? It is something which is not acceptable at all. The word "rabibah" in the saying of Allah '… the stepdaughters in your care–those born of women with whom you have consummated marriage…' means the daughter of your wife from a previous marriage. A man may get married to a previously married woman, be she a widow or a divorcee, and the daughter of that particular woman is called his rabibah. It is expected that the mother's new husband will protect her and raise her up. As such, she will be considered his daughter. But the Quranic verse implies a condition: a man's marriage to this girl's mother must be consummated. So, in case the man finishes the marriage contract, but has not consummated the marriage yet, he is thus allowed to marry that woman's daughter. The issue is yet totally different with marrying the mother: a man is not allowed to get married to the mother of his wife even if the marriage has not been consummated.

The phrase "hala'il abnai'kum" refers to the wife of the son. Inserting the words "min aslabikum" in this context indicates that the word "abnaa" used also to refer to those sons who were not from the loins, otherwise He Glorified is He would not add the words "min aslabikum" to the phrase "abnai'kum." This clearly indicates that the pre-Islamic period witnessed the existence of sons who were not from the loins of their fathers–i.e. adopted sons–a matter that was common among the Arabs during that period of time. A man used to adopt a child and give him his name, to the extent that they allowed those adopted sons to inherit from them. But, upon the advent of Islam, this practice was completely abolished. It stated clearly that a man is in no way allowed to attribute to himself sons who are not from his own loins. The legal wisdom behind that prohibition is that these adopted sons of your father will be the brothers of your sisters. As well, they will be fully aware of all your private secrets. Allah Glorified is He nullified this act at the hands of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him.

(1) An-Nasa'i, Sahih

We know for certain that Zayd ibn Haritha was abducted from his family. He was sold as a slave and was bought by Hakim ibn Hizam. He was then given to Khadijah Allah be pleased with her who, in turn, gave him to Prophet Muhammad. Thus, Zayd became the slave of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him. When the family of Zayd knew that their son, who was abducted, was in Mecca, they went to Prophet Muhammad and asked him to let Zayd go with them. So, he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him said to them: ‘Let him choose between staying with me or departing with you.’ But how did Zayd respond to them? His belief in and love of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him motivated him to say: ‘I will choose none but Messenger Muhammad.’ He stayed with him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him. Prophet Muhammad consequently wanted to reward Zayd for this and thus, he adopted him and briefly called him Zayd ibn Muhammad. Allah the Almighty wanted to put an end to that act that reached the house of Prophet Muhammad himself. He Glorified is He states clearly that Prophet Muhammad was not the father of any one of the men of Quraysh. (al-Ahzab: 40) This Quranic style indicates clearly that the legal ruling in this regard is decisive and conclusive.

Some people who are adversaries to the Quran may say: “Messenger Muhammad had sons–including Ibrahim, At-Tayyib and Al-Qasim– so how can the Quran state that he is not the father of any men?” We answer those people saying: They died while they were children; they did not even reach the age of puberty, and when Allah talks about this fact in the Quran, He Glorified is He states clearly that he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him was not the father of any men. Even if we assume that children were men, the Quran does not say that he was not the father of his son; rather, it says that he was not the father of your men (oh Quraysh). This consequently means that there is nothing wrong when we declare that Prophet Muhammad is the father of his sons, the father of Al-Qasim, the father of At-Tayyib and the father of Ibrahim. This issue was mischievously used to make a big issue by the opponents of Islam and the orientalists. Allah the Almighty is the One Who adjusted that act of adoption practiced by Prophet Muhammad himself. As a matter of fact, this modification by Allah the Almighty is viewed as something which gives great honour to him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him. If we ask about the One Who makes this reform of Prophet Muhammad, the answer will be "It is Allah the Almighty."

The saying of Allah the Almighty '…wives of your begotten sons…' indicates clearly that it is the wife of the begotten son who is not allowed for the father to marry. The saying of Allah, "min aslabikum" obviously indicates that there were sons who were not from the loins of their fathers, a point which means that the act of adoption was common before the advent of Islam and thus Allah the Almighty wanted to abolish it at the hands of Prophet Muhammad. In the same vein, it is important to know that Allah did not want Prophet Muhammad to be a mere conveyer of the ruling; rather, He Glorified is He wanted to give a practical example through him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him so that the ruling would be judged decisive and conclusive. Also, we must consider the fact that the act of adoption itself aimed at attributing a clever son to a man's family to give him all the rights his begotten sons were given as a sign of ennoblement.

That is why we must observe that Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him acted in a human way in the light of the ultimate human justice. When Prophet Muhammad adopted Zayd, he did so in order to compensate him for his family because Zayd preferred him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him to his own father. As such, this act of adoption of Zayd by Prophet Muhammad was done in fulfilment of his human perfection and justice for a person who preferred him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him to his family. So, Allah's Modification to this Prophetic ruling was in fulfilment of the Divine Perfection and Justice. Thus, there will be no blame if Divine Perfection and Justice correct the human counterparts. That is why He Glorified is He revealed that verse in the Quran in which He orders Muslims to call their adopted sons by their begotten fathers' names, stressing meanwhile that this is more equitable with Him Glorified is He. (al-Ahzab: 5)

The word "aqsat" (meaning "more equitable") must be discussed in the light of the two comparative adjectives "great" and "greater." As a matter of fact, the opposite of the comparative adjective must be derived from its stem. So, the comparative form of "great" is "greater" and so is the comparative form of "equitable" which is "more equitable." As such, we deduce that the act of adoption by Prophet Muhammad was equitable and just, but the modification made by Allah the Almighty is more equitable and just. Thus, we must be fully aware of the fact that there is a big difference between human perfection and justice and those divine ones. Undoubtedly, Allah the Almighty conferred His Favour upon that person whom He chose to judge according to the Divine Justice instead of the human one.

Orientalists tried to exploit this incident to accuse Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him of making a mistake. We say to them: You do not understand the matter properly because it is Allah the Almighty who corrected the matter for Prophet Muhammad. As well, He Glorified is He corrected that act practiced by him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him in the light of his human nature. Furthermore, when Allah declares that this act of asserting the relation of those adopted sons to their father is more equitable, can we draw a comparison between the human equity, justice and perfection and those of Allah the Almighty?

There is a lie that is promulgated by the adversaries of Islam and the so-called Muslims that Islam, Allah forbid, contains lies and fabrications. Since none of these people can adhere to the Divine Guidance, they believe that the only thing to save them is to declare that this religion is false and incorrect. They hold this position because if they say otherwise, this will imply their damnation. Thus, they lie to themselves and make fabrications hoping that they will be safe. Ironically, such people have no hope but that this religion must be based on fabrications!

Now, let us discuss this story that made orientalists rejoice: Prophet Muhammad's name is Muhammad ibn 'Abdullah ibn 'Abd Al-Muttalib. His grandfather 'Abd Al-Muttalib*,* had a daughter called 'Umaymah bint 'Abd Al-Muttalib and thus she is the sister of 'Abdullah ibn 'Abd Al-Muttalib.

‘Umaymah gave birth to a female baby who was named Barrah. But Prophet Muhammad changed the name of the girl to be Zaynab because he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him hated that people may say afterwards: “Messenger Muhammad came out of the house of Barrah.” (1) Barrah was the daughter of ‘Umaymah and thus she was the cousin of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. We previously explained that Zayd ibn Haritha was abducted and sold as a slave. Zayd moved from the ownership of different people until he came under the ownership of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him who wanted, out of his human perfection, to honour Zayd and thus called him Zayd ibn Muhammad.

When Zayd ibn Haritha wanted to get married, Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him married him to Barrah (later called Zainab) who–being the daughter of the leader of Quraysh–reluctantly accepted the marriage to Zayd, Prophet Muhammad’s slave. It should be taken into account that Messenger Muhammad did so because he wanted to achieve unity among the Muslim society in such a way that indicates no difference at all between a master and a slave. Accordingly, he married his female paternal cousin to Zayd. After the consummation of marriage, their marital life was extremely unhappy in a manner that paved the way for divine decree to be fulfilled.

By Allah, if she had fallen in love with him and they lived in harmony, would Allah, upon willing to decree His Rulings, do so at the expense of two sympathetic, loving hearts, and tear them apart? No. As such, the entire matter was preparing the Muslim society for the consequent Divine Rulings. She did not have any desire for him, and when a man realizes that his wife does not have interest in him, his dignity is immediately threatened, especially if he were the adopted son of Messenger Muhammad. Thus, Zaynab’s rejection of Zayd was not an easy matter for him and thus he went to complain to Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him. It is narrated that Zayd Allah be pleased with him said to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him: ‘I did not like being the consort of Barrah and I want to divorce her.’

(1) "Barrah" means "righteous" and this name is not bad in itself, but Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did not like names that claim piety which no one can confirm. It is up to Allah to decide.

Allah the Almighty willing to totally abolish the act of adoption had predestined all that had happened between Zayd and Barrah. He Glorified is He did so because people in the pre-Islamic period used to prohibit men from getting married to the former wives of their adopted sons. In the Quran, Allah the Almighty tells us about the story of Zayd and Barrah. In the chapter of al-Ahzab, He Glorified is He tells us that Prophet Muhammad told Zayd to keep his wife and to fear Allah even though he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him was previously told by Allah that Zayd would divorce Barrah. (al-Ahzab: 37)

The Quranic style in the chapter al-Ahzab clearly and plainly indicates that Zayd Allah be pleased with him had a strong desire to divorce her. But the adversaries of Islam–and their proponents from among Muslims–mistakenly interpret the saying of Allah the Almighty to Prophet Muhammad: '… and you concealed in your soul what Allah would bring to light…' (al-Ahzab: 37) They accuse him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him of falling in love with Zayd's wife and therefore concealing the matter in his soul. We say to those people: You do not have a profound and deep understanding of the text, for you do not listen to reason. When Allah the Almighty says in the Quran that He is going to bring to light what Prophet Muhammad concealed in his soul, justice entails that if you want to know what he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him concealed, you must consider what Allah the Almighty revealed later. Instead of propagating such lies and fabrications to satisfy the sickness of your soul, you were supposed, first and foremost, to know about the minute details of the story. He Glorified is He tells us that He is going to reveal what Prophet Muhammad concealed in his soul, so the question to be asked is "What did our Lord the Almighty expose and reveal?"

In truth, when our Lord reveals a matter, this is precisely what His messenger has hidden and concealed. Zayd Allah be pleased with him went to Prophet Muhammad and told him that he wanted to divorce Barrah, but Messenger Muhammad–as clearly shown in the Quran–told him to keep his wife with him and to fear Allah the Almighty. As a matter of fact, he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him was told previously by Allah that He Glorified is He wanted Muhammad to marry Barrah, the wife of his adopted son, Zayd. He peace and blessings of Allah be upon him was fully aware of the fact that Allah wanted to totally abolish the act of adoption and to tell people that they are allowed to marry the wives of their adopted sons. It goes without saying that when Prophet Muhammad applied this himself, this was a striking and perfect example.

But there are some people whose hearts are still full of disease. Undoubtedly, hypocrites fall under this aforementioned category. That is why Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him wanted this command to be included by Allah the Almighty in the Quran. If this command was just inspired by Allah to him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him they would have said: "This is the fabrication of Muhammad." For this reason, the Quran tells us clearly that he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him told Zayd Allah be pleased with him to keep his wife with him and to fear Allah; The Quran tells us clearly about the minute details of the story. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him did not say: "Our Lord inspired me" or "placed this in my consciousness"; no, this command was revealed plainly and obviously in the Quran. As I said previously, Allah the Almighty gave us minute and vivid details about this story in the chapter of al-Ahzab. He Glorified is He tells us that a believing man and a believing woman should have no choice in their matter when Allah and Messenger Muhammad decided a matter. He the Almighty then states clearly that whoever disobeys Allah and His Messenger is far astray.

After that, He Glorified is He sheds light on the story of Zayd and Barrah. He tells us that Zayd went to Prophet Muhammad to tell him that he wanted to divorce Barrah, but he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him ordered him to keep her with him and to fear Allah. This particular verse of Al-Ahzab shows clearly the legal wisdom behind Prophet Muhammad's later marriage to Zayd's previous wife: He Glorified is He wanted to totally abolish this act of adoption through giving a striking example using Prophet Muhammad himself. As such, He the Almighty tells us that a man is not blamed if he gets married to the former wife of his adopted son. (al-Ahzab: 36-37)

These aforementioned two verses in the chapter of al-Ahzab also tell us that Allah the Almighty has conferred a favour upon Zayd by making him embrace Islam and so did Prophet Muhammad by adopting him. He Glorified is He advised Prophet Muhammad: You, Messenger Muhammad, should not fear that people would say, "Muhammad granted the divorce between the woman and Zayd Allah be pleased with him to marry her himself." It is as if the ultimate goal of this marriage (Zayd's and Zaynab's marriage) was to make Muhammad's adopted son, Zayd, get married to Zaynab–previously called Barrah–whom Prophet Muhammad married later, thus abolishing the previous ban on marriage between a man and his adopted son's ex-wife. This is proven by the aforementioned verse of al-Ahzab in which Allah states clearly that when Zayd had decided to divorce Zaynab, He Glorified is He gave her to Prophet Muhammad as a wife. Allah the Almighty is the One Who ordered Prophet Muhammad to get married to Zaynab, and that he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him did not do the act out of his own desires.

Accordingly, if you want to examine the issue, you are supposed to ask Allah the Almighty why He did so. When He Glorified is He states clearly in the Quran that Zayd's marriage to Zaynab was none but a mission to be conducted by both of them, this clearly indicates that the entire matter was pre-destined, and that the ultimate objective of this marriage was to allow men to get married to the previous wives of their adopted sons. Zayd, Prophet Muhammad's adopted son, got married to Zaynab even though she was reluctant to take part in that marriage. Thus, Zayd thought that his dignity had been destroyed and declared that he wanted to leave her. Afterwards, he went to Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him and said: "I want to divorce Barrah", whereupon he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him ordered him to keep her and to fear Allah, although Allah the Almighty had told him previously that he would marry Zaynab. In truth, what Allah the Almighty revealed is what He, Glorified to He, states clearly to His Messenger Muhammad: that Zayd was married to Zaynab only to conduct a mission commissioned of him by Allah the Almighty. As for Prophet Muhammad's role, he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him was ordered by Allah to marry Zaynab.

Those who want to examine this topic to falsely and unjustly accuse Prophet Muhammad should ask Allah the Almighty why He decreed this order. He Glorified is He states clearly in the Quran that the ultimate objective behind Prophet Muhammad's marriage to Zaynab was that there should be no difficulty for the believers in respect of the previous wives of their adopted sons. It is clear now that the entire matter has mainly to do with abolishing the act of adoption and allowing men to get married to the former wives of their adopted sons. Allah the Almighty clearly states that it is He Who would reveal to us what Prophet Muhammad concealed in his soul. Therefore, He Glorified is He tells us all that the ultimate objective of this matter is predestined in accordance with the Divine justice and perfection; That is, men shall not be prohibited from getting married to the former wives of their adopted sons, those who are not from the loins of their so-called fathers.

It is taken for granted that whenever our Lord wills a particular matter, He Glorified is He does it. You have believed in Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him as a Messenger, and if you denied his Message, your denial would be more sinful than just criticizing his demeanour. Why then do you propagate lies and fabrications against him peace and blessings be upon him? In reality, your denial of Muhammad's Prophet-hood is even severer than criticizing his marriage to the former wife of his adopted son. But, if you believe that he is a Messenger of Allah, then you must know for sure that he is delivering the Message revealed to him from Allah.

Thus, the actions of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him who delivered you the Message of Allah represent the main criteria by means of which the soundness of your actions and deeds are judged. So, do you dare to say to such a Prophet, "We are going to weigh your deeds and actions according to the criteria we established"? It is inappropriate for anyone to do so. In fact, if one said so, s/he would be judged as committing the mistake of subjecting that which is perfect to that which is relative and imperfect. The basic assumption about Prophet Muhammad is that all his actions and deeds are perfect. Thus, you should not create a criterion for perfection on your own and then weigh the actions and deeds of him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him according to this imperfect criterion. In doing so, you would be setting the yardstick of perfection on your own and then weighing the demeanour of Messenger Muhammad according to it, a matter which clearly indicates self-contradiction since you have believed in him as a Prophet.

He Glorified is He then moves to lay down a general ruling: He the Almighty states clearly that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him was not the father of any men of Quraysh; rather, he is the seal of all Prophets and Messengers. (al-Ahzab: 40) But how should one understand the fact that

Muhammad was not the father of any man? We should interpret it to mean that he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him is your father. That is true; he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him is not the father of a particular one, but all of you. The proof of this is that his wives are your mothers and you are absolutely forbidden to marry them. Therefore, Prophet Muhammad is the father of all of you. Accordingly, we must pay full attention to the accuracy and precision of the expression when He the Almighty states that He peace and blessings of Allah be upon him is not the father of any particular one because reality tells us that he is the father of all of you. That is why he would never pick one of you and say: “This is my son.” He did not do so because he is the father of all of you; all the believers are his sons, a point which is conclusively proved by the fact that his wives are the mothers of the believers. But it is at that point that someone may object and say: “Muhammad had sons.”

We respond to that person and say: His children did not reach the age of puberty. Even if we assumed that they would reach this age in the future, this clearly means that they were his men and not yours. Bearing the Message and being the seal of all Prophets and Messengers gives Muhammad peace and blessings of be upon him an honour that surpasses being a father. In reality, Allah the Almighty revealed this story in the Quran, to urge Zayd not to be sad because Prophet Muhammad had honoured him by attributing him to himself, to the extent that people used to call him Zayd ibn Muhammad. Yet, what gives you greater honour is that you believed in him peace and blessings of Allah be upon him. As such, the greatness of Muhammad stems from the fact that he was the Messenger of Allah.

For this reason, we previously stated that the idea of being a blood or biological father is meaningless in the sight of Prophets. That is why we find Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him stating clearly and plainly that “Salman Al-Farisi is from his family.”(1) Based on its style and its rhetorical structure, when Allah the Almighty states clearly that Muhammad is not the father of any particular one of you men, this plainly means that he peace and blessings of Allah be upon him is a father to all of you, Oh Muslims.

---

(1) At-Tabarani, Classified as “Weak”

Therefore, none of you should try to solely single himself out with the honour of being the son of Messenger Muhammad.

Allah the Almighty then concludes the verse by stating that Muhammad is His Messenger and the Seal of all Prophets, stressing meanwhile that He Glorified is He is All Knowing of everything. (al-Ahzab: 40) As such, Zayd was called once again under the name of his biological father, so Zayd ibn Haritha. It is like Allah was saying to Zayd: "If you believe in him as a Messenger, then this fact shall make up for the annulment of his adoption to you because you also fall under the blessing of Messenger Muhammad's fatherhood to all the believers." As a matter of fact, if we reflect more carefully upon this Quranic verse, we will realize that Allah the Almighty comforts and compensates Zayd Allah be pleased with him as well. It is as if Allah the Almighty wants to tell Zayd: "Though you have publicly lost the name Zayd ibn Muhammad–which was a source honour for you–you should bear in mind that you are the only one among the companions of Messenger Muhammad whose personal name is explicitly mentioned in the Quran; this is a better honour for you. The name "Zayd" has become part of the Quran that is recited and remembered day and night. In addition, people worship Allah the Almighty using the recitation of the Quran. Moreover, those believers who recite the Quran are ennobled and given high ranks by Him Glorified is He. Accordingly, He the Almighty has compensated you, Zayd."

If we assume that Zayd was still called "son of Muhammad," what would happen then? We will only read about it in the biographies of Prophet Muhammad, but Zayd's honour has been elevated, evidenced by the fact that we read his name in the miraculous Book of Allah whose recitation is an act of worship and which Allah the Almighty has promised to preserve. As such, Allah the Almighty has guaranteed the name "Zayd" will be preserved until The Day of Judgment. Which one of the two names then takes priority: calling him Zayd ibn Muhammad throughout his life or mentioning his name in the Quran for all time? It goes without saying that mentioning his name in the Quran undoubtedly takes priority.

Back to the chapter of an-Nisa'; the saying of Allah the Almighty '…wives of your begotten sons…' indicates that you are permitted to marry the former wives of your adopted sons that you used to prohibit in the pre-Islamic period. Allah the Almighty then says: '…two sisters simultaneously…' Forbidding having two sisters as wives at the same time is decreed because they have familial ties that bind them and which in turn require that affection, mercy and harmony should exist among them. But, were they married to the same man, animosity may flare up. That is why He the Almighty declares that it is forbidden to take two sisters as wives at the same time. Yet, scholars differed concerning how to understand the saying of Allah the Almighty '… you must not have two sisters as wives at the same time…' and the saying of Allah '…other women are lawful to you…' We must first state that she-slaves do not have the right to ask their masters to have sexual intercourse with them. Thus, the master is not obliged to his slave woman or women who are mothers to his children.

At this point, it is of great importance to mention that Imam 'Ali Allah be pleased with him and 'Uthman Allah be pleased with him had two different positions concerning this issue of having two slave girls under one's ownership: is one allowed to have sex with them both or just with one of them only? When 'Uthman was asked about this issue, he answered: 'I would neither command nor forbid you to do so because one verse had admitted this, while another forbade it.' Thus, 'Uthman abstained from giving his opinion. Imam 'Ali forbade having intercourse with the two sisters that are possessed by one master. As for possessing without having intercourse, it is lawful. This is actually the opinion viewed the most authentic by the majority of scholars. There is no consideration for any contradictory opinions.

He the Almighty then concludes the verse with His saying: '… except for what is past: Allah is most forgiving and merciful.' This means that if such a practice took place before Allah the Almighty decrees His Ruling, He Glorified is He will not–out of His Mercy and Compassion–hold us guilty or accountable for committing it by a retroactive application of the law. Nothing is condemned except with a clear text and there is no punishment without condemnation and conviction. Since the ruling was not revealed before that point, it would be then applied starting from that point onwards. It has thus become clear that it is forbidden for anyone to marry two sisters at once or to have sexual intercourse with both of them when they are under his ownership. One must not also have two sisters at the same time even if one of them is his wife, while the other is a possession of his right hand. He Glorified is He then says:

وَٱلْمُحْصَنَٰتُ مِنَ ٱلنِّسَآءِ إِلَّا مَا مَلَكَتْ أَيْمَٰنُكُمْ ۖ كِتَٰبَ ٱللَّهِ عَلَيْكُمْ ۚ وَأُحِلَّ
لَكُم مَّا وَرَآءَ ذَٰلِكُمْ أَن تَبْتَغُوا۟ بِأَمْوَٰلِكُم مُّحْصِنِينَ غَيْرَ مُسَٰفِحِينَ ۚ فَمَا
ٱسْتَمْتَعْتُم بِهِۦ مِنْهُنَّ فَـَٔاتُوهُنَّ أُجُورَهُنَّ فَرِيضَةً ۚ وَلَا جُنَاحَ عَلَيْكُمْ فِيمَا
تَرَٰضَيْتُم بِهِۦ مِنۢ بَعْدِ ٱلْفَرِيضَةِ ۚ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ عَلِيمًا حَكِيمًا ﴿٢٤﴾ women already married, other than your slaves. God has ordained all this for you. Other women are lawful to you, so long as you seek them in marriage, with gifts from your property, looking for wedlock rather than fornication. If you wish to enjoy women through marriage, give them their bride-gift – this is obligatory – though if you should choose mutually, after fulfilling this obligation, to do otherwise [with the bride-gift], you will not be blamed: God is All Knowing and all-wise [24]

(The Quran, *an-Nisa': * 24)

The saying of Allah the Almighty: 'and [forbidden to you are] all married women…' is in conjunction with the prohibitions mentioned in the aforementioned verse. This means that He Glorified is He will add married women to the previous list of women that one is forbidden to marry. But why are married women described as muhsanat (meaning "chaste and pure")? The etymological root of derivation often leads to a common meaning between the original sense of the word and the way it may be otherwise used in a specific context. The Arabic word "muhsanat" is derived from the word "hisn," or "fortification" which means the place wherein people take refuge to defend and protect themselves against their enemies. Thus, if they protect themselves by staying in the fortification, they will be safe from their enemies or else, they will be prone to their attacks and raids. This is the exact and precise meaning of the word "Al-hisn." There are a lot of derivations deduced from this root. For example, He Glorified is He describes Maryam '(Mary) as the one who had guarded her chastity.' (at-Tahrim: 12) This means clearly that she peace be upon her protected herself from being approached by any man.

As for the word “Al-muhsinat” (meaning “chaste women”) in this particular verse under discussion, it refers to “married women.” So, if a woman is married, this means that she is not eligible for any other man and thus no man but her husband is allowed to take her in marriage. In other words, she is no way allowed to agree to another marriage contract with any other man so long as her contract is still valid. Thus, the meaning of “al-muhsinat min an-nisa” refers to those women who secure their chastity through marriage.

In the following verse, Allah the Almighty ‘talks about the legal punishment prescribed for the slave women who committed fornication.’ (an-Nisa’: 25) So, the question to be asked here is: "If the slave women protect and guard their chastity through marriage, would this imply that they are to be considered equal with the free married women?” The answer is no; there is a big difference between the two cases. Undoubtedly, slave women who protect their chastity are not included among the free married women who guard their chastity through marriage, for if they are included among them, the ruling thereby should be the same for both of them. Yet, He Glorified is He states clearly that the legal punishment prescribed for them is half the penalty prepared for the free married women.

Free women are originally described with chastity, for they never allow anybody to approach them. At this point, we may quote the saying of Abu Sufyan’s wife who, while hearing Prophet Muhammad ordering women not to commit fornication, wondered, “Is it even possible that a free woman could commit adultery?” It is as if adultery is a disgrace that can only be committed by slave women because they do not have dignity and do not have either a father or a mother or even honour. Therefore, anyone may have the audacity to approach a slave woman because she has neither dignity nor a family to protect her. For this reason, her legal penalty is half that of a free woman because slave women may be highly vulnerable to the seduction of a lot of people who want to commit fornication with them due to the fact they have none to protect them.

Thus, ihsan is used to refer to chastity and to free women. As well, it may be used to refer to married women. Free women are furthermore called “Al-muhsanat.” In general, a free woman often has a family that protects her and dissuades anyone from having the audacity to illegitimately assault or offend her chastity and honour. But, if we assume that there is a married woman whose people fought against Muslims and then she was taken as a captive by Muslims, this woman is no longer able to be a muhsinah for she has become a she-slave. Accordingly, the fact that a woman is possessed by the right hand of a man supersedes and takes precedence over the fact that she was once married. A Muslim is thus allowed to marry her and enjoy her if he possessed her even if she was once married. This is because there is a difference between the two settings and contexts; she is now in the land of Islam coming out of the land of the war and thus becomes eligible for being rightfully possessed by any Muslim. Yet, there must be no sexual intercourse with her except after assuring that her womb is empty of any embryo that may have been begotten by any of her people. This ruling is deduced from the Saying of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him concerning those women from the tribe of Awtas who were taken as captives by the Muslim army: 'There must be no intercourse with a pregnant woman until she gives birth to her child or with the one who is not pregnant until she has had one menstrual period.'(1) As a matter of fact, this legal ruling honours and ennobles the female captives because it allows them to enjoy their masters sexually and emotionally after being separated from their husbands. In addition, they will be under the protection of their master and thus be safe from the audacity of people.

The saying of Allah the Almighty '…Allah has ordained all of this for you…' means that He Glorified is He has enacted this ruling upon you and has documented it in His Book; it is thus a documented command. It is of great importance to know that if you adhere firmly to this ruling, you will gain considerable benefit. He Glorified is He then says: '… Other women are lawful to you…' This means that the main causes behind prohibiting man from getting married to certain women include blood ties, breast-feeding and binding marriage. It also means that it is lawful and admissible for you to marry them, a point which is definitively proven by the fact that He the Almighty follows this aforementioned part of the verse with His Saying '… if you seek them in marriage…'

(1) [Abu Dawud, Sahih].

It is taken for granted that money is the fruit of one’s labour and thus one must exert great efforts to acquire it. That is why nearly all people passionately like money, to the extent that they may sacrifice their souls for protecting it. Even if you inherited this wealth, this means that the person you inherited from had formerly exerted considerable efforts to possess this wealth. We previously explained that if someone labours for a period time estimated, for example, to be ten years, Allah the Almighty may provide him with a great wealth which will enable him to live comfortably for the rest of his life; Similarly, He Glorified is He may provide that man who labours for twenty years with a considerable wealth that enables him and his children to live comfortably for the rest of their lives; And in case there is someone who labours for thirty years, Allah Glorified is He may thus provide him with such considerable wealth that enables him, his children and even his grandchildren to live comfortably for the rest of their lives. Thus, all the inherited fortunes you may see are the result of the labour and toil of the parents.

The saying of Allah the Almighty: ‘…so long as you seek them in marriage, with gifts from your property…’ means clearly that man is the one who is particularly entitled to pay the dowry of marriage. This is proven by the Hadith of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him in which he says: ‘Oh young men, you should get married, for it is more effective in lowering the gaze and protecting one's chastity. Whoever cannot afford it should fast, for it will be a restraint (wija’) for him.’(1)

If one’s possessions are dear to him—being obtained through labouring, toiling, and sweating—he ought to spend them only on what accrues to him immediate good. As well, he should consider what will bring him good in the future. In truth, if he obtains an immediate good while being oblivious to a delayed or future evil, he has not then used the money properly. He Glorified is He then says: ‘… so long as you seek them in marriage, with gifts from your property, looking for wedlock….’ We previously explained that the word “muhsinin” indicates various meanings: it may refer to those people who refrain themselves from offending and infringing upon the honours of the people, for example. The saying of Allah, ‘…with gifts from your property…’ means that people should invest the possessions they earned through hard labour in what will accrue to them immediate and future benefit. Thus, you must not exploit your wealth to offend and destroy the honour of people.

(1) An-Nasa’i, Sahih.

A man may possibly desire to have unlawful sex with a woman by offering her some of his possessions and thus he does not guard his chastity and purification. We say to this person: You have elicited an impermanent, worldly gratification, but you were oblivious to a future evil. This forbidden relation is described by Allah the Almighty as sifah (meaning "fornication"). Thus, be careful not to unlawfully satisfy your sexual desire.

As mentioned before, the word "muhsinin" means "adhering firmly to chastity." In this particular verse, He the Almighty explains the meaning of this word (muhsinin) through the meaning of its opposite–musafihin (meaning "fornicators"), which is derived from as-safh which gives the meaning of pouring water down forcefully. In fact, water may fall drop-by-drop, but this is not the meaning of as-safh. For this reason, the foot of the mountain is called as-safh because water falls from all parts of the mountain as if it were poured.

At this point, we can extract a wonderful subtle observation: Allah the Almighty describes chaste men as "muhsinin" using the Arabic diacritic mark "kasrah" (or the lower accent) under the letter "sad" (Arabic letter for the "S" sound), but while describing chaste women, He Glorified is He says "muhsanat" using the diacritic mark "fathah" (or the higher accent) above the letter "Sad", so what is the wisdom of that? The wisdom is clear in the fact that the original case is that men are the ones who seek after women and not vice versa. The word istimta' (enjoying) in the saying of Allah the Almighty '… If you wish to enjoy women through marriage, give them their bride-gift…' means gratifying the self. As a matter of fact, enjoyment starts with the period of engagement. Once a man gets engaged to a woman, this implies enjoyment and so is the case when they conclude the marriage contract and consummate the marriage. All of these are undoubtedly stages of enjoyment and rejoicing. Yet, it is very important here to point out that enjoyment is not the only purpose of marriage. Allah orders you to give her the dowry as long as you enjoyed her. But in case you divorced her before the consummation of the marriage, you are supposed to pay her half the dowry, for you have enjoyed her for a while: the period of engagement. This clearly indicates that the matter of enjoyment is not totally restricted to sex, for it were so, he would not have been asked to pay her anything of the dowry. As such, it becomes clear that the matter of enjoyment stems mainly from proposing to the daughter of such-and-such a man, going through the engagement period, and then concluding the marriage contract; all of these are unquestionably preludes to the greater enjoyment of consummating the marriage.

Indeed, Allah the Almighty wants us to build our families on the basis of purification and on securing one's psychological faculties. In truth, man finds no fear at all when he closes his door for the sake of having intercourse with his wife, a matter that is totally different from the case when he is with an unmarried woman. It is in such a latter case that his psychological faculties will start to conflict with each other; he will fear the exposition of his sin and he will be in a terrible state of fear and trepidation, but why? That is because his psychological faculties are not in harmony with each other because by doing so, he is only gratifying one particular desire, while all of his faculties are in a terrible state of fear. This plainly indicates that what he is doing is unnatural and that is why his psychological faculties oppose it. As such, it becomes clear that Allah the Almighty wants the family to be built on purity and security. It is this psychological security that gives the soul all its power and enjoyment.

We have explained before that if one had a girl and discovered that a young man was passing frequently by the house to sneak glances at the balcony hoping that he may see the girl, how would this father act in case he discovered the matter? It goes without saying that he would be extremely angry. But, if the young man came with his father and knocked on his door and said: “I would like to get engaged to your daughter”, and his father said “I would like to have your daughter as a wife to my son”, what would be the stance of the father of the girl at that point? He would definitely be delighted and happy. He would be content with the matter, and the marriage ceremony would be held after that to publicly announce the fulfilment of marriage. The reason for this great happiness is that Allah the One Who created the two spouses, the male, and the female–prepared human psyches to be content with gathering with each other. For this reason, Arabs used to say: “The lawful [pursuit] has cut off the nose of jealousy." This means that even though the father previously showed jealousy about his daughter, he is now the one who sends out the invitations to her wedding himself. This clearly indicates that jealousy implies zeal and fervour. Thus, if one adopts a wrong methodology in fulfilling his desire, the soul must be in a state of terrible anger, but when he does so in a legitimate way, the soul is content with the act. As a matter of fact, one finds difficulty in understanding how the soul addresses both of the two cases, but the question to be asked here is "Who caused the soul to be content and Who caused it to feel angry?" Undoubtedly, it is Allah the Almighty who does so.

A person must consider that he is composed of several powers and faculties. So, how do the marriage contract, the approval of marriage, and the presence of witnesses make the soul feel happiness and delight? It is the Will of Allah the Almighty. This is a well-known matter. When you meet a new friend of yours, it is enough to say to him: "peace be upon you." But the case is totally different when it is your intimate and long-life friend who will not suffice with just verbal greetings and thus wants you to shake hands with him. Thus, affection and loyalty make chemical changes in the human soul. Repulsion, on the other hand, occurs as a result of committing what Allah has forbidden. Adhering to the Way of Allah thus causes affection and loyalty among people. When the poet addressed the one whom he loves, he said:

I would sacrifice my dad for the one I love but from whom I was separated
But Allah then decreed a reunion of us
I have desired him so that when we were united
His shaking hands with mine was like bidding adieu to me

This means that the poet wants to elongate the period and time of greeting so that he could give and receive deep affection from his beloved friend. He, in other words, is saying: "I met with the one I love and so he dissolved in me and I dissolved in him." This emanates from the combination of the two souls. As such, emotions serve as a means to achieving unity among people who follow the Way of Allah; otherwise, they will serve as a means to stirring up hatred. But the question to be asked here is, "What causes the soul to act as such?" It is the Bounty of Allah the Almighty Who created both man and woman. Thus, when the union takes place in accordance with the laws decreed by Allah, one should not exclude the possibility that the Creator Glorified is He would harmonize the constituent atoms of the two souls to mix with each other and thus loyalty and honesty shall naturally come into existence. But if the union between the male and the female does not happen according to the Sharia of Allah, there will be no harmony. This would thus imply a negative impact.

Thus, Allah the Almighty wants the Muslim families to be built upon this basis of purification, mercy, and affection. You know for certain that unlawful unions take place in secrecy and its fruit or yield is often disowned and repudiated. Thus, if pregnancy takes place, the baby will likely be thrown out into the streets and so becomes a foundling child, or they may even kill him. But as for that fruit produced from lawful unions, it elates and delights everyone.

The Saying of Allah the Almighty '… Other women are lawful to you, so long as you seek them in marriage, with gifts from your property, looking for wedlock rather than fornication. If you wish to enjoy women through marriage, give them their bride-gift…' indicates that "enjoyment" involves a lot of things. The Shiites, on the other hand, use the saying of Allah, '…If you wish to enjoy women through marriage, give them their bride-gift…' to declare the permissibility of Nikah Al-Mut'ah (or "temporary marriage"). They opine that this verse refers clearly to that kind of marriage because Allah the Almighty orders us to give women their ajr (meaning "dowry") in return for enjoying them. Answering them, we say that "ajr" is an Arabic word which is used in the context of true marriage, a point which is proven by the story of Moses peace be upon him when Prophet Shu'aib peace be upon him asked Moses to work for him for eight years in fulfilment of the dowry Moses should pay to his daughter. (al-Qasas: 27) Also, this particular word–ajr–has been used in the following verse in reference to dowry. Allah the Almighty says: '… so marry them with their people's consent and their proper bride-gift…' (an-Nisa': 25) so, we shall ask them—the Shiites— "Why do you interpret this verse as such?" If they say, "This kind of marriage was taking place during the lifetime of Prophet Muhammad," we will say to them, "Yes, we agree on that point, but what are the reasons that led to its occurrence?" It is the true that this temporary marriage was happening during the lifetime of Prophet Muhammad, and that was for a great wisdom, but what should be the case after the legislator peace and blessings of Allah be upon him totally abolished it before his death? It goes without saying that this ruling has thus been invalidated and nullified. Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him allowed this kind of marriage for a short period of time and in exactly one of the battles. Some people went to Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him out of their true belief, and said: "O Messenger Muhammad! Should we emasculate ourselves?" If Jihad required staying away from their wives, why should they not emasculate themselves so that they would no longer have desire for women? Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings of Allah be upon him thus allowed them this kind of marriage, but he abolished it totally later on. This is because 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him said concerning this kind of marriage: "If anyone marries a woman for a defined period of time, I will stone him." The status of 'Umar is known to all Muslims. His suggestions were in conformity with the Quran.

As such, it becomes clear now that this kind of marriage has been totally abolished, a point of view which is supported by Imam 'Ali Allah be pleased with him. But, the Shiites quote the opinion of Ibn 'Abbas in this regard and say that he once allowed this kind of marriage. Yes, it is true that Ibn 'Abbas held this position for a while, but he later admitted that he was wrong. We know that the Companions of Messenger Muhammad did not receive knowledge in classes; rather, they used to go to Messenger Muhammad to learn from him after finishing their work. Thus, some heard certain things that others did not. This is actually the main reason why some may narrate a saying of the Prophet, while others do not. Consequently, Ibn 'Abbas admitted that he knew about the permissibility of the temporary marriage and that he did not hear about the news of its annulment except at the end of his life.

Thus, the opinion of the Shiites on the permissibility of temporary marriage is based on a wrong deduction. Therefore, we shall understand the Saying of Allah the Almighty '…If you wish to enjoy women through marriage, give them their bride-gift—this is obligatory…' in the light of His saying in the following verse, '… so marry them with their people's consent and their proper bride-gifts…' That is because there is a difference between a normal price and al-ajr (meaning "compensation"): A price is paid for a specific object but the compensation is paid for the benefit procured from an object. A man does not own or possess a woman by paying her the dowry; rather, he is entitled to enjoy her and thus it is acceptable to refer to the dowry with the word "ajr." The saying of Allah the Almighty '… If you wish to enjoy women through marriage, give them their bride-gift—this is obligatory…' indicates clearly that Allah the Almighty is the One Who enacted this due dowry. He Glorified is He then leaves the door open to favour and says: '… though if you should choose mutually, after fulfilling this obligation, to do otherwise [with the bride-gift], you will not be blamed…' This means that there is a big difference between what is legally due and what is done out of favour and grace; even though a man is obliged to pay the dowry to his wife, she, upon being content, may accept to give it up for him. In the same vein, favour also entails that the husband, out of love, may increase the dowry of his wife. This is truly what is profoundly understood from the Order of Allah the Almighty to the married couple not to forget the grace towards each other. Thus, there shall be no reproach or blame for anything that is voluntarily and mutually agreed upon by both spouses if it is done lawfully. As a matter of fact, the phrase '… if you should choose mutually to do otherwise…' is implied in His Saying '… though if they are happy to give up some of it for you, you may enjoy it with a clear conscience.' (an-Nisa': 4)

In our modern age, we find that women use the dowry they take from their husbands to furnish their houses. This happens in spite of the fact that a man is the one who is mainly responsible for furnishing the house, while the dowry should all be left to the woman. But it is cooperation that brings about sympathy and solidarity.

He Glorified is He then concludes the verse with His saying, '…Indeed, Allah is All knowing, All-Wise.' Thus, all the Rulings decreed by Him the Almighty are based on the fact that He Glorified is He is All-knowledgeable about what is best for His creation; He is never oblivious to anything and thus everything is predestined by Him Glorified is He by due measure. The delaying of the ruling or legislation means that that the lawgiver was not fully aware of some relevant particulars at the time of legislation and thus he is obliged to issue new laws upon discovering the defection of the ones he previously enacted.

As to those who believe that Divine Legislation does not satisfy the needs of humans, we say: "Who will then issue such laws that satisfy these needs? Will you thinkers modify the Legislation enacted by Allah the Almighty? Indeed, Allah Glorified is He exposes your deficiency; you come up with all these Rulings and edicts which later on reveal their defects and mistakes. You thus find yourselves compelled to amend them. But, Allah the Almighty is All Knowing and All-Wise." Thus, if He chooses to delay the enactment of a certain ruling, He does so because His Wisdom decrees that.

A good illustration of this point is the prohibition of drinking wine. He the Almighty did not prohibit the drinking of wine all at once; rather, He did so gradually, because this bad thing that is done by habit and custom must be addressed patiently. Accordingly, the ruling of the prohibition of drinking wine had to be enacted in several stages each of which paved the way for the forthcoming one. The matter would be so difficult if the ruling was decreed all at once because giving up a habit immediately and not gradually is often difficult and onerous, especially if it was a daily habit which was practiced day and night. This is proven by the fact that when a person who is addicted to wine does not consume it for a particular period of time, he feels annoyed and disturbed and thus rushes to drink a glass of wine. Accordingly, the first stage in the prohibition process required that He Glorified is He should disrupt this habit. If it is a deeply entrenched habit in the soul of the person, he will not be able to give it up all at once. Thus, the first stage of prohibition took the form of a piece of advice: He Glorified is He ordered them, in the very beginning, not to attempt to pray while they were in a state of drunkenness. (an-Nisa': 43) As such, He the Almighty prevented them from drinking it during five windows of time each day–the time during the five daily prayers. He thus accustomed them to be able to give up drinking wine only for particular periods of time in the beginning. Thus, with time, they were accustomed to give it up the whole day. Then, He Glorified is He moves to the second stage of prohibition: He states clearly that both wine and games of chance (gambling) include both little benefit and great evil. (al-Baqara: 219)

But those who are fools often tend to continue in committing sins. The aforementioned saying of Allah the Almighty in the chapter of al-Baqara indicates clearly that the evil acquired from both of these two acts–drinking wine and playing games of chance–is greater than the benefit to be obtained from them. He the Almighty then declares the total prohibition of these evil and bad acts. In truth, it is the Wisdom of Allah the Almighty that decrees that this prohibition should be carried out gradually, a point which is definitively proven by Him the Almighty in the chapter of al-Baqara in which He clearly states that whenever He abrogates a verse, He, out of His Ultimate and Unchangeable Power, brings another one which is better or even similar to it. (al-Baqara: 106)

Allah the Almighty is All Knowing of everything to the extent that nothing could be concealed from Him. He knows that a woman may love her husband to the extent that she no longer cares about such ajr (or compensation) or a man may love his wife to the effect that money becomes of no value to him. Because He the Almighty is All-Wise, He may predestine the course of events to proceed based on the grace of the people involved and not on the inevitability of what He the Almighty imposed. He the Almighty then says:

وَمَن لَّمۡ يَسۡتَطِعۡ مِنكُمۡ طَوۡلًا أَن يَنكِحَ ٱلۡمُحۡصَنَٰتِ ٱلۡمُؤۡمِنَٰتِ فَمِن مَّا مَلَكَتۡ أَيۡمَٰنُكُم
مِّن فَتَيَٰتِكُمُ ٱلۡمُؤۡمِنَٰتِۚ وَٱللَّهُ أَعۡلَمُ بِإِيمَٰنِكُمۚ بَعۡضُكُم مِّنۢ بَعۡضٖۚ فَٱنكِحُوهُنَّ بِإِذۡنِ أَهۡلِهِنَّ
وَءَاتُوهُنَّ أُجُورَهُنَّ بِٱلۡمَعۡرُوفِ مُحۡصَنَٰتٍ غَيۡرَ مُسَٰفِحَٰتٖ وَلَا مُتَّخِذَٰتِ أَخۡدَانٖۚ فَإِذَآ
أُحۡصِنَّ فَإِنۡ أَتَيۡنَ بِفَٰحِشَةٖ فَعَلَيۡهِنَّ نِصۡفُ مَا عَلَى ٱلۡمُحۡصَنَٰتِ مِنَ ٱلۡعَذَابِۚ ذَٰلِكَ لِمَنۡ
خَشِيَ ٱلۡعَنَتَ مِنكُمۡۚ وَأَن تَصۡبِرُواْ خَيۡرٞ لَّكُمۡۗ وَٱللَّهُ غَفُورٞ رَّحِيمٞ ﴿٢٥﴾

If any of you does not have the means to marry a believing free woman, then marry a believing slave – God knows best [the depth of] your faith: you are [all] part of the same family – so marry them with their people's consent and their proper bride-gifts. [Make them] married women, not adulteresses or lovers. If they commit adultery when they are married, their punishment will be half that of free women. This is for those of you who fear that you will sin; it is better for you to practice self-restraint. God is most forgiving and merciful [25]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 25)

The word "istita'ah" (meaning "ability") means that you are capable of doing a particular thing which you claim you are in a position to do, and that this thing would not be resistant to whatever you want to do with it. If one holds a piece of iron and bends it, it would be under his control. The story of the two sons of Adam offers a striking example for that point. Both offered a sacrifice to Allah, but He the Almighty accepted it from one of them and rejected the sacrifice of the other. The son whose sacrifice was rejected told his brother that he would kill him, whereupon the latter told him that Allah accepted only the sacrifice of those who are pious. The soul of the sinful son then prompted him to kill his brother and thus he became one of the losers. (al-Ma'ida: 27-30)

What does the phrase "taw'at lahu" (meaning "prompted him") mean? It means that his soul made him capable of killing his brother. Upon reflecting more carefully upon this phrase, we will find that it contains a pronoun which refers to killing his brother himself, a point which means that a man has multiple powers and faculties, and one of these faculties may entice him to kill, while his conscience orders him not to do so. Yet, his soul incites him to evil and tells him to kill; thus, he becomes in a state of total confusion.

As well, the saying of Allah the Almighty: '… his soul prompted him…' clearly indicates that his inner self did not want to submit to his own will. But his soul that incites him to evil encouraged him to kill his brother. After he had satisfied his desire by killing by his brother, he lamented and regretted his deed. This regret was then explicitly expressed in his own discourse recorded in the Quran: Allah tells us that he felt bitter regret for being unable to conceal the nakedness of his brother. (al-Ma'ida: 31)

He killed his brother and fulfilled his wish, so why did he regret his deed? The reason is that the good powers and faculties always encourage and foster one to do the good and dissuade one from doing evil. One may start his life with doing evil, but if his good powers are predominant, he may change and his evil tendency may be mitigated. However, if his evil powers are predominant, he may start his life with doing little evil and then this evil will aggravate. He may thus say to himself, "That person did such-and-such to me and I want to avenge myself by slapping him on the face!" Afterwards, his evil may be further escalated and so he may say to himself, "I will beat him." But, if a good person undergoes such a situation, he will say to himself, "This person has conspired against me; I do not want to shoot, slap or even rebuke him." Thus, instead of considering the more-evil choice, he starts considering the one that is less evil.

The story of Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him illustrates this point fully for us. His brothers, in the very beginning, planned to kill him or to cast him out to another land, but then they moved to another a lower level of evil that is, throwing him peace be upon him into the bottom of a well. (Yusuf: 8-10) They, the brothers of Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) were from the tribes of Israel and were the sons of Prophet Ya'qub (Jacob). They thus wanted to find a way to mitigate their evil intention so that they would not kill Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him. That is why they thought of another less-harmful means to get rid of him: they thus decided to cast him out to another land. They even thought of another means which was of more less evil: they thus decided to throw him into the bottom of a well.

Thus, His saying '… not being in the position…' refers to that one who is not capable of subjugating a particular thing to him for meeting his needs. This is actually the true meaning of the word "at-tawl." So, the phrase "talathu yadahu" means that he became able to do that particular act. Also, when the Arabs say that someone "tafaddal 'ala" it means that he conferred a favour upon another. Furthermore, when they say that someone "tatawal 'alayya", this means that he insulted someone and abused him; all of these meanings come from the root "at-tawl." As such, in this context, the word "al-tawl" means "being capable of marrying the one you like." Accordingly, it here means that you do not have enough money to marry the one you like. But there is another possible way for you through which you can fulfil your desire of getting married. There is no need to marry a free woman if her dowry is too high for you; you can marry instead a slave woman or maiden from among the captives you have because their livelihood and expenses are relatively light. Furthermore, they do not have a family who will dispute with you about the dowry. He Glorified is He thus says: 'And as for those of you who, owing to circumstances, are not in a position to marry free believing women, [let them marry] believing maidens from among those whom you rightfully possess.' We deduce from this verse that marrying the ones rightfully possessed is possible for the one who does not own her because her master does not need to marry her; he may enjoy her without marriage since she is a rightful possession of his hand.

Thus, Allah the Almighty allowed Muslims to marry a woman that is rightfully possessed by someone else, provided that he gets the permission of her master. That is because by getting married, she will take away a portion of the time and service she devotes to her master and that is why the master should be asked for permission so that her dedication to the service of her husband may be known to him, her master. He the Almighty also decreed that we should not look down on a slave-maiden because she is possessed and humiliated and so refuse to pay her the dowry to which she is entitled. Slave-maidens should be paid the dowry due to them in an equitable manner based on the custom of the society they live in. That is because the dowry is paid as a compensation for consummating the marriage. But since He Glorified is He orders us to ask their masters for permission and to pay them their due dowries, a problem may arise: the one who is possessed does not possess anything at all since the slave and what he possesses is a possession of his master.

To the person who may be concerned about this problem, we say: "Yes, this is true. But if you say that a slave and whatever she possesses is a possession of her master, she should firstly own a possession so that this possession becomes then possessed by her master. So, if you trespassed her and gave the money to her master, then you would not be giving her the due dowry in the first place." The statement "the slave and whatever his hands possess" implies that you should give her a chance to be an owner and possessor by honouring her and giving her the dowry due to her. Thus, the fact that her other money is possessed by her master is a different issue. Afterwards, you may then go and marry her; this is permitted. But could we infer from this that if you are financially capable, you should not marry maidens or slave women? The answer is "No." Does this belittle maidens? The answer is also "No." But why should you not? We should consider the deep and profound wisdoms that are only done by our Lord. Allah the Almighty wants to abolish slavery. As a matter of fact, when one marries a maiden possessed by someone else, her children will also be slaves. It is important to know that children shall follow the pure religion adopted by the better one among their parents; however, concerning freedom and slavery, they follow their mothers. Thus, if someone marries a slave woman of someone else, the children she may bear for him will also be slaves. But if he leaves her to her master and marries a free woman, the child she will bear from her master will be free. As such, He the Almighty wants to totally abolish slavery. This is an aspect of the wisdom intended here.

The other aspect is crystal clear in the fact that marriage is the union of the male and the female to establish the nucleus of a family. Thus, if the husband and wife are of equal status, the husband will not feel any superiority over his wife and the wife will not feel any superiority in dealing with her husband since they are equivalent to each other. Such equality undoubtedly guarantees that their life and association with each other will be balanced and steady. As a matter of fact, when one marries a slave-maiden who does not have a family, he may exploit her weakness and deal with her with superiority. He may also humiliate her and disgrace her for being a slave. Further, if she bears children, people may abuse them by telling them that they have no maternal uncle whatsoever. The Legislator wants to build a balanced family life. For this reason, he stipulated equivalence in social status among the spouses as a condition for the soundness of marriage.

In the Quran, Allah Glorified is He tells us that corrupt and immoral men shall only get married to corrupt and the immoral women, while good and pious men shall only get married to good and pious women. (an-Nur: 26) When some people see a good woman, they think that she must be married to a good man. To these people, we say: “This is a law enacted by Allah and the law is an assignment and so it is subject to being obeyed or disobeyed. When Allah the Almighty decrees that good women are for good men and that corrupt women are for corrupt men, this means that if you apply the ruling, the matters will be upright and correct.” This fully truthfully answers those who say, “Since our Lord decreed that law–that good women are for good men and corrupt women are for corrupt men–how is it possible that one of the two already married couple is good, while the other is bad?” We say that the ruling is not about a case of a universal fact; rather, it is a legal case we are required to obey by marrying good men to good women and bad men to bad women so that balance may be achieved. In the case of bad men and women, they may exchange insults often. Therefore, it is [advisable] he does not insult her so that she does not insult back. The good couple, however, are lenient and tolerant with each other.

‘And as for those of you who, owing to circumstances, are not in a position to marry chaste, free believing women.’ (an-Nisa’: 25)

The word muhsanat is translated as ‘free [married woman], who cannot marry another person. They may wed believing girls from among those whom your right hands possess.’ The word girls usually refer to any slave young girl, or an old maid. Prophet Muhammad peace be upon him taught us not to use the word ‘slave’ when [speaking about or calling] the servants, but rather, we should say: ‘my boy’ and ‘my girl’ to those your right hands possess.’ Some people wonder why one would marry a woman that he possesses. We say to these people: No. She is lawfully his since he rightfully possesses her; he can thereby have a child from her. Thus, in this context, it means those women whom men’s right hands possess because Allah addresses believers as one single unit. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: ‘A believer must support his fellow believer like a building wherein each part supports the other.’(1) The True Lord Glorified is He says: ‘...And neither shall you defame one another...’ (al-Hujurat: 11). He also says in a different place: ‘But whenever you enter [any of these] houses, greet one another—a greeting from Allah.’ (an-Nur: 61) Should a believer greet himself or greet the ones whose houses he enters? Through this ruling, the True Lord Glorified is He wants to make the believers be like one body. For this reason, He Glorified is He also says: ‘and do not kill one another.’ This means do not kill other believers. In other words, the unity of faith should make us stand in solidarity with each other.

They may wed believing girls from among those whom your right hands possess. And Allah knows all about your faith’ You may assume that the faith of a young captive girl is weak so one can use it as a pretext [for not following the ruling of Allah]. The True Lord Glorified is He tells you: No, ‘… Allah knows all about your faith.’ It may even be the case that a maiden’s faith is better than yours because this is an internal matter of the heart, and it should be enough for you to know the apparent.

When the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted addresses a matter, He does so [in a manner] befitting a Lord who knows the reality of what He created and provides all the needs of His creatures. At first, He explains that if you are incapable of marrying free women, then marry the slave ones. This is intended to further contribute to the abolition of slavery.

(1) Narrated by Al-Bukhari, Muslim, Abu Dawud, At-Tirmidhi and An-Nasa’i on the authority of Abu Musa

After this, He Glorified is He says: ‘ Allah knows all about your faith; each one of you is an issue of the other.’ Thus, if you plan to get married, bear in mind that each one of you is an issue of the other.’ This means that all of you descend from Adam peace be upon him and since you have believed, this belief has made you all equals. Accordingly, if you want to get married, and then bear in mind that Allah Glorified is He addresses an existing reality. Afterwards, Allah Glorified is He says: So marry them with the permission of their people.’ This gives the impression that the maiden girl under one’s care should be treated as if she were a member of his family, compensating her for the loss of her family in her home country, and so that she would feel in the custody of Islam the same way she used to feel when she was in the custody of her family, parents and maybe more.

Thus, the master should act as if he were a member of the family of the one in his custody. This way, the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted gives more reasons to abolish slavery. He thus explains that if you do not free the slave you possess, he will continue to be a slave, which entails feeding him of what you eat, dressing him from the same clothes you wear and assigning to him what he is capable of undertaking; if you do so, you will have to assist him. When you have a person that you feed from your own food and dress from the same clothes you wear, and you find that he is trying to do a task he is incapable of doing, you would help him. But what kind of treatment is this? It is the way you treat a member of your family.

Consider how many issues and matters the True Lord Glorified is He addresses; He addresses the one proposing for marriage, the maiden or slave woman and the masters. It is indeed the law of the Lord of all. He does not decree a ruling for one party at the expense of the other. As long as she is a maiden and has a master, this master has issues to attend to, and therefore she has to ask for his permission since he may not be able to dispense with her because she serves him.

Thus, He says: ‘…with the permission of their people.’ But with respect to the question of dowry, He says: ‘…Give them their dowry according to what is reasonable.’ A slave woman is married after the permission of her master so that the husband, who will have intercourse with her, would know there is someone else; and after the permission, she is no longer his. As permission was granted, no one can intrude. Thus by granting the permission and marrying his slave woman to another man, he prepares himself for the fact the he will not be able to have intercourse with her again, and that all what is left for him is that she is his slave. As for the right of sexual intercourse, it has been transferred to the husband.

‛Give them their dowry according to what is reasonable.’ This warns one not to say that for a slave woman, anything should suffice. No, she is entitled to a dowry corresponding to what is customary in the community, which would thus preserve her dignity in her community. ‛[They should be] chaste, neither [of] those who commit unlawful intercourse randomly, nor those who take [secret] lovers.’ They should be chaste women, not women who commit adultery; such women are also called public women.

And when they are married, and thereafter become guilty of adultery, they shall be liable to half the penalty to which free married women are liable.’ This means that if slave women were married and one of them was found guilty of adultery, then she is to receive a penalty. But if she is not married, then she should not submit to a judge; rather, her master should punish her and penalize her because the slave woman is customarily humiliated, which changes after she gets married. Thus, if she commits an immoral conduct we say to her: You have your designated penalty. You will not be penalized in the same way a free woman is penalize because the free woman always finds it difficult to commit adultery, unlike the slave woman who finds it easy to do so since she does not have a father, a brother or a family. He thus says: ‛...thereafter become guilty of adultery, they shall be liable to half the penalty to which free married women are liable.’ This means half the penalty to which the free married women are liable. But Al-khawarij(1) limited the meaning of the word to a single interpretation to serve their purpose. They consider the ‘chaste woman' as the one who is married. They want to interpret it this way so that the slave woman would be liable to half the penalty to which the married woman is, at which case the married woman would not be stoned since stoning cannot be halved. They adopted this interpretation and said that the Quran does not mention stoning; thus they were contented with their view of whipping the adulteress hundred times. We say to them: You have interpreted the word muhsana as married, and forgot, 'and as for those of you who, owing to circumstances, are not in a position to marry free believing women.' The word muhsana actually refers to the free women. So why did you switch the meaning of the word muhsana to mean 'free' in the first mention and 'married' in the second? You have to take the meaning as 'free women' and you do not have any justification to adopt this fallacious rationale. Thus, the premise of their argument falls apart because if the evidence carries a potential probability, it cannot be used as a premise for valid argument.

(1) Al-khawarij is mostly associated with their political orientation. In this Fiqhi case, the definition would not be of crucial importance because the background it will provide, would not affect this particular issue.

We move to the next point. The True Lord Glorified is He says: 'they shall be liable to half the penalty to which free married women are liable to.' If the ruling follows the generalized sense, the True Lord would not have said penalty.' It is as if she is liable for half the penalty/punishment. What is punishment? It means the infliction of pain on the one who is susceptible to feel pain. Stoning does not involve inflicting pain because it is intended to put an end to life. The verse shows that half the penalty is an infliction of pain. But what does not involve an infliction of pain is a process of putting an end to life and the ruling is not related to it. Pain is only possible for the one who can feel pain. Pain is felt by a living thing, whereas stoning is the termination of life. Thus, stoning is not part of the 'penalty.' The evidence that penalty is the opposite of death is that when the True Lord Glorified is He tells us about prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him and his investigation of the birds. He Glorified is He says: 'He inspected the birds, and said: 'How is it that I do not see the hoopoe? Or could he be absent? I will punish him most severely or will kill him unless he brings me a clear reason.' (an-Naml: 20-21) Killing and terminating life is thus the opposite of penalty. Therefore, His phrase 'half the penalty to which free married women are liable,' means that what is being addressed in this context is the infliction of pain, not stoning, nor the termination of life. Thus, using it as proof is invalid.

We say to those who say that the verses of the Quran do not refer to stoning: Who told you that the Quran encompasses all the rulings of the path of Allah in Islam, and that it detailed everything? The Quran was not only revealed as a Book about the path of life, but it also came as a miracle and a Book about principles of such a path. It is, therefore, left to Prophet Muhammad peace be upon him the task of explaining to people what was revealed to them, not to mention that Prophet Muhammad, as per the statement of the Quran, was authorized to issue laws, which is a privilege granted to the seal of the Prophets and Messengers. The evidence is that Allah Glorified is He says about the essence of the Quran that includes the principles of the path of Islam: 'And whatever the Prophet (Muhammad) has given you, take; and what he has forbidden you, refrain from.' (al-Hashr: 7)

Prophet Muhammad has a role with the Quran, otherwise the one who claims that the Quran includes all the rulings of the religion of Allah should tell me from where he learnt the detailed ruling regarding praying five times a day? In what verse is it mentioned the Dawn Prayer consists of two rak'as? And from where did he learn that the Noon and Afternoon Prayer are each four rak'as, while the Sunset Prayer consists of only three rak'as, and the night one is four? From where did he acquire this knowledge? Nothing of this sort exists. What is the meaning of that? The meaning is that the Quran was revealed as a miraculous Book, and it includes a methodology that addresses its fundamentals which gave Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him the right to legislate; his legislation is binding and authorized by the Quran. For this reason, if an adamant disputer asks you about a specific ruling and says: Show me the basis for deducing this ruling from the Quran, and then you looked in the Book of Allah but did not find it, tell him that the evidence of the ruling in the Quran is the saying of Allah Glorified is He: 'And whatever the Messenger (Muhammad) has given you, take; and what he has forbidden you, refrain from.'

Based on this, any ruling that you come across but failed to locate its basis in the Book of Allah, yet you are asked to provide it, then say: 'And whatever the Prophet (Muhammad) has given you, take; and what he has forbidden you, refrain from.' This methodology is simply an array of commands and proscriptions. Obviously, obedience to it requires following commands and avoiding proscriptions. Every religion or path of life consists of an array of commands and proscriptions; you have to follow the command and avoid the proscription. If you leaf through the Quran, you will find that commands and proscriptions are tied to the verses that address the obedience required of the one who believes in the path of Allah and who professes that there is no God worthy of worship but Allah Glorified is He and that Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him. Thus, if you read the Quran you will find—as we have said before—that the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted says about obedience: 'Say: 'Obey Allah and the Messenger.' (Al-'Imran: 32)

The True Lord Glorified is He has not repeated the command related to obedience, but rather, the person obeying is repeated. But whom should we obey? We should obey Allah Glorified is He and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. In another instance, He repeats the command of obedience: 'Hence, obey Allah and obey the Messenger (Muhammad).' (Al-'Imran: 92) In a third instance, Allah Glorified is He says: 'Obey the Prophet so that you may receive mercy.' (an-Nur: 56) In a fourth instance He Glorified is He says: 'Obey Allah, and obey the Messenger (Muhammad), and those from among you who have been entrusted with authority.' (an-Nisa': 59) Here, Allah has included 'people of authority' for the first time. In one instance, He commands us to be obedient, and then He repeats the recipient of this obedience. In another instance, He repeats the command and also repeats the recipient of obedience. In the third instance, He says: '…and obey the Messenger.' So, if Allah Glorified is He says to you: 'obey Allah and the Messenger,' then know that the matter in question involves a ruling by Allah and His Messenger, Muhammad peace be upon him which makes obedience a must. In addition, if Allah's command is general, whereas the Prophet's command is detailed, as is the case with prayers, zakat and pilgrimage, then you have to obey Allah and obey Prophet Muhammad.

In case the matter in question lacks a ruling by Allah, but rather came as an implicit authorization when Allah say: 'And whatever the Messenger (Muhammad) has given you - take; and what he has forbidden you - refrain from,' then obey Prophet Muhammad in such a matter. Moreover, in another verse, Allah says: 'He who obeys the Messenger (Muhammad) has obeyed

Allah.’ (an-Nisa’: 80) Why? That is because Prophet Muhammad acted in accordance with the authorization granted to him by Allah; the True Lord says: ‘And whatever the Messenger (Muhammad) has given you - take; and what he has forbidden you - refrain from.’

We are left with the obedience to ‘those in authority,’ that was mentioned when He says: ‘Obey Allah, and obey the Messenger (Muhammad) and those in authority.’ This means that obeying ‘that in authority’ is part of obeying Allah and Prophet Muhammad. Thus, Allah Glorified is He has not singled out ‘those in authority’ with independent obedience, rather, as a part of ‘obey Allah and obey the Messenger.’ He did not say ‘obey that in authority’; instead, He mentions that in authority only as a part of obeying Allah and His Prophet, Muhammad. This shows the precision of the style of the Quran.

We must ponder well over the words of the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted: ‘And whatever the Messenger (Muhammad) has given you - take; and what he has forbidden you - refrained from’ We have already said that obedience is submitting to Allah’s commands and avoiding His proscriptions. Similarly, we find two clauses in this verse ‘he has given you’ and ‘he has forbidden you.’ ‘He has given you’ has been used instead of ‘he commands you’; and the act prohibition is present in ‘forbidden.’ But why has Allah not said: ‘Accept whatever Prophet Muhammad commands you to do and refrain from what he prohibited you to do?’ Further, why did He not briefly say: ‘Accept whatever Prophet Muhammad gives you?’ The reason is that if the act of giving a command is undertaken by Prophet Muhammad, it assumes the form of either an utterance or an action. But would the proscribed thing be an actual deed that Prophet Muhammad does? No, it is impossible that this would be the case.

Prohibition comes exclusively in the form of proscription of an action, whereas a command is expressed by giving it and it can be in the form of both an action and an utterance. For instance, when He says to you to not drink wine, there in no way that Prophet Muhammad would do such an act in order to learn to avoid it. Prophet Muhammad has certainly never drunken wine or any other intoxicant. The command is related to the Prophet’s utterance or action, whereas a prohibition is only conveyed verbally. Is it even possible that someone would assume otherwise? Indeed, it is not.

Then, we turn to another round in response to the khawarij. Prophet Muhammad was sent to convey is the message so as to teach us the ruling in order that we act accordingly. Thus, if a ruling is stated in the text—meaning in the Quran,—the action of Prophet Muhammad explains it, and when Prophet Muhammad does it, would there be any room left to argue about the meaning of the text yet? No, it would have been concluded. Thus, action is the best reflection of the textual proof it promotes as far as command is concerned because, without an action, the textual proof will be open to interpretation. But when Prophet Muhammad follows the textual statement with his action, the ruling becomes binding because the one who undertook the action is a lawgiver.

Did Prophet Muhammad stone or did he not? Prophet Muhammad did stone, and his action proves the text. Action is not a verbal or textual statement subject to interpretation and construing. Prophet Muhammad stoned Ma'iz and Al-Ghamidyyah. He also stoned a Jewish man and a Jewish woman, even though they were protected by their marriage and freedom. Hence, the action of Prophet Muhammad is the fundamental origin of the ruling. The evidence of the khawarij does not suffice as the basis to support the conclusion they reached. Thus, what is left is the action of the legislator, Prophet Muhammad, who is authorized by Allah to legislate through his sayings and actions or even through the mere tacit approval of an action.

Now we will investigate the issue rationally. If you want to claim that the only bound penalty for committing adultery is whipping, would you hold those who are married and those who are not as being equal? The married one has honour, a husband, familial ancestors and descendants. Would you equate this one with the one who has not been married? This is rationally unacceptable. The ruling of stoning actually exists and its source is Prophet Muhammad. The evidence that al-khawarij adduce is indeed probable at best, and if the evidence is probable, it cannot serve as a premise for logical deduction.

'And after they have been taken in wedlock, if they commit illegal sexual intercourse, their punishment is half the punishment assigned for free (unmarried) women. This is for him among you who is afraid of harming his religion or his body.'

What is intended by ‘this’? It refers to the permission to marry slave women and girls granted to those who were incapable of marrying free women. What does ‘al-‘anat (translated as ‘harmed in his religion or in his body’) mean? It means toil and exhaustion, the wearing out of nerves and the corruption of ethics and values because when a man’s desires are spurred, he may either retain chastity or become morally loose. If he is morally loose, he has become corrupted. But what would happen if he retains his chastity? He may suffer from a psychological and nervous breakdown. This is why Allah allowed him to marry a slave woman if he could not afford to marry a free one.

In view of this elaboration, the meaning of the verse would be that the one who does not fear ‘the harm’ does not necessarily have to marry a slave woman.(1) This is not a discouragement to marry slave women; it involves respect for her because if she got married, and then bore a child from the one whom she married, her child would also become a slave. Allah Glorified is He wants to abolish slavery. Allah Glorified is He explains to the person interested in getting married to a slave woman: leave her to her master; if he likes her and had sexual intercourse with her, and later she bore his child, both she and her child will become free.

The True Lord wants to abolish slavery. He Glorified is He then say: ‘But it is better for you that you practice self-restraint.’ This instructs patience and endurance, not resorting to marry slave women. Stay in chastity and purity, away from committing sin; this is better for you than marrying a slave woman. Therefore, marrying free women is indeed better.

The True Lord then appends the verse: ‘And Allah is Oft-Forgiving, Most Merciful.’ This means that He is much forgiving of what you have committed and the sins you perpetrated but repented from. He is also Merciful to you, as He does not haste to punish you, out of pity for you and love for your returning to Him.

---

(1) Some jurists stipulate the presence of certain conditions for someone to marry a slave woman: first, the one marrying a slave woman must have found no free woman to marry; second: the slave woman he chose to marry must be a Muslim. Further, he must be in a state where he fears falling prey to sin.

يُرِيدُ ٱللَّهُ لِيُبَيِّنَ لَكُمْ وَيَهْدِيَكُمْ سُنَنَ ٱلَّذِينَ مِن
قَبْلِكُمْ وَيَتُوبَ عَلَيْكُمْ ۗ وَٱللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ حَكِيمٌ ﴿٢٦﴾

He wishes to make His laws clear to you and guide you to the righteous ways of those who went before you. He wishes to turn towards you in mercy – He is All Knowing, all wise [26]
(The Quran, an-Nisa’: 26)

What does He ‘make clear unto us’? Allah Glorified is He makes it clear and explains to us the laws governing the steadiness and organization of life. We have said that the condemnation of any act is not possible except with an explicit text, and there is no penalty unless the act penalized is condemned. Before Allah punishes you for a matter, He tells you that it is a crime and He explicitly states it; He does not come to tell you that you did something, and here is the punishment, since you may say: ‘I have done this before and I did not know it was prohibited and condemned, and that I deserve to be punished for it.’ You cannot be punished unless you have committed an act that is condemned; thus you cannot be condemned except based on explicit text in which Allah condemns the act you committed. Allah wants to enlighten you about what is best for rectifying the course of your life. Allah is indeed more concerned with you than you are with yourself because Allah Glorified is He is the One Who created you, and He knows those whom He created. Allah Glorified is He alone enacts what is best for His creation; hence, the idea that He creates you and then leaves you to be the lawgiver is a transgression because Allah Glorified is He enacts laws upon whom He best knows—and to Allah pertains the highest example. We have said previously: the engineer who manufactures a TV is the one who sets the rules for its maintenance since he is the one who designed the machine, and he is the one who is best qualified to set its maintenance rules. ‘This key is for such a function; that button is for adjusting the volume, and that other one is for the image,’ the engineer would say.

The One who created man is the one who ordains the law that is best for his preservation and well-being, and that is manifested in the ‘do’s and don’ts’ that He reveals. Allah Glorified is He left out a number of matters about which He did not reveal any ‘do’s and don’ts.’ Those are considered permissible, so you may do or not do them. Allah Glorified is He says: ‘And to guide you onto the [righteous] ways of life of those who preceded you.’ The ‘righteous ways’ in this context is the Sunnah governing the course of life. The True Lord says: ‘[This is] the established way of Allah with those who passed on before; and you will not find in the way of Allah any change.’ (al-Ahzab: 62)

There were messengers who preceded Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. We have also learnt about what happened to those who obeyed the Messengers sent to them and what happened to those who disbelieved and repudiated the Messengers sent to them. The True Lord says about them: ‘So each We seized for his sin; and among them were those upon whom We sent a storm of stones, and among them were those who were seized by the (awful) Cry [from the sky], and among them were those whom We caused the earth to swallow, and among them were those whom We drowned. And Allah would not have wronged them, but it was they who were wronging themselves.’ (al-Ankabut: 40)

Allah Glorified is He wants to clear to us the paths which the preceding nations pursued. These paths refer to the methods that they used to rule with, and how it turned out for the people of truth as well as the people of falsehood. Therefore, this is not a baseless ordinance; rather, there are a lot of precedents that support its verity and document it. Allah Glorified is He explains, clarifies and forgives. ‘For Allah is All Knowing, Wise,’ because He is a Wise Creator Who puts things in their rightful place. Wisdom is the rightful disposition of matters, which Allah Glorified is He does based on His knowledge. Knowledge, in a general sense, implies vastness of knowledge. Wisdom is the placement of anything included in this knowledge in its rightful place. The next verse says:

وَٱللَّهُ يُرِيدُ أَن يَتُوبَ عَلَيۡكُمۡ وَيُرِيدُ ٱلَّذِينَ
يَتَّبِعُونَ ٱلشَّهَوَٰتِ أَن تَمِيلُواْ مَيۡلًا عَظِيمٗا (٢٧)

He wishes to turn towards you, but those who follow their lusts want you to go far astray [27]
(The Quran, an-Nisa’: 27)

Allah Glorified is He says in the previous verse: ‘ Allah wants to make [all this] clear unto you’ followed by and to guide you,’ and afterwards accept your repentance.’ In the verse we are currently discussing, Allah says: ‘and Allah wishes to accept your repentance.’ Why does He initially say ‘accept your repentance’, and then follow it with wishes to accept your repentance’? In this respect, we say that repentance had already been decreed lawful by Allah initially; otherwise, how would you repent form a sin and ask Allah to forgive you had He not already decreed repentance as lawful? Would this repentance be correct? Allah Glorified is He first decrees repentance as lawful. After that, you may repent in the light of what He decreed, and He may then accept that repentance. So far, we have three stages: 1) The decreeing of repentance as lawful by Allah as a sign of His mercy for us; 2) The actual repentance of the slave; 3) Allah Glorified is He accepts the repentance out of His mercy. In short, the repentance of the slave is between two repentances originating from Allah: the decreed repentance and the accepted repentance. And Allah wishes to accept your repentance. But would Allah Glorified is He decree repentance as lawful and then refuse to accept it? No, since He has decreed repentance and taught you how to repent, this means that He has opened the door to repentance and forgiveness for you, which is a part of the Mercy of the All Knowing and Wise for His creation. Moreover, when the True Lord created man, He privileged him over other species with the power of free will. Man can always choose to either do a certain action or refrain from it. Further, he made all his faculties flexible to comply with both commands and prohibition. The eye can see one of the signs of Allah in the Universe, and learn from it, just as it can also look at what Allah has forbidden. The same can be applied to the tongue; it can be used for cursing as much as it can be used for remembering Allah and saying: ‘I profess that there is no god worthy of worship but Allah,’ besides all other kinds of remembrance of Allah. The hand can be used for beating as much as it can be extended in aid of someone who stumbled and fell on the street.

This is the meaning of choice in one’s statements, action and limbs. Free will is an absolute power that is directed by the will of the one who chooses. If you consider the hand, you will find that if you want to raise it, you do not need to know anything about the muscles to make such movement. What does the one who raises his hands do? And what are the muscles that he uses in the process of raising his hands? You may see this, for instance, in robots, levers or cranes that lift heavy weights. Just consider how many operations are performed for these machines to operate? You do not know anything about this matter, but if you want to move your hands, you are capable of doing so, and your hands obey your will. By contrast, when an engineer desires to move a robot, he instructs it through certain calculations to do so, but the normal human being can move his hands, legs or eyes as soon as he wills to do so.

When the True Lord deprives man of his power —Allah forbid—He causes him to be paralyzed. If this paralyzed person wants to do something, his hands will not move, and he will not know what defect caused such malfunction until he goes to a physician to check his nervous system. Then he will know why his nerves did not execute the orders they received; it is a long process. Accordingly, when a man wants to move, he just directs the power and faculties that were originally created by Allah. In actuality, he is incapable of doing anything. Thus, Allah Glorified is He rewards and forgives one for being obedient only inasmuch as he employs his faculties to do good things. When you hear that all of us—humans—are helpless, know that this statement is correct because no one knows how to do anything; one just wills. Therefore, your task is to voluntarily channel your energy to behave and act in accordance with Allah's enactments. Hence, the meaning of free will is to be able to obey the command just as you are able to do its opposite.

When the True Lord clarifies and reveals the path, you should follow it. He tells you to channel your energy to do is the right, not the wrong. This means that you are capable of doing both. Therefore, if you do what lies outside the scope of the path of Allah as to whether or not you should 'do' or 'don't' do in a way that is not corruptive or damaging to the cosmic order and to your life, then know that what you have done is lawful and admissible.

When the True Lord has decreed repentance, He has explained that if someone wills a particular act, but directs his power to do the opposite; his desire and craving may overwhelm him which leads him to do something evil in a moment of weakness. For this reason, repentance has been decreed and ordained. Why? The reason is that if we were to expel someone out of the obedience realm for one evil act he did, all his actions and deeds would be evil afterwards. This is the one that we described as the one who is lost or went astray. The True Lord, however, has enacted that if you commit a sin, do not despair as He will forgive you and absolve your sin.

Inasmuch as Allah Glorified is He has decreed repentance, He spared the society the evils of the one who first committed sins. Indeed, if repentance did not exist, the number of sins would proliferate. The opposite of the saying of the True Lord: ‘And Allah wishes to accept your repentance,’ and his assertion that he may purify one of the sins he committed through repentance are the people who follow their lusts and cravings, and want you to commit new sins. For this reason, the True Lord Glorified is He says: ‘but those who follow their lusts wish that you (believers) should deviate.’ ‘Deviate’ in this context means committing sins, whatever they may be. By doing this, you drift away because drifting means deviating from the righteous path delineated by the All-Wise.

But who has created this righteous path? It is the All-Wise. If a man deviates once, our Lord will direct him back to the righteous path and tell him: ‘I have forgiven you.’ Allah Glorified is He does so to protect the world from that person’s evil. But those who follow their lusts not only want you to deviate once; they want you to deviate to extremes. Why? The reason is—as we have said before—that even if man lies, he would respect the honest person; and if he is a traitor, he would respect the loyal. To prove it, if a traitor had something he is worried about, he would choose an honest person to entrust it with. Honesty, truth, and faithfulness along with all other values are ingrained in us and recognized by our natural inclination. If a man were not able to compel himself to follow the righteous values, but then finds someone else capable of doing so, he would be quite frustrated. What would comfort him? He cannot right his wrongs, and nor is he able to rectify himself. For this reason, he tries to make the righteous person a deviant like himself. Thus, if both, the righteous and the deviant became friends, the latter would be ashamed of himself for his deviance and would try to make his righteous friend deviant as well so that he would not feel inferior to him. He would not even want him to deviate from the righteous path in the same way as he did. He would want him to be even more deviant so that he would be better than him. Thus, even the deviants and the corrupt recognize values. Indeed, remember well the wise saying we read in the chapter Yusuf: ‘And there entered the prison with him two young men. One of them said, ‘Indeed, I have seen myself [in a dream] pressing wine.' The other said, 'Indeed, I have seen myself carrying upon my head [some] bread, from which the birds were eating. Inform us of its interpretation; indeed, we see you to be of those who do the good.'' (al-Hajj: 36)

They were in prison with Yusuf (Joseph). Each had his own reason for being in prison. They were in prison because they committed a crime, but the reason underlying Yusuf's presence in prison is that he was innocent. The innocent only thinks about Allah. Unlike those who have deviated from the righteous path, they saw that he was in a good condition; the evidence is that they were concerned about something related to them, viz. that each of them saw a dream.

That is why they went to the one whom they thought was a good person, despite being in prison with them. They admired him given that they said to him: 'We see you to be of those who do the good.' If someone says such statement, it implies that he has the ability to distinguish values. They measured Yusuf's action against that scale of values they used to assess; how would they otherwise make a judgment? Therefore, they went directly to Yusuf when it was something about their own selves.

Another example is of a thief who keeps stealing and never quits until something happens that requires him to travel to an unsafe place. In that case, the thief would look for an honest person to spend the night with; he would not go a thief like himself. Values are values. When the companions of Yusuf said: 'We see you to be of those who do the good,' Yusuf took advantage of this matter as he noted their confidence in him. So he has not immediately interpreted their dreams; rather, he called them to believe in Allah. He said: 'O [my] two companions of prison, are Different Gods better or Allah, the One, the Prevailing?' (Yusuf: 39) He diverted their attention from their story to his. As long as they wanted to take advantage of the fact that he appeared to be a good man, and knew how to interpret dreams well; why would he not take advantage of their need and preach to them the religion of Allah? It is as if he were telling them: 'You came to me because you say that I am a good person. You did not see all that I have, which Allah has given me from His grace and bounty.' The True Lord Glorified is He says that Yusuf said: 'That is from what my Lord has taught me.' (Yusuf: 37) This means that the honest Yusuf has a lot of knowledge, and that he acknowledges Allah's grace and endowment as he asserts that the knowledge was not from him.’ That is from what my Lord has taught me.’ Afterwards, Yusuf called them to worship Allah so that they can invoke Him to save them and redeem them instead of the several deities that they used to worship because, in fact, they can neither harm them nor benefit them: ‘Are separate lords better or One Lord (Allah), the One, the Prevailing?’

Values do not change and Allah Glorified is He wishes to forgive the sins of all, but those who follow their lusts want you to deviate from the righteous path so that you would not be any better than them in a way that would make them feel contempt and despise themselves even more. They want you to be more deviant than them because they want to be distinguished as much as you want to be; they say to themselves: ‘if we are evil, there are others who are worse than us.’ Afterwards, the True Lord Glorified is He says:

يُرِيدُ ٱللَّهُ أَن يُخَفِّفَ عَنكُمۡۚ وَخُلِقَ ٱلۡإِنسَٰنُ ضَعِيفٗا ﴿٢٨﴾

God wishes to lighten your burden; man was created weak [28] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 28)

After Allah Glorified is He has said: Allah wants to clear unto you’ to direct our attention, He follows it with: And wishes to accept your repentance’ to forgive us; He now says: Allah wants to lighten your burdens to make things easier for us. These are three important matters. Ibn ‘Abbas Allah be pleased with him said: ‘In the chapter of an-Nisa’, there are eight verses addressing the followers of Muhammad which are better than whatever upon which the sun rises and sets.’

The first:

‘Allah wants to make clear to you [the lawful from the unlawful] and guide you to the [good] practices of those before you and to accept your repentance. And Allah is Knowing and Wise.’ (an-Nisa’: 26)

The second:

‘ Allah wants to accept your repentance, but those who follow their lusts, wish that you (believers) should deviate tremendously away from the Right Path.’ (an-Nisa’: 27)

The third:

‘ Allah wants to lighten your burdens: ‘for man has been created weak.’ (an-Nisa’: 28)

The fourth:

‘If you avoid the great sins which you are forbidden to do, We shall remit from you your (small) sins, and admit you to a Noble Entrance (i.e. paradise).’ (an-Nisa’: 31)

The fifth:

‘Indeed, Allah does not forgive association with Him, but He forgives what is less than that for whom He wills. And he who associates others with Allah has certainly fabricated a tremendous sin.’ (an-Nisa’: 48)

The sixth:

‘And whoever does evil or wrongs himself but afterwards seeks Allah's Forgiveness, he will find Allah Oft-Forgiving, Most Merciful.’ (an-Nisa’: 110)

The seventh:

‘Surely! Allah wrongs not even of the weight of an atom (or a small ant), but if there is any good (done), He doubles it, and gives from Him a great reward.’ (an-Nisa’: 40)

The eighth:

‘Why should Allah punish you if you have thanked (Him) and have believed in Him? And Allah is Ever All-Appreciative (of good), All Knowing.’ (an-Nisa’: 147)

These are the eight verses that no other nation has been given their like except the followers of Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Among them is the saying of the True Lord: Allah wants to lighten your burdens: ‘for man has been created weak.’ But what is that weakness? Weakness is his proneness to be deviated by allurements and losing the capacity to conjure up Allah’s reward for obedience and His punishment for sinning because the one whose self is directed by lust often disregards the idea of punishment. For instance, if a thief bore in mind that his hand would be chopped off if he stole, he would be reluctant to steal. But he may try to choose a safe way for himself and think: ‘I will steal, deceive people, and then do this and that in order to escape.’

Man is weak inasmuch as Allah has given him the freedom to choose. He is prone to be swayed by his transient desires. However, if man examines all his desires in order to identify the most exalted among them, he will realize that no desire is more worthy of his care and attention than his desire to deserve Allah's contentment and meeting Him in the Hereafter.

The True Lord says: Allah wants to lighten your burdens: for man has been created weak.' We notice that Allah lightened the burdens of the believers in proportion to their human weakness. As we explained above, human weakness is an outcome of freedom of choice which is conferred upon the human to choose to follow or to not follow Allah's obligations. The One Who made him weak also gave him freedom of choice so that he may obey or disobey. Man always needs some kind of motivation or enticement to fulfil any obligation. In fact, the temptations of this life are in the present, whereas those of the hereafter are in the future, but man always gives the transient present priority over the eternally abiding future. Afterwards the True Lord says:

يَـٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا۟ لَا تَأْكُلُوٓا۟ أَمْوَٰلَكُم بَيْنَكُم بِٱلْبَـٰطِلِ إِلَّآ أَن تَكُونَ
تِجَـٰرَةً عَن تَرَاضٍ مِّنكُمْ ۚ وَلَا تَقْتُلُوٓا۟ أَنفُسَكُمْ ۚ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ بِكُمْ رَحِيمًا (٢٩)

You who believe, do not wrongfully consume each other's wealth but trade by mutual consent. Do not kill each other, for God is merciful to you [29] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 29)

When the True Lord Glorified is He wants to invite His creatures to believe in Him, He directs their attention to the universe and the phenomena He has created so that they may be assured that these phenomena could not have been produced except through the will of the All-Capable, All Knowing and All-Wise Allah. If they voluntarily choose to believe in Him, they will willingly receive His assignments as they are presented in the array of commands and proscription He has revealed to them. Thus, when Allah imposes His obligations, He always preludes it by reminding them that they have committed themselves to accept their assignments, and that Allah did not force them to do so; rather, they have voluntarily chosen to believe in Allah. As long as they have voluntarily chosen to embrace faith, they must submit to every ruling Allah imposes on them. In other words, they must submit to all the do’s and do not’s that He ordains. In this respect, none of them should wonder why they should do something and why they should not. It is enough to say: ‘I have believed in Him as He is Allah who is All-Capable and All-Wise.’ Allah Glorified is He is entitled to command and forbid. For this reason, the True Lord Glorified is He always prefixes the verses that involve His assignments with ‘O you who have believed.’ This explicitly shows that Allah does not ordain an obligation for everyone, but rather, for those who believed in Him. It is not unjust for Allah to decree an array of obligations on the one who believes in Him simply because they have voluntarily believed in Him.

But if you command someone to do one of Allah's obligations, like praying or refraining from a prohibition, he might tell you: ‘There is no coercion in religion.’ (al-Baqara: 256) If this ever happens, you have to respond by saying that he did not understand the words of the True Lord properly. In principle, belief in Allah is hinged on free choice, not on compulsion. But once you voluntarily believe in Allah, you are bound to follow to Allah’s Commands and avoid His Proscriptions. The verse, ‘O you who believed,’ provides us with circumstances that demand obedience to Allah’s obligations, which is belief in Allah as the All-Capable and All-Wise God. Once you believe as such you have to submit to all the commands and proscriptions of Allah Glorified is He. But if you pause and reject any command or proscription, you should revisit your faith in Allah.

Accordingly, Allah says, ‘There is no coercion in religion,’ which means that you are free to have faith in Allah or not. But if you do, beware not to violate a ruling from Allah in Whom you have believed. If you do so, you will be committing sins.

The preceding rulings assigned to those who have believed are concerned with the principles of preserving the believers' honour and constituting the family based on a pure system so that reproduction occurs in a sound manner. The verses also speak about the women whom you are forbidden to marry as well as those whom you are allowed to marry. Here Allah Glorified is He talks about money which is the engine of life. Wealth and possessions are generally, as we know, the fruit of one’s toiling and labour. Everything that is exchanged and used as sustenance is considered to be wealth and possessions; wealth is divided into different kinds: wealth that provides a direct benefit –like owning food, drink and/or clothes; and wealth that provides an indirect benefit like money or currency, of which one cannot avail himself directly; rather, one may benefit and avail himself of it to obtain something that he can directly use, and from which he can procure benefit.

Accordingly, wealth is divided into direct livelihood and indirect livelihood. The True Lord Glorified is He wants to protect the course of life because by doing so, He encourages those living to flourish. But if we were to assume that He is not protecting the cycle of life, what would happen? The cycle of life would be broken. We notice that in any society wherein the purpose and fruit of human labour is not secured, work diminishes, and everyone works only as much as his capacity allows him. One will even say to himself, why should I work? The fruit of my labour is not guaranteed or secured.' But if he were sure that he would reap the fruit of his labour, such security would entice him to work more. If he worked more, society would benefit more, even though that person did not intend so. It is not necessary that one should intend to benefit the society with his work. No, let everyone work for his own benefit and advantage.

We have given an example in this respect before; someone may have thousands of pounds that he keeps in a safe. He then wonders: Why should I keep it in a safe? Why would I not build another house and rent out two apartments in order to generate some income for me? Did this person bear the good and interest of the society in his mind? No, his mind is concerned with maximizing his own interests. For this reason, let everyone worry about his own interests. This way the entire society will benefit from his work whether he intended it or not. The reason is that when the time comes to lay the foundation of his new house, he will have to pay the workers he hired for the task; similarly, when he goes out to buy the bricks, he will pay for them. He will also pay the engineer and the construction workers' wages. Therefore, strive in pursuit of fulfilling your personal interests in the light of the law of Allah, and society will subsequently benefit from it whether you intended it or not. It is quite surprising that when you want to benefit yourself, Allah Glorified is He explains that you will benefit others before any benefit accrues to you from the revenue of the house you are building. Do not think that someone will usurp the livelihood that Allah has prepared for His creatures, and then will not dispense it to His creation. No, the entire society will benefit from it against your will.

Accordingly, preserving the natural course of life and securing the livelihood of everyone who works and labours is conducive to the best interest of society. Then, if we wish to pass any judgments about that person, we have to keep our eyes wide open as to whether he earns such livelihood in a legitimate and lawful way or not. If he earns his livelihood in a lawful manner, we should thank him; but if he earns it in an unlawful manner, we should question him. If one does not follow the lawful way of earning his livelihood, the natural course of life would be disrupted, and this is detrimental to those incapable of working. Why so? The reason is that Allah Glorified is He has distributed talents among people. Not everyone possesses the same energetic ambition, and nor everyone has a sound logic whereby he can plan. Only few in society undertake the mission of planning, while the rest of the members of society function as faculties or agents that execute the plans devised by the thinking minds. This structure is analogous to that of the human being in the sense that one’s reason controls the rest of his faculties. Thus, there is often one main thinker who devises a plan from which a lot of people benefit.

We have to honour and secure the work of the one who strives to earn his livelihood because society benefits from it even if he or she does not do so except for the fulfilment of his own interests. However, it is true that the one who is only concerned with his own selfish interests misses the divine reward for his work. It is also true that whoever keeps other people in his mind reaps the fruit of his work coupled with receiving a reward from Allah.

The True Lord Glorified is He fully explains issues related to financial issues to protect the progress of the course of life and foster people to work more. This way, the number of people who work hard would increase, and then benefit would accrue to society. He says: ‘O you who have believed, do not consume one another's wealth unjustly.’ In some instances, you may find a command phrased in a plural form. For example, when we say to a group: Get in your cars’, this actually means: 'May every one of you get in his car.' Similarly, when a teacher walks into his class and says to his students: ‘Get your books out’; this means that every student has to get his book out. Thus, the plural form necessarily applies to each person involved. Accordingly, the statement means that none of you should consume his possessions, but what is the way by which we are forbidden to consume our possessions? The True Lord explains: unjustly.’ Each of us is required not to devour his possessions wrongfully. Man eats to avail himself of what he eats. The True Lord Glorified is He commands you not to spend a single penny of your money except in something that is lawful and honest. This would be the meaning if the verse addressed each person alone. Thus, no one should devour his own possessions wrongfully; rather, he should direct these possessions towards something beneficial that is not forbidden, and that will not incur any torture in the hereafter.

In contrast, if the intended meaning were that no one should devour the possessions of another, we will clarify it via the following example. Let us assume that a student told his teacher: Sir, my pen was here and now it is lost. The teacher then responds to the students: Do not steal each other’s pens’; does this mean that the teacher said that none of them should steal his own pen or rather, he means that no one should steal the pen of another? Therefore, the alternative meaning of do not consume one another's possessions is that none of you should devour the possessions of his brother wrongfully.

How could it be that Allah the Exalted says: ‘…Your wealth…’? And since it is their wealth, then should they not be blameworthy for consuming it? No, the intended meaning is that every one of you should not wrongfully consume his brother’s wealth. So, why does Allah the Exalted not say that instead of saying ‘…your wealth…’? The reason is that the commands ordained by Allah the Exalted are not usually directed towards two groups: one is created to consume people's wealth and another to have their wealth consumed. Rather, everyone is liable to be a consumer of someone else's wealth and, in another instance, to have his wealth consumed. Thus, if I consume the wealth of someone else, another may consume mine. By doing so, I would set an example to the latter who, following my example, came forth and consumed my wealth. It is as if Allah the Exalted says to you: ‘Do not consume one another's wealth wrongfully in order to protect your own wealth.’

Allah the Exalted wants the believers' society to be one entity. Thus, He explains that everybody's wealth is for the interest of all people. Therefore, if you preserve other people's wealth, they will preserve yours. But if you encroach on anyone's wealth, they will encroach on yours. Indeed, in so far as you consume the wealth of someone else, you embolden thousands of people to consume your wealth. Similarly, when you refrain from consuming the wealth of others, it is as though you have not consumed your own wealth.

The word 'consume' in this context means 'to take' because 'eating' is the most important process in life due to its recurring characteristic; you may live in one house throughout your entire life and buy new clothes every six months, but you have to eat every day. When this verse was revealed, the Muslims said: 'we should not consume one another's wealth wrongfully.' Thus, they became embarrassed to eat at each other's houses. Afterwards, the matter was referred to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him who explained that eating the food served to you by your host was not wrongful consuming. Allah the Exalted also revealed a verse stating that there is no blame for someone if he ate in his relatives' or friends' houses. (an-Nur: 61) This verse relieved them of any embarrassment about eating at each other's houses; but when the companions heard the part about wrongful consuming, they said: 'We would not take anything from anyone unless we give him something in return.'

What does al-batil (wrongfulness) mean? It is to take something to which you are not entitled. An example of that would be usury because it means that someone will have a surplus and another who is in need, does not have a principal. How could the needy be asked to repay the principal with an excess to the one who already has the principal?

How could this be admissible? This is the meaning of taking money by usury. The same ruling applies to taking money by stealing, embezzlement, bribes or cheating in commodities. All of them are different forms of wrongfully consuming the wealth of others. When you decide to wrongfully consume someone else's wealth, it is as if you want to unrightfully enjoy the fruits of someone else's labour and, by doing so, you get used to enjoying it. Consequently, your capacity to work declines and you become dependent on misappropriating the wealth of others—coercively and unrightfully. As a result, your labour in life breaks down and you become a jobless person—who will become a bandit. Further, the one who works and exerts effort will start to live in fear because he is forced to pay tribute to bandits, and his labour, consequently, will diminish. If this happened, how would society look like? In this case, society would suffer from distress and difficulties.

Thus, not wrongfully consuming each other's wealth is a command to all Muslims who are ordered not to practice usury, not to steal, cheat, lie, gamble, embezzle, nor to accept bribes because all of these practices are forms of consuming other people's wealth wrongfully. When you reflect more closely on gambling, you will find that it is quite a weird matter. Gamblers claim to be friends with each other as they wait for one another and eat together, while they are actually sitting together waiting for a chance to seize what is in his friend's pocket. What kind of friendship is this?

Thus, when Allah the Exalted commands you not to ever think that the obligations are difficult to be fulfilled because they are onerous, rather, consider not only what the obligations take away by limiting your actions, but also what they give you by limiting others' actions towards you. Allah the Exalted tells you that you must not take the wealth of others so that they may not take yours; therefore, you win and society also wins; it is a win-win situation. When a command is ordained to someone to refrain from stealing, it is indeed a command to all people to refrain from stealing. For this reason, whenever you receive any ruling from Allah the Exalted do not only consider the way in which the ruling may limit your freedom; rather, consider what the ruling has given you by simultaneously limiting other people's demeanour in their associations with you.

Here is an illustration of the foregoing point. When Allah the Exalted strictly forbids you to look at women who are not lawful to you, you must not lay your eyes on the women in custody of others. However, this command is not ordained to you alone; it is a command to millions of people not to lay their eyes on the women who are not in your custody. Thus, when you ponder over the matter, your will realizes that you gain more than what you lose. For this reason, I always say: 'Do not focus on the difficult elements in Allah's obligations or what they take away from you, but always consider what they give you.' If you adopt this viewpoint, you will realize that every obligation that comes from Allah the Exalted is a profit to you. Otherwise, if Allah the Exalted let your hands loose to encroach upon all people, He would also let loose the hands of all people to encroach upon you and your properties—you would be affected more than them. Thus, it is for your interest to refrain from that.

Allah the Exalted excluded trade by mutual consent from wrongful consumption of wealth (an-Nisa': 29). This means that you should not consume others' wealth unless there is a mutual benefit; that is, upon the condition that you exchange benefits with each other as compensation for what you take or give. Trade was mentioned because it is the ring that connects all vocations and professions in this life since the merchant is viewed as the middleman between the producer of the commodity and its consumer. Commodities are circulated through production and consumption, and the production may be agricultural, industrial or even in the form of services. Thus, trade encompasses all of them.

The phrase 'based on mutual agreement' means that the consent of the person is a condition for the determination of what is given as a compensation for the exchanged benefit. Hence, what is appropriated by way of taking advantage of the other party's bashfulness is proscribed and forbidden. For this reason, I say that everyone needs to reconsider and check his faith to see whether or not he has been fair throughout his life in the compensations he has given or taken in money, trade and exchanges, and whether or not they were equal and proportional. Thus, if any of them transpired to be incommensurate with the benefit he had elicited, he has to ponder over the matter so that he may give everyone, who has a right, his due right so as not to slip into the realm that was defined by the Hadith of Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, 'I am just an ordinary man like you, but you resort to me to arbitrate on your disputes. I may be swayed by the arguments and evidence furnished to me by some of you based on what I hear. So let whoever of you whom I have given a right to which another Muslim is entitled to bear in mind that what he has taken is but a piece of fire; he may thus take it or leave it.'(1)

Allah the Exalted then says: '…and do not destroy one another….' (an-Nisa': 29) Here again, a plural is predicated of another plural. He means that you are forbidden to kill your own selves. This is what the one who commits suicide does. Only the one who has found himself enmeshed in a situation from which he does not have means whereby to disentangle and salvage himself, so he commits suicide. We say to this person: 'you have looked at yourself merely as a human being in isolation from a Higher Creator.' But the believer never isolates himself from his Creator; thus, when he is struck by a calamity beyond his capacity, he has to think, 'Am I alone in this universe? No, I have a Lord and, as long as I have a Lord, I have to remember that even if I am not capable, Allah the Exalted is All-Able to do everything. In this manner, he would banish the idea of committing suicide from his mind because the one who does so could not find means to handle the conditions of his life, thus he ends it.

The value of faith is that once you find yourself entangled in a harsh condition and have no means to resolve it, you immediately say: 'Allah the Exalted will not let me down and will provide for my livelihood from sources that never even occurred to my mind. He will also open for me doors that I might have never considered.' In this vein, we have previously given an example to make the meaning more accessible. Thus, we said: 'assume that someone walks on a road and has only one pound in his pocket; he then loses this one pound while having naught else in his house. He gets depressed about losing that one pound. But the one who loses a pound yet he has other five pounds at home, will be less depressed and his calamity would be less distressing. That is why the one who does not have the means to handle his life, has to take it easy and never despair. Why should he kill himself? Allah the Exalted says in a Divine Hadith: 'My servant has himself forestalled Me; I have forbidden him Paradise.' (1)

Are you the one who bestowed life upon yourself? No. For this reason, the One Who bestowed life is the only One Who is entitled to take it back. Thus, whoever commits suicide is not admitted to Heaven because he did not remember that Allah existed. Let us remember the stance of the people of Musa (Moses) peace be upon him when they made their exodus out of Egypt and were pursued by the people of the Pharaoh; what did the people of Musa (Moses) say? They said that they would definitely be caught by the people of Pharaoh. (ash-Shu'ara': 61) This was true since the sea was ahead of them and the army of the Pharaoh was behind them. They said so based on the means available to them and their human conception. But what did Musa (Moses) peace be upon him say? 'By no means' is a negation. But how could Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him say: 'By no means'? Also, what are the things that will support him? He did not say it because of his physical humanity. Rather, he, depending on his firm belief in Allah, strongly declared that Allah would support him and guide him. (ash-Shu'ara': 62)

(1) Related by Al-Bukhari in (Al-Jana'iz)

Almighty Allah orders us not to kill ourselves. (an-Nisa': 29) This means that none of us should kill ourselves due to losing the means to find a solution for our sufferings. This implies that you made yourself out of the Mercy of your Lord, yet if you still believe in your Creator, your distress will be relieved, and in case of facing such situations, you will say 'indeed the Almighty Allah is with me.'

Faith gives you strength and power to confront such difficulties. The saying of Allah '…and do not kill yourselves' (or one another) may refer to another meaning which is to prevent being killed by not throwing yourself into destruction. Since Muslims are only a unit of faith, the Lawgiver issued that 'if you kill someone, you will be killed. So, do not lead your soul to death,' since the legal retribution is admitted. His saying: '…and do not kill yourselves (or one another) ' signifies that you should not do what may lead you to death.

Thus, Allah the Exalted let the people endear themselves to their own souls and not only that of the others; rather, He did not say: 'do not kill in order not to be killed' because He previously told us about the existence of retaliation. (al-Baqara: 179) When the murderer knows that he will be killed, he will keep himself away from doing so.

We also notice that Allah the Exalted orders us to greet one another upon entering houses. (an-Nur: 61) Will I greet myself or the people who are in the house upon my entry? It is already known that a man greets people when he says: 'peace be upon you.' This means peace is granted to them, and then they will reply: 'peace be upon you,' as if you have greeted yourself. It is clear now that Allah the Exalted has regarded the believers as one unit, which means whatsoever happens to a single part will affect the whole.

Therefore, His saying, ‘do not kill yourselves or one another’ means that you should not kill yourselves. Thus, the previous verse may refer to some denotations; firstly, do not lead yourself to commit suicide; secondly, do not throw yourself into destruction by your own free will; thirdly, do not lead yourself to death due to legal retribution; and fourthly, do not kill others since you are one unit of faith; all of you bear the same command; not only one is commanded. Hence, no one is allowed to kill the other. Then, Allah the Exalted concludes the verse by telling us that He is Ever-Merciful to us; it is by virtue of His Ultimate Mercy that we are ordered not to kill one another.

وَمَن يَفۡعَلۡ ذَٰلِكَ عُدۡوَٰنٗا وَظُلۡمٗا فَسَوۡفَ نُصۡلِيهِ نَارٗاۚ
وَكَانَ ذَٰلِكَ عَلَى ٱللَّهِ يَسِيرًا ٣٠

If any of you does these things, out of hostility and injustice, We shall make him suffer Fire: that is easy for God [30] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 30)

The word dhalik (this) is an Arabic demonstrative pronoun translated as ‘this.’ In the singular form, it means that the discourse is addressed from the Almighty Allah to His Messenger Muhammad, and the believers are addressed implicitly. In another instance, He the Almighty says dhalikum (plural form); it indicates that His discourse is directed towards us. (al-Baqara: 232) The word dhalika (that) refers to the preceding verse that prohibits killing oneself or others also refers to the verse dealing with devouring wealth wrongfully. Some other scholars said that this demonstrative pronoun may even refer to the previous verses of the Quran, beginning from the verse that prohibits the son from marrying the women previously married by his father. (an-Nisa’: 22) While others said that it refers to all commands and proscriptions mentioned from the beginning of the chapter until this verse. All these opinions are correct.

Allah the Almighty then speaks about those who do injustice to themselves (an-Nisa’: 30). The Arabic word ‘udwan (transgression) means transcending the limits; this may happen either out of oblivion or wrongfulness. The one who transgresses wrongfully will take others’ rights deliberately. But the one who does so obliviously and without being aware should reconsider his attitude; why so? The reason is that the punishment is severe. Allah the Exalted says that whoever does that aggressively will be cast into the fire. (an-Nisa’: 30) The verb depends on the power of its subject. Thus, when someone says to you: ‘If you do such a thing, my little son will slap you severely’, this will be different from threatening you that a strong youth will do so; why? The reason is that the action derived its strength from the doer himself. Then, who will cause the transgressor to receive the punishment of the hellfire? It is Allah the Exalted Who will make him suffer severely in it.

The Almighty Allah says that this is an easy matter to do because His Decree does not require processing; rather, it occurs immediately. We know that every action that requires processing needs time. Some actions may need an hour, and every minute of it is needed to accomplish part of the task. When the task is divided into sixty parts, such an action may be accomplished in sixty minutes. But, if it needs ten days, then we will tell the person who is entitled to undertake it, ‘Cancel your break times and vacations and divide the work on the time left.’ This is what we call processing because it is related to human beings. But the action of Allah the Exalted is something different. If Allah the Exalted orders something to happen, He would say: ‘be, and it is.’ Thus, every action of Allah is easy for Him because the order gets done by simply saying: ‘be, and it is.’ Allah the Exalted says that creating and resurrecting you is like one single soul (Luqman: 28). He the Exalted explains, ‘I do not create every human being like Adam peace be upon him whom I have created, shaped and then I will resurrect. No. All creatures are like a single soul.’

إِن تَجْتَنِبُوا۟ كَبَآئِرَ مَا تُنْهَوْنَ عَنْهُ نُكَفِّرْ عَنكُمْ
سَيِّـَٔاتِكُمْ وَنُدْخِلْكُم مُّدْخَلًا كَرِيمًا ٣١

But if you avoid the great sins you have been forbidden, We shall wipe out your minor misdeeds and let you in through the entrance of honour [31] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 31)

This verse is one of the eight verses about which Ibn ‘Abbas Allah be pleased with him said: in this chapter of an-Nisa’ there are eight verses that are more beneficial to this Islamic ummah (nation) than everything in the world.' We have said that the first of these verses is the saying of Allah the Exalted that He wants to make it clear for us (an-Nisa': 26); He wants to shower us with His mercy; (an-Nisa': 27) and He wants to lighten our burdens. (an-Nisa': 28) Then, Allah the Exalted says that if someone avoided the great sins, He the Almighty will wipe out his minor misdeeds. (an-Nisa': 31) Avoiding an action does not only mean not to do the action; rather, it means not even approaching any matter that is related to such action. By doing so, the believer would foreclose any possibility succumb to the desire of committing sins or even to imagine it.

These noble verses are considered the best thing for this Islamic ummah because they safeguard the human being against foolish choices that might exist in humans when they do not stick to the Path of Allah the Almighty. If a man was predetermined or preordained to do an action, he would have been relieved from the burden of choice. The difficulties from which humans are suffering are due to taking pride in the privilege Allah the Exalted has bestowed on them apart from all other creatures. This privilege is the mind that Allah bestowed on man to opt for different alternatives, while all other creatures have been content with being subjugated and subservient to do what Allah the Exalted has predetermined them to do, without having any choice of their own. We know that the Allah the Exalted says that the trust had been offered to the heavens, the earth and the mountains, but they failed to carry it, then man took it up out of his foolishness. (al-Ahzab: 72) Thus, man has wronged himself through the state of hesitation whether to follow his whims or to abide by Allah's Commandments, while other creatures which are subjugated and predetermined, do not have to deal with this issue; each one of these creatures undertakes its function automatically and relieve themselves from the burden of making a foolish choice. Therefore, these verses come to comfort man inasmuch as they assure that, if he makes a foolish choice, then Allah the Exalted wants to give him knowledge, forgive his sins and make it easy for him. Allah the Exalted also wants to remove man's bad deeds and forgive him in case of avoiding great sins. All of these are reassuring remarks for the human soul so that it would not despair due to the possibility of making a foolish choice. Thus, Allah the Exalted explains, 'I am your Creator and I know that you are powerless because you always have the choice between two enticing ways:

the way that Allah the Exalted assigns you to follow with the reward He has prepared for the obedient in the Hereafter, and the urgent whims and desires.'

As long as the issues fluctuate between two choices, weakness happens. Thus, Allah the Most High explains, 'I regard this situation in which you are because it is a product of your free choice and I am the One Who endowed you with such free choice.' Since Allah the Exalted bestowed man—who is the best among His creatures—with choice, he has to submit to his Lord in need and love.

There is a difference between the two cases: when something is predetermined to be subservient and so cannot escape what it has been preordained to do, and then it is actually Allah's Attribute of Omnipotence that works here. Yet, this does not give Allah the character of being beloved because being beloved means that the one who loves has the choice whether to obey or disobey; thus, if one offers obedience, he does so out of love. Therefore, Almighty Allah wants a man to prove his love for Him through his obedience. Despite the fact that everyone has the freedom to obey or to disobey his Lord, he will lean towards the side of obedience due to his love of Allah.

After Allah has finished expounding his obligations concerning matters of honours, possessions, blood issues, which include killing oneself etc., He explains to us, 'Do not ever receive the obligations in a way that may cause you to despair about being unable to do them. I will be pleased enough by you upon avoiding the great sins among the bad deeds you may possibly do.' Thus, the time span between two prayers is atonement for whatever bad deeds you may do in between, and if you pray two consecutive Friday Prayers, the period between them will be atonement for the sins you may commit in between. The same applies for the period stretching between two Ramadan months upon the condition that you should not insist on doing the minor bad deeds; why? It is because if you take that into consideration, you should also bear in mind that you may not live long enough to repent to Allah. Accordingly, do not say, 'I will commit the sin and repent later because you cannot guarantee that." It would also be as if you were ridiculing Allah the Exalted.

Allah the Exalted then states that He wipes out the minor misdeeds if the great ones are avoided. (an-Nisa': 31) I have said that the Arabic word kufr means (concealment). The meaning of concealment of the minor misdeeds is that Allah the Exalted will not punish the sinners for committing them; since concealing the misdeeds means waiving the punishment. Similarly, al-ihbat (nullifying) of a reward means making it be in vain. Thus, if someone does something punishable, but avoids great sins, Allah the Exalted will efface his misdeeds, that is, He waives the punishment prescribed for them. By contrast, one may do a good deed that Allah the Exalted does not accept, so it will amount to nothing. Therefore, takfeer (concealment) as I have already said—means waiving a punishment, while ihbat of a reward of someone is to bring it to nothing and it becomes worthless…. (al-Baqara: 217)

This means that they will receive no reward for doing these good deeds because they did it while being heedless about the One Who gives the reward, that is Allah the Exalted. Rather, they were heedful about the created beings, not the Creator. For this reason, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: ‘You have done these good deeds in vanity so that people may say that you have done this.’

You have done this good deed so that people would acclaim you, and they have indeed done so. They said that you are a great benevolent and charitable person. They said that you built a mosque and read the signboard that you have put on the mosque in the midst of a big celebration. Therefore, Allah the Exalted will make these good deeds as dust dispersed. (al-Furqan: 23) You did such charitable things in order to rejoice in the approval and acclamation of other people and what you desired has happened. For this reason, those who did things for charity and then put marble signboard bearing their names should consider their attitude. If each of them is keen to receive a reward from of Allah, he should remove such signboard or hide it, and thus the problem would end. Allah the Exalted likes the one who pays alms to the poor, to the extent that he will be from among the seven kinds of people whom Allah will protect in His shade on the Day when there will be no shade. His Messenger Muhammad described them as, ‘…And a man who has given alms and hid it so that his left hand would not know what his right hand spends.’(1) If you give alms to the poor in charity, why should you reveal and expose the one who accepts such alms?

The word ijtinab (avoiding) means shunning something. That is why some people say: 'so and so avoided me,' which means that when this person met me, he shunned me and turned his back on me. What is intended in His saying, 'if you avoid', is keeping a distance from sins. When Allah the Exalted command you to refrain from something and also commands you, in another way, to avoid it, this indicates that avoidance is more eloquent since it means that you should not even be in the same place along with what Allah proscribed. Allah the Exalted commands us to shun the filth of idolatrous beliefs and practices and to shun false utterances. (al-Hajj: 30) To 'shun' in this context means to keep a distance; why so? The reason is that the sanctuary of Allah is His proscriptions.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'That which is lawful is clear and that which is unlawful is clear, and between the two of them are doubtful matters about which many people do not know. Thus, he who avoids doubtful matters clears himself in regard to his religion and his honour, but he who falls into doubtful matters [eventually] falls into that which is unlawful, like the shepherd who pastures around a sanctuary, all but grazing therein. Truly every king has a sanctuary, and truly Allah's sanctuary is His prohibitions.'(1)

Allah the Exalted also commanded us to refrain from intoxicants, gambling, idolatrous practices and [fortune telling with] arrows. (al-Ma'ida: 90) 'Shunning', in this context, means that one should avoid being present in places where such sinful deeds are committed; lest such presence should distract, seduce or occur before him. Therefore, when you are in a place where intoxicants are consumed Allah the Exalted commands you to avoid it; that is, do not go to such places because when such intoxicants are present before you and you see people drinking them comfortably and happily, you may drink them yourself. But when you avoid these intoxicants and all the gatherings where they are consumed, you will not fall prey to their traps, nor will you give in to their allurements and seductions. For this reason, we have said, 'Avoidance is more eloquent than mere forbiddance.' There are people who justify drinking intoxicants for themselves upon the pretext that there is no text that explicitly prohibits drinking them. We say to each one of them, 'It suffices that drinking intoxicants is associated with the loathsome evil of idolatrous beliefs and practices.'

Allah the Exalted also commands us to shun false gods. (an-Nahl: 36) Shunning false gods does not only mean not to worship them, but it also means not to even try to see them. Accordingly, shunning intoxicants does not only mean not to drink them, but also you should not even be present in the place where they are consumed.

Al-kaba'ir (major sins) is the plural form of kabira (a major sin). As there is a 'major sin,' its opposite would be a 'minor sin' and 'smaller sin'; so what is lesser than the 'major sin' is not only the 'minor sin' because there is a 'minor sin' and there is what is smaller than the 'minor sin' which is the 'negligible sin.' Allah the Exalted states that He wipes out the minor misdeeds if the great ones are avoided. (an-Nisa': 31) 'Misdeeds' in this context refer to the minor and even the smaller sins. But this is a matter over which the scholars pondered and lingered. Thus, they have said that the meaning is that inasmuch as people have avoided committing "major sins", we will entice them to do bad deeds since they may do the minor sins. We say, no. Insisting on doing a minor sin is a major sin. For this reason, do not allow yourself to do minor sins; Allah the Exalted only forgives what you do spontaneously or out of ignorance. Therefore, He the Exalted only accepts repentance from those who committed misdeeds out of ignorance. (an-Nisa': 17) That is, He accepts repentance from those who do bad things without prior planning or reckoning. Afterwards, He the Exalted stated that He will not accept repentance of those who delay it until death overtakes them. (an-Nisa': 18)

Thus, if you insist on committing a minor sin and repeat it, you will turn it into a major sin. But what if we do not manage to avoid great sins and we slip into them? The scholars whom Allah the Exalted made kind and merciful to His creatures maintained that no sin is considered a major one if the sinner repents to Allah. Similarly, no sin is considered minor if one persists in committing it. So, if you want to accept the former statement, you should accept the latter as well—you will have to accept both. There will be no major sin if there is repentance; the opposite of this maxim is that there will be no minor sin if there is persistence in sinning.

When the scholars wanted to define the major sin, they said that the great sin is that for which Allah the Exalted prescribed a torment in the Hereafter. Similarly, it is the deed for which a punishment, such as a prescribed penalty, has been decreed. Thus, the sins for which no prescribed penalty was decreed are classified under those sins that could be forgiven via avoiding major, minor or even smaller sins.

'Amr ibn 'Ubayd Allah be pleased with him was one of the scholars and ascetics of Al-Basra about whom one of the caliphs said, 'All of them pursue a hunt and reward with the exception of 'Amr ibn 'Ubayd Allah be pleased with him ', meaning that all scholars go to the caliphs to take gifts and bounties with the exception of 'Amr ibn 'Ubayd Allah be pleased with him. Hence, people have testified for his integrity and genuineness. That scholar wanted to know what was meant with the 'major sin' and insisted on doing so, not through what the scholars said previously about it. He said, 'I want to know it based on the text of the Quran; anyone who wants to talk to me about what a 'major sin' is should adduce for me a text from the Quran.' When Ibn 'Ubayd Al-Basri Allah be pleased with him went to Abu 'Abdullah Ja'far ibn Muhammad As-Sadiq Allah be pleased with him who was, as we know, the most worthy of being asked because he was the scholar of the household of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, and also because he researched the treasures of the Quran, extracted from it a lot of secrets and lived amid the divine flux of wisdom. Thus, Ibn 'Ubayd Allah be pleased with him said to himself, 'This is the one that I should ask.' Accordingly, after he had greeted him and sat down, he read the saying of Allah the Exalted '…As for those who avoid grave sins and foul acts, though they may commit minor sins…' (an-Najm: 32) He then lapsed into silence. Abu 'Abdullah Ja'far ibn Muhammad As-Sadiq Allah be pleased with him asked him, 'What has silenced you, Ibn 'Ubayd?' He replied: 'I wanted to know the meaning of "major sins" based on the Book of Allah.' Just consider Abu 'Abdullah's confidence in knowing the treasures of the Quran when he said to him, 'I want to know the meaning of major sins based on the Book of Allah the Exalted. Abu 'Abdullah said: 'Indeed! You have come to one of the experts in it' meaning that you have come to someone who knows this definition. He then said: 'the first major sin is "Believing in another God beside Allah the Exalted" because He says that He does not grant forgiveness to the one who associates others in worshipping Him. (al-Ma'ida: 48) Allah the Exalted will also forbid him paradise. (al-Ma'ida: 72) He then added, 'Despairing of Allah's mercy, since only the disbelievers are the ones who despair of Allah's Mercy.' (Yusuf: 87)

Thus, Abu 'Abdullah Ja'far As-Sadiq Allah be pleased with him brought forth the ruling and adduced its evidence. He also added that one who would ever feel secure from the planning of Allah the Exalted because it is only the losing people who would do that. (al-A'raf: 99) The fourth great sin is disobeying and mistreating one's parents since Allah the Exalted, described the one who commits such a sin as being oppressive and bereft of grace. (Maryam: 32) He then added, 'killing a human soul,' as the one who kills another believer will be eternally punished in the Hellfire' (an-Nisa': 93).

In addition, those who accuse the chaste women who are unaware and believing women Allah the Exalted cursed them and prepared a great punishment for them. As for consuming usury Allah the Exalted says: 'But those who take usury rise up on the Day of Resurrection like someone tormented by Satan's touch. (al-Baqara: 275) He then added: 'retreating and escaping during battle.' This may happen when Muslims are attacked by their enemies and as they start marching to defend themselves. Allah the Exalted prepares severe punishment for those who turn their backs to the enemies during battle. There is also devouring the wealth of the orphan because Allah the Exalted stated that the one who devours the orphan's wealth is as if he is devouring fire, and the hellfire will be his abode. (an-Nisa': 10) Also, He mentions committing adultery, adding that fornicators will be punished in double on the Day of Resurrection, and they will be in a state of humiliation forever. (al-Furqan: 68-69) Further, concealing testimony about something one has witnessed; Allah describes those sin- doers as sinful at heart. (al-Baqara: 283) There is also the 'binding oath' which means that someone swears that he did something, while he did not or vice versa; that is, it is not related to something in the future. Those who ignore their pledges in return for little will have no respect in the Hereafter and on the Day of Judgement. Moreover, Allah neither speaks to them, nor will He look at them or purify them. Furthermore, they will have a painful punishment. (Al-'Imran: 77) There is also ghulu which means to deceive and misappropriate regarding spoils of war. Allah has warned the doers of this sin that they will come with what they had misappropriated on the Day of Resurrection. (Al-'Imran: 161) In addition, there is ingesting intoxicants as Allah has coupled it with idolatry. Allah the Exalted states that intoxicants, along with other misdeeds, are acts of Satan, so we must avoid such practices in order to achieve success. (al-Ma'ida: 90)

Furthermore, there is the major sin of abandoning the prayers, since Allah the Exalted clarified that abandoning prayer is a reason for being cast into the hellfire. (al-Muddaththir: 42-43) In addition, included under this category of major sins are breaking covenants and severing the relationships with kinsfolk with whom Allah the Exalted ordered us to maintain good connections. Allah stated that those who do these things will be 'the losers.' (al-Baqara: 47)

Thus, all these are the major sins, based on the explicit statement of the Quran. 'Umar Ibn 'Ubayd resorted to a great scholar who managed to reveal to us the wisdom associated with each great sin. Thus, we should consider the basis of deduction by which the son of Ja'far As-Sadiq responded to his question. He answered him in a very organized and courageous way that allowed him to answer Ibn 'Ubayd immediately: 'yes'; meaning that he had the answer he was seeking. Then, he gives him the answer in an organized manner without much reflection or deliberation. This indicates that the answer had already been fomented and crystallized in his mind since the verses he adduced are not consecutive. Rather, they are picked from here and there (i.e. from different positions in the Quran). This indicates that he lived with the secrets of the Quran. That man grew up in the house of Ja'far As-Sadiq who had set a methodology for the believer so that if anything bad should befall him, he would find its remedy in the Book of Allah the Almighty. He indeed discovered that his fears are the factors that blur man's vision in life; that is, if someone fears something, this often implies that this thing is limited and well known.

I may be afraid of a specific thing, but someone may suffer from anxiety and grief even though he does not know the cause underlying these feelings. He may tell you: 'I am anxious and anguished even though I do not know the reason.' He may have depression and not know the cause. Also, there may be someone against whom a number of people are conspiring and maliciously contriving. There may be a third person who likes the worldly life and wants to possess it all. All of these are the distractions of the human self; you may fear something, lament and grieve about something, and feel pity for yourself because of the cunningness and conspiracy being planned against you, or because you desire a worldly matter. Ja'far is the one who said, ‘I am surprised by the one who fears something and never seeks refuge in the Saying of Allah the Exalted that He is enough for us as a guardian.’ (an-Nisa’: 173)

Consider the method of deducing evidence when Ja'far said, ‘because I have heard Allah the Exalted subsequently say: “…and they returned [from the battle] with the Almighty Allah's blessings and bounty, without having been touched by evil….”’ (an-Nisa’: 174)

Just consider the accuracy and precision of his style and rhetoric. He said, ‘I have heard Allah,’ and he did not say, ‘I have read.’ It is as if when a man reads the Quran, he had to be sure that Allah the Exalted is the One Who speaks. The awe of Allah overwhelms whatever provisional accidents; that is, the one who reads the Quran is reading the words of Allah the Exalted. Thus, the awe and greatness of the Ever-Eternal overwhelms whatever accidental events one may be experiencing, no matter how grave and serious they are. Ja'far Allah be pleased with him added: ‘I am surprised by the one who grieves and is taken over by sorrow and does not seek refuge in the saying of Allah Glorified is He ‘there is no God save You, Glory is to glory! Verily, I have done wrong!’ (al-Anbiya’: 87) Then, he said, ‘I have heard Allah subsequently stated that He answered his prayer and saved him.’ (al-Anbiya’: 88) Ja'far then added, ‘I am surprised by the one against whom people conspired and contrived and did not seek refuge in the saying Allah Glorified is He ‘the one should put his trust in Him.’ (Ghafir: 44) He then added: ‘I have heard Allah the Exalted subsequently saying “He preserved him from the evil of their scheming…’ (Ghafir: 45) He then said, ‘I am also surprised by those who desire worldly gratification and yet do not seek refuge in the saying of Allah Glorified is He ‘there is no power except in Allah the Almighty.’ (al-Kahf: 39) Subsequently, he said, ‘I have heard Allah saying, ‘…Although, you see me less than you in wealth and children, it may be that my Lord will give me (something) better than your garden.’ (al-Kahf: 40)

These are deductions inspired by faith; the deductions here are similar to the ones there. If you consider the deductions that Ja’far made, you will realize that they cover the man’s desires that tend to trespass their limits because Allah's Obligations limit man’s pursuit of lusts and desires. These verses came forth to limit man's audacity and tendency to trespass limits. They start from transgressing the limits of monotheism and go down to severing one's own kinsfolk. These verses cover all aspects of audacity and tendency to trespass limits. The first of these is manifested in polytheism, since Allah the Exalted and says that polytheism is indeed a great injustice. (Luqman: 13) ‘Wronging’ and ‘being unjust’, as we know, both mean ‘to give someone a right he does not deserve or is not entitled to’, so by Allah, is it not the greatest injustice to say that Allah the Exalted has a partner? It is the most egregious, wrongful deed that one may ever commit against oneself. Do not ever think that you wrong Allah the Exalted because our Lord is the Most Sufficient and is in no need of partnership. He says in a Qudsi Hadith(1), ‘I am so self-sufficient that I am in no need of having an associate. Thus, he who does an action for someone else's sake as well as mine will have that action renounced by me to him whom he associated with me.’(2) When you ascribe partners to Allah, you do wrong to yourself because you would be exhausting yourself in a stupid way. Thus, Allah Glorified is He says ‘the one owned by several partners, is not like the one owned by just one owner.’ (az-Zumar: 29) The state of the one who associates partners with Allah is like that of a slave who is simultaneously possessed by ten masters who are not in agreement with each other. Rather, one of them says to him: ‘Go’, while another says: ‘Come’ Consequently, he has exhausted himself. Thus, he wronged himself.

Allah the Exalted states that the people are indeed doing injustice to themselves. (Yunus: 44) Believing in One God makes you submit to only one destination. There will be no commands from any other party and, accordingly, you will have comforted yourself. This is a matter that is supported by actual evidence for Allah the Exalted revealed it in His Quran which is memorized, recited and read by all believers: ‘Indeed there is no deity except Allah.’ (Ta Ha: 14) In response to this statement, a believer would say, ‘These are true words’, while a disbeliever— Allah forbid—would say, ‘This is not a true statement.’ But this statement is conclusive, irrespective of the stance one may take. Let us assume that someone came and took over the universe. He then said, ‘There no deity but me’, so if the one from whom he took the universe were also a deity, the question would be: ‘did that deity know that the universe was taken from him or not?’ If he did not know, this would be a catastrophic deficiency on the part of such deity; and if he did know, what made him stay silently still? Thus, the issue is resolved; this is the problem of believing in more than one deity.

(1) Authenticated saying of Prophet Muhammad wherein he tells us something Allah himself said

(2) Related by Muslim and Ibn Majah based through Abu Hurayra

Hence, believing in the Oneness of Allah comes to relieve and salvage the human being of the bafflement arising from believing in multiple gods. Allah the Exalted is the True Lord and He is the One Who is capable of benefiting and harming. Worshipping one God is analogous to being possessed by one owner. But when you worship multiple deities, you would be like a slave who is owned by a number of masters who are in disagreement.

The second worst great sin after associating gods beside Allah is losing hope of Allah's Mercy. Rawh (mercy) is an Arabic word derived from ra'eha (a breeze). It is as if you are distressed due to the hot weather and then you look around to find an oasis and then, you resort to its shade and its beautiful breeze and take refuge in it. Allah the Exalted bestows this comfort to those who do not lose hope in His Mercy. It thus gives him strength and robustness of faith whereby one can handle the different events of life, since life is a constant state of change, and its events are multifarious. Furthermore, the world and the universe follow various laws in so far as its causes and effects are concerned.

Assume that you have exhausted all means available in your attempt to deal with a particular difficulty, what would one, who does not believe in God Who alone can defy and change the laws of causality, do? He will commit suicide as we have already said.

Thus, loss of hope in Allah's Mercy is the thing that renders His Omnipotence which created the laws, equivalent to these laws themselves.

Hence, if one finds no means to handle a great difficulty, he will despair about resolving it. But we say to the believer, ‘Do not despair or lose hope because you believe in an Omnipotent God Who is greater than the laws themselves. Therefore, the one who loses hope in the Mercy of Allah the Exalted is like the one who denies and suspends the infinity of His Divine Power over universal laws. Allah the Exalted is indeed the Creator of these laws. When man loses hope in the Mercy of Allah, he thus equates Allah the Exalted with the infinity of His Power to the laws that He created. Even if the laws of nature refused things to happen, Allah the Exalted might cause them to happen.

Next, Ja’far has mentioned disobeying one's parents. Parents constitute the first cell in which we grow. Also, they represent the direct cause of your coming to being. Inasmuch as you disobey and mistreat the direct cause of your coming to being, you also disobey and mistreat the first cause of your being; that is Allah the Exalted whom you never saw. Accordingly, respecting your parents and treating them well is incumbent upon you not only because they are the cause of your existence, but also because they raised you when you were young. Thus, you have to obey and treat them well. This prompts and fosters you to return the favour of the one who is responsible for bringing you into being and raising you. When you try to trace the matter to its origin, you should start by raising a question, ‘Who created your father? It was your grandfather. But who created your grandfather?’ Where would you ultimately end up? You will only end at the one who does not have an end; it is Allah the Exalted who created Adam.

Ja'far then mentioned, ‘killing a human soul.’ Killing any being means to demolish and destroy its structure. In this respect, it differs from death which results from natural causes. Death means to die when your bodily structure is sound. But if someone receives a blow on the head, he will die as a result of this blow. This is what is meant by the destruction of a structure whether done through the use of stones, bullets or any other means. Let us read the Quran carefully. Allah the Exalted states that ‘Muhammad is only a Messenger preceded by many Messengers, so will the Muslims leave Islam if he died or was killed?’ (Al-‘Imran: 144).

Death is the deprivation of life without the destruction of the structure. This is only undertaken by Allah the Exalted while killing by destroying the physical structure could be done by anyone. In both cases, the soul only leaves the body upon the will of Allah the Exalted. Thus, if someone is killed, it does not mean that the killer has put an end to his life before he was due to die. No; killing is only a means of destruction of the physical structure created by Allah the Exalted. Accordingly, even if the killer did not destroy the body of the one killed, the latter would also have died. Therefore, the killer is punished because he undertook the act of killing, while knowing that the soul only dwells in a physical structure of certain characteristics—which requires the brain, heart and other parts of the body to be sound. But when someone is due to die, death occurs even if nobody destroys his physical structure.

We have given an example to make this matter more accessible, and Allah the Exalted is above all comparison. We may liken the soul to electricity. You do not know the soul and you have not seen, heard, smelt or tasted it; by which perceptual faculty would you know it? You know that it organizes the life of your entire body. The evidence is that when the soul is taken out of the body, the latter decays. Therefore Allah the Exalted made it a piece of self-evidence in the human psyche to demonstrate His Existence—Who cannot be perceived by any sight—though He perceives everything. You may say: ‘We do not see Allah.’ We say: ‘Yes. Allah the Exalted orders us to reflect upon our souls.’ (adh-Dhariyat: 21)

Allah the Exalted does not want you to only observe and watch the signs in the universe around you. First and foremost, the evidence is all present in you. Where is your soul that runs your body? Where is it? What is its shape? What is its colour? What is its smell? Do you know? No, you do not. Although it dwells within, you do not perceive it, so how do you expect to see Allah the Exalted Who created something that you are incapable of seeing? You expect to see the Creator though you are incapable of seeing one of His creatures. It is part of the Greatness of Allah the Exalted that He is imperceptible through the senses. Allah the Exalted talks about the moment when the soul descends into the body when He formed Adam and breathed into him from His spirit, then He ordered the angels to prostrate. (Sad: 72)

The reason is that this creature will be a full human being. Thus, if we liken that soul to electricity—and Allah the Exalted is above all comparison—

Have you seen it? You have not. Has anyone else done so? Did those who discovered electricity know what it is? No, they did not. They came to know it through its effects. Thus, when we see a light on, we say, ‘Electricity is back.’ When we see a fan running, we also say the same thing. By contrast, when the motion of such machines starts to wane and abate, people say, ‘The thing has stopped moving.’ But if it stops completely, it is said to have died. But this is not the case with the hand because the hand may not move due to paralysis while the one whose hands are paralyzed is still alive. For this reason, bring a mirror and put it in front of the mouth or nose. If you notice vapour on the mirror, this implies that the person is still alive, and his soul still dwells in him. The same holds true for the light bulb when it is broken: the electric power will not serve its function and cause the light bulb to produce light. The reason is that for electricity to work, the light bulb has to be intact. It must be an empty container devoid of all air and is designed in a way that, if it breaks, the light stops shining.

Thus, when we demolish the body, the soul cannot find the proper vessel wherein it can dwell. The same holds true for the electrical lamp; if it breaks, the electricity would still be in the wires, but no light will be seen. However, when you get a new lamp light re-emerges. It is the same with the soul. It does not dwell in the body except if it has certain characteristics. Hence, killing is the evidence supporting the incapability of the killer because by killing his rival, he implicitly testifies that he was powerless before his rival. It is correct that he was capable of killing him, that he did beat him and put an end to his life; but this is a foolish facade of the application of human capability; in reality, it is impotence and powerlessness.

By killing and destroying one’s life, the perpetrator of the crime makes it clear that he is unable to handle or cope with seeing his rival alive, healthy and successful; that is why, (with heavy grudges filling his heart) he will not rest until he takes the life of his rival. Hence, when the killer kills, he provides enough evidence of his own impotence and incapability. If he had known that his killing of another soul is not evidence of capacity and power, but rather, of his powerlessness and impotence, and also his inability to confront the fact of his rival being alive, except by killing him, he would not have killed the latter.

But Allah, The True Lord Glorified is He lays down a system through which the human life is nourished and protected, and consequently safeguarded from wanton killing and destruction so that Allah's plan for man to be His vicegerent on earth would not be hindered or impeded.

We then come to another major sin: slandering married innocent women. We know that preserving and protecting the honour of innocent women is among the key pillars of a sound Muslim society so that the offspring and youth would not suffer from suspicions and disgrace. In any sound society, if no one is subject to unjustified suspicion and degradation, total freedom and happiness will reign. Because of that, anyone, who wants to spread and promulgate corruption and bad deeds, leading to unjustified slandering of innocent women, threatens the foundation of the society. Such act definitely threatens the lineage legitimacy of all individuals, and it also harms innocent people; children are harmed by it without having committed any sin. Allah Glorified is He has said: 'And no bearer of burdens shall be made to hear another's burden….' (Fatir: 18)

After this, Imam Ja'far Allah be pleased with him mentioned another form of major sins: consuming usury. As we know, usury causes an economic imbalance in society by making the rich getting richer at the expense of the needy.

Also, adultery is one of the major sins, as Allah, The True Lord Glorified is He says: 'And do not commit adultery – for, behold, it is an abomination and an evil way.' (al-Isra': 32) Adultery reduces the relation between a man and a woman to a level of mere sexual ravishment and the pursuit of gratification. And this certainly goes against the original relationship between Hawwa (Eve) and Prophet Adam peace be upon him, whom Allah designed and premised with the objective of making women a source of comfort for men, not just an instrument of pleasure or sexual gratification. Therefore, sexual pleasure is meant to be only a reason for achieving the higher purpose of preserving the human species. And man has to bear in mind that the effects of sexual pleasure are quite burdensome, as they involve raising children, whose childhood period is quite long and who are in need of care. If Allah Glorified is He had not associated these burdensome responsibilities with sexual pleasure, people would not be interested in having children.

Also, another major sin is escaping and turning your back to the enemy in battle. The reason is that such negative behaviour of running away in times of war creates an imbalance in the society of believers. Marching or going out for war implies that the enemies of Islam have already raided us; thus, it becomes compulsory for every Muslim to defend the borders of the Muslim land so that the enemies of Islam are not able to take over the lands of Islam, and the Word of Allah continues to be in the highest status therein. Therefore, for a Muslim, fleeing the battlefield is an example of the weakness of faith. For this reason, I would say that it is not a matter of boasting that a person is a believer because if a person were a true believer and deeply convinced of the ultimate goal which he was fighting for, he would not be afraid of fighting knowing that if he gets killed, he would become a martyr, and martyrs are promised tremendous rewards by Allah. Hence, fleeing the battlefield gives a bad example, not only as far as war is of relation, but also because it shakes man's faith and belief. Allah the Glorified and Exalted explained that when a believer engages in war, he ought to desire either of two things, and both of them are good: victory or martyrdom. Thus, Allah Glorified is He has said: 'Say: "Are you, perchance, hopefully waiting for something [bad] to happen to us – [the while nothing can happen to us] save one of the two best things?"' (at-Tawba: 52)

But the believer should lurk and wait for the moment the following words of Allah would come to pass on disbelievers: 'But as far as you are concerned, we are hopefully waiting for Allah to inflict chastisement upon you, [either] from Himself or by our hands.' (at-Tawba: 52) Thereby, Allah, The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted wants the believer to prove the certitude and strength of his belief by sacrificing his or her own life; that is the grand cause behind his upholding to its different aspects because he believes he is going to a better life [in paradise]. However, it does not mean that the True Lord Glorified is He wants the believers to commit suicidal acts except when that becomes necessary for victory. The evidence is the saying of Allah the Almighty: 'For whoever on that day turns his back on them – unless it be in a battle manoeuvre or in an endeavour to join another troop [of the believers] – shall indeed have earned the burden of Allah's condemnation.' (al-Anfal: 16)

Thus, one should not engage in a battle if he is not prepared or if he does not think that he has a chance to win; otherwise, he would just be making a negative impact on the numerical strength of Muslims. So what benefit accrued to us from this? The believer should pursue martyrdom for the sake of two rewards: the first pertains to him, which is heaven; the second pertains to the Muslims and society, which is attainment of security and victory.

After that, Ja‘far Allah be pleased with him mentioned the issue of a ‘hell-bound false oath.’ This actually represents another issue related to the overall degradation of society. The reason is that, as the wording implies, a ‘hell-bound false oath’ dips the one who utters it into hellfire because he takes an oath and swears that something has happened, whereas, in fact, nothing happened, or swears that a particular thing has not happened, when it has. Due to that false oath, things get mixed up and truth gets distorted with lies, and part of its negative effect is that it may affect a judge and render him unable to arbitrate justly on the rights of people. That is why it is important to note that taking a false oath and telling lies—saying that something happened— may lead to harming another person. Further, this will also make it easy for anyone who wants to do injustice to find false witnesses to swear that what he falsely claims and alleges is true. In such a case, people will be filled with a sense of insecurity about life or personal interests.

Then, there comes another major sin, namely ‘misappropriating the spoils of war.’ This means that when the Muslims engage in battles and win, the take the spoils, which we call as-salb in Arabic — enemies’ weapons and possessions. For Allah’s sake, should a person who engages in battle with the sole purpose of collecting the spoils subsequently claim that he fights for the cause of Allah? Does it make sense? This definitely contradicts the essence of fighting for the cause of Allah. Fighting for the cause of Allah has been decreed so that the Word of Allah would be the highest and most exalted. For this reason, Allah, the True Lord Glorified is He says: ‘And it is not conceivable that a prophet should deceive – since he who deceives shall be faced with his deceit on the Day of Resurrection…’ (Al-‘Imran: 161).

We have previously said that whoever misappropriates a cow (a spoil of war), it will come to hunt him on the Day of Judgment, and it will produce a sound. Similarly, if one misappropriates cement, for instance, it will come to hunt him on the Day of Judgment; the same holds true for whoever misappropriates metals or imports bad meat or rotten fish. All of those will have their sinful deeds coming after them on the Day of Judgment.

Then, another major sin mentioned is perjury. This is also one of the main factors that lead to the corruption of society because it does not let the believer feel safe and secure about his rights.

As for practising magic, it is also another major sin that threatens the fabric of society in a way that weakens its strengthsince magic is about mystery, relying heavily on the power the unknown. The reason is that anyone whom magic befalls on never finds any direct or immediate enemy to confront; so this is not a kind of a battle he would know how to prepare for; such attack goes beyond any proper means of defence and protection. For this reason, The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted says: ‘…Although they know, indeed, that he who acquires this [knowledge] shall have no share in the good of the life to come…’ (al-Baqara: 102).

This means that the person who practices magic will not have a share in the Hereafter. But someone may say: If such is the danger ensuing from the practice of magic in a way that it causes the destruction of society and weakens the sense of security, why does it exist? To this person, we respond: Everything is created by Allah, and each creature has a law that governs it. But this law may vary from one creature to another in different degrees and levels. Members of the same species are governed by the same law. When members of the same species are governed by one law that organizes their movement, this means that there will be equal opportunity for every one of them; so you will have an opportunity just like any other member of society in all aspect of life. But if you have an opportunity that another person does not have, this would be a defect and a flaw in the principle of equal opportunity for members of the same species.

Equal opportunity is one of the principles that protect the society because it provides everyone a chance to survive and progress. So what remains is just for everyone to labour and work hard in order to succeed and survive, but using the available means of survival and without tampering with the chances created for others. That is why equal opportunity is indeed a source of mercy for the entire humanity.

For example, the socialist Russia used to be the only super power, and it came from the East. Then, after its collapse, another super power emerged from the West, the United States of America. There are still other countries that are trying to emerge as powerful nations in order to adjust the balance of power; I mean countries like Japan, the united Germany and other countries in Europe are now seeking to form a union aiming to emerge as a superpower as well. All of these efforts are being made to adjust the balance of power, and to guarantee equal opportunity in making use of the God-given resources on earth. What protects the universe from destruction is the sense of control and deterrence. Before any nation thinks of launching a massive evil scheme, it will, first of all, consider what the reaction from other nations will be—and that will certainly deter it from carrying out its evil plan—because it knows the reaction might be even worse than the action. But if there were only one superpower, it might lead to chaos and destruction. Thus, protecting the human species is based on securing the principle of equal opportunity among its individuals. Nevertheless, man is one species and jinn is another. Yet both species have been created by Allah; hence, both have the ability to choose. For this reason, the Quran says: ‘Say: "It has been revealed to me that some of the unseen beings gave ear [to this Revelation], and thereupon said [unto their fellow-beings]: ‘Verily, we have heard a wondrous discourse, guiding towards consciousness of what is right; and so We have come to believe in it. And we shall never ascribe divinity to anyone beside our Lord.’ (al-Jinn: 1-2) When they swore, Allah has said: ‘Just as [we do not know how it happens] that some from among us are righteous, while some of us are [far] below that: we have always followed widely divergent paths.’ (al-Jinn: 11) Thus they (the jinn) are like us humans… But they have a law and we have a law: ’…Verily, he and his tribe are lying in wait for you where you cannot perceive them!’ (al-A‘raf: 27) So, the jinn, according to their laws, are able to see human beings, while the latter do not see them. This shows that their law is less strict than that of humans because the law of each species is based on the germ of how it was firstly composed and created. We, humans, are created from clay; so we have a sensible and dense matter. But the jinn are created from fire. Only plants and animals are created from clay like us. Let us think of an apple, for instance; it is from clay because all its nutrition and elements of its constitution are from the soil of the earth and its fertility. But let us assume you sit on one side of the wall and an apple is placed on the other side. Would you get its taste, smell or even perceive its colour from behind the wall? No, the object that stands between you and the apple, namely the wall, keeps you from availing yourself of it. But assume that there is a fire on the other side of the wall. After a while, you will start to feel the heat. This means that the heat has permeated the wall. Similarly, with regard to the jinn, they are naturally transparent and light, which is essential for their movement. Such transparency and lightness are not in the human nature. For this reason, notice that when the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted wanted to explain this fact to us, He gave us the example of our Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him to whom Allah the Almighty has subjugated the jinn. 'They made for him whatever he wished of sanctuaries, and statues, and basins as [large as] great watering troughs and cauldrons firmly anchored…' (Saba': 13) When Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him convened with his soldiers and the people around him, he said: '…How is it that I do not see the hoopoe? Or could he be among the absent?' (an-Naml: 20) After that, the hoopoe came to him and said: '…I have encompassed [with my knowledge] something that you have never yet encompassed – for I have come to you from Sheba with sure information!' (an-Naml: 22) 'Behold, I found there a woman ruling over them; and she has been given [abundance] of all [good] things, and hers is a mighty throne.' (an-Naml: 23)

All of this is not important. What is important is the statement of the hoopoe: 'And I found her and her people worshipping the sun instead of Allah…' (an-Naml: 24) This is what concerns Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him(1) as a prophet. We have to bear in mind that Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him was distinguished by the fact that he was both a king and a prophet. Accordingly, the hoopoe first addressed the issue of kingship: 'Behold, I found there a woman ruling over them; and she has been given [abundance] of all [good] things, and hers is a mighty throne.' (an-Naml: 23) These are the fundamentals of being a king. But the matter that concerns Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him '…And I found her and her people worshipping the sun instead of Allah…' (an-Naml: 24) As we can see, worshipping and adoring the sun instead of Allah upset the hoopoe even though he was just a bird. The anger of the hoopoe indicates that it is in a way conscious of the issues of monotheism and faith. Then, it says: 'Should they not worship Allah who brings forth what is hidden in the heavens and earth and knows both what you conceal and what you make known?...' (an-Naml: 25). The hoopoe is thus mindful of Allah, the One Who deserves to be adored and worshipped. Also, notice that it (the hoopoe) mentioned 'what is hidden in the heavens and on earth' because its nourishment (as a bird) is always hidden under the surface of the earth, and it has to dig it out.

(1) The story of Bilqis, the Queen of Sheba, and Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him.

The story continued until Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him said to those who were sitting with him: 'O you nobles! Which of you can bring me her throne before she and her followers come unto me in willing surrender to Allah?' (an-Naml: 38) This demonstrates that Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him knew that the Queen of Sheba (Bilqis) was on her way to see him. The meaning of his saying: '…Which of you can bring me her throne before she and her followers come unto me in willing surrender to Allah?' (an-Naml: 38), is that whoever carried this mission would have to travel from Jerusalem to Yemen, unchain the throne, carry it and then bring it to him before the Queen arrived.

By Allah, is there a human law that can make such a thing possible? Never! For this reason, we know that the response was not from a normal human being; rather, it was from a person who knew that the law governing his existence would allow him to undertake that mission. Consequently, Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him said: '…before she and her followers come unto me in willing surrender to Allah.' (an-Naml: 38) This statement gives indication that he knew that Bilqis and her people were on their way. So would a normal human being be capable of going, unchaining the throne and carrying it before the Queen's arrival? No; so, in this context, we can deduce and glean the rationale of the following words of Allah: 'And never concern yourself with anything of which you have no knowledge….' (al-Isra': 36)

In response to the request of Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him one of the intelligent jinn said: 'A powerful and crafty jinn replied, "I will bring it to you before you can even rise from your place. I am strong and trustworthy enough"' Whoever said so is not one of the ordinary jinn. They (jinn) are invisible intelligent beings, but among them there are also those who are powerless and of little of intelligence, like human beings. The one who made the offer made it clear that it was capable of bringing the throne of the Queen before Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him would rise from his seat. So, how much time would that mission take? We do not know. Does that mean Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him would have to linger with the people with whom he was sitting for two or three hours (until that mission was accomplished)? We do not know. All what we know is that it would take as much time as Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him needed to continue sitting with people, waiting for the Queen's throne to be brought to him. However, a man upon whom Allah had bestowed illuminations and knowledge from the Book responded: 'But one of them who had some knowledge of the Book said, "I will bring it to you in the twinkling of an eye…."'

Absolutely, this is not a word that an ordinary being would say, no! We have seen what a powerful demon from among the jinn said: '… "I will bring it to you before you can even rise from your place...."' (an-Naml: 39) But listen to what the one on whom Allah Glorified is He bestowed some knowledge from the Book had said: 'I will bring it to you in the twinkling of an eye….' (an-Naml: 40) For this reason, you have to consider the rhetorical wisdom underling the immediacy with which the Quran described what happened after Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him made this statement: '…And when he saw it truly before him….'

Thus, the throne was immediately brought to him, in a twinkle of an eye. In this respect, what is important for us to heed is that the jinn said: '…I will bring it to you before you can even rise from your place.' (an-Naml: 39) So, this means that it has a certain law that governs its movement and speed. The same applies to a man whom Allah has bestowed with knowledge of the book; he is also tied to a law that governs his capacity and movement. Hence, every species has a law that governs its nature and capacity.

Some people may pause and wonder here, just as some superficial thinkers do, posing this question: Who are the jinn, Angels and this entire hidden world we are talking about here? We say: ‘Do you believe only in what is perceivable? What would you make of microbes that were only discovered after the invention of microscopes? They were always there; but man (being unable to detect them) was completely unaware of their existence. So why cannot one consider that enough evidence of the existence of other (many) things that are not grasped by man’s senses or within his limited power of perception? Can you not see that as a reasonable illustration of (many) unidentified beings that are really in existence though you (man) are yet to have the tool for discovering them? Why? Why do you not take this evidence in support of the existence of species that you do not perceive? Why are you stunned and start to wonder when the Quran talks about these unperceivable species? What is the problem with this?

Later, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him says in the honourable Hadith (tradition): ‘Verily, Satan flows through the (soul of) human beings like blood (i.e. as blood circulates the body through veins).’(1)

We may wonder: Does Satan flow through one’s body like blood? Does it take the form of fluid or what? We say that Satan is a subtle, invisible creature whose being is governed by special laws. By this, Our Lord Glorified is He exposes the ideologies of the atheists and those who do not believe in the Unseen that Allah mentions. For instance, we have made it clear that there are organisms, like microbes that are classified among material species created from clay, but at the same time they are microorganisms. But what does the microbe do? It infiltrates the body, and man is unaware of its presence in his body; subsequently, what does it do to your temperature? What does it do to your body? When Prophet Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him tells you that Satan flows in you just as the blood circulates in your body, this should not take you by surprise; should there be any contradiction? If there is something in your matter that is very minute, you do not know how it infiltrates your body, and you do not even feel it when it enters, but all of a sudden, you see changes in your temperature; it tampers with your body and stimulates the white blood cells to resist it and then excrete pus. What contradiction does this entail?

(1) Narrated by Ahmad, Al-Bukhari, Muslim, Abu Dawud and Ibn Majah

Our Lord Glorified is He left a lot of facts about His material universe unknown to us in order to prove the truth of His sayings about other unknown matters. Allah says: ‘But one of them who had some knowledge of the Book said, “I will bring it to you in the twinkling of an eye….” (an-Naml: 40) The True Lord Glorified is He has made the human being respond to the jinn so that he would not think that Allah reduced its lightness, transparency and speed from its constitutive elements; rather, Allah has made it clear to him that he acquired all these capabilities by the will of the Creator Glorified is He. Thus, ones capabilities and powers are not merely a function of the element that constitutes him or her; they are primarily based on and due to the will of Allah. Allah the Glorified and Exalted has explained that He can make a species that is strong due to the nature of its creation, namely the jinn, subservient to and be governed by humans; thus be subjugated to the latter and obeying his will. Allah Glorified is He did not make this an absolute power for all humans so that anyone who possessed it would not be tempted into vanity inasmuch as it will give him an opportunity that others do not have. This person may also abuse it through the practice of magic. We have explained this when we discussed the words of Allah Glorified is He: ‘They pursued what the devils falsely attributed to the kingdom of Sulaiman (Solomon). Sulaiman (Solomon) was not an unbeliever; it is the devils who are unbelievers. They taught people witchcraft and that which was sent down to Harut and Marut, the two angels in Babylon. But these two taught no one until they had said, “We are but a trial, therefore, do not disbelieve [in Allah’s guidance].” (al-Baqara: 102)

A trial? But why is that? Why would magic be a temptation? The reason is that magic provides unequal opportunity in a sense that a person gains advantages over others. When this happens, there is no guarantee that such power will not be misused to bring harm and dangers unto others; yes, that may happen and will surely lead the perpetrator into hellfire. Hence, Allah Glorified is He says: ‘So men learnt from them that by which they caused discord between a man and his wife; but they can harm none thereby save by the command of Allah; [on the contrary], these people learned that which would harm them and do them no good….’ (al-Baqara: 102)

By this, the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted gives a portion of His Infinite Power to man, who happens to be relatively weaker (in comparison to jinn), and this power enables them to have jinn—which is, on the other hand, stronger than man—subdued and subject to his control. Jinn know this; for this reason, all those who see jinn only do so for a blink of an eye since the jinn cannot retain the form in which it manifests itself. If it embodies a human or an animal, it will be governed by this specific form, and if it is governed by a form and the one who sees it in such a form points a gun and shoots it, he may have it killed.

For this reason, jinn appear for a moment like a sparkling light and disappear. Such is a sign of the Infinite Power of Allah Glorified is He as He gives the lower species—human beings—a capacity to subdue the stronger species—jinn. But lo and behold, this is not in the interest of humans—with potential dangers that might befall them. For this reason, the believing jinn always say that they are contented in how they were created, with the law that governs their existence. The inequality of opportunities may lead us to become tyrants because those who possess an incomparably great power are prone to misuse and abuse this power against other people. The one who casts a charm to make a woman hate her husband or a man hate his wife is the one who has the power to dispel such a charm; however, he may not want to do that because it is in his interest that such situation continues (to boost his ego).

In that case, for one to be able to overcome such temptation—of thinking that he can manipulate others or that others cannot do any harm unto him—one has to always recall the words of the True Lord Glorified is He '…but they can harm none thereby save by the command of Allah.' (al-Baqara: 102) Magic indeed exists, as the Quran has explicitly stated, but you have to know that such a power is not inbuilt in magicians, nor something peculiar to them. If Allah Glorified is He had not willed that harm might befell a man through magic, that magic would not work. Also, if knowledge of magic becomes rampant in a society, this will lead to a problem—in the sense that many would be tempted into doing bad things. But let us make this clear: whoever follows magicians gets himself adapted to resorting to them to unravel charms or to cast spells on rivals; that is, he has become so enchanted by magicians, that he will lead a very murky life full of sadness and grief as per the words of Allah Glorified is He: 'Yet [it has always happened] that certain kinds of humans would seek refuge with certain kinds of jinn: but these only increased their confusion' (al-Jinn: 6).

It is true that the jinn are capable of practicing magic, but magic only increases the toil and burden of the one who practices it. That is why every believer should protect himself by the prayer: 'Allah you have made some of your creatures capable of magic. However, You have reserved for Yourself the permission to harm; may You forbid and protect me from those whom You have enabled by the power You have reserved for Yourself.' If the believer says this prayer, he will not fear magicians, and they will not have access to him. They only have power over the weak. Magic engenders inequality in opportunity, segregates people and leads to the disruption of the social balance.

Now let us turn to another major sin, which is refusal to pay obligatory alms (zakat). When Allah the Glorified and Exalted asks us to pay alms, He draws our attention to the fact that we are not paying anything that actually belongs to us. Everything belongs to Allah. For instance, the 'intellect', used by man to plan, was created by Allah; the faculties, through which man performs different kinds of work, are created by Allah, and the land on which you work or the craft you practice is also created by Allah. Thus, everything comes from and returns to Allah. However, despite this fact, Allah made it clear that He will respect man's work, but he has to give to his poor fellow brothers (in charity) some of what Allah has conferred upon him.

Someone may say that since Allah is the Lord of all, why does He make someone poor? We respond that He does so in order to show that change is characteristic of our world, and also to remind the rich that poverty may one day befall them as well; it is also a reminder to the strong that weakness may befall them.

This issue gives a perfect illustration of the (divine) cosmic order through which the heart of the wealth gets imbued with mercy and compassion towards the needy, helping him with alms and charity. Hence, if the duty of alms-giving is not properly observed, its negative effect fills the entire universe in the form of economic disorder, in a way that we all see now. For this reason, all the forms of hunger and starvation around us are a reflection of people not observing their duty of paying alms; this also applies to other forms decadence and suffering we see in society; it shows that people do not abide or adhere to the Path of true teachings of Allah because our Lord fashioned the entire society on the basis of a divine system that guides equal opportunities so that any deficiency in a specific part should be made up by another part. By this, if what happens is a sweeping poverty here and there, then you know that it is a result of people not been true to the due right of Allah.

After this, Imam Ja'afar as-Sadiq Allah be pleased with him talked about the major sin of 'abandoning prayers.' As we know, prayers stand as a means of pronouncing of our permanent allegiance and loyalty to the One God, Allah. You, as a Muslim, profess that there is no god but Allah and that Muhammad is His Messenger; and you do that only once in your life. The same applies to the duty of paying alms (to the needy), if you are financially capable; you also do that once a year. Further, you perform Hajj (pilgrimage to Mecca) once in your lifetime; and with regard to Ramadan fasting, you, as a Muslim, observe the fasting only one month of the year. It is worth mentioning that, if you are ill, you are exempted from fasting, and you may be relieved of this religious duty entirely if you suffer an ailment from which there is no hope of recovery. One may not fast either, if he is too old for it. Moreover, if you are poor, you do not pay the alms; you are exempt from it. Furthermore, you are exempt from performing pilgrimage if you are financially incapable.

Hence, here we have three pillars of Islam from which a Muslim is given exemption (once the necessary conditions are met). There remain two other pillars of Islam: professing that there is no god but Allah and Muhammad is His messenger and prayers. It suffices for a Muslim to make the declaration of faith once in his entire life. What is then left of the pillars of Islam? It is prayers. For this reason, Prophet Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him said: 'Prayers are the foundational pillar of Islam.'(1) Thus, abandoning prayers means rebellion against the aspect of showing servitude and loyalty to Allah Glorified is He as He ordained it five times a day and decreed performing it in group on Friday, every week. Why so? This is intended so that all servants of Allah see each other as true servants and His worshippers. Thus no one ought to worship Allah in secret, preventing others from seeing him. All of us prostrate to Allah and we have to pronounce our allegiance to Him. When we quit prayers, such declaration of allegiance to Allah ceases to exist.

(1) Narrated by Abu Naimim Al-Fadl ibn Dikin based through 'Umar. This Hadith is hasan (good). It is narrated by Al-Bayhaqi in (Shu'ab Al-'Iman). However, the phrasing was 'imad instead of 'amud—the Arabic word in the above Hadith (prophetic tradition) translated as pillar. But his relation is also through 'Umar, and it is considered weak.

It may seem strange that Allah Glorified is He ordained prayers in a sense that you have to go to Him five times a day, by means of commands and assignments, and that if you fail to go to Him (observing prayers), you will be sinning. But the fact is that He does not close His door; go to Him at any time, at any place, and you will find Him giving you attention. Nevertheless, you ought to stand in front of Allah fully comprehending of His supreme Majesty and Honour. We have said before that, if you need to meet a person of high authority in this world, you will always have to write a request beforehand; then you set an appointment, and one of the person's aides asks you about the subject you want to discuss with his superior. After all this rigorous arrangement—and you have eventually managed to meet that person— he may pause and end the meeting and discussion at any time. But Allah the Almighty does not treat us this way. You may go to Him at any time and stay in His presence for as long as you wish, and He will never end the meeting unless you end it. For this reason, they say:

'It is enough glory for me that I am a servant to a Lord

Who entertain me (accept me in His presence) without any prefixed appointments

He is most Glorified in His sanctity

But I can meet Him whenever and wherever I like'

It is true that Allah Glorified is He commands a Muslim to meet Him (observing prayers) five times a day, but He never restricts His time of meeting with his servants, He leaves His door open for a servant to meet Him at any time. We have previously explained—and to Allah belongs the loftiest examples that we can think of—let us assume that a product is examined by its manufacturer five times a day; would such product have any defect? No.

Similarly, you are examined by your Creator and Manufacturer five times every day. Any ordinary product gets fixed by its manufacturer using a wire, a screw or a compass to adjust its components. But in your case, you are a creature fashioned by Allah the Almighty and your Lord is Unseen; thus, He fixes you in the way He thinks is most appropriate.

After all we have discussed about the major sins, there remains: dishonouring one's covenant and alienating his kinsfolk. Dishonouring one's covenant makes people lose trust and confidence in each other, and this makes doubt and mistrust widespread in the Muslim community, thus filling hearts with rancour and animosity. Promises may be enough to solve the problem of the needy. If a financially capable person tells someone who is incapable: 'I promise you', and then he honours that promise, the latter will trust him. But if a debtor promises to settle a debt with the creditor, and then fails to honour that promise, the other (the creditor) will not believe him anymore. However, if he honours his promise, and then keeps doing that, promising and honouring the promise again and again, he will be become a trustworthy person, and everything the people have will be his. For this reason, people say: 'One who takes and gives (loses nothing); he ultimately possesses everything.'

Then, we turn to the second part of the major sin, the alienation of one's kinsfolk. Allah the Glorified and Exalted derives the Arabic name for kinsfolk (ar-rahim) from His own Name in Arabic (a*r-Rahman*), meaning the Most Compassionate. Allah Glorified is He said in the Qudsi Hadith: 'I am the Compassionate. I have created the womb and assigned it a name derived from My Own Name. Whoever relates to it, I relate to him, and whoever alienates it, I alienate him'(1)

We all know the story(2) of the Prophet's companion, Muʿawiyah Allah be pleased with him, when his aide-de-camp came to him and said: 'O Leader of the Faithful, there is someone at the door who says that he is your brother.' Muʿawiyah Allah be pleased with him then surprisingly asked his butler: 'Which of my brothers? Do not you know my brothers? The butler responded: 'He says that he is your brother.' When the man walked into the room, Muʿawiyah

---

(1) Narrated by Ahmad and Al-Bukhari in (Al-Adab Al-Mufrad) and Abu Dawud, Al-Hakim based on a relation by 'Abd Ar-Rahman ibn 'Awf

(2) The story of the man who claimed to be the brother of Muʿawiyah Allah be pleased with him

Allah be pleased with him asked him: Are you my brother? He said: ‘Yes.’ Muʿawiyah Allah be pleased with him then said: ‘Which of my brothers are you?’ The man replied: ‘I am your brother from Adam.’ Muʿawiyah Allah be pleased with him then said ‘This is a much severed bond of kinship of which I was not aware; indeed, I will be the first to honour and relate to it.’

These are the major sins that Imam Ja‘afar As-Sadiq Allah be pleased with him has mentioned. Each of them may cause the destruction of the entire society. Every major sin demolishes an aspect of society, and this something alien to the Islamic faith, which lays down a path that if we follow, we will all live in peace; and Islam caters for us to live in peace and prosperity. Thus, if you, Muslim, commits one of those major sins, you have to bear in mind that, in doing so, you are actually shaking one of the pillars of society, and that will definitely affect its state of security and peace. For this reason, Allah Glorified is He says: ‘If you avoid the great sins which you have been enjoined to shun…’ (an-Nisa’: 31). If we examine the phrase ’…which you have been enjoined to shun…’ we will be able to understand the basis of all virtues; i.e., removing deficiency and making way for perfection. Accordingly, before you enact perfection through the commands, you have to preclude deficiencies through proscriptions. For this reason, they say that purifying should precede beautifying.

‘If you avoid the great sins which you have been enjoined to shun, We shall efface your [minor] bad deeds…’ (an-Nisa’: 31). Here, the Arabic word kufr (which means ‘efface’ in English) refers to the act of ‘concealing and covering’ because the Arabic origin of the word ‘efface’ mentioned in the verse from Quran means ‘veil’ or ‘concealment.’ We have said before that the phrase ‘effacement of sins’ means ‘suspension and relief from punishment’, whereas its opposite can be inferred from the Arabic word ’Ihbat which means ‘depression’ and leads to losing the reward, giving the connotation of a negative conduct that leads to a bad consequence. Allah says: ’…and shall cause you to enter an abode of glory’ (an-Nisa’: 31). This means that Allah is addressing His servants saying that He will not only exempt you from torture, but He will make you enter paradise which is qualified here as an ‘abode of glory.’ This can be further attested to by what Allah Glorified is He says in a different verse: ‘For those who persevere in doing the good there is the ultimate good in store, and more [than that]…’ (Yunus: 26).

Thus, we can understand from the previous verse that not only that Allah would save His believers from punishment (for keeping away from major sins), but He will also admit them into 'the abode of glory.' For you to comprehend what 'abode of glory' means, it is better to know that the nature of this abode of glory will be in par with the greatness and capability of the One Who admits people in there. So, imagine an abode of glory prepared by Allah the Almighty; how will it look like? Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him quotes Allah Glorified is He in a Qudsi Hadith saying: 'I have prepared for My righteous servants what no eye has seen, what no ear has heard and what no heart has ever conceived. So recite if you wish: No person knows what is kept hidden from them of delights of the eye as a reward for what they used to do.' (as-Sajda: 17)(1)

Then, this picture is transformed into a new shape in which, according to Allah's Will, there is a design to make balance among the members of the human species, and the main goal is to provide protection for them from any harm or danger. Therefore, Allah Glorified is He wants to establish a balance and faith-based harmony between the two kinds of humans; as we know, humans are of two kinds: male and female, and the species are only divided into homogeneous individuals when they share common traits and characteristics; otherwise, they would not be able to interrelate. Hence, it is clear that the aspect of homogeneity is what creates the bond in a single species that comprises two kinds, but since the same species has been divided into two kinds, then each must have a mission. Males and females are the two kinds of the human species. The male and female kinds share common sexual needs; however, they differ in other needs respectively. Each kind is then divided into individual members. Individual members are not replicas; rather, they share features that are common to all members. In addition, every individual may have his own talent, leadership and adeptness in a certain field. This is how integration is accomplished among members of the human species.

Since the human species is divided into two kinds, men have their own special characteristics and so does women. Allah Glorified is He did not make males and females equal, not even in their body structure. It is true that their general body structure is the same: head, trunk and legs. But Allah distinguishes each kind by certain characteristics: men have their own special shape and so do women. Therefore, to those who call for equality between men and women, we say that a woman has her own special structure and constitution just like the man has his own structure and special constitution. Thus, if you equate them, you will assign to women areas of specialty that belong to men, while men will not be able to share what naturally belongs to women. That is, the inherently female activities would not be completed, and nobody would perform them. Thus, you burden the woman with what she will not be able to endure; therefore, you will be wrongful because you would be causing her more suffering.

(1) Narrated by Al-Bukhari and Muslim

In the process, Allah Glorified is He sometimes creates a new species; and in other instances, He divides a single species into two kinds. Hence, He wants us to pay attention: each kind has its own mission, but it shares a common feature with the other kinds. But what is it that is common among males and females? Both of them are humans; each is required to have belief and faith, and neither should dominate the other as far as his or her creed is concerned. Both are equal in this regard; no one should impose a creed on the other. Allah the Glorified and Exalted gave us an example of the personal differences between females and males with regard to primary matters related to faith. Further, this plays a different role in secondary matters related to rulings. Allah Glorified is He says: 'For those who are bent on denying the truth Allah has propounded a parable in [the stories of] Noah's wife and Lot's wife: they were wedded to two of Our righteous servants, and each one betrayed her husband; and neither of the two [husbands] will be of any avail to these two women before Allah when they are told [on Judgment Day], "Enter the fire with all those [other sinners] who enter it!' (at-Tahrim: 10)

Both were Messengers of Allah. However, they could not persuade their wives to follow the path of monotheism. This strengthens the fact that every human being is granted a right to the freedom of belief and thought, and this right is fundamentally inalienable. Allah, The True Lord Glorified is He also says: 'And for those who have attained faith, Allah has propounded a parable in [the story of] Pharaoh's wife as she prayed, "O my Lord! Build for me a mansion in the paradise [that is] in nearness to You, and save me from Pharaoh and his doings, and save me from all evildoing folk!"' (at-Tahrim: 11)

The Pharaoh, who claimed to be a god, could not force his wife to abandon her faith. Allah, The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted has said about her: '…she prayed, "O my Lord! Build for me a mansion in the paradise [that is] in nearness to You, and save me from Pharaoh and his doings…' (at-Tahrim: 11).

Thus, being a male or female makes no difference in matters of faith since these matters involve reasoning and thinking. A woman may come up with a brilliant idea that a lot of men are not able to come up with. A good example is the wife of Prophet Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him Umm Salamah Allah be pleased with her, and her stance on the Treaty of Hudaybya. Some of the Companions of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him were upset about the terms of the treaty which Prophet Muhammad wanted to conclude with the pagans of Mecca. Among those(1) Companions was 'Umar Ibn Al-Khattab Allah be pleased with him who said: 'How could we accept to be in an inferior position even though we have faith in Allah and embrace His religion?' But the Prophet's Companion, Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him answered him: 'Watch your tongue 'Umar, do not forget that it is Prophet Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah, you are addressing. At this point, the mind of Prophet Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him got filled up with a sense of discomfort by what he noticed—that his companions could not grasp the hidden meaning of his stance on the agreement, including 'Umar Allah be pleased with him known for his fiery zeal and passion for his faith; he could not help giving vent to a strong agony in his heart—and the Prophet was very sure the Companions, out of their love for Islam, just did not want to stoop down to the pagans of Mecca. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him went away —being troubled— and found Umm Salamah Allah be pleased with her and said to her that the companions, being too depressed for how the treaty played out, failed to carry out his commands: 'See how the companions behave; do you not see the people, I commend them and they do not follow my orders, even though they hear my words clearly and look me in the face?' She then replied: 'Muhammad, Messenger of Allah, do not blame them for they are concerned about a great thing: the toil you have incurred in the reconciliation matter and their return without a victory. Go out to them but do not say a single word to any of them until you slaughter a sheep and offer it as sacrifice to Allah, and then call upon your barber to cut your hair.'

(1) The story of the deliberation between 'Umar ibn Al-Khattab and Abu Bakr As-Siddiq Allah be pleased with both of them during the treaty of Hudaybya

Yes, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had already signed the Hudaybya peace treaty and the matter was over, but Umm Salamah's stance Allah be pleased with her was a reflection of the mercy of Allah on the companions who protested against the terms of the treaty endorsed by Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him; in the sense that she, in a very intelligent manner, calmed down the situation. Then, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him approached the Companions and clarified to them his stance, saying: 'You may enter Mecca and find there people you do not know they are Muslims because many of them were hiding their faith from the disbelievers; [which means that] a house of a disbeliever may possibly be sheltering a Muslim [and you do not know]. [So if you go there armed to the teeth and ready for war,] You may end up killing Muslims inadvertently, and then be stricken with shame and disgust by how the outcome of the situation, something you will definitely hate and not be able to cope with, as Allah the Glorified and Exalted has said: '…And had it not been for the believing men and believing women [in Mecca], whom you might have unwittingly trampled underfoot, and on whose account you might have become guilty, without knowing it, of a grievous wrong – [had it not been for this, you would have been allowed to fight your way into the city: but you were forbidden to fight] so that [in time] Allah might admit to His grace whomever He wills. Had they [who deserve Our Mercy and they whom We have condemned] been clearly discernible [to you], We would indeed have imposed grievous suffering [at your hands] on such of them as were bent on denying the truth.' (al-Fath: 25)

The phrase 'been clearly discernible [to you]' on which the Arabic word tazayalu means if the believers (new Muslims) were recognizable and could be distinguished (from among the disbelievers in Mecca), it would have been much easier for the Muslims to punish the disbelievers severely. Hence, that is how Allah explained to the Prophet Muhammad's Companions the wisdom (and some of the hidden objectives) behind the Prophet's stance on the treaty of Hudaybya, and then everybody was content. Now, back to the disposition of the Mother of Believers, Umm Salamah, on this matter, this is proof that Allah does not forbid or preclude that women may have reason and mature thinking. For this reason, we find that the Quran asserts in the story of the Queen of Sheba (Bilqis) what she thought about the man who was coming to shake the foundations of her kingdom, and whether or not he was seeking to be the ruler. Thus, Allah the Almighty has related in the Quran that she said:

‘When the Queen had read Solomon’s letter, she said: ‘O you nobles! A truly distinguished letter has been conveyed unto me. Behold, it is from Solomon, and it says, ‘In the Name of Allah, the Most Merciful, and The Dispenser of Mercy. Do not put yourselves above me, and come to me in submission to Allah.’ She added: ‘O you nobles! Give me your opinion on the problem with which I am now faced; I would never make a [weighty] decision unless you are present with me.’ (an-Naml: 29-32) Now, what was the reply of her chieftains? They said: ‘No. This is your call.’ As the Quran has recounted their statement: They answered: ‘We are endowed with power and with mighty prowess in war – but the command is yours; consider, then, what you would command.’ (an-Naml: 33)

Men of war, as we know, always follow the chain of command when it comes to issue of waging wars. The final decision to engage in wars lies in the hands of heads of state, i.e. the commanders-in-chief (and high-ranking military commanders) who do not take the issue of war very lightly. No matter how powerful the nations are in regard to their military capabilities—soldiers and their commanders normally wait for a command to come from above their superiors— they are the sober politicians and statesmen who have to ponder over the ramifications and consequences of war. Therefore, in this context of the Queen of Sheba’s story, we hear the commanders of the army saying to Queen Bilqis: ‘…We are endowed with power and with mighty prowess in war – but the command is yours….’ (an-Naml: 33) So they left the whole matter (the final decision) to her, and (you know) she happened to be a woman! She deliberated over the issue and said: ‘I would try and examine him to see whether he is after taking over the throne or he is a man of religion.’ Then, she sent him a present. The Quran related to us what Prophet Sulaiman

(Solomon) peace be upon him said when he received the present: ‘Do you people mean to add to my wealth? But that which Allah has given me is [so much] better than all that He has given you! Nay, it is [only such as] you that would rejoice in this gift of yours!’ (an-Naml: 36)

The Queen of Sheba (Bilqis) then realized that Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him did not want to usurp her power and kingship; rather, he wanted to relay a message to her. Accordingly, she said: ‘I will go to him and convert to Islam. Here you have to note the efficacy of the rhetoric of the statement of the Quran when it depicts the faith of a queen who said: ‘…I have surrendered myself, with Solomon, unto the Lord of all the worlds!’ (an-Naml: 44)

This means that she had completely submitted to the will of Allah and joined Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) in being a servant of Allah. This is an incredible moment of faith at its best—submission to Allah in sincere servitude takes away grudges from hearts. Another important point is that the Queen of Sheba (Bilqis) was a woman whom Allah Glorified is He blessed with sound mind and intelligence. When she went and found that her throne, left in her country, had been brought to Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him by one of his aides blessed with knowledge of the book of Allah—not only transported there, but also completely installed—she was taken by surprise and confusion. They said to her: ‘Is this how your throne is?’

‘And so, as soon as she arrived, she was asked: "Is your throne like this?’ (an-Naml: 42) She replied courteously and diplomatically saying:: "It is as though it were the same….’ (an-Naml: 42)

So despite the fact that she was a woman, Allah Glorified is He did not deprive her of having insightful thought. For this reason, we should not (indulge in any act of sexism and) claim that women do not have intellect (as if this blessing were confined only to men). The important thing for a woman is to know that she has certain limitations related to her gender. Thus, if she notices that she lacks something that a man has, she should not consider that a defect in her, for she has qualities that men lack; she is even physically different from men. For example, a man is naturally tough and strong, whereas the woman is, by nature, characterized by being soft, delicate and flexible; this is in addition to her being filled with immense passion and overflowing tenderness. In contrast, a man is inflexible, decisive and resolute; accordingly, each gender is set for the accomplishment of a certain mission. Thus, no one should say he is inadequate in a certain aspect (and get depressed for that); no, he should rather know that he is blessed in other areas where many people are deficient and inadequate.

Religion, then, comes forth to clarify to the believers that men are forbidden to wear silk, whereas women are allowed to; the latter are also allowed to wear gold, which is also forbidden for men. What a great sign of being pampered (for women)! So, as we have already said, Allah Glorified is He forbade men from wearing silk and gold, but He allowed all of that for women. Moreover, Islam requires (as the main objective of marriage) for women to be a source of comfort for men. The man is naturally created to toil and cater for his family; that takes him around to work and make ends meet. Then, he comes back home and is met by his wife with tender loving care. The one who sharpens the sword is as important as the courageous fighter who uses it to strike; each has a function and a role that complements the other's function and role. The same holds in the case when a man enters his house to find his life fully organized due to his wife's exertion and effort; he feels comfortable and thanks her for sharing the burdens of life.

Allah (The True Lord) Glorified is He subsequently says:

وَلَا تَتَمَنَّوْا۟ مَا فَضَّلَ ٱللَّهُ بِهِۦ بَعْضَكُمْ عَلَىٰ بَعْضٍ ۚ لِّلرِّجَالِ نَصِيبٌ
مِّمَّا ٱكْتَسَبُوا۟ ۖ وَلِلنِّسَآءِ نَصِيبٌ مِّمَّا ٱكْتَسَبْنَ ۚ وَسْـَٔلُوا۟ ٱللَّهَ مِن
فَضْلِهِۦٓ ۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ بِكُلِّ شَىْءٍ عَلِيمًا ﴿٣٢﴾

Do not covet what God has given to some of you more than others – men have the portion they have earned; and women the portion they have earned – you should rather ask God for some of His bounty: He has full knowledge of everything [32]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 32)

Consequently, Allah the Glorified and Exalted created the universe and all the species it comprises; each genus encompasses two or more species, and each species includes individual members. Accordingly, if you know that a genus comprises two species, you have to know that they share the qualities that define the genus and differ in the specific requirements of each species, which makes each one of them distinctive; otherwise, if they were identical, there would not be two species in the first place. The same holds true for individuals. Let us take matter, for instance; matter is a general material divided into different elements, and each of those elements has its respective function. For example, if we want to construct a building, the construction will require sand, cement, steel and tools. That is, all those items are ingredients necessary for building; however, each has its own function: cement has a function, plaster has a function, sand has a function, stones and pebbles have functions and none of them can replace the other (considering an ordinary construction). The human species comprises of two kinds: the male, represented by men, and the female, represented by women. They share same characteristics of the human species; however, (in their own individual form) they are different inasmuch as they represent different kinds. Thus, it would be difficult for you to substitute one kind for the other (it may not be a perfect result).

So, since we know that Allah Glorified is He has created two kinds for the human species, it would be absurd if you said that one kind must be identical to the other kind. This is also true for time. Time is the condition for the possibility of any event or occurrence; it means that every event and accident must occur in a certain time; further, every time period has certain events that befit it. For instance, daytime is meant for an event that naturally occurs in it. Similarly, night is the period of time suitable for particular actions, events, etc. For instance, the night is the time for rest and relaxation. By contrast, daytime is the period of time suitable for things related to work and action. If you try to reverse this order, you will be disrupting the nature of things and attempting to put together two opposites.

We have explained that Allah Glorified is He uses some issues we agree on (that is, common among people and with no ambiguity) to explain to us about something we disagree on. It is as if He is telling us that the solution for our disagreement lies in what you agree upon. There is no disagreement, for example, on the fact that night is the time for seeking tranquillity, comfort, respite and quietness, and that daytime, by contrast, is for action and movement. All people do this. So Allah the Glorified and Exalted explains that time sets the condition and context for an activity because activities differ from each other. But does this mean that days and nights are opposites and antithetical poles or are they rather complementary?

They are indeed complementary; the reason is that the comfort one enjoys at night is intended to guarantee the correctness of the activity of the daytime. You sleep and rest to resume your activity and work anew. Thus, the night activity helps you to accomplish the daytime missions. If someone stays up all night, he will not be able to work the next day. Accordingly, what enables a person during the day? It is the rest he gets during the night. Thereby, the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted, has explained that any matter that people unanimously agree on, be it religious or not, is enough to help us solve the riddles of things we disagree on. For example, if you disagree about males and females and whether or not they should be perceived as equals with regard to work, activity and gender, we will respond: No, you should try to understand this (divine rule) through what we have said about (the law governing) time on which there is a general consent. Thus, take what you have agreed upon as evidence in support of—and for you to fully comprehend—what you disagree on. For this reason, Allah Glorified is He has given the example: 'Consider the night as it veils [the earth]…' (al-Layl: 1). When the night veils the earth with darkness, it brings about tranquillity and peace. Afterwards, Allah Glorified is He has said: 'And the day as it rises bright!' (al-Layl: 2)

By contrast, when the sun rises, motion and activity start. Then, Allah Glorified is He brought forth an analogous—but different— pair of integrating opposites, and then He has said: 'By (the mystery of) the creation of male and female; -Verily, (the ends) ye strive for are diverse.' (al-Layl: 3-4). This means that every species has a mission to undertake. Thus, we know that the human species comprises two kinds: males and females, and both share common characteristics and functions. Each of them shares the attribute of being humans who enjoy the right to dignity and the freedom of belief. Hence, no man should force a woman to embrace a particular creed. We have given the example of the wife of Prophet Nuh (Noah) peace be upon him the wife of Prophet Lut (Lot) peace be upon him and the wife of the Pharaoh.

Thus, their shared attribute—between males and females—is the freedom of belief. No one should try to dominate the other. Also, each one enjoys the freedom of reasoning about different missions. We know how Umm Salamah Allah be pleased with her advised Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him during the Treaty of Al-Hudaybya, and how she managed to save all Muslims (the Prophet's companions) from a horrible situation —with Allah, through her counsel, granting them relief from division and depression. We also learnt the story of the Queen of Sheba (Bilqis), who was able to undertake an issue for which all men abnegated responsibility. Thus, women can reason and have their own thought. Accordingly, even before the emergence of Islam, there were women who had authentic opinion and possessed the wisdom of admonition especially with regard to missions peculiar to their nature and characteristics.

For instance, history(1) tells us about the king of Kinda. He heard about the beauty of a woman called Umm Iyas bint 'Awf ibn Mahl Ash-Shaybani and wanted to marry her. So, He summoned a woman from Kinda, called Isam, who was characterized by politeness, eloquence and reasonableness. He told her to go and find out all she could about the Bint 'Awf; then she was sent to engage the young lady. When she went to the mother of Umm Iyas, whose name was Umama bint Al-Harith, and notified her of the mission she came to accomplish, the mother called upon the daughter from her tent and said to her: 'This is your aunt. She came to discuss an affair pertaining to you, so do not hide from her anything she would like to examine, whether related to your physical appearance or your manners, and speak to her about whatever she asks you.' When Isam sat alone with the girl, she did as her mother instructed her. She revealed to Isam all her good characteristics; so the woman uttered her famous statement: 'When eyes get naked, deception evaporates." This statement (in its original Arabic form) later became a famous adage, meaning that one gets plain truth, with no deception, whenever everything is revealed and can be discerned with naked eyes. Isam then returned to the king who asked her: 'What did you find about, 'Isam?' He was inquiring what news she brought from Um Iyas. She replied: 'The shaking process has yielded butter.' 'Shaking' in this context refers to what is commonly practiced in the countryside (famous in Arab culture) by shaking the milk inside the bottle in order to separate the butter from the milk; and this expression in Arabic means that her journey came to fruition. He said to her: ‘Tell me.’ She replied: ‘I will tell you honestly and truly.’ and she described her from her hair to her feet in an accurate manner that enticed the king. He then sent for her father to engage her; and he married her.

(1) The story of a king with 'Isam, the matchmaker

On the wedding night, the wise mother advised her daughter about the field of her work, the field of her motherhood and femininity. The mother said to her daughter: ‘if one would give up advice for the sake of politeness, I would not have advised you’—this means that, as a mother, she trusted the manners of her daughter and thought that she might be in no need of advice in this respect—but counselling serves as an aid for a person who has become oblivious (it is always a wake-up call for the unmindful) and a reminder for the reasonable. Then, the mother continued to advise her daughter: ‘Tomorrow, you will go to a house that you do not know, and (will be living with) a companion with whom you have not been familiarized before. Be a slave to him, and he will be a slave to you. Learn from me ten attributes that would be a support and a wealth, and upon which you may depend.’

Let us reflect on the mother’s advice; the lessons she has derived from her experience and her mission. The word of the mother continues: ‘as for the first and second: your life with him should be based on listening, obeying and contentment. The third and fourth are: take care of the place upon which he casts his eyes and nose so that he may not lay his eye on any ugly thing from you, and does not smell except the sweetest scent when he approaches you. The fifth and sixth are: take care of his eating time and keep quiet while he is asleep; disturbing someone’s sleep is always a cause for enragement, and excitement of hunger is inflammable. The seventh and eighth are: manage his money and wealth carefully, caring for his honour and children. The ninth and tenth are: do not to divulge his secrets or disobey his orders; if you divulge his secrets, you will not be safe of his revenge, and if you disobey him, you will embitter and enrage him. Finally, avoid being happy if your husband is sad, and being sad if he is happy.’ Umm Iyas kept the advice in mind when she went to her husband. She bore boys and girls and lived happily with him as much as he lived happily with her.

This motherly advice reveals the ultimate reasonableness and wisdom, but regarding and concerning what? It concerns the field of the female's mission. Allah endows woman with a lot of gifts so that she would be reasonable and show her reasonableness in the mission to which she is destined. The reason is that the field of the man's activity requires decisiveness and toughness, but that of the woman requires kindness and tenderness. There are a lot of examples in our day-to-day life that attest the correctness of such claim. When a man walks into his house and wants to sleep, his child may run to him crying and shouting, and this may irritate the father (who is already exhausted and wants to rest) thus gets angry at the mother, and insults her and the child. He may also utter words like: 'keep him silent until I rest.' What happens in such situation is that the mother takes the child, and with just a gentle motherly soothing touch, she manages to keep him quiet; the child responds to her, and this should not be a surprise, since this is the mission of the mother. For this reason, we find that difficult historical events always indicate the proper status of man and woman respectively (in society).

For example, when Ibrahim (Abraham) peace be upon him left his wife Hagar Allah be pleased with her and his son Ismail (Ishmael) peace be upon him in an uncultivated valley, she asked him, 'How could you leave us in a place deprived of everything even of water? Did you come up with this judgment or did Allah the Exalted command you to bring us here?' He replied, 'Allah the Exalted has commanded me to come to this place.' She then said to him, 'Then, go as you will, for He would not abandon us.' This is the mission of the woman. Hajar Allah be pleased with her is with her child in a place deprived of the key element required for life, water. Therefore, if we reflect on her care and tenderness; what did she do? She ran between the two mountains of As-Safa and Al-Marwa and then ascended the mountain until she felt exhausted.

The one who sets out to perform pilgrimage, the minor or the major, and experiences running between the mountains of As-Safa and Al-Marwa for seven rounds, knows the utmost of what a woman can endure for the sake of her child, as was clear in Hajar's situation who went here and there searching for water for her son. It is as if Allah the Exalted has told her, 'You have run and exerted your effort, but I will give you your livelihood from where you did not expect it. You have run between As-Safa and Al-Marwa, but water has sprung out under the feet of your son.' Therefore, she was right when she said, 'Allah will not abandon us.' If her running and searching had led her to find water, we would have thought that her effort was the real cause. However, you should exert your effort without thinking that only your exertion is the cause of outcomes; rather, you should believe that Allah brings about the real cause as He is the Provider of sustenance, the Most Exalted. This idea is manifested in the story of Hajar Allah be pleased with her.

Later, when Ibrahim's (Abraham's) decisiveness, resoluteness and prophecy were tried and examined by ordering him to slay his son Ismail (Ishmael) peace be upon him Hajar Allah be pleased with Her disappeared from the scene. Ibrahim (Abraham) peace be upon him saw in a dream that he was slaying his son, so what is the role of his mother in this case? She totally disappeared from the scene because this situation is not in line with her passions and tenderness. Thus, each gender has a specific mission and his or her success is to the extent to which he or she fulfils the mission. Hence, Allah the Exalted commands us not to covet what He has bestowed on some people more than on others (an-Nisa': 32). Thus, when you see that a gender has a certain privilege and the other gender has a different privilege, you should not preoccupy yourself with coveting by saying, 'I want this or that.' Rather, you should ask Allah the Exalted to give you of His Bounty and Grace, as the order 'do not covet' is a prohibition of all coveting and craving for what Allah the Exalted has bestowed on some people more than others. That is why Allah the Exalted orders us to ask Him of His Bounty, and if you do so, there is a hope that He will give you all of what you want.

Some may see a problem here and they ask, 'How could Allah forbid us to covet what He has bestowed on some of us more than others even though the Bounty of Allah is bound to make some of us better than others? He has elevated people over each other by statuses. Not to mention that, we want to ask Allah so that He confers His Bounty on us since He has not commanded us to do so except to bestow His Grace on us.' We respond by saying, 'No, coveting is usually related to something impossible or not customary.' But asking and supplicating are always intended for something you may be able to obtain. Thus, Allah the Exalted explains that we must not approach the sphere of coveting. For this reason, they set an example of coveting by the following verse of poetry:

I wish youth would come back for only one day
So, that I may tell it about what the old age has done

The poet covets and wishes to restore his youth for one day. Would this youth truly come back? No, it would not. Similarly, someone may say, 'I wish that the planets would come near to me so that I would organize it the way I like.' Could this happen? No. But the statement indicates that this thing is desired even if it is not customary or even possible. Thus, the object asked for should fall within the ambit of what is possible for you. Allah the Exalted explains that we should not covet what He has given to some and not to others. So long as Allah the Exalted has made some of us better than others, one should not ask Him for what He has given to others so that he would take it to himself and deprive the others of it. Rather, He should ask Allah the Exalted for something that would allow him to manifest the grace and bounty that Allah has bestowed on him. For this reason, we find that Allah the Exalted states in the verses pertinent to preference that He has made some people to excel others in the means of subsistence. (an-Nahl: 71)

What is al-rizq (provision)? Is it confined to money? No. Provision is all what is useful and beneficial. Hence, patience, knowledge, and courage are all considered forms of provision. The saying of Allah the Exalted that He has made some people to excel others makes us wonder, 'Who has Allah made to excel, and more than whom has Allah made some to excel?' Allah the Exalted only says, 'some of you', but He did not expand on it. This means that Allah has made some to excel, but He has not made others.

Another question is, 'Which kind of people has Allah made to excel, and more than whom has He made some to excel?' Every human being excels in one aspect, but someone excels him in another. Thus, one may attain perfection in one aspect and another may lack the least of it; however, the latter may have another hidden gift. This implies the integration of gifts which is the gear of the activity of the society.

Let us pay attention to the movement of gears in a machine. The positive protruding part in one gear always fits in the negative empty space in another gear and thus motion becomes possible. If we put two positive protruding gears opposite to each other, no motion will be possible. Therefore, each of them must have a distinct feature for integration to take place. An illustration of this, as I have already said, is night and day. Resting at night assists in working during the day. I have also said that a knight may be able to strike and kill using his sword. However, if this sword had not been sharpened and refined by an expert blacksmith, it would have never fulfilled its purpose. An expert in making swords, in his own right, cannot take part in battles. He may even be afraid of striking and fighting with the sword. Yet, he gets as much credit as the swordsman.

Each one of us has a mission to accomplish, and fate endows people with integrating talents rather than identical, conflicting ones. As long as talents complement each other, I should not envy the one who excelled in a certain respect because I need him. Similarly, he should not envy me if I exceeded him in a talent or a specific kind of work because he also needs me; we reciprocally need each other to excel. This endears the gifts and talents of the people to others. I love the gift that Allah the Exalted has endowed someone with and he reciprocally loves the gift which Allah the Exalted has endowed on me.

For example, when we find a man who is skilful at sewing and tailoring clothes, everyone feels happy about him. This tailor needs a skilful carpenter to make him a door for his shop. Thus, it is in the interest of both that each one has a praiseworthy skill. For this reason Allah the Exalted has referred to us by ‘some’ and ‘others’ because the whole is composed of some and others. One is often talented in certain aspects, but he can never do everything. However, through the inclusion of the others’ talents, we all possess the talents of each other.

Allah the Exalted then declares that both men and women have a portion from what they have earned (an-Nisa’: 32). The success of the man and woman depends on the extent to which each of them is righteous and fit to undertake the mission for which he or she was created. Afterward, the reward and punishment that each receives will be according to their obligations.

Reward and punishment are commensurate with the effort that each creature exerts in fulfilling their mission in life.

The illustration of the difference between the mission of the man and the woman becomes clear when a man's wife falls sick or gets angry, while they have an infant; will he be able to suckle his infant? Of course, he will not. Each one of them has a mission. The reasonable person is the one who respects Allah's predestination concerning His creatures and respects the gifts that Allah bestows on people. As far as he is concerned, he should ask Allah the Exalted to give him of His Bounty, that is, of what Allah has made him to excel others so that Allah grants him His Blessings. When Allah the Exalted states that both men and woman have a portion of what they have earned, we notice that they are completely equally addressed.

Allah then commands us to ask him of His Bounty (an-Nisa': 32). It is a sign of His Omniscience that He has distributed gifts among His creatures so that society integrates with each other instead of being reluctant, as this reluctance is bound to create division in the society whereas its integration is bound to engender harmony. The reason for the revelation of the verse in question is that women said, 'Jihad was not prescribed upon us and our Lord allotted to us half of the share of men in inheritance.' Allah the Exalted has previously explained to the woman that she was allotted half the share of the man because she is in the custody of someone else and will not spend any of her income on herself, rather, it is the man who is responsible for supporting her financially and for taking care of her expenses. Accordingly, the matter is fair. Similarly, the men said, 'If Allah the Exalted has given us a bigger share in the inheritance and allotted to us double the share of the women, He may prefer us to women in the Hereafter and give us double of their reward.' Thus, the man can do one good deed and expect a doubled reward.

Reflect on the intelligence of the woman when she said, 'As long as Allah the Exalted has given us half of the men's share of the inheritance, why would not He impose only half of the punishment on us'? Allah the Exalted has clarified to them that commanding them not to covet what He has given some more than the others means that each of you should be content with what Allah the Exalted has allotted to him or her. Subsequently Allah the Exalted says:

وَلِكُلّٖ جَعَلۡنَا مَوَٰلِيَ مِمَّا تَرَكَ ٱلۡوَٰلِدَانِ وَٱلۡأَقۡرَبُونَۚ وَٱلَّذِينَ عَقَدَتۡ
أَيۡمَٰنُكُمۡ فَـَٔاتُوهُمۡ نَصِيبَهُمۡۚ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ شَيۡءٖ شَهِيدًا ﴿٣٣﴾

We have appointed heirs for everything that parents and close relatives leave behind, including those to whom you have pledged your hands [in marriage], so give them their share: God is witness to everything [33] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 33)

Once you see the Arabic word likul (to everyone) with a double accent—as is in this verse—then bear in mind that it refers to something implied. The original phrasing is 'every human being' but the noun 'human being' was omitted and replaced with the accent. Similarly, the double accent in the Arabic word hina'dhin (while) which refers to the moment when the soul has reached the throat (al-Waqi'a: 83-84). The entire clause was omitted and replaced by the accent. Thus, the double accent substituted the omitted clause.

In this verse, the Arabic word Mawali (heir*)* is the plural of mawla (heirs). Before the revelation of the verses pertinent to inheritance, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had declared Al-Muhajrun (the emigrants) and Al-Ansar (Helpers) to be brothers. Thus, they used to inherit each other based on this brotherhood. There was something called the 'heirs of support and advocacy' which refers to two persons who trust each other and thus say to each other, 'I am your brother and you are my brother, if you go to war, I will go to war with you, and if you declare peace, I will do so with you, and my blood is yours; you can thus inherit me and I can inherit you, and you can bail me out if I commit a crime, and I will bail you out if you commit a crime.' Hence, it is a real brotherhood.

Based on this brotherhood, they were entitled to have a share of the inheritance in the deceased's wealth. Allah the Exalted explains that He has appointed the heirs- men and women who are entitled to inherit specific shares of what was left behind by the parents and near kin folk. This means that they are entitled to a share of this deceased's inheritance and the brothers of advocacy and support fall under this category, as well. Thus, beware of denying them their rights; you must give them the share that was allotted to them, which is a sixth.

However, did this ruling continue? No; it was abrogated when Allah has revealed a verse that confined the shares of inheritance to the close relatives (al-Anfal: 75). Allah the Exalted states that He appointed heirs for everything that the parents and the close relatives left behind which means that each of these heirs is entitled to a share. Thus, do not say, ‘They are gone and so we will give them nothing' No, give them their shares based on what they agreed upon and pledged their oaths in accordance with Allah's Commandment, as He is a Witness to everything. Thus Allah the Exalted is a Witness to whether you follow His Commands.

After this verse Allah the Exalted speaks about an issue related to the preferring of some people to ‘others.’ Allah says:

ٱلرِّجَالُ قَوَّٰمُونَ عَلَى ٱلنِّسَآءِ بِمَا فَضَّلَ ٱللَّهُ بَعۡضَهُمۡ عَلَىٰ بَعۡضٖ وَبِمَآ أَنفَقُواْ
مِنۡ أَمۡوَٰلِهِمۡۚ فَٱلصَّٰلِحَٰتُ قَٰنِتَٰتٌ حَٰفِظَٰتٞ لِّلۡغَيۡبِ بِمَا حَفِظَ ٱللَّهُۚ وَٱلَّٰتِي
تَخَافُونَ نُشُوزَهُنَّ فَعِظُوهُنَّ وَٱهۡجُرُوهُنَّ فِي ٱلۡمَضَاجِعِ وَٱضۡرِبُوهُنَّۖ فَإِنۡ
أَطَعۡنَكُمۡ فَلَا تَبۡغُواْ عَلَيۡهِنَّ سَبِيلًاۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ عَلِيّٗا كَبِيرٗا ٣٤

Husbands should take good care of their wives, with [the bounties] God has given to some more than others and with what they spend out of their own money. Righteous wives are devout and guard what God would have them guard in their husbands’ absence. If you fear high-handedness from your wives, remind them [of the teachings of God], then ignore them when you go to bed, then hit them. If they obey you, you have no right to act against them: God is most high and great [34] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 34)

The first thing that attracts our attention in this verse is that some commentators only applied it to the man and his wife, whereas the verse speaks about men and women in a general sense. Thus, the verse is not limited to the relation between a man and his wife. The father is bound to take full care of his daughters and so is the brother with respect to his sisters. Let us first understand what the meaning of Allah’s statement (that men are in charge of women) is. Let us also see whether this verse gives women a higher status and precedence or cause their tiredness. Allah the Exalted commands us to respect a cosmic matter. He is the Creator Who has perfected everything He created, and then explained an issue related to faith; namely, that men are in charge of women. If someone has a different opinion, he needs clarify his reasons for this disagreement.

Even women, who are intimidated by this verse, get depressed when they do not bear a male child. When you ask them: 'Why are you depressed?' They say, 'We want a son to protect us.' But how would you say something like this and at the same time object to this verse?

Let us understand the Arabic word qawwam which means taking full care of something. This kind of care that Allah the Exalted mentions here involves toil and exhaustion. When you say that someone yaqum (takes care of) other people, this means that this person never rests. Therefore, why do some people consider men taking full care of women as a kind of suppression? Why do they take not it to mean that men will take care of women's interests? The man is assigned to the task of taking care of women which means that he should do what rectifies the matter. We find that Allah the Exalted uses the word 'men' in a generic manner and so He does in the word 'women.' Allah the Exalted only speaks about one thing after saying that He has given to some more than others. Thus, what is the aspect of preference and distinction?

It is that the man who must toil and labour on earth to earn the livelihood of his family so that he could provide the woman under his care all the means necessary for a decent life. We can find an illustrative example in the story of Adam peace be upon him when Allah the Exalted warned him and his wife from Satan who was called upon among the angels to prostrate to Adam peace be upon him, but he refused. Therefore, we recognized the preceding antagonism between Satan and Adam peace be upon him and its reason, that is, Satan's arrogance that prevented him from prostration (al-Isra': 61).

Allah the Exalted has explained to Adam peace be upon him that if he descends to earth, he should remember this antagonism. Know that Satan will not leave you alone and he will continue to entice and tempt you because he does not want to be the only disobedient. Rather, he wants to attract more disobedient followers from the species to whose father he refused to prostrate by tempting them as much as he tried to tempt Adam peace be upon him. Allah the Exalted warned Adam and Eve not to let Satan drive them out of paradise (Ta Ha: 117).

Does Allah the Exalted say afterward that both will be miserable or only Adam will be miserable? Allah mentions that only Adam peace be upon him will be miserable (Ta Ha: 117). Thus, when Allah the Exalted mentions toil and labour on earth, He addresses men and not women. This indicates that taking full care of women requires toil, effort and labour. Therefore, this mission is for the man.

We notice that when Allah the Exalted assigns the man a certain aspect of excelling in this verse, He uses the word 'some' to indicate that as much as He has made the man to excel the woman for taking full care of her, He has made the woman to excel the man in another respectwhich is being the source of repose and tranquillity for her husband when he returns to their dwelling to find comfort by undertaking her mission.

The respect in which Allah has made the man to excel the woman is then mentioned when Allah says that it is due to what men spend out of their own money (an-Nisa': 34). The property is always the fruit of work and labour. We call the man who labours to take care of the other party qawwam. Therefore, the woman should rejoice at this because Allah the Exalted has assigned toil and labour to the gender which is qualified for that. The mission of the woman, which is indeed a great one, is in line with her characterizing features including delicacy, tenderness, affection and kindness. Allah the Exalted did not give these qualities to the man because earning the livelihood does not require these characteristics. Rather, it requires strength, decisiveness and strictness. Thus, the Arabic word qawwamun means that men are taking full care of the matters related to women.

Hence Allah the Exalted explains to women that they should not think that this is confined to the relation between the husband and the wife, rather, they should keep in mind that it also includes taking full care of the daughters, sisters, and mothers. Thus, taking care of women does not mean domination because this mission involves toil and labour for the man. It is a difficult mission that the man must do his best to properly take full care of the women under his custody.

Allah says: 'That has made the men to excel women due to what they spend from their money.' (an-Nisa': 34) Marriage is a gratification for both the male and the female as they enjoy it and desire to preserve the kind through their posterity. Even though enjoyment and the desire for having posterity are common among both, their consequences are not suffered by both; rather, it is only suffered by the man. He must pay the dowry and take care of the living expenses. Even When the wife is rich, Islamic law does not obligate her to lend some money to her husband.

Thus, the duty of men to take full care of women is intended to give comfort to women and relieve them of toil and problems. Therefore, why would women be upset with it? The verse implies that taking full care of the woman is permanent because Allah the Exalted does not say qaa'im, which means that the man should undertake this mission for only one time; rather, He says qawwam, which means that he should continue to undertake this responsibility to the end of his life. As long as men toil and labour for the sake of the woman, she, in turn, must assume a parallel mission. That is, she must be a source of tranquillity for the man, a matter which involves preference, as well.

Allah the Exalted has put forward at the beginning of this verse a ruling to which all should adhere. It is the ruling of the Creator Who has perfected the creation of all His creatures. Allah the Exalted has explained an issue related to faith, that is, men should take care of women. Afterward, He has explained the respect in which this should be understood by saying that this is due to what he has given to some man more than some woman and due to what men spend out of their money. Allah then continues to talk about righteous women, describing them as devout ones who guard what Allah ordered them to guard in their husbands' absence (an-Nisa': 34). The righteous woman is the one who adheres to the path ordained by her Creator to her and her gender. She will be a devout woman as long as she is righteous. The Arabic word qunut (devotion) means continuous obedience to Allah the Exalted. It is derived from the Arabic phrase qunut al-fajr when we stand for a longer period in prayer in devotion, to supplicate to Allah.

The devout woman is continuously submissive to Allah the Exalted. As long as she is completely submissive to Him the Exalted, she must adhere to His path and commands in His ruling regarding men's mission of taking full care of women. Allah's description of women as guarding what He orders them to guard in their husbands' absence indicates the soundness of their chastity. When a woman's guardian and protector- whether he is a father, in the case of daughters; or a son, in the case of mothers; or a husband, in the case of wives- is absent, she must guard the sanctity of their intimate relation. For this reason, when the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him specified the characteristics of the righteous woman, he said in a Hadith about the worldly life, 'The entire world is a form of gratification and the best of this gratification is the good woman.'(1)

Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him has enacted a law concerning the character of the righteous woman when he said, 'The best of all women is the one who pleases her husband whenever he glances at her, obeys him whenever he commands her and she does not go against his wishes regarding herself nor her wealth.'(2) What more can any man need? The phrase 'she delights her husband whenever he glances at her' should not be interpreted to mean only the physical beauty. No; it means that once you see her, you envision all aspects of goodness in her. You must not focus on the bad characteristics of you wife and ignore the good ones. The reason is that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him warned us from evaluating a woman based on only one of her characteristics or qualities because the woman should be evaluated in terms of the totality of her characteristics. He thus said, 'A woman may be married for four reasons: for her property, her status. her beauty and her religion, so try to get one who is religious, may your hand be besmeared with dust.'(3) Therefore, what is required of us is not to only consider one aspect of beauty, but to consider all other aspects. Indeed, if you consider the aspect of physical beauty, which often concerns most people, you will find that it is the least important aspect related to the constitution of the woman because it only lasts for the period of the honey moon—as people say—and then fades away. Afterward, the other more important factors start to surface. Indeed, you will be misguiding yourself if you only focus on the physical beauty of the one you want to marry. You may also think that you want her to be an aristocratic lady. We advise you that this is a short-term character; what is more lasting is her honesty, sincerity and being economical. For this reason, all men who build their marriages based on the criterion of physical beauty fail in their marital relations because this factor has a short life and it soon fades away and its sparkle glows out. Afterward, the man’s eye starts searching for the true aspects of beauty but never find them and so failure takes place. That is why you should consider all the aspects and beware of only considering one aspect. The best of these aspects is a woman's devotion to her religion. The same applies to the criterion of a woman's acceptance for a husband. The best of his aspects should be his devotion to his religion. Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘When someone whose religion and character you are pleased with comes to you then marry (her to) him. If you do not do so, then there will be turmoil in the land and discord.’(1) When someone consulted Al-Hasan ibn Ali Allah be pleased with them about the person he should to choose as a husband for his daughter, he said, ‘Marry her to someone who adheres firmly to religion, for if he likes her, he will honour her and if he hates her, he will not wrong her.’

Thus, religion guides us to consider the long-term aspects in life. After that, if a woman wants to be successful, she should excel in the mission assigned to her based on her kind. It is possible for her to expand the sphere of her mission at home if she has time. If she has children, she should learn sewing and tailoring so that she can tailor her and her children’s clothes, to save money. She may also learn embroidery so that she would not pay money to someone to do it for her. She may also learn nursing skills so that if her child falls sick, she can nurse and take care of him. She should also seek knowledge so that she would not need to resort to private tutors who take money from the family's income. If she still has time, she should learn plumbing skills to save the fees of the plumber if the water tap breaks down. Alternatively, she may learn about electricity so that she may fix the light switch if it breaks down. While sitting at home, the woman can also undertake a lot of other tasks through which she can save a lot of the income to meet other needs she may not be able to afford. Thus, the woman would 'guard the intimacy' not through improvisation or voluntary conjectures. Rather, she would be so via adherence to the path that Allah the Exalted has set for her to guard such intimacy.

(1) At-Tirmidhi

But what is the path that Allah has set for 'guarding intimacy'? It is that she must guard her honour and the property of her husband in his absence and look for the possible causes of problems and disputes and try to eliminate them. Thus, she should not go out of her house except for stringent needs or pressing necessity so that she would not be tempted by or tempt anyone. All of these are the preliminaries of 'guarding the intimacy.' Further, every woman should not mingle with crowds of people; otherwise, how can we ask her to guard the intimacy? Rather, every woman should always stick to what Allah the Exalted has explained in this regard. Accordingly, if she must go out, she should lower her gaze away from what Allah the Exalted has forbidden and be mindful of her chastity. (an-Nur: 31)

Thus, if the woman did not lower her gaze, an emotional attraction may occur. The reason is that every feeling that occurs inside the human being evolves in three stages: the stage of perception, the stage of inner affection and the stage of inclination, that is, the attempt to turn such an inclination into actual behaviour and action. Let us give an example, as always, by a rose. As you walk in a garden, you may see a rose and once you lay your eyes on it, this is called perception. If you admired this rose and liked it very much, this is called affection. If you then try to pick the rose, this is a process of inclination. How many stages do we have then? We have three stages: perception, affection and inclination.

When does Islamic law interfere? It always interferes in the process of inclination. It tells you that you have looked at the rose, but there was no objection, then you have liked and admired it and, Islamic law also did not say anything about this. But when you tried to reach out and pick it, the Islamic law told you, 'No; the rose is not yours.' Thus, you are free to perceive, free to find affection in yourself, but when you are inclined and want to pursue such an inclination, we must tell you, 'No; it is not yours. If you truly like it, go and plant a rose in your house or take the permission of its owner to pick it.'

Thus, Islamic legislation interferes to keep a feeling from turning into an inclination except in the case of women. The law interferes from the beginning of perception. The reason is that the One Who created us knows that if we perceive some type of beauty, we will look at it and it will cause an inclination and a desire. Once you have perception and desire, you cannot separate them from inclinations. As a man, you are chemically constituted so that if you see beauty and feel affection, you will feel a desire. Such a desire will not be calmed down unless you satisfy it. Thus, Islamic law shows that Allah the Exalted has Mercy upon you from the outset; that is why He has chosen to restrain you from the outset. All laws interfere and place restrictions on objects of desire at the stage when one starts to pursue the satisfaction of his desire, except in the case of the desire for women; Allah's law interferes as early as the stage of perception. For this reason Allah the Exalted commands both the man and the woman to lower their gaze. Why so? The reason is that if you perceive, you will find affection in your heart and, if this happens, you will be inclined. Such inclination and the pursuit to satisfy it is a kind of debauchery and infringement on the honour of other people. Further, if you are not inclined you will be suppressed. For all these reasons Allah the Exalted has decisively settled the matter from the outset and commanded the believing men and women to lower their gaze and to be mindful of their chastity. (an-Nur: 30-31)

Accordingly Allah the Exalted wants us to control our desires from the beginning. Why so? Because if I saw a rose and people tell me not to pick it as it is not mine, I would not suffer from any imbalance in my material. But when a man sees a beautiful woman and she touches his feelings, he will be inclined towards her because he has organs that are excited by such beauty. Therefore, Allah the Exalted tells you, ‘I am your Creator and I will interfere in the matter from its beginning.’ His saying that women guard the intimacy, refers to the ones who do so through following the path that He has set for such preservation; namely, that the one should not expose himself to any perception that may cause an affection which may, in turn, lead to an inclination. For if you are inclined, you may slip into corruption; and if you are not, you will suffer a complex and so evil would always be incurred from such a practice. This is the meaning of guarding what Allah has ordained them to guard. It means that she should consider the path that has been laid down by Allah the Exalted to respect the absence of her husband. Not per her own rules, but in accordance with the path that has been set by his and her Creator.

Allah the Exalted nurtures the sense of vigilance and attention in His servants as He explains the attitude towards women from whom one fears disobedience and ill-conduct. The disobedience has not happened; rather, there is fear that it may occur. Being attentive and vigilant, entails being observant from the very outset. Thus, you should not let the problem escalate until the disobedience is actualized. The Arabic word nushuz (woman's disobedience) is derived from the verb nashaz, which means to elevate to a higher position. The same word also means a high place. As long as Allah the Exalted has said that men shall take full care of women, the reference here is to the women who want to arrogantly rebel and be placed in a high status. For this reason, the word nashaz is used in the context of musical harmony; in this case, it refers to the sounds that deviate from the rules of music. People thus say this tone is nashaz meaning that it is not in harmony with the tone or tune that preceded it. A woman should be tranquil and humble; thus, if you sense that she is thinking about revolting and acting arrogantly, you should not let her ascend the hill of self-conceit. Rather, you should take an action once you start sensing the preludes of disobedience to prevent its occurrence. Allah has described woman's disobedience as something fearful and expected, even if it has not happened yet.

But, what would be an appropriate remedy? Allah the Exalted commands us to admonish them. This means that once you see her having such an intention, you should first admonish her. Admonition means gentle and delicate advice. People have said that advising gently would be better if you seize a moment when both of you are in good terms with each other. You should also advise your woman in the right situation so that such admonition and guidance would be acceptable. Thus, do not advise someone unless his heart is attached to you.

Let us assume that a son asked his father for something that his father did not bring. The mother afterward came to complain to the father about the behaviour of the son. The father then tries to fulfil the wish of his son and respond to his request. After that, he tells his son, 'Come here my son; Allah has helped me to obtain what you want.' When the son feels happy at getting what he wished, the father says to him, 'If I had remembered what your mother said about your misbehaviour, I would not have brought you what you requested.' Even if the father criticises the son at this moment, the son may laugh. Why so? The reason is that the father has taught his son the lesson and imparted to him the piece of advice in a moment when his heart and passion are attached to him. But we do not often do so. One often approaches his son in times when there is an aversion between them and tries to advise him. Such advice will never work. If we want the advice to be fruitful, we must change ourselves first and seize the opportunity of the times when the one we are advising is emotionally attached to us to impart our admonition to him. Thus, admonition means advising gently and delicately. It is of gentleness and delicacy to choose the appropriate time for giving your admonition and to know that the best time for doing so is when there is a relative agreement between you and the one you want to advise. If the advice did not work and you still see that the matter is going in the direction of arrogance and disobedience, you should pay attention. A woman often tends to be flirtatious with men because she senses his interest in and inclination towards her. Further, the woman may patiently endure the man more than the man would do with her. The reason is that a man by nature cannot calm down unless he takes an action towards the cause of his anger. By contrast, women are provoked slowly. Thus, when the organs of a man are excited, he may not forebear patience or waiting. By contrast, a woman is neither excited not provoked quickly. Therefore, when you see this disobedience, and she knows that you are a man who likes to see the results of feelings and wants to go on, give her a lesson in this respect and so abandon her in bed.

Just consider the precision of the Quran; you should neither abandon your wife alone in the house or even in your bedroom; rather, sleep on one side of the bed and leave her to sleep on the other side so that the anger and dispute between you may not be exposed to other people. You just leave her alone in bed because if you abandon her and all the members of the house know that you sleep in a separate room, or that you desert the house, you will provoke her stubbornness. But, when you leave her alone in bed, this will be something entirely between both of you. Afterward, she may experience an emotional condition and so overlook the whole thing. You may also go through any emotional situation that will lead you to forgive and forget about the dispute; further, both of you will wish to reconcile with the other.

Thus, if you follow Allah's teachings by forsaking her in bed, it will be as if you are telling her, 'If you will try to be disobedient, I can control myself.' Some may wonder, 'What does abandoning them in bed mean'? We say that if they share one bed, he should turn his back upon her on the condition that the matter would not be exposed. Thus, he should sleep in the same bed and in the same room so that no one would know anything about it. The reason is that if any disagreement between the husband and the wife stays between them, it will be resolved quite quickly. As soon as a man's yearning and desire for his wife flare up to an irresistible level, he could return to her and seek her reconciliation. She would also have similar feelings and the whole dispute gets resolved. The thing that destroys homes is the intervention of external parties. These elements or parties may make the man or the woman more adamant. For this reason, no man should reveal what happens between him and his wife to his parents or his brother; rather, disputes should always be confined to the man and the woman. There is indeed something between them that will make them forgive each other.

After the stage of admonishing the disobedient women comes beating. Scholars have said that beating should be conducted on the condition that it would not lead to any bleeding or bone-breaking. This means that it should be a light beating for the purpose of showing dissatisfaction. That is why the scholars say that the husband should beat his wife with a miswak (tooth brush). Allah the Exalted has taught us so, when He said to Ayyub (Job) peace be upon him when he took an oath to whip his wife a hundred whips. He commanded him to take a small bunch of grass and strike her with them so that he would not break his oath, (Sad: 44). The small bunch of grass consists of one hundred sticks. Thus, if he beats his wife with it, it would be as if he has beaten her one hundred times. When the woman finds that the beating is done with tenderness, she will obey of her own accord. At any rate, do not ever think that the One Who created us would ever decree any ruling that would be rejected by our instinctual passion. Allah's rulings are only rejected by the pride of our passions. The One Who has decreed and ordained these rulings knows that matters must be as such.

Allah Glorified is He says that as for those women whose ill-will you have reason to fear, you (O men!) shall admonish them, and then leave them alone in bed, and then beat them in a harmless manner. The meaning of harmless here is that it should not lead to bleeding or breaking bones. Allah Glorified is He resumes His discourse by saying if they follow you in your obedience, do not be unfair to them.

Accordingly, beating must not be used to humiliate the woman; rather, it is a process of rectification and reformation. Further, you should bear in mind that you should only judge your wife based on her apparent behaviour. So, you shall never say: ‘she obeys me, but her heart is not with me’, and so plunge into the realm of the unknown. We tell you, ‘You should not worry yourself with this because that which is judged in all circumstances is only what is apparent.’ So, you should not concern yourself with the essences of things. Allah Glorified is He says if they follow you in your obedience which means that if you sense that the entire matter has ended and there is no longer any ill-will that you may fear, you must not harm your wives. If you thus seek to harm her after she obeyed you, beware that the One Who allowed you to take your wife through a single word—the pledge of marriage—has more power over you than you have over her. This is a menace from Allah Glorified is He.

The meaning of Allah’s menace to us is that He explained that this is My creation and I am the One Who let you take her through the pledge ‘Marry me… I marry you.’ As long as you have maintained her by the authority of a word from Me, do not treat her condescendingly because I protect her right as much as I protect yours. No one of you is dearer to Me than the other; both of you are My creation and I want things to be settled. After this discourse addressed to the husbands, Allah Glorified is He brings forth a new verse by saying:

وَإِنْ خِفْتُمْ شِقَاقَ بَيْنِهِمَا فَٱبْعَثُوا۟ حَكَمًا مِّنْ أَهْلِهِۦ وَحَكَمًا مِّنْ أَهْلِهَآ
إِن يُرِيدَآ إِصْلَٰحًا يُوَفِّقِ ٱللَّهُ بَيْنَهُمَآ ۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ عَلِيمًا خَبِيرًا ﴿٣٥﴾

If you [believers] fear that a couple may break up, appoint one arbiter from his family and one from hers. Then, if the couple want to put things right, God will bring about a reconciliation between them: He is all knowing, all aware [35]
(The Quran, an-Nisa’: 35)

Allah Glorified is He says, ‘And if you fear dissension between the two’, means that the breach has not yet occurred. But, what is the ‘dissension’ intended in this context? Ash-Shiqaq (dissention) is derived from shaqa. Shaqa means to separate something from something else. Thus, if you say, 'Shaqaqt the log.', this means that you have separated it into two halves. Accordingly, dissention between couples indicates that they have been united through marriage and become one thing. Therefore, anything that may keep them apart would be a shiqaq (dispute) since through marriage one is united with his/her spouse. This is what Allah Glorified is He says: 'And how could you take it while you have gone unto each other and they have taken from you a solemn covenant?' (an-Nisa': 21) This means that the wife is interwoven with her husband and the husband is interwoven with his wife (al-Baqara: 187), a husband indeed shields his wife and she also shields him. Thus, if the matter goes beyond ability, Allah Glorified is He says that if you have reason to fear that dissention might occur between married couples, but who will fear such dissention? Would it be the guardian, the kinsfolk from either side? It is the people who are concerned with the matter.

Allah Glorified is He says that if you fear that dissention might occur between a married couple, appoint an arbiter from among his people and an arbiter from among her people; it is the people within the immediate environment and familial realm of the couple; thus, we should not let things escalate to the level of dissention. It is as if Islam and the Quran pay our attention to the fact that the relatives within the same family should heed the changing of psychological states and moods of the family whether it be mother, father, brother or even a relative so that things would not escalate to the level of dissention. The evidence is that Allah Glorified is He says that if you have reason to fear that dissention might occur between married couples, the dissention has not yet happened and the issue should not be left to escalate to the level of dissention. Allah Glorified is He says that if you fear such a dissention, appoint an arbiter from among the two sides. This statement is generally addressed to the guardian too; if he keeps his eyes vigilant and observant to supervise the relation between households; however, this is rather unviable considering the scope of the responsibilities of the guardian in the modern age. Thus, it is obvious that those who can undertake this task are the prominent figures of the family. All those who have distinction in the family should thus heed all that is happening in it and say we observe such and such things.

We can then appoint an arbiter from here and another from there and consider the issue that may lead to a dispute between the couple before the conflict erupts. The defence of each spouse’s interest has thus been transferred from the couple to someone from the family of the husband and another from the family of the wife. Those arbiters, in turn, do not have a clear conception of the problem and the evidence in support of either side has not crystallized. Further, none of the arbiters have preconceived judgment. The judgment that is thereby passed by the family of the wife and that of the husband is not passed based on the bias and inclinations in their hearts, especially that the two are assigned the task of judging. They must agree on what they see so that if both saw that the only way out is divorce, then they should rule that the couple should get divorced. People may think that the arbiters are only intended to reconcile the two spouses so that if the latter did not like the former’s verdict, the two spouses would continue in their dissention. No, we choose an arbiter from this side and another from that side to put an end to the problem.

What the two arbiters rule should thereby be executed because the matter has been left up to them. Therefore, Allah Glorified is He says that if the two arbiters want to set things right, Allah the Exalted may bring their reconciliation. It is as if the main mission is reconciliation and that the arbiters should embark on the matter with the intention of accomplishing reconciliation. Thus, Allah Glorified is He did not then will the two couples to be reconciled through the intermediation of the arbiters, this may indicate that the two arbiters entered the situation with no intention to reconcile them.

Every arbiter should thus fear for himself and try to do his best to reconcile the couple because if he does not end the dispute, it will become a scandal for him. The One Who created everyone (the husband, the wife and the arbiter from the family of the husband and the arbiter from the family of the wife), says that if they both want to set things right, He may bring about their reconciliation. Thus, both arbiters should go with this intention and insist on reconciling between the two spouses because when Allah Glorified is He, talks about a global issue, everyone tries to act in accordance with His Discourse in this regard. Further, Allah Glorified is He may talk about general issues because

He is the All Knowing and the All Aware. For instance, Allah the Exalted says: ‘And [that] indeed Our soldiers will be those who overcome.’ (as-Saffat: 173)

Allah Glorified is He said so in order that each soldier ensures that he fights for the sake of Him the Exalted because if he is defeated, we will tell him you were not a proper soldier for Allah Glorified is He, and he would be afraid of this. Thus, the universal issue is put in a doctrinal scheme so that one would channel all his capacities for the sake of accomplishing the task. When Allah the Exalted says: ‘If they both want to set things right, Allah Glorified is He may bring about their reconciliation’, do not ever take pride in the decisiveness or the intelligence of the arbiters; all of these are causes. We thus continuously assert, ‘Do not take pride in the knowledge of causes because everything was originated from the Owner of all causes.’ Let us consider the precision and the wisdom of the statement of Allah Glorified is He ‘may bring about their reconciliation.’ He thus did not say if they both want to set things right, they may bring about reconciliation. Rather, He the Almighty reserved to Himself the virtue of reconciling between the spouses.

Allah Glorified is He appends the verse by His saying: ‘He is indeed All Knowing All Aware’, this means that He is All knowing and All aware of the state of the husband and the wife and the arbiter from the side of the wife and the arbiter from the side of the husband. They are encompassed by His knowledge. Each of them should thus make sure that their behaviour is appropriate because they are responsible for every action related to this case; our Lord is All knowing and All-aware. But, what is the difference between all knowing and all-aware? The difference is that knowledge may be imparted to you by someone else but awareness is always yours.

After Allah Glorified is He had talked about the preceding rulings concerning marriage and the unlawful things from which we have also deduced what is lawful, about those who are incapable of marriage and about wealth and warned us not to devour it unrightfully and about the relation between man and woman, He thus chose to direct us and pay our attention to His exalted path. He says:

وَٱعۡبُدُواْ ٱللَّهَ وَلَا تُشۡرِكُواْ بِهِۦ شَيۡـٔٗاۖ وَبِٱلۡوَٰلِدَيۡنِ إِحۡسَٰنٗا وَبِذِي ٱلۡقُرۡبَىٰ وَٱلۡيَتَٰمَىٰ
وَٱلۡمَسَٰكِينِ وَٱلۡجَارِ ذِي ٱلۡقُرۡبَىٰ وَٱلۡجَارِ ٱلۡجُنُبِ وَٱلصَّاحِبِ بِٱلۡجَنۢبِ وَٱبۡنِ
ٱلسَّبِيلِ وَمَا مَلَكَتۡ أَيۡمَٰنُكُمۡۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ لَا يُحِبُّ مَن كَانَ مُخۡتَالٗا فَخُورًا ﴿٣٦﴾

Worship God; join nothing with Him. Be good to your parents, to relatives, to orphans, to the needy, to neighbors near and far, to travelers in need, and to your slaves. God does not like arrogant, boastful people [36] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 36)

Allah Glorified is He commands us to worship Him alone and not to ascribe divinity, in any way, beside Him. This means that you should not address or tackle any of the issues in a way that is disobedient to Allah Glorified is He or at odds with the course He prescribed. Worshipping is the obedience of the worshiper to the worshiped. So, do not think that it refers only to the acts or rituals of worshipping we do like praying, fasting, paying obligatory alms to the poor and performing pilgrimage because these are the pillars of Islam. They are the pillars and foundations upon which Islam was based, but Islam is not exclusively composed of these pillars; rather, these pillars are the foundations upon which Islam was based. Similarly, the foundations that support the house do not constitute the entire house. Islam is a complex structure. Thus, to those who want to apply classificatory or technical terms of science to Islam in order to argue that worshipping in Islam solely consists in prayers and what pertain to them, giving obligatory alms to the poor, fasting and performing pilgrimage because they are described as such in the Islamic jurisprudence books, we say, ‘This is just the term used to refer to them but whatever command revealed from Allah Glorified is He is an act of worship.’ For this reason, some people say, ‘We should worship Allah Glorified is He and quit working.’ To those, we say worshipping is obeying the commands of the One Who is worshipped so, do not understand the statement in terms of rituals only. Rituals are just the continuous declaration of allegiance to Allah Glorified is He. They give an impulse that allows us to deal with the events of life. But rituals are not all forms of offering worshipping to Allah Glorified is He. Indeed, dealing with people is a form of worship; the true concept of worshipping comprises maintaining the earth. Allah the Exalted says to the believers to pause their transactions at the time they hear the call for the Friday Prayer. (al-Jumu'a: 9) Allah Glorified is He wants them to quit commerce and hasten to prayers; it is not that He wants them to quit being idle and go to pray; rather, He wants them to quit their business activities. He mentioned 'worldly commerce' because it is a process that yields its immediate profit. When you cultivate a crop, you will have to wait for a long time to reap the fruits. But commerce yields its fruit immediately; you sell something and accrue profit immediately. Commerce—as we know—regulates all actions of life because commerce is mediation between a producer and a consumer. You sell a commodity that you acquired from a producer; the producer in turn always seeks a middleman to sell his product to the consumer. This consumer may be a producer in his own right; further, the producer may be in a different capacity than the consumer. Production and consumption are an exchange. Life could be explained in terms of selling and buying, and as long as there is selling there will be purchasing. This is a continuation of the cycle of life. The seller always wants to sell but the purchaser may not want to buy because the purchaser will spend money, whereas the seller will gain money. Allah Glorified is He thus explains: 'Give up this whole process that yields immediate profit and answer the call for the Friday prayer.' But what shall we do after the prayer? Allah Glorified is He says: 'And when the prayer has been concluded, disperse within the land and seek from the bounty of Allah, and remember Allah often that you may succeed.' (al-Jumu'a: 10)

This is also a command. If we obey the first one which is to proceed to the remembrance of Allah Glorified is He thus we are also obliged to abide by the second order which is to disperse freely in the land and seek Allah's Bounty. Thus, all of this is a form of worship; Life is a form of worship. Prayer is a form of worship and so is fasting, but do not prayers need the necessities of life to support them? You must secure the basics of life to be able to pray. What are these basics of life? It is eating, drinking, housing and proper clothing. What is considered as a prerequisite of something obligatory, it is obligatory. Thus, the totality of life is a series of acts of worship. For this reason, Allah Glorified is He orders us to worship Him the Exalted since we have no deity other than Him. He brought us into being out of the earth, and made us to maintain thereon. (Hud: 61)

Thus, everything that leads to the thriving of the earth, constructing it and deducing the secrets of Allah Glorified is He in the existence, is deemed an act of worship to Him the Exalted. The reason is that you extract and obtain from the treasure of Him the Exalted that He has placed on earth what will attract people's attention to the universal truth that was propounded by faith.

Thus, do not ever think that worship is merely what is included under the sections of 'acts of worship' and 'transactions' in the books of Islamic Jurisprudence. All actions are forms of worship. The only difference is that worshipping does not directly manifest itself in other worldly actions and associations because you always work for your own benefit. But in prayer you dedicate from your time; therefore, we have called prayer 'worshipping' in the proper sense of the word because the other processes are performed by others who do not believe in Allah Glorified is He since he also goes out in life to cultivate and practice industry.

Why did they call these rituals 'acts of worship'? That is because they are performed by only the religious person. Other acts pertaining the inhabitancy of the universe and the pursuit of worldly interests are performed equally by the non-religious. Every command from Allah that we obey is an act of worship. This is the right concept of worship that we should all embrace, devote and channel all our intellectual and physical capacities that He created for us to shape the created matter, which is earth and its elements, to elevate existence to a level that would delight us, with which Allah would be content.

'Worship Allah and associate nothing with Him.' (an-Nisa': 36) After He had put forward all the above mentioned, Allah directed our attention to an issue that we always need to heed in all our behaviour, which is to abide by the commands of Allah and associate nothing alongside Him. The reason is that ascribing associating partners alongside Allah harms man's case in existence. Thus, do not devote your thoughts to the materialistic side of your work rather than to Allah. Be sincere to Allah in everything you do.

Allah gives an example of the comfort enjoyed by the monotheist who truly unifies Allah and the toil incurred by the polytheist. He says: 'Allah presents an example: a slave owned by quarreling partners and another belonging exclusively to one man - are they equal in comparison? Praise be to Allah! But most of them do not know.' (az-Zumar: 29)

The verse talks about a slave owned by a group, and the group has internal dispute. The slave does not know how to reconcile the conflicting commands that each gives to him. If he satisfies one, he may upset the other. He is thus a slave whose energy is divided, and whose attention is scattered. On the contrary, a slave owned by a single master only receives either a command or a prohibition from one master. Allah presents the case to his servant in an interrogative style; and He is All knowing of all things so that He makes the believer share with him the answer of, 'Would both be equal'? Here man examines it with his reason and would like to answer; so, what would he say? He will answer per his nature and the logic of Allah saying, 'No Lord, they are not equal.'

The believer himself has admitted the truth; Allah did not impose it upon you. Allah has posed it in a question form so that your answer would be decisive. If you, believing servant, think this way, you will live comfortably because your energy will be channelled towards following the commands and avoiding the prohibitions of Allah. At this point, you become a master in the universe, and none in the universe would be able to take away from you your servitude to the Creator. This is the comfort we procure because we follow the saying of Allah: 'And worship Allah [alone], and associate nothing with Him.' Associating others with Allah will cause one to suffer. Those who do so, seek the aid of whom they worship rather than Allah. The fact is that Allah abandons the polytheistsas stated in the Qudsi Hadith in which Allah says: 'I am the Self-sufficient; I am thus the One least in need of partnership. Whoever does any deed wherein he associates others beside Me, I shall abandon him to his polytheism.'(1)

Allah abandons the one who ascribes Divinity to anyone beside him. The one who does so is stripped of Allah's bounties because Allah is needless of any partner. This is how the polytheist lacks faith, and will live in toil. Allah Glorified is He followed His obedience with that of one's parents. He says: 'and do the good unto your parents.' Parents are the mother and the father; they are the immediate cause of your existence. Since worshiping Allah is the cause of your existence, then your mother and father who are two causes for your existence should direct your attention to the first cause. You should also pay attention to the One Who brought about the lineage of your ancestors that ultimately goes back to the first human being, namely, Adam peace be upon him.

(1) Muslim and Ibn Majah

‘And do good unto your parents.’ Consider the status that Allah has assigned to the parents. The believer is the one addressed here so that he would worship Allah properly. Assignment of obligations upon the servant is a consequence of his existence. In other words, the statement [in the verse] can only be addressed to a legally competent individual, whose competence is a consequence of his existence. Your parents are the immediate cause of your existence. But if you pursued the chain of causes of your existence even further, how did your parents come to life? Obviously, their parents were the cause of their existenve and so on, until you reach Allah. It is Allah Who commanded us to ‘Worship Him and associate nothing with Him.’ After this, Allah says: ‘And do the good unto your parents.’ The command ‘do good’ indicates that one should provide care for his parent in excess. We call this giving in excess the state of ’ihsan.

‘And do the good unto your parents.’ When the True Lord coupled the mention of the parents with His worship — as He is One Deity with whom we are not to associate anything — He did not address the question as to whether or not the parents are believers because there is another verse where He says: ‘But if they endeavour to make you associate with Me that of which you have no knowledge, do not obey them but accompany them in [this] world with appropriate kindness and follow the way of those who turn back to Me [in repentance]. Then to Me will be your return, and I will inform you about what you used to do.’ (Luqman: 15)

It is true you should not obey them in this regard, yet it is incumbent upon you to respect them because they are the direct cause of your existence even if this cause is against the One Who created it and brought it into existence. Allah exalted be His Power ‘Accompany them in [this] world with appropriate kindness.’ But goodness is done to both the one whom one likes and the one whom one does not like. Accordingly, do not let your heart get attached to your parents if they are polytheists. Only make sure to bear them good company in this life with kindness. For this reason, Allah says: ‘Accompany them in [this] world with appropriate kindness.’ This means that you should look after their worldly interests by way of kindness. You can thus be kind and do good to the one whom you like as much as you can do so to the one whom you do not like.

Allah says: ‘And do the good unto your parents’, and He repeats it in several verses. He told us before in the chapter of al-Baqarah: ‘And [recall] when We took the covenant from the Children of Israel, [enjoining upon them], "Do not worship except Allah; and be good to your parents.”’ (al-Baqara: 83).

Then the verse we are discussing comes: ‘And worship Allah [alone], and do not associate anything with Him. And do the good unto your parents.’ In another similar instance: ‘Say: "Come, I will recite what your Lord has prohibited you from: Join not anything in worship with Him; and be good and dutiful to your parents.”’ (al-An‘am: 151). Also In another similar instance, He says, ‘And We have enjoined on man to be dutiful and kind to his parents. His mother bears him with hardship and she brings him forth with hardship, and the bearing of him and the weaning of him is thirty months.’ (al-Ahqaf: 15) In the chapter of al-`Ankabut, Allah also says: ‘And We have enjoined on man to be dutiful and kind to his parents.’ (al-’Ankabut: 8)

But if your parents endeavour to make you associate others alongside Me that you do not know, do not obey them. Accordingly, if the parents are polytheists, we still must treat them kindly. But as we said, you may do the good to those whom you like as much as you may do it to those whom you do not like. What is forbidden, in this situation, is affection. For this reason, Allah says: ‘You will not find any people who believe in Allah and the Last Day, making friendship with those who oppose Allah and His Messenger (Muhammad).’ (al-Mujadala: 22)

There is no contradiction or semi-contradiction between the verse under study and the one just quoted from the chapter of al-Mujadalah. There are verses where Allah coupled His worship with being good towards one’s parents. There are two other verses which independently address treating parents well. This is in the saying of Allah Glorified is He: ‘And We have enjoined on man to be dutiful and kind to his parents.’ (al-Ahqaf: 15) And the saying of Allah Glorified is He: ‘And We have enjoined on man to be good and dutiful to his parents.’ (al-’Ankabut: 8)

The word ‘goodness’ in all the verses means to do more than what Allah has assigned to you, out of the belief that He sees you even though you do not see Him. The word involves pleasure of the servant with the obligations and even going beyond them. When one wants to do more than he is assigned to do, he may pray ten times a day instead of five, fast other months besides Ramadan or fast Monday and Thursday of every week. Instead of giving out only 2.5% of his wealth for zakat to the poor, he may give 10%; and perform pilgrimage twice in their lifetime instead of once. The point is therefore doing more than what Allah has enacted upon you. If you do so, Allah will admit you into the state of al-ihsan. You usually do so because you have tasted the sweetness of performing the enactments of Allah, and realized the grace of worshipping Allah in as much as He has endowed you with piety and other bounties, as per His saying: ‘So be ever-conscious of Allah; and Allah teaches you.’ (al-Baqara: 282)

You basically knew that Allah deserves from you to do more than what he has assigned you to do. For this reason, a good man said in one of his supplications, ‘ Allah, I am afraid that You would not reward me for obeying You because I have started to desire it.’ This means that worshiping Allah has become a self-desire for him. He is thus afraid that he may lose the sweetness of being assigned and the toil it involves. He says, ‘O Lord, I have loved worshipping You, and we are supposed to avoid the lusts of ourselves but it has become a lust; so, what should I do’?

This man has entered the state of al-ihsan, and his self has become tranquil and even his desires have become in accordance with what Allah has commanded and is content with.

For this reason, we should observe that when Allah the Glorified and Exalted talks about the pious, He says: ‘Indeed, the righteous will be among gardens and springs. Accepting what their Lord has given them. Indeed, they were before those doers of good.’ (adh-Dhariyat: 15-16) Why are they considered ‘doers of good’? The True Lord responds: ‘They used to sleep but little of the night.’ (adh-Dhariyat: 17)

But did Allah enact upon me the assignment not to sleep except for a short period of the night? One prays the night prayers at the beginning of the night; one may then sleep afterwards. This is the assignment. But if prayers are endeared to the heart of the believer, faith increased in his heart and limbs, and he enjoys being close to Allah, the True Lord never turns this servant away. He rather receives and admits him into the state of al-ihsan: 'Indeed, they were before those doers of good. They used to sleep but little of the night. And in the hours before dawn they would ask forgiveness.' (adh-Dhariyat: 16-18)

Our Lord did not enact such self-obligations upon the doers of good. He only obligated five prayers. We know the story of the Arab Bedouin who said to the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him 'Do I have to do anything else apart from praying?' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him answered, 'No, unless you volunteer to do something else.' He then mentioned to him giving zakat to the poor. The man then asked, 'Do I have to do anything else?' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him responded, 'No unless you volunteer to do something else.' The man turned away and left while saying, 'I swear to Allah, I will not do anything than this.' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'He would succeed were he true to what he pledged.'(1)

In this manner, the Arab Bedouin entered within the status of the successful. Allah admits whoever does more than what is enacted into the status of ihsan: 'They used to sleep but little of the night.' And in the hours before dawn, they would ask forgiveness. And from their properties was [given] the right of the [needy] petitioner and the deprived.' (adh-Dhariyat: 17-19)

We also notice the precision of style. The True Lord did not say that the deprived are entitled to a rightful share of the fortune of the doers of good; why? The reason is that the True Lord Glorified is He gave the doer of good the freedom to give out more than the legal proportion of the zakat that he is bound to give to the needy and the deprived. When Allah Glorified is He talks about a requirement of faith He says: 'And those in whose wealth there is a known right. For the petitioner and the deprived.' (al-Ma'arej: 24-25)

(1) Muslim

Thus, whoever wants to give out more than what is required, elevates from the state of faith and enters the status of `ihsan (doing beyond the obligatory). It is as if Allah is telling you in the verse under study: Do not only do what is required and incumbent on you with your parents. Rather care for, obey and show mercy and leniency towards them as much as you can. Elevate yourself to the status of ihsan. In another verse, Allah guides us after He has introduced us to the status of ihsan. He describes that same status with something else, namely, beauty: ‘And We have enjoined upon man goodness to parents.’ (al-’Ankabut: 8).

What is the opposite of goodness? It is ugliness. The True Lord had introduced us to the status of goodness one time and the status of ihsan another time. There are several points that we should heed. First, we notice that parents, in most cases, raise their children. The exception is when a child becomes an orphan and others raise him. For this reason, one should notice the cause of bringing up after existence. Since your parents are the cause of your existence, you are required to give them their rights and even more, so you can enjoy being in the status of ihsan. Yet, He reasoned this in another verse: ‘And say, "My Lord, have mercy upon them as they brought me up [when I was] small.”’ (al-Isra’: 24)

Raising children was the reason Allah used for the child to pray and obey them. But if other than your biological parents raise you, are you obliged to treat them as your parents? The True Lord says: ‘as they brought me up.’ If my parents are entitled to this right, so would anyone who brings me up even if they were not my biological parents. Allah mentioned parents when asking the child to take the status of ihsan. ‘My Lord, have mercy upon them as they brought me up [when I was] small.’ We thus notice that He sometimes does not mention the issue of bringing up so that we know that the parents are the cause of our existence. In another instance, He pays our attention that whoever is responsible for raising someone is entitled to the same rights as the biological parents. There is also another issue. When the True Lord advises us to obey and do the good to our parents, He refers to mother-exclusive rationale, without including the father: ‘And We have enjoined on man to be dutiful and kind to his parents. His mother bears him with hardship and she brings him forth with hardship, and the bearing of him and the weaning of him is thirty months.' (al-Ahqaf: 15).

Allah has listed here the reasons related to the mother without the father. This is the speech of the Lord, as the mother's role started from the moment the child is an embryo. She takes care of herself, behaves cautiously and pre-occupies herself with her child from the time he is an embryo. She tries to meet all his needs before he acquires reason and thought. The child's father may be away and never get to know his child before he grows up; and he, namely the father, starts preparing him for the struggles of life. During pregnancy, the mother takes care of her baby's needs before the latter even has a reason to recognize what she does for him. By contrast, by the time a child acquires reason, he recognizes the role of his father who lives, accompanies and takes care of him and whenever he needs anything, the mother tells him, 'ask your father and he will get it for you.' The child thus gets used to asking his father for all his needs. Over time, he forgets the role of his mother, and how she carried him during pregnancy, how she suckled him, nurtured and looked after him before he starts to understand anything. Of whose role, must we be reminded then? It is the mother's role. One recognizes the role of the father and the reasons for honouring him since he was a child because he is the one who delivers all his needs. For this reason, the True Lord says: 'And We have enjoined on man to be dutiful and kind to his parents. His mother bears him with hardship and she brings him forth with hardship, and the bearing of him, and the weaning of him is thirty months.' (al-Ahqaf: 15)

The child is not aware of the pregnancy period. When he starts acquiring consciousness of the world around him, he realizes that his father is the one who delivers all his needs, and as long as his father is the one who seems to oversee taking care of his needs. All of this makes him aware of his father's role, whereas the mother's role slips through the cracks. For this reason, Allah reminds us of this less obvious rationale about the mother's role and skipped the father's due to his more obvious role.

In the narration by Abu Hurayrah Allah be pleased with him, he said said, 'A man came to the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and said, "Who is the one who most deserves my best company? The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him replied, "Your mother." The man then asked, "Who is next"? The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him replied, "Your mother." The man then asked, "Who is next"? Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him replied, "Your mother." The man asked, "Who is next"? The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him replied: 'Your father."'[1]

If you think about it, you will find it obvious. Fatherhood is also connected to manhood, and manhood is a struggle and an unstoppable pursuit. Motherhood, by contrast, is sheltering and affection. A mother is thereby not required to go out, seek and deal with other people to meet her needs. Your father, on the contrary, goes out to work, which is an honour for him. However, for a woman to work is hard to swallow. The True Lord Glorified is He thus says: 'And do good unto your parents' (*an-Nisa': * 36), and 'We have enjoined on man goodness to parents' (al-'Ankabut: 8). Doing the good unto one's parents is reiterated three times, coupled with the worship of Allah without associating partners to Him. In addition, it is mentioned alone in two verses. It should be noted here that the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted says: 'But if they (both) strive with you to make you join in worship with Me others that of which you have no knowledge, then obey them not.' (Luqman: 15)

However, this is not in conflict with treating them nicely and delivering their needs. We notice that the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted has not mentioned asking for mercy for them, as they are upon disbelief and polytheism; as opposed to: 'And say, "My Lord, have mercy upon them as they brought me up [when I was] small."' (al-Isra': 24) Even though the parents raise the body of the child, they do not cultivate his heart and faith. For this reason, they do not deserve his prayer for mercy upon them. Irrespective of this, the True Lord wished for the child to bear his parents in this life even if they are disbelievers.

The True Lord Glorified and Exalted wants to spread kindness in the entire universe. For this purpose, He starts with those who are most akin; starting with family down to the neighbour. He says: 'And do the good unto your parents, and near of kin.' (an-Nisa': 36) Accordingly, there are multiple levels of kindness. If everyone does the good unto his parents, none will be humiliated or disgraced in his old age. Therefore, Allah expands the limits of kindness to include the relatives. He mentioned the parents and followed them with the 'near of kin.' But who are the akin? It is everyone who has a relation to the person. This is the second level.

---

(1) Al-Bukhari and Muslim

If every affluent treated his parents-the first level- kindly, and extended it to the relatives which is the second level, mutual kindness will overlap throughout the kin; and eventually no one will stand in need, as they will be looking after each other.

After that, Allah Glorified is He speaks about the orphans. The orphan—as we know—is the one who lost his father before reaching puberty. He misses the father's affection of childhood. But after he grows up and becomes a man, he is no longer considered an orphan. He has become independent. Further, the one whose mother dies is not called an orphan. Conversely, orphaned animals are those who lost their mother, not the father; even though an animal's infancy is short, in which the mother takes full care of the infant animal. In short, the animal orphan is the animal who lost the mother, while a human orphan is one who lost a father.

Humans have the longest childhood period among animals because they are being raised for a superior mission than that of an animal. We said before that when you plant certain crops like radishes, for instance, it ripens quite fast, and you may eat it after fifteen days. But when you plant a palm or a mango tree, it takes several years until it bears its fruits. The length of childhood depends on the mission assigned to the being in question; if it has an important mission, its childhood will be longer.

Allah Glorified is He wants you to expand the cycle of kindness. Do not limit yourself to the parents or kin only. Extend kindness to orphans because an orphan sees his friends enjoying the care of their fathers. Had the True Lord Glorified is He left the orphan uncared for, he will grow with a heart full of bitterness against society. The orphan may also revolt against Allah and wonder, 'Why do I not have a father just as my friends who enjoy the care of their fathers'? But if he finds, within an atmosphere of faith, multiple fathers after losing his biological father, he will not spite the fact that Allah caused his father to die.

Those who are afraid of dying and leaving behind weak offspring, should make sure to do good unto orphans. Indeed, if every one of us sees that orphans are nurtured and looked after in a community based on belief and faith, they would not be pre-occupied with anxiety, dying and leaving behind a weak child. They would rather feel trust in society. This way one will accept the fate of Allah with contentment, without any worries. This indeed is an issue that pre-occupies a lot of people. We thus say to every financially capable person, ‘If you live in a community of believers wherein the orphan feels emotionally secured under the care of multiple fathers who share Islamic faith, the orphan will grow up free of all bitterness and animosity.’ For this reason, the True Lord says: ‘And let those (executors and guardians) have the same fear in their minds as they would have for their own, if they had left weak offspring behind. So, let them fear Allah and speak right words.’ (an-Nisa’: 9)

Indeed, if you see that a faith-oriented society has provided care for the orphans left behind by others, you will be confident it will take care of your orphans as well. Hence, whether death comes or not, you should not worry yourself about it. But if one sees that an orphan is left unattended; he will be completely pre-occupied with securing the worldly means for his child. We tell this father: serve your son by putting what you save in the hands of Allah because the One Who created is more trustworthy than the one who is created. On the same lines, we related the story of Mu`awiyah and 'Amr ibn Al-`As earlier, when they were sitting together—sometime before they died-talking when 'Amr ibn Al-'As asked Mu`awiyah, ‘What do you still have of the worldly pleasures’? Mu`awiyah replied, ‘As for food, I have become bored of the best of it; and as for garments, I have become bored of its softest kinds. My sole pleasure of this world is to have a sip of cold water on hot day under the shade of a tree.’

These are words that inspire humans with some ambition. After Mu`awiyah had become the Caliph and leader of the believers, and every one seeks his accord and satisfaction, he said, ‘My share of the worldly pleasures comes down to a sip of cold water under the shade of a tree on a hot summer day.’ This is found among a lot of people. It is as if all worldly aspirations have come down to what anyone could have: a sip of cold water. Afterwards Mu`awiyah asked, ‘What about you 'Amr? What do you still find gratifying among worldly pleasures?' 'Amr replied, 'I still have land abundant with animals, and a well that overflows with water to irrigate the land. I would like to keep it for the rest of my life, and pass to my children upon my death.' There was a servant attending them named, Wirdan to whom the leader of the believers wanted to be courteous. He asked him, 'What about you, Wirdan? What do you still enjoy of worldly pleasures?' Now, consider the reply of the servant, to know that faith does not make a difference between a master and a slave. Wirdan replied, 'My share of worldly pleasure, O leader of the believers, is to do a favour to some noble person who would not repay it to me during my lifetime, and would continue to bear it for my children.'

He wants to explain to us that nothing is lost. As much as you extend your hands with aid and assistance to others, others will do the same for you. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him gave us that same thing. He said, 'I and the guardian of the orphan are like this in heaven;' "and he pointed with two his adjacent fingers."'(1) What higher status can one ask for? Should not all of us search for an orphan to look after so that we would enjoy the company of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him in heaven? This status was indeed the aim of all Companions.

A man from the Ansar came to the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him while looking sad. The Prophet peace and blessings be upon him asked him, 'What is wrong with you?' The man replied, 'Prophet of Allah, it is something that I have been thinking about.' So, the Prophet asked, 'What is it?' The man then replied, 'We frequent you, gaze at your face and sit with you, and soon you will return to Allah, and join the rest of the prophets, and we will not be able to reach you.' The Prophet peace and blessings be upon him did not respond. However, Gabriel peace be upon him then came to him with the following verse, 'And whoever obeys Allah and the Messenger - they will be with the ones upon whom Allah has bestowed favour of the prophets, the steadfast affirmers of truth, the martyrs and the righteous. And excellent are those as companions.' (an-Nisa': 69) The Prophet peace and blessings be upon him then summoned the man and relayed to him the good news.(2)

(1) Al-Bukhari

(2) Taken from Ibn Kathir's translation of The Quran

The True Lord says to these people, ‘Do not be sad! If you love the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and rejoice in his company in the worldly life, do not worry about enjoying his company in heaven; Allah will resurrect you with him in heaven. One will accompany whom he loves. For this reason, I say to every Muslim; look for an orphan to look after in order that you may gain this high status of faith and its elevated counterpart in the hereafter. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘I and the guardian of the orphan are like this in heaven, “and he pointed with his middle and index fingers together and then separated them.”’(1)

Tell me if you may; how would the state of society be if we dealt with orphans in the light of these instructions? Solidarity will prevail in society.

The True Lord subsequently says: ‘and the needy.’ We know that the needy and the poor have been defined by the jurists to be the ones in need. But does this mean that the needy and the poor are those who do not have their basic needs; or is it the poor who have nothing or have less than necessary? For instance, he may have ten pounds while he needs twenty to subsist. The word faqir (poor) is derived from fiqar which is used to refer to the disease that causes the back and waist to be broken. The word faqir is thus quite indicative of the state of the poor. Miskin (needy) is also quite an expressive word; it is derived from al-maskana which means free of all pride, and implies being vanquished and defeated. The word itself is thus indicative of its implication. The word jar (deviate)is one who lives nearby, but in what sense may we call the one who lives next to me a jar? The reason is that the one living beside you has been assigned this special place in the world. He thus left a wide range of places and came to this specific spot and became your neighbour. This means that, out of many alternatives, he chose to live beside you. Thus, the neighbour is called jar to imply that he left all places in the world and came to live beside you.

Allah Glorified is He advised us to take care of our neighbour as much as He advised us to take care of our kin, the orphan and the needy. The neighbour has several rights upon us. For this reason, the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘There are three kinds of neighbours; a neighbour entitled to only one right. This is the lowest kind of neighbour. There is also a neighbour who is entitled to two rights and another who is entitled to three rights. As for the one who is entitled to only one right, he is the neighbour who associates partners alongside Allah and does not have any blood relation to you; he is thus only entitled to the right of neighbourhood. As for the one who is entitled to two rights, he is the Muslim neighbour who is entitled to both the right of Islam and the right of neighbourhood. As for the one who is entitled to three rights, he is the Muslim neighbour who is also a relative. He is thus entitled to the right of Islam, the right of neighbourhood and the right of kinship.'(1)

(1) Al-Bukhari

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said concerning the right of the neighbour, 'Gabriel keeps on admonishing me to take care of the neighbour to the extent that I thought he would be one of the heirs.'(2) But what are the boundaries of defining the neighbour? The neighbour is the one whose door is closest to you within forty cubits away from your door. Scholars also said everyone who lives in the forty houses next to you is your neighbour.

Afterward the True Lord says: 'and the neighbour from among your own people.' Allah mentions the one who is entitled to both the right of kinship and the right of neighbourhood. He then said: 'and the neighbour who is a stranger.' This means the one distant to you. He then said: 'and the friend by your side.' This refers to the one who constantly accompanies you. Scholars said that this refers to the wife or the travel companion because travel companions are always together. He may also be the one who follows you in the hope that he may take something from the bounties of Allah that have been bestowed upon you whether in the form of money, knowledge or a craft that he would like to learn from you. He is thus the one who accompanies you. The servant also accompanies you. These connotations expand the cycle of kindness to others. Furthermore, if you think about them, you will realize how they overlap.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him told Abu Dharr Allah be pleased with him: 'Abu Dharr, if you cook soup, increase its water so that you may serve your neighbours a portion of it.'(3)

(1) [Al-Bazzar and Abu Ash-Sheikh]

(2) [Al-Bukhari and Muslim]

(3) [Muslim]

In this respect, what is important is to always be in contact with your neighbour, especially if this neighbour is of your kin. A lot of neighbours may share affection and good relations. However, there may be a neighbour whose name you may not know. This is the neighbour who is a stranger. ‘And the friend by your side, and the way farer.’ He is typical of someone you know nothing about except that he is related to such and such a city. The word ‘wayfarer’ means that we do not know anything about him at all. Thus, once you see him, you say he is wayfarer travelling on the road; this implies that you cannot relate him to anything except the road or the way that brought him to you. You cannot relate him to a known father or mother let alone a clan. You know nothing about him.

‘And those whom your right hands possess.’ We have talked previously about those in this category. We said, Islam came not to legalize slavery but to abolish it and drain its sources that used to exist before its advent. Only one source remains; lawful war. But why did it not rule out this source as well? The reason is that a lawful war involves taking captives from both sides. The only way to release them is through exchange of captives. This comes down to equal treatment that the modern world has finally settled on under the rubric of ‘captive exchange protocols.’ Islam forbids us to call them slaves. Rather, he or she should be called a boy or girl. Thus, even titles were organized and disciplined by Allah so that servitude be reserved only to Him.

The True Lord Glorified is He brought about Islam when slavery was present. Even though slavery at that time had more than twenty sources, it was organized in accordance with one criterion: the will of the master. Islam thus came to abolish slavery; and the first step in this abolition is blocking its sources. Further, instead of leaving slavery to be organized and governed only by the will of the master and his desire, Islam established multiple grounds for dealing with it. Accordingly, if we have eliminated all the sources to only one, we have diversified the governing criteria. You may thus atone for a sin that you have committed by freeing a slave. Alternatively, if you have made a false oath to the effect that you will divorce your wife, you may atone for it by freeing a slave. This is the wish of the one who wants to abolish slavery. Moreover, Islam guides the one who owns a slave, but does not have the means to free this slave, and the boy or girl was still under his ownership, the master should treat them well if they are still slaves. Feed him of the same food you eat, and give him clothes of the same kind you wear, and do not overburden him otherwise help him. However, it is rather difficult to find someone who eats of the same food of which his master eats and wears the same clothes as he does, and when his master assigns him a task that he cannot undertake on his own, his master aids him. Is this not the best recipe of kindness?

After this the True Lord Glorified is He seals this verse with a statement that totally crushes the pride any doer of good things may have. Beware lest the bounty you bestow or the exertion you make should cause you to be proud or self-conceited. Your self-conceit and arrogance would be false. Further, if you look down on others because of the means you have in your life, you may know that these means will eventually change. 'Change' here means that it will fade away and perish. Thus, the one who wants to take pride and be self-conceited should do so because of something inherent in him and that he essentially has. For this reason, pride is only possible for Allah, but constantly changing humans cannot claim it to themselves. We see strong people becoming weak, rich people becoming poor and knowledgeable people becoming ignorant: 'So that he knows nothing after having known.' (al-Hajj: 5)

No creature ought to have pride. Those who want to take pride and look down on others should do so owing to something that they have in themselves. In other words, they should do so based on something that cannot be taken away from them. But all creatures are in a constant change and human existence is always subject to fluctuation. Therefore, leave pride to the one who can rightfully claim it. Never think that when we told you to do so and be good unto your kin, orphans and the needy that it is an invitation for you to be proud. Pride spoils good deeds because they were given to you by Allah. You should rather be modest because the one who is self-conceited is the one who does not recognize any one greater than himself.

Find someone who takes pride in having a million pounds but shows off before someone who possesses more money; what would he do? He would be shy and belittled. One would not become arrogant unless he finds all people present smaller in rank compared to him. But if he continues to look at Allah, he would know that pride only belongs to Allah. When one acts arrogantly, he does so because he does not have Allah in his mind otherwise he would be ashamed. If you bore Him in mind, you would be too bashful to feel any arrogance. Allah is absent from the mind of the arrogant person. For this reason, the True Lord says at the end of this verse: ‘Verily, Allah does not like such as are proud and boastful.’ But what does it mean to be full self-conceited, and what does boastful mean?

The root of the word mukhtal (self-conceit) means moving with pride. For this reason, we call the horse in Arabic khayl because it walks boastfully. When someone rides it, it also walks boastfully. Self-conceit is a visual movement whereas acting in a boastful manner is an audible movement. The True Lord forbids us to walk proudly and snobbishly. He also forbids us to walk in a swayed manner. One should not consider himself the source of bounty so that the saying of Allah: ‘Turning away haughtily that he may lead (others) astray from the way of Allah; for him is disgrace in this world, and on the day of resurrection We will make him taste the punishment of burning.’ (al-Hajj: 9-10)

As for pride, it occurs when one verbally boasts about what he did as if he was the source of giving to all humans. Both self-conceit and boastfulness are forbidden. The Muslim should refrain from visual movement and verbal pride; but why did the True Lord mention this here? He mentioned it so that no servant of Allah would think that he is doing the good of his own initiative; rather, the good he does is from what Allah has endowed him with.

In addition, you should not exploit those to whom you did good things as slaves. If you do so, remember the mastery of the One Who bestowed you with your entire livelihood. If you do so, you would commit to respect Allah and keep away from self-conceit and boastfulness due to what you gave to others.

The True Lord says: ‘Verily, Allah does not like such as are proud and boastful.’

After the True Lord says: ‘And do the good unto your parents.’ He then said: ‘and near of kin, and unto orphans.’ Allah then talked about effort exertion, generosity and forgiveness. Afterwards Allah speaks of the opposite case:

ٱلَّذِينَ يَبۡخَلُونَ وَيَأۡمُرُونَ ٱلنَّاسَ بِٱلۡبُخۡلِ وَيَكۡتُمُونَ مَآ
ءَاتَىٰهُمُ ٱللَّهُ مِن فَضۡلِهِۦۗ وَأَعۡتَدۡنَا لِلۡكَٰفِرِينَ عَذَابٗا مُّهِينٗا ﴿٣٧﴾

who are miserly and order other people to be the same, hiding the bounty God has given them. We have prepared a humiliating torment for such ungrateful people [37] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 37)

What does it mean to be miserly? It means the difficulty of giving. A miser always finds a great difficulty whenever he takes a sum of his own money to give to others, and sometime he is reluctant to give it. But the generous one is always at ease and willing to do this; he is always comfortable doing favours. In short, miserliness means finding difficulty in giving. This attitude extends even to things that neither harms him to give nor benefit him to retain, simply because he does not want to give. This is a trait of the self because he withheld to give himself anything before anyone; and since he is as such, would you expect him to give others?

A poet depicts a miser named `Isa and whom he wants to insult for being a miser. He thus portrays him to be a miser not only towards other people but also towards himself, even concerning things that will not harm him to give away or benefit him to retain. As long as he behaves like this towards himself, it would not be unexpected that he acts like this towards others:

‘Isa is being a miser towards himself

even though he is not immortal

Indeed, if he could breathe through one nostril, he would do so to satiate his miserly attitude.

He is miser to the extent that he thinks to breathe through one nostril to avoid breathing through both.

Another poet brings forwards an image that clarifies how the one who is being ungenerous denies himself comfortable and humane life. He says:

If your house, cousin of Muhammad, is full of needles that you do not need; and Yousef comes to you to borrow one to sew his garment; you would not lend him any.

The poet here says that if Yousef (Joseph) peace be upon him goes to this miser and asks him for a needle to sew his garment that was torn by Zuleikha, this miser would not lend him one even if he has a house full of needles.

Therefore, a miser is the one who does not like giving others. He even finds it burdensome and difficult to give something that will neither benefit him if he keeps it and nor does it harm him if he gives it away. The True Lord thus says about such a person: ‘And let not those who [out of miserliness] withhold what Allah has given them of His bounty ever think that it is better for them. Rather, it is worse for them. Their necks will be encircled by what they withheld on the Day of Resurrection. And to Allah belongs the heritage of the heavens and the earth. And Allah, with what you do, is [fully] acquainted.’ (Al-‘Imran: 180)

Allah will tie the neck of the miser with a ring made of the things he found difficulty giving away. Had he given some of them away, the ring around his neck would have been lighter on Judgment Day. But the more he withholds, the heavier the ring will be. The True Lord also speaks about those who amass gold and silver: ‘O you who have believed, indeed many of the scholars and the monks devour the wealth of people unjustly and avert [them] from the way of Allah. And those who hoard gold and silver and spend it not in the way of Allah - give them tidings of a painful punishment. The Day when it will be heated in the fire of Hell and seared therewith will be their foreheads, their flanks, and their backs, [it will be said], "This is what you hoarded for yourselves, so taste what you used to hoard."’ (at-Tawba: 34-35)

If misers were to amass huge quantities of silver and gold, these quantities will be used to ablaze the fire burning them in the hereafter. Thus, one should relieve himself of the torment and pain of burning. The misers do not only keep this ethical deficiency to themselves; they want others to become like them as if they fell in love with being ungenerous. It ails them to see generous people. A miser will tell you do not spend because he suffers when he sees a generous person, and wants all people to be just like him so that no one would be better than him.

He knows that generosity is better because he wants all people to be the same as him. Miserliness is to withhold that which you have been endowed from the one who has not been endowed. But is it only about money? No, it exists in virtually every skill you have, while others do not. Whenever you withheld to benefit people with it, you have become a miser yourself.

Miserliness subsumes the one who would not help the incapacitated and the one who does not share his knowledge with others. Further, failing to maintain patience in the face of the fool is also considered miserliness. Another instance: there may be a teacher who has ten students learning from him a craft. However, he may not want to share his knowledge with them; he would then be a miser as well.

‘Those who are miserly and enjoin miserliness on other men’ is a verse that encompasses all tangible and intangible aspects of miserliness. We can use this understanding to apply it to a superior meaning. The people of the Book knew the truth about Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him as much as they knew their children. However, when he came to them confirming what they knew was the truth, they disbelieved the message of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. They hid away their recognition of his character and their recognition of the knowledge that he brought even though he is the most honest. This is the ultimate expression of miserliness. They continued to command people to be misers.

You knew that the Ansar were generous when the Muhajirun went to them and they shared with them their money and wealth. The Ansar even agreed to give them the bounty about which Allah has implanted a special love and jealousy, women; whom even if one hates, one would not be willing to give them to anyone else. The Ansar divorced some of their women (i.e. those who married more than one) so the Muhajirun can marry them.

Indeed, there were several men who were married to more than one woman, and who willingly divorced the second wife to marry her to one of the Muhajirun. The True Lord the Glorified nourished the generosity of the Ansar to the extent that one of them would go to a Muhajir and tell him, ‘Look at both of my wives and choose whomever you like, and I will divorce the one you choose and marry her to you immediately.’

Is there a more exalted and higher form of generosity than this? If you have a bounty from Allah and you are a believer, you would want to extend the grace of the bounty to others. Thus, if you have an elegant car, would you want to give it away?! However, you may be reluctant to do this with a woman. Nonetheless, this exalted form of generosity was manifested by the Ansar. They said to the Muhajirun, 'You are immigrants and you have left behind your families.' This was an elevation caused by the steadfast faith of the Ansar.

The Muhajirun were strong and energetic youth whom Quraysh had denied them their wives. Each of the Ansar thus said to himself: why I would not divorce one of my wives so that my immigrant brother could marry her to release his suppressed passions? At least, if I do so, I would be keeping him from casting his eyes on something prohibited by Allah. But the Jews, polytheists, and hypocrites urged them not to give anything to those who came with the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. The Noble Quran says the following about this situation: 'They are the ones who say, "Do not spend on those who are with the Messenger of Allah until they disband." And to Allah belongs the depositories of the heavens and the earth, but the hypocrites do not understand.' (al-Munafiqun: 7)

They thought badly about those who believed in the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him. They thought that if they did not support them, they would revert on their faith. They forgot that the Muhajrun had left their wealth and country for the sake of Allah. Would the one who did so shun his belief in Allah if he finds nothing? Of course, he would not! The reason is that he left everything for the sake of Allah. For instance, Mus`ab ibn `Umayr, an affluent young man in Quraysh, who used to put on the finest perfumes and whose mother used to flood him with wealth, started to wear the skin of a goat when he went to Medina. When the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him saw him, he said to his Companions, 'Look what faith has done to your friend.'

Thus, when hypocrites, like `Abdullah ibn Ubayy, said to the Ansar, spend on those who are with the Prophet Muhammad so that they would disband. He thought that the immigrants were willing, after all the sacrifices they made, to sell their faith for a bite. It is as if he and his fellow hypocrites forgot that the one who sells his faith for a bite is the one who believes in false principles. However, the one who embraces faith in a true principle always finds a sweet taste in his soul due to this belief. He further knows well that the Lord has prepared a great reward for him.

A believer would thus never change his faith or compromise it. `Ali ibn Abu Taleb said, ‘One day, as I was walking into the mosque, I found Mus`ab ibn `Umayr dressed in a garment stitched with a piece of sheep fur, who previously used to be the richest and most luxuriously living young man in Mecca. When the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him saw how he became after embracing Islam and recalled the affluence in which Mus`ab used to relish before embracing Islam in comparison with his current austere state, he cried in pity for him and said, “Which is better; your current state or your state if someone attends you and serves you bread and meat? We replied, We would be better off that day, for if we have enough livelihood, we would be able to devote ourselves to prayers and worship.” So, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, “No, your state today is better than your state in that day.”(1)

We have previously said that you ought to remember that the sweetness of faith and belief prompts the believer to sacrifice everything for the cause of exalting his faith. But those who adhere to false principles and values do not admit others into it unless they pay a price in advance. In other words, they buy them. Thus, if you ever see people being paid or bribed to embrace or support a certain principle or doctrine, you must know that this principle or doctrine is false. If this principle or doctrine was original, one would have expended all his fortune for its sake; one would even sacrifice his own life for its sake.

Among the wonders of Islam is that when the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him wrote the covenant for himself at `Aqaba. The Ansar asked him, ‘If we fulfilled this covenant, what is our gain’? It is as if they were asking; you have taken your share, so what about us?

Consider the Prophet Muhammad’s exalted faith in Allah and his absolute certainty that faith, in itself, is a prize. So, did he relay to them the good news that they would rule over the earth? Did he tell those who were weak and helpless at that time that they would be empowered by Allah? No, he rather told them that 'your prize is paradise.' Had he told them that your prize is the mastery over the world, this would have required deliberation. It is true that they took over the world, yet some of them died before this happened. So, how could Prophet Muhammad's prophecy be true in such a case? Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him spoke to them about a guaranteed thing; the thing that the believer could find once he dies. He told them, 'you would have paradise.'

(1) At-Tirmidhi

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said to a group of his Companions, 'I bid that you, and pledge to me that you would never believe in any god but Allah, and that you would not commit adultery, kill your children, promote a lie amongst yourselves or disobey me in any good deed. Whoever of you continues to be true to this covenant will be rewarded by Allah; whoever adheres partly to it and is then punished for it in the worldly life, such punishment would be an atonement for him; and whoever adheres partly to it and Allah conceals the reality of his belief, his fate will be left to Allah to either punish or forgive him if He wills.'

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did not encourage them by promising superiority, wealth or domination in the world. Rather, he motivated them by the ultimate, matchless and doubtless reward of Allah: Paradise. It was on this basis that they pledged allegiance to him, and that is why the Ansar (the Helpers [Muslims from Medina]) were especially dear to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. In the Battle of Hunayn, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him distributed the battle spoils among the Muhajirun (the Immigrants [Meccan Muslims]), but nothing was left for the Ansar, which was rather hard on their hearts. To soothe them, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'Are you not contented, O Ansar, that others will go back to their homes with sheep and camels and you will go back with the Messenger of Allah? By Him in Whose Hand is my soul, if it had not been for the immigration (that He was one of the Muhajirun), I would have counted myself as one of the Ansar! If all people took a path and the Ansar chose another, I would go with the Ansar! May Allah have mercy on the Ansar, their children and their grandchildren?'

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had barely finished his speech when the beards of the Ansar became wet with tears, and they replied, 'We are content with the Messenger of Allah as our share!' How firm and sublime their faith was! The hypocrites told the Ansar, as Allah quotes them in the Quran: 'Give nothing to those who follow God's Messenger, until they abandon him.' (al-Munafiqun: 7). However, those who believed in the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him never abandoned him. They immigrated with him to Medina, leaving behind wealth and family. They were not after any transient gains; they were more than content with the comfort and joy they were promised in the Afterlife. They knew through their faith that all the pleasures of this worldly life would come to an end by death or loss. They aspired and strove for eternal bliss that will never come to an end.

Allah the Exalted then says: '… and conceal whatever Allah has bestowed upon them out of His Bounty…' (an-Nisa': 37) An act of concealment means trying to keep from people a thing that should naturally manifest itself. It is as if wealth and knowledge were struggling to manifest themselves, to be delivered to everyone, but those who possess them deliberately block their way to the light. A sound disposition dictates whatever material or nonmaterial blessings Allah grants a person, out of His Bounty, should not be withheld from people, but should reach out to help others, for every blessing of Allah is essentially intended to be in the service of His servants. Concealment in this case is an act of transgression, for it means keeping those blessings of Allah from performing their role of serving humankind. This transgression also goes against the nature that Allah has created in those concealed blessings. They too, are servants of Allah created for a mission; so when they are forcefully prevented from fulfilling that mission, frustration prevents them from functioning in the best manner. Even inanimate things feel frustrated: 'So the heaven and the earth did not weep for them, nor were they respited.' (ad-Dukhan: 29)

The sky and earth have their own way of weeping. Such weeping is not by way of shedding tears; it is rather, in a manner that only Allah knows the reality of. The words of Allah: '… and conceal whatever Allah has bestowed upon them out of His Bounty…' (an-Nisa': 37), therefore mean that whatever Allah gives you out of His Grace is not exclusively yours. You have not attained it due to any power inherent in you, but Allah has bestowed His favours on to you out of His Bounty, so you may employ them to benefit His servants. Look at the universe around you and you will find it in a constant flux of change. Have you not ever come across or heard of an able man who later became disabled or a rich man who became poor? We witness such fluctuations in the world every day, so we should learn this lesson. Now, you are wealthy enough to give, but one day you may be the one in need. Through the good you do for others now; you are saving yourself when days turn around and you are in a need.

Moreover, you will save yourself from torment in the Hereafter: '[Nor] those who are stingy, and bid others to be stingy, and conceal whatever Allah has bestowed upon them out of His Bounty; and so We have readied a shameful suffering for all who deny the truth.' (an-Nisa': 37) Look what stinginess brings on to those who insist on it. Allah describes them as 'deniers of truth' in the sense that they deny His favours on them and show ungratefulness through concealment of these favours. Let them receive their recompense in full, then: '… and so We have readied a shameful suffering for all who deny the truth.' (an-Nisa': 37) Their punishment has already been prepared: Hell. Fire is already in a state of completion and preparedness to receive its dwellers just as paradise is. The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'Paradise was shown to me, and if I had stretched out my hand, I would have picked some of its fruits.'(1)

The promised reward is already prepared, and who prepared it? It is Allah, the All-Powerful and Almighty Creator, and He has prepared that reward in accordance with His Limitless Power. Someone may arrogantly argue that he can bear torment, as a poet once said, addressing his own self,

Stick to patience so those rejoicing at your misfortune will be surprised!

Show them that you will never be broken by life's suffering and plights!

This does not apply to torment in the Hereafter. Allah Who has prepared it, describes it as 'shameful suffering.' It is not like any shame or any suffering we may ever face in this life. When it comes to the unseen Afterlife, words do not denote the same degree of the quality. The scope and nature of things in the Hereafter are totally unpredictable.

(1) An-Nisa`i, Ahmad and Al-Muttaqi Al Hindi from the book Kanz Al-`Ummal

After talking about the stingy, Allah mentions another category of people about spending:

وَٱلَّذِينَ يُنفِقُونَ أَمْوَٰلَهُمْ رِئَآءَ ٱلنَّاسِ وَلَا يُؤْمِنُونَ بِٱللَّهِ
وَلَا بِٱلْيَوْمِ ٱلْءَاخِرِ ۗ وَمَن يَكُنِ ٱلشَّيْطَٰنُ لَهُۥ قَرِينًا فَسَآءَ قَرِينًا ﴿٣٨﴾

[Nor does He like those] who spend their wealth to show off, who do not believe in Him or the Last Day. Whoever has Satan as his companion has an evil companion! [38]
(The Quran, an-Nisa’: 38)

Unlike the miserly, this noble verse is addressed to a category of people who do spend generously, but they miss the purpose for such spending. Instead of directing his intention to pleasing Allah, he spends his money, or better say, ‘wastes his money’, to earn people’s recognition and praise. Those who know the truth about the Grace and Bounty of Allah say, when you give, choose Him who will reward you most generously for your giving. When you give a thing to someone, your reward will be in line with his capacity; it may be just a word of praise. When your reward is from Allah however, how great do you think it will be? Doubtless, reward from Allah is matchless.

It befits a person of sound judgment then to be careful who he gives his money to. We have a great example in the Companion ‘Uthman ibn `Affan*, Allah be pleased with him*. Merchants competed to buy his new merchandise so they would re-sell it and make profit. ‘Uthman told them, ‘I have received for it more than what you offer me… I have sold it to Allah.’ He gave his merchandise to charity for the cause of Allah; he knew He is the One Who will best appreciate it and reward for it. Let whoever spends his money to gain people’s praise know that he thus throws away his wealth for a trivial price. What good can people ever do you? They may even envy you for what you have and wish they could take it away from you. Why do you show off your deeds for their sake then? This is a profitless deal and all what you spend will be effaced. Allah says: ‘Behold, Allah has bought of the believers their lives and their possessions, promising them Paradise in return…’ (at-Tawba: 111).

As long as Allah is the One Who buys them, the price must be high; the price is eternal comfort and joy that will never change or come to an end. In paradise, all pleasures are ever abundant and ever ready for a believer to enjoy; no wish a believer will entertain but that will come true in the blink of an eye. What loss and what weakness of judgment it is then to sacrifice such matchless, abundant reward for a profitless bargain with people whose praise can do more harm than good, if any good at all! Only those who have not tasted the sweetness of trading with Allah would do this. In another verse of the Quran, Allah says about them: '… like someone who spends his wealth only to be seen by people, not believing in Allah and the Last Day. Such a person is like a safwan (rock) with earth on it: heavy rain falls and leaves it completely bare…' (al-Baqara: 264)

The Arabic word safwan refers to a white, shiny, smooth stone with pores that dust can fill. Being so smooth, even a few droplets of water can remove the dust off it. He who gives to charity to be praised by people will gain no reward in the end; whatever he spends will be effaced, just as water removes dust off a smooth rock and leaves its surface empty; they too will be left in the end with no reward. No one would do so if faith was firmly rooted in their hearts. When one is offered a high price for his commodity, why should he sell it for less?! Is it plausible to bring loss on to oneself?! To throw away the wealth Allah has given you for other than Him, contradicts true faith and no fruits will be reaped from such a losing business. Therefore, be careful as to why and to whom you give charity. If it is for the cause of Allah, prepare for an ample reward. Direct your intention to Him the Almighty and do not boast about what you give. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him has told about seven categories of people whom Allah will protect in His Shade on Judgment Day, when there is no shade except His. One of these categories is '… a man who gives charity and conceals it so much that his left hand would not know what his right hand has given!'(1)

A righteous servant of Allah knows that giving confers on him a kind of superiority most felt by those he gives, so he would be anxious to hide his charity from people not to hurt their feelings and make them feel humiliated, as well as inferior. Still, Allah knows secrecy is not always possible and He does not want to limit the scope of giving, so He tells us: ‘If you do deeds of charity openly, it is well; but if you bestow it upon the needy in secret, it will be even better for you, and it will atone for some of your bad deeds. And Allah is aware of all that you do.’ (al-Baqara: 271)

---

(1) Al-Bukhari and Muslim

There is no harm in giving to charity openly if the giver intends by so doing to offer an example for other people to follow. What is important is for him to purify his heart of all pride at the moment of giving and guard himself against false piety. In all cases, Allah would never deprive the needy of what a giver may be willing to spend, even if he does so just to show off. Rather, Allah deprives the insincere giver of reward, so he alone is the loser, yet society would benefit from his spending.

A Muslim who believes in Allah and that He is the Ultimate Giver should not spend except for His cause and to win His Good Pleasure. By giving to charity only to show off, he thus follows in the steps of the disbelievers, ‘…not believing in Allah and the Last Day…’ (an-Nisa’: 38). If they believed in Judgment Day or thought of the eternal reward, they would direct their intentions only to pleasing Allah. If you truly appreciate the blessings Allah has bestowed on you, then you should spend them in the way that makes them fruitful to yourself and others. Begrudging money, or spending it only to win people’s praise or admiration, is a waste of this blessing Allah has given you. By contrast, spending money for the cause of Allah means reaping abundant fruits both in this life (since Allah will bless one’s money) and in the Hereafter, by the reward for generosity extending there eternally.

The stingy are the enemies of their own wealth because they fail to make it fruitful. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘On Judgment Day, Almighty Allah will descend to resolve the cases of His servants, while every nation is humbled to their knees. Those who will be brought forth first are the ones who memorized the Quran, the next are who were martyred, and the third are those who had lots of money. Allah will ask the reciter of the Quran: “Did I not teach you what I revealed to My Messenger?” The reciter of the Quran will respond, “Yes, O Allah.” Allah will ask him, “What did you do to express gratitude for that knowledge?” He would say, “I have recited it in salat (prayer) during the night and day.” Allah will say, “You are lying”, and the angels will also say, “You are lying.’” Allah will say, “You recited the Quran so it would be said, “He is an able reciter [of the Quran]”, and so was it said.” Then, the man who possesses wealth will be brought forth and asked….’(1) Allah makes him spend his money for the service and benefit of those in need then make him lament his spending on the Day of Judgment when he finds his deeds obliterated and no reward is prepared for him.

A miserly person continues throughout his life to pile heaps of money, thinking he is achieving happiness in this way. In fact, he is only depriving himself and saving for an heir who would gain them effortlessly. An Egyptian proverb says, ‘Money of the miserly goes to squanderers.’ So, Allah punishes him in both lives. Indeed, no one can deceive the Almighty Creator. Allah has granted him a blessing that he begrudges others, so Allah makes this money a punishment to him and allows others to benefit from it despite his miserliness. He will only pay for it in the end. If he spent his money in the manner Allah ordains, Allah would bless it and reward him with ample compensation: ‘…and whatever it be that you spend on others, He [always] replaces it…’ (Saba’: 39) However, since he acts at variance with what Allah likes, he is denied the fruits of this money in both lives, and it will all be left for the heirs to enjoy it. Further, when the miserly withhold their money from those in need, they thus only make room for the generous who want to give and help others.

How is that? Let us assume that a generous person, who never shunned anyone who sought his help, experienced a decrease in his income that he cannot even provide sufficiently for himself. Suppose he had two acres of land and wanted to sell one of them to ease the asperities of the needy who were used to pin hope on him. Who would want to buy that acre but a miserly who amasses wealth? In this manner, the miserly person facilitated spending for the generous one, by thus providing the latter with money in the course of his piling lands and riches! Let no one think that he can deceive the One Who has created him and the entire universe and given him that wealth. This case bears subtle resemblance to that of a sinner who repents; perhaps he would think he had enjoyed that sin and indulged himself in the pleasure he craved and then it would come to nothing. It is true that repentance means Allah will forgive him, but his sins would spur him to struggle in doing good deeds to make amends for his former disobedience. Allah says: '…for, verily, good deeds drive away evil deeds….' (Hud: 114)

(1) Muslim, At-Tirmidhi and Ibn-Khuzayma

Your past sins, even though forgiven, would continue to prick your conscience and drive you to spare no effort in doing good deeds to make up for the past. Allah thus makes those sins a means that pushes one to be of service to others through doing good to them. Similarly, Allah uses the stingy to pave way for the generous and thus be of service to others despite themselves. Allah concludes the verse by summing up the reason that pushes the stingy to persist in their attitude: '…Whoever has Satan as his companion has an evil companion.' (an-Nisa': 38) Several reasons may drive one to be stingy, but they can only be concluded in one word: Satan. He is the one who prevents you from following the right path. He is present in all that makes disobedience tempting, in every desire you crave and every instance when you have been heedless of the right path. He is the bad companion who makes every atrocious sin dazzling and every unlawful pleasure luring. Still, devils are not only jinn, but there are devils among human beings as well. Your own self may play the role of the devil when it tempts you into deviating from the right path to quench a desire. The self that entices you to think only of transient pleasures and forget about the reward Allah has prepared for the righteous is the devil in disguise. So, it is Satan who insinuates them to act in a stingy manner and command others to do the same. They have taken Satan as a qarin (companion). Another derivative of the same root is qirn (opponent) which suggests that a sinner has for his companionship, the very one he should fight as an opponent.

A third derivative is the word qarn (century). It is taken from the same root that denotes companionship since it refers to a period when generations are connected with each other, which conveys the same meaning of 'companionship' or 'closeness.' So, Satan is the constant companion of him who yields to his temptations. Allah says: '… Whoever has Satan as his companion has an evil companion.' (an-Nisa': 38) An evil companion he is indeed, who neither advises one to do good nor cautions him to avoid evildoing.

One may love his companions who share unlawful pleasures with him in this worldly life, but how would such people feel toward each other in the Afterlife? Allah answers us in the Quran: ‘On that Day, friends will become each other’s enemies, except for the righteous.’ (*az-Zukhruf:*67)

The righteous help each other in being obedient to Allah, so each of them in the Afterlife will tell his companion, ‘You have been my sincere companion who advised me to be obedient to Allah and reminded me whenever I was heedless of my duty to Him.’ Thus, love between them will increase. By contrast, those who were involved together in evildoing will curse one another, and the first that will be cursed on Judgment Day is Satan. He too will disown those he dragged into sinning. Thus will Satan argue against those whom he tempted and misguided, as Allah foretells us: ‘And Satan will say when the matter has been concluded, "Indeed, Allah had promised you the promise of truth. And I promised you, but I betrayed you. I had no authority over you except that I invited you, and you responded to me. So, do not blame me; but blame yourselves. I cannot be called to your aid; nor can you be called to my aid. Indeed, I deny your association of me [with Allah] before. Indeed, for the wrongdoers is a painful punishment."’ (Ibrahim: 22)

The Arabic word sultan means a compelling power that compels those who are subjected to it. As for the human being, his physical form only can be made to submit by such a power, but as for his beliefs, they can only be governed and defeated by strong evidence. Material power, however great, can only subjugate the physical form, but not the heart of the human being. With a whip in your hand, you may force a person to prostrate himself to you. You have only subdued this person’s body, but not his heart. The latter may only be influenced by potent proofs and the power of persuasion, which is also a kind of sultan (compelling power).

There are thus two kinds of dominating powers: a power that subdues the physical form and a power that subjugates the heart through logic. The former makes one submit against his will, whereas the power of logic and persuasion makes one yield and act of his own accord. Satan will say to his followers: you who made me your companion, you are foolish, for I did not have any power over you, neither material power to force you to commit sins, nor any logical arguments to persuade you to commit sins. You were only heedless of the right path, so I just insinuated you to deviate, and you obeyed me. I did not have any power to exercise over your bodies or minds. ‘…I had no authority over you except that I invited you, and you responded to me.…’ (Ibrahim: 22)

They were the architects of their own destruction, so Satan will tell them on Judgment Day, as Allah foretells us in the Quran: ‘… I cannot be called to your aid; nor can you be called to my aid.’ (Ibrahim: 22)

What does this verse convey? It depicts a hard situation, a real predicament that one cannot handle by any means. Desperate for help, he resorts to others for help and cries out for someone to respond with quickness and give him a helping hand. Satan says to those he misguided in the worldly life, ‘No matter how desperately you cry out for help, I will never save you, nor will you ever be able to save me.’ Each party will then realize their offence; each will realize how helpless, how devoid of power they are. Almighty Allah says: ‘And We have made every man's actions to cling to his neck, and We will bring forth to him, on the Day of Resurrection, a book which he will find wide open.’ (al-Isra’: 13)

Whoever chooses Satan as a companion has indeed chosen a bad companion. Satan has vowed before Allah that he will tempt all humankind into deviation except those who are truly devout to Him the Almighty. Whoever obeys Satan is therefore disobedient to Allah.

Ponder again the words of Allah: ‘[Nor does He like those] who spend their wealth to show off, who do not believe in Him or the Last Day. Whoever has Satan as his companion has an evil companion.’ (an-Nisa’: 38). This verse discusses a type of spending that Allah will not accept. When one gives to charity only to earn admiration and praise, his money benefits others but not himself. He thus throws away his money, so he neither benefits from it in this life, nor will that money yield any fruits with his Lord in the Hereafter.

Allah directs our attention to the fact that such deviation is attributed to the impediments of one’s faith that require to be resisted for one to be able to be adherent in every single deed to the path of his Lord. Such impediments manifest themselves in human desire that makes transient pleasures dazzling, human heedlessness that tempts one into forsaking the commands of Allah, thinking it a little thing, and the devil who insinuates one to obey his whims. The Arabic word shaitan does not only refer to Satan and his soldiers-(sinners from among the jinn) but also to all those who rebel against the ordinance of Allah from among humans, as Allah says: ‘And thus did We make for every prophet an enemy, the shaitans [devils] from among men and jinn, some of them suggesting to others varnished falsehood to deceive (them)…’ (al-An‘am: 112). Now, how can one tell whether insinuation emanates from his own self or from the devil? To know the answer, look at the sin you crave: is it a sin that you feel inclined to do every now and then, or is it that when you fail to attain an unlawful pleasure, you just pursue another? The difference lies here.

One would covet a certain thing Allah has forbidden; the desire to do that one thing would persist and no other desires would interfere. In such a case, desire stems from your own self. By contrast, if, upon realizing that you cannot attain a certain unlawful pleasure and you just start thinking of another, know then that you are insinuated by the devil. He does not care what sin you commit; he just tries to drag you into error any way he can. If he fails to tempt you into committing a specific sin, he immediately tries another sin toward which he may find a weakness in you.

This way, one can identify the source of insinuation and know whether the impediment emanates from his own self or from the devil. If a certain desire persists so much that you cannot stop craving it however you can, know the temptation originates from your own self. The devil, on the other hand, does not care whether you commit this sin or that sin; rather, he wants you to be disobedient to Allah, whatever the sins you commit may be.

We know Satan has old harboured animosity against humankind. He refused to prostrate himself to Adam peace be upon him believing he is better than him. Allah warmed Adam against him and Adam peace be upon him must have communicated this warning to his offspring and told them that Satan is their enemy. Still, when heedlessness overcomes the heart, it makes room for the devil to penetrate it and lead it astray. Satan would not bother to tempt someone who is already swayed by his own self. Rather, he comes to the obedient to spoil their devotion. Allah quotes him in the Quran as saying: ‘…I will surely sit in wait for them on Your straight path.’ (al-A‘raf: 16). You will not find Satan in a bar, but he will wait for you at the door of the mosque to spoil the worship you intend to observe. This is the meaning of, ‘…I will surely sit in wait for them on Your straight path.' (al-A'raf: 16) Some would say non-Muslim minorities in any Muslim country live (at least apparently) in peace and harmony, whereas hatred and fights are rife among the Muslim majority. This is true. Satan has guaranteed that those have already strayed far from the straight path by committing the grave sin of disbelief, so he is in no need to misguide them any further. As for Muslims, he knows they are the adherents of the true religion, so he focuses on them to distract them from the straight path. Satan lies in wait on the straight path of Allah since he wants to tempt those who adhere to righteousness. He does not concern himself with those already swayed by their own selves especially those who disbelieve in Allah since they have already committed a sin far greater than what Satan could possibly wish to tempt them into!

So, what is it that makes one decrease his money by spending it on the poor and get nothing in the end but vanity gratified?! The reason is that they have made Satan their companion. Even though giving charity is a good deed in itself, Satan would not let them enjoy the reward for it. He would interfere to spoil that act of worship. Such is the worst companion a human being may ever have; that is why Allah says: '…Whoever has Satan as his companion has an evil companion.' (an-Nisa': 38) Evil indeed is a companion who dissuades you from the right path, and lets you throw away your money by spending it for other than Allah and lets transient praise and admiration be your only reward. What a meagre recompense!

In the next verse Allah says:

وَمَاذَا عَلَيۡهِمۡ لَوۡ ءَامَنُواْ بِٱللَّهِ وَٱلۡيَوۡمِ ٱلۡأٓخِرِ وَأَنفَقُواْ
مِمَّا رَزَقَهُمُ ٱللَّهُۚ وَكَانَ ٱللَّهُ بِهِمۡ عَلِيمًا ٣٩

What harm would it do them to believe in God and the Last Day, and give charitably from the sustenance God has given them? God knows them well [39] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 39)

By this interrogation, 'What harm would it do them to believe in Allah…', Allah does not mean to inquire of them about the trouble or harm they may possibly incur if they embrace faith and spend their money for His cause. Rather, Allah uses the interrogative form to condemn them and rebuke them for their ignorance and mindlessness of what is best for them.

Such a manner of reproach is common in language. We would say to an idle student who has failed in his exams, ‘What harm would it do you if you studied’? Such an interrogative expression is used rhetorically when the stated failure or deficiency results from negligence on the part of the one addressed by the reproach. In the above example, the failing student would have passed had he studied. However, it may not be used when the imperfection is out of the person’s control. We would not tell someone who is rather short, a quality that is not up to him to change, ‘What harm would it do you if you were tall’? This is a completely nonsensical proposition!

Therefore, this rhetorical question can only be addressed to him who has within his voluntary power, the capacity to correct the stated blameworthy conduct. We say this to refute the allegation of the Jabriya, a school of theology that claims man has no power or choice and all his actions are predetermined. They claim that a disbeliever, having no free will of his own, is therefore bound to continue his life as a disbeliever. However, Allah says: ‘What harm would it do them to believe in Allah and the Last Day…’ (an-Nisa’: 39). This verse confirms that man has the choice and free will to believe or disbelieve, but then he will be held accountable for his actions; this demolishes the extreme ideas of the Jabriya. The human being is not brought to this life to mechanically to do a series of predetermined actions regarding which he has no choice or free will. He is not a feather swayed by the blowing wind, or as a poet once said:

He threw him in the sea, both his hands shackled, and strictly warned of being wet or drowned!

We say to all who make such allegations, ‘You have attributed an injustice to Allah the Exalted above what you ascribe to Him! Allah would not enjoin on humankind to believe in Him unless He endowed them with the capacity to choose. This is a mistaken understanding of the issue of fate and predestination. The fact that Allah has foreordained everything from eternity does not mean He cancels the will of man and strips him of the power to choose. Rather, it means His Omnipotent Knowledge encompasses all the choices His servants would make. He is our Creator; He knows fully what we would harbour in our hearts and what choices we would make and, based on this Knowledge, He has predetermined our final destinies. Predestination is only a manifestation of the all-encompassing Knowledge of Allah, and not any form of compulsion exercised over His servants.

The Attributes of Allah fall under two categories; one concerned with revelation and the other with action. Knowledge falls under the first, while Might is an example of the second category. Let me give you an illustrating example. A college dean may ask one of the teachers to run an exam to assess students and give a prize to the best. The teacher may reply that there is no need for an exam and he just names the best student since, by experience, the teacher can classify the students in order of excellence. The dean, however, would insist on holding the exam. The results would come out, and the expectations of the teacher would turn out to be true.

This poses the question: when the winning student, already named by his teacher beforehand, was answering the questions, was there anyone who compelled him to write the correct answers so he would win the prize? No. What do we understand then from his teachers foretelling of the result? Simply, the teacher foresaw that result based on his knowledge. He passed his judgment because he had prior knowledge of this student. This example is only by way of clarification, for Allah is far Exalted above all comparison. Allah has granted people the power of choice between alternatives. However, He has known beforehand what choices His servants would make. Thus, predestination is a manifestation of His Omnipotent Knowledge and it does not mean Allah has imposed on us by His Might everything we do in our lives. Might is an Attribute denoting action and effect, but the Attribute of Knowledge does neither influence nor impose anything. Accordingly, the decision to embrace or forsake faith is attributed to man, and therefore Allah says reproachfully: 'What harm would it do them to believe in Allah and the Last Day…' (an-Nisa': 39) On the other hand, Allah describes another group of His servants, saying: 'Who know that they will meet their Lord and that it is to Him they will return.' (al-Baqara: 46)

Even though they have not seen Allah, they believe that the day will come when they meet Him, and this is enough to urge them to do good deeds for His cause. What if they saw Allah, then? This reminds me of Abul-`Ala` Al-Ma`arri. He was accused of denying resurrection, but I believe he may be acquitted of this charge. It is true that at the beginning of his life he said,

‘Days destroy us like fragments of glass and what power can bring us again together?’

People claimed that his words, ‘and what power can bring us again together?’ mean he denied the Ability of Allah to resurrect us anew. However, this same verse could be construed to mean that we cannot be resurrected in this lifetime. Indeed, we do not see anyone who had died coming back to this life. Furthermore, he later said,

‘The astronomer and physician both claim that bodies cannot be resurrected.
If you are right, I have nothing to lose; otherwise, the losers are they!’

He was hushing those who were trying to instil doubt in the minds of people. Assume that he believed that there is no resurrection. We say to him, if resurrection takes place, the one who denied it will be the loser, but if there comes no resurrection, the one who believed in resurrection would not be harmed and would not lose anything. So, a believer will lose nothing any way, and the one who is bound to lose is the one who denies resurrection.

Thus, indeed, ‘What harm would it do them to believe in Allah and the Last Day, and give charitably from the sustenance Allah has given them…’ (an-Nisa’: 39). The one who gives to charity for the cause of Allah, thus invests his money with Him until he reaps the fruits on Judgment Day. Contrarily, when he does so to gain the praise of people, he only benefits those he gives his money to and he himself reaps no fruits for his charity. This is throwing away their money in this life and losing the reward in the Hereafter. Allah closes the verse by saying: ‘…Allah knows them well.’ (an-Nisa’: 39) The Knowledge of Allah is all-encompassing; He the Almighty is the Creator Who knows all hidden secrets. In the following verse Allah says:

إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ لَا يَظۡلِمُ مِثۡقَالَ ذَرَّةٖۖ وَإِن تَكُ حَسَنَةٗ يُضَٰعِفۡهَا وَيُؤۡتِ مِن لَّدُنۡهُ أَجۡرًا عَظِيمٗا ﴿٤٠﴾

He does not wrong anyone by as much as the weight of a speck of dust: He doubles any good deed and gives a tremendous reward of His own [40] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 40)

Wronging or injustice consists in the desire to appropriate and enjoy the fruits of the efforts of someone else. When you are said to have wronged someone, this means that you have effortlessly taken something to which he was rightfully entitled and which he earned through his efforts and labour. But what is said about one who wrongs someone else for the interest of a third party? He does not even benefit from such an act of wronging while someone else does. This is even more evil than the first kind. It has been narrated on the authority of Abu Hurayrah Allah be pleased with him that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘Hurry to do good deeds before there come trials like pieces of a dark night, amid which a person would be a believer in the morning and become a disbeliever by night, or a believer at night and become a disbeliever the following morning! He would forsake faith for a transient pleasure of this world.’(1)

Such is a person who would wrong someone else for the sake of another person, so he does not even gain anything himself by the injustice he has committed. Thus, wronging is intended for enjoying the fruits of someone else’s effort, or making someone else enjoy the fruits of the effort and toil of another. Allah is the All-Powerful, Almighty Creator and Lord of all things. What if He wanted to wrong someone- the Exalted above injustice? What would then be the scope of injustice?

Oppression is proportional to the power of the oppressor. Therefore, if Allah the All-Powerful uses His Power to wrong someone, His would be intolerable. Now, why would Allah wrong anyone?! What would He want to take from a creature He has made and already given everything? Allah is the Self-Sufficient and does not need to take anything from someone to give it to another. All people are equal before Him. He never had a female companion nor did He ever have a son, so all humans are equal before Him and He has guaranteed sustenance for all. Why then would He wrong any of His servants?! Logically, it is impossible to ascribe to Allah that He may want or need to wrong any of His creatures. Allah does not let any single good deed go unrewarded for, nor does He exaggerate punishment for a bad deed. He is far Exalted above doing both. Allah is the Generous Creator Who bestows His favours and blessings on people. To Him belong the treasures of the heavens and earth, so, it goes without saying that He does not need to benefit from the effects of His own bounties on His creatures. Allah states that He would never do the least act of injustice to His servants, saying: '…Your Lord is never unjust to His creatures.' (Fussilat: 46)

---

(1) [Muslim, Ahmad and At-Tirmidhi]

The Arabic word zhallam (unjust) is a derivative that denotes recurrence of injustice, so one who is zhallam is one who is used to committing injustices. He has not committed a single act of injustice, but has repeated it so many times. It is a word that conveys exaggeration, either by committing each single act in an overdone manner, or by excessively repeating that act. So, we may use the intensive form zhallam to either refer to a single act of injustice that has been committed in an exaggerated way, or to refer to excessive repetition of injustices by the same doer. Therefore, Allah says about Himself: "…your Lord is never unjust to His creatures.' (Fussilat: 46) If Allah were to wrong His creatures, the injustice would be proportionate to His Might, so it would be immense. Were He unjust, His injustice would encompass all His creatures, but Allah says: 'surely Allah does not do injustice to the weight of an atom….' (an-Nisa': 40) If His servant commits one sin, it is written as one sin in his records, yet a good deed is multiplied. Now, what is the 'weight' of a thing? Weight is the amount of force exercised by gravity on a thing. If you let something light fall from a high point, it will fall slowly. By contrast, if you let something heavy fall from the same height, it will fall fast since the force on it due to gravity is stronger. Imagine then what the weight of an atom is.

First, what is an atom? Some say an atom is as small as the head of a small ant which cannot be seen with the naked eye, or it is like the ant itself. When Ibn 'Abbas Allah be pleased with him was asked about the meaning of an 'atom' in the context of the above mentioned verse, he took a handful of earth from the ground and blew it. When the dust was dispensed in the air, Ibn Abbas said: 'Each speck of dust is an atom.' Look at the air; we cannot see the atoms swimming in it. However, look at any spot penetrated by a beam of light and you will immediately notice the specks of dust floating in the air. You may only see these specks in sunlight even though they are always there and we inhale them along with the air we breathe. What then kept us from seeing these specks? They are just too minute for the eyes to see. An atom is one such a speck.

Everything is weighed even if it is as tiny as an atom that we do not see except through a penetrating beam of light. Allah says: 'surely Allah does not do injustice to the weight of an atom…' (an-Nisa': 40) The word 'atom' here is meant to represent the tiniest possible weight. An atom is not the smallest unit of the material world, for anything that can be enlarged can also be split. Allah revealed this verse at a time when people did not have any tools to measure or split an atom. Later, science succeeded in achieving that breakthrough. After the First World War, Germany manufactured cylinders that broke down atoms, or 'the indivisible particles' as ancient philosophers called it, for they thought there was nothing smaller than it. They did not realize that anything that has matter can become smaller just as it can become larger. Any mass can be split to smaller parts only if we have the tools required to do that.

When satellites were launched and a picture of New York City was taken, that picture came out quite small. Sufficiently magnified, the picture showed the license plate numbers of the cars that appeared in it. How did they do so? The small picture included more minute details that could not be seen with the naked eye. When these details were magnified, everything became clear, even the license plate numbers of the cars in the picture. Likewise, a concentrated light beam can reveal the specks of the dust that you cannot see otherwise.

A light beam sent by the Almighty Creator has shown atoms of dust clearly in the air, so how would an atom be hidden from Him? No atom can be hidden away from the Knowledge of Allah Glorified is He. He has created the light and the atom and all that is on earth and nothing can ever be hidden from Him.

I believe the atomic fission machine was at first very much like the traditional sugarcane squeezer we know. It was based on two cylindrical iron rods. An atom was placed in between, and the space separating the two rods was narrow enough so that an atom would be split as it passed through. The narrower that space was, the more effectively the fission process was conducted. The two rods were right adjacent to each other and operating in opposite directions, with a quite narrow space between them. German scientists tried to decrease that space further to do atomic fission and they succeeded. The outcome was something smaller than an atom. Some wrongly believe the Quran to be inaccurate because of verses like the abovementioned. It implies that the atom is the smallest constituent of matter even though that has scientifically been proven to be wrong. To them we respond, ‘The misconception is the outcome of looking at some verses while ignoring others.’ The Quran was revealed as a miracle to address various communities during the time of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him until Judgment Day. Therefore, it includes what can forever satiate the minds of people belonging to all times and places. The Quran is a timeless miracle that will continue to quench pursuers of the truth until the end of time. Numerous discoveries have been made that accord with what the Noble Quran tells, and much is yet to be found out to prove its grandeur and magnificence. Allah has revealed in the Quran profound truths in a manner able to be comprehended by people at all times.

Discovering the secrets of the universe does not add new commands to what Allah has already ordained. Rather, they only afford us a better understanding of the Noble Quran, like fission of the atom, for example. The commands of Allah are clear; whoever obeys them is rewarded and whoever violates them is punished. In this respect, all people are treated the same, ever since the time of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him until Judgment Day. Allah has made His commands equally clear for people of all times and places.

With every generation, new breakthroughs in science are made, and the more we discover in the universe, the more we see and appreciate the miracles of the Quran. Still, such discoveries do not have any effect on the juristic rulings of Islam. The ordinance of Allah is clear irrespective of scientific discoveries. For example, if we did not know that the earth rotates around itself, would that prevent us from continuing to live on it? No. Humankind has always lived here regardless of that discovery, even though scientific breakthroughs do contribute to our well-being. When Allah sent down the Quran, He addressed the minds that received it in the manner they could comprehend. As the scope of the human mind is widened through scientific discoveries, it still finds in the Quran what satisfies it and copes with the time. The scientific allusions the Quran contains do not encompass all scientific discoveries and marvels of the universe. It is meant to present signs that address minds and hearts to believe in the Almighty Creator; still, even though it does not mention them all, the Quran does not oppose the facts of the universe that we learn more about every day.

So, when science proved that an atom is not the smallest constituent of matter, some sceptics said that in several verses the Quran uses the expression 'an atom's weight' which suggests that nothing is smaller than the atom. However, it has been scientifically proven that the atom can be split to smaller parts. This faulty understanding has resulted from the fact that they have considered some verses of the Quran and neglected others. It is true the atom was split into a nucleus, electrons, neutrons etc., but the words of Allah revealed over fourteen centuries ago had to be comprehensible to the minds that did not know then that the atom would be split into smaller parts: 'Surely Allah does not do injustice to the weight of an atom….' (an-Nisa': 40) Still, Allah says in another verse of the Quran: 'And you are not (engaged) in any affair, nor do you recite concerning it any portion of the Quran, nor do you do any work but We are witnesses over you when you enter it, and there does not lie concealed from your Lord the weight of an atom in the earth or in the heaven, nor anything less than that nor greater, but it is in a clear book.' (Yunus: 61)

Therefore, the Quran acknowledges that there can be something 'less than' the atom. So, let people split the atom into its smaller constituents and later split those constituents into even smaller parts. No contradiction will emerge; the Quran already expresses all those stages in the aforementioned verse by mentioning the weight of an atom as well as 'anything less than that.' The Quran outstrips the innovativeness of our minds. Its context affords sufficient allusions to fission and fusion of the atom. Since Allah says: '…nor anything less than that nor greater…' (Yunus: 61), some would wonder: so long as the smallest thing in the universe cannot escape the Knowledge of Allah, what is the need then for mentioning things that are 'greater'? Logically, that too cannot escape the Knowledge of Allah.

Let me give an example to explain this. Something may not be encompassed by one’s perception either for its minuteness that makes it unnoticeable by the naked eye or its hugeness that makes it too for the eye to encompass all its dimensions. When a giant mountain is two or three kilometres away, you would not perceive it because it is too big to be encompassed by your vision. For Allah, nothing is too small for Him to notice or too large to encompass. Hence comes the significance of the assertion: ‘… nor anything less than that nor greater…’ (Yunus: 61). In another verse, Allah says: ‘He knows all that goes into the earth and all that comes out of it; He knows all that comes down from the heavens and all that goes up to them. He is the Merciful, the Forgiving.’ (Saba’: 2)

Ponder the precision of the Quran in replying to those who deny Judgment Day even though it is a universal issue that deals with humankind at all times. Allah says: ‘But those who disbelieve say, "The Hour will not come to us." Say, "Yes, by my Lord, it will surely come to you. Allah is the Knower of the unseen." Not absent from Him is an atom's weight within the heavens or within the earth or [what is] smaller than that or greater, except that it is in a clear book.’ (Saba’: 3)

Why do they deny arrival of the Last Hour? Their denial is expressive of a wish that there will be no resurrection, for they have done nothing to prepare for the Hour. Those who do not work for that Day wish the issue of the last hour would be false; otherwise, they know they will be recompensed for their wrongdoing. They have done things for which they are afraid of being held accountable. Their deeds are the cause of their denial, so Allah addresses both their claim and the motive behind it. Every statement has a motive. The motive behind their denial of Judgment Day is their overstepping the limits set by Allah. They have not done any good deeds to show obedience to Him, so it would be best for them if the Hour never came; they do not want to be punished for their transgression. Since Allah has eternally known all that, He responds to their claim as well as the intellectual motive behind it. He explains to them that He is the All-Knower of all things and none of their deeds escapes His Knowledge.

Allah then says: ‘… and if it is a good deed He multiplies it and gives from Himself a great reward.’ (an-Nisa’: 40) If one does an atom’s weight of good, or anything less than that, Allah multiplies it and grants His servant ample reward for it. Since Allah does not mention bad deeds, this indicates that only a good deed is multiplied, but a bad deed is counted only as one. Allah speaks about multiplying good deeds in several verses: ‘Those who spend their wealth in God’s cause are like grains of corn that produce seven ears, each bearing a hundred grains. Allah gives multiple increase to whoever He wishes….’ (al-Baqara: 261)

Out of His Grace, a good deed is multiplied many folds and the reward for it is far greater than its scope whereas a bad deed is recorded with Allah as only one deed. The Creator of this system gives as much as He wants to whoever He wills. An employer would shower privileges on an employee who is diligent and sincere at work; how about the Lord of the worlds Glorified is He? He grants matchless rewards to those of His servants who are devout to Him, as He says: ‘…and if it is a good deed He multiplies it and gives from Himself a great reward.’ (an-Nisa’: 40) This is the favour of Allah He bestows on those who believe and do good. He does not just offer them a reward proportionate to their devoutness, but also an excess in reward out of His Bounty. This is only for the devout, so if one does not do good as Allah commands, no reward will be given him, let alone an excess in reward.

Allah draws parables for people to understand the meanings He intends to convey. Whatever Allah says is true, but He gives us familiar examples from our world to let us have a clearer image of the truth presented. Let us discuss the parable set in the verse we are dealing with. Suppose you planted a seed in a piece of land; it would yield seven ears each bearing a hundred grains. How much then do you think the Creator of the seed, land and all things gives? He gives limitlessly.

The prepositional phrase ‘from Himself’ is a promise of immense bounties from Allah in whose Hand are the treasures of the heavens and earth. In this worldly life, the gain attained is proportional to the effort made. By that parable, Allah wants us to understand; If a thing that He created; namely, the land and the seed, yield seven hundred folds the effort and labour invested in them, even if the investor is a disbeliever; Allah does not begrudge him His Bounty. What matchless, endless reward then will the One Who has created everything grant to the believer? Allah puts forward illustrative examples to make remote meanings accessible to the mind that would otherwise have difficulty understanding them. Each one of us is made up of a body and soul. What happens when the soul is taken from the body? The body rots and decomposes into its primary elements, and all aspects of life vanish.

The soul is the cause of motion. Once the soul is united with the body, every system of the body starts to carry out its assigned function in the growth process. But when the soul is withdrawn from the body, the life of the body comes to an end. The soul governs and moves the body; it does not have colour and nobody sees or smells it. So how can we perceive it?

What proves that the soul exists? We say that the soul is the essence that enters your body and imparts motion to it. You do not see or sense it. Its nature is unknown to you, yet its existence is felt through endless miraculous manifestations. No wonder then that we believe in Allah; we do not see Him, but we see signs of His Majesty and Mercy everywhere. He is not limited by the laws of time and place, and: ‘No human vision can encompass Him….’ (al-An‘am: 103) If a creature of Allah; namely, the soul, is so extraordinary that it cannot be comprehended by the mind or encompassed by the eyes, why wonder then that the Creator Himself is beyond our imagination or perception? Allah is too great to be encompassed by our limited senses.

Allah Almighty is He says: ‘…will bestow out of His grace a mighty reward….’ (an-Nisa’: 40) Reflecting upon the phrase ‘…out of His grace…’ as we are aware that there is a difference between man-made laws and Divine enactment decrees directly revealed to us by Allah. When He says: ‘…out of His grace…’ He means that intermediaries are of out of question here. We know the story of Musa (Moses) when he went to meet the good and knowledgeable servant of Allah. Allah described the servant as follows: ‘…We had taught knowledge from Ourselves.’ (al-Kahf: 65) This means that the good and knowledgeable servant was educated by none but by Allah directly. The evidence is that the one who came to learn from him; Musa (Moses), already had learnt and supported him in matters, yet Musa (Moses) started to argue some issues that go at odds with conventional laws and customs. Therefore, the word ‘…out of His grace…’ means that such knowledge goes beyond the limitation of the conventional means and codes.

Allah respects the value of your work and calls his endowment to you a reward; He gives you more than the reward due to you out of His grace; after He gives to you what is appropriate with your effort. This reward is described as ‘mighty’ since it is proportionate to The Bestower, rather than the bestowed. Allah then says:

فَكَيْفَ إِذَا جِئْنَا مِن كُلِّ أُمَّةٍ بِشَهِيدٍ وَجِئْنَا بِكَ عَلَىٰ هَٰٓؤُلَآءِ شَهِيدًا ﴿٤١﴾

What will they do when We bring a witness from each community, with you [Muhammad] as a witness against these people? [41] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 41)

Once you hear the interrogative word kayf (how*,* the interrogative word in the above verse), then know that it introduces something peculiar. We may for instance say, ‘You have insulted the sultan; so how would you behave if you were confronted with him’? It is as if the confrontation is only a hypothetical matter that transcends all imagination. Every exclamatory and peculiar matter that causes wonder is introduced or qualified by using the interrogative word kayf (how). A good example is the saying of Allah: ‘How can you refuse to acknowledge God…’ (al-Baqara: 28)?

This is an exclamation of the disaster and calamity of disbelieving in Allah. Tell us, how could anyone possibly have committed this sin? It is indeed a peculiar matter. We wonder: how would the disbeliever fare on Judgment Day? What would be the state of those sinners on Judgment Day?’ How, then, will the sinners fare on Judgment Day, when We shall bring forward witnesses from within every community….’ (an-Nisa’: 41)

Shahid (witness) is the one who attests to the truth; we know that Allah tells us: ‘…for there never was any community, but a warner has lived and passed away in its midst.’ (Fatir: 24) The warner in this context is a witness to the fact that the Book has been revealed to this ummah (followers of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him). Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him is a witness to the fact that he had conveyed the message of Allah to his ummah; or else to whom does ‘them’ in Allah’s saying: ‘…and bring you [O Prophet] as a witness against them’ (an-Nisa’: 41) refer? Let us consider Allah’s saying: ‘How, then, will the sinners fare on Judgment

Day when We shall bring forward witnesses from within every community…' (an-Nisa': 41)? It is Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him is the one who conveyed the guidance of Allah to his followers. But how would the situation look like if Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him said, 'I have delivered to them the methodology and they have no excuse since I apprised them of all of its details'? And '…bring thee [O Prophet]…' means bringing you Muhammad as a witness on what these people did. But does 'them' in '…witness against them' refer to the witnesses who are the Messengers or does the pronoun refer to the disbelievers in Allah? Does this mean that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him would be a witness against what those messengers did in as much as he is a witness against his followers? Both interpretations are plausible; why? The reason is that Allah revealed His Book as a miracle to prove that the messengers conveyed their messages to their nations. By mentioning Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him in the miraculous Quran which contains the Divine Methodology, there is an implicit notification that he peace and blessing be upon him would witness that the messengers of Allah delivered their messages to their people. The evidence is that our Lord conveyed this to me, in His Book that is both a miracle and a methodology to be followed. Our messenger, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him would be, as well a witness against those disbelievers from amongst the community to which he was sent. This meaning is thereby as valid as the other one. There is not a correct meaning that rules out another equally correct one in the Book of Allah; here lies the greatness of the Quran. The greatness of the Quran consists in giving illuminations like the bezels of diamonds. Diamonds are expensive and rare because they are rigid and can be used for cutting. Further each atom in the diamond has radiance; other elements may have a single radiance but each atom of a diamond has radiance. For this reason, they say that it shines and glows since all its atoms radiate.

Allah Almighty is He illustrates that those disbelievers would be doomed on the Day of Judgment. As the messengers, would attest to the conveyance of the message of Allah. Allah made this message clear to the messengers and their followers on the one side and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him, and his followers on the other. We, as followers of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him assumingly would be witnesses likewise '…so that [with your lives] you might bear witness to the truth before all mankind and that the Apostle might bear witness to it before you….' (al-Baqara: 143)

However, this is a privilege granted to no one except the followers of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him. They are the ones which Allah entrusted with the Methodology till the Day of Judgment. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him is the seal of the prophets; he would be followed by none. Allah says: '…so that [with your lives] you might bear witness to the truth before all mankind, and that the Apostle might bear witness to it before you….' (al-Baqara: 143) In accordance with this verse we have been entrusted to be a continuation for this message.

It has been related that 'Abdullah ibn Mas`ud said that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him asked him once, 'Recite the Quran for me.' so I said, 'O Messenger of Allah, how should I recite for you to whom it has originally been revealed?' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him said, 'Yes, but I like to hear others reciting it.' So, I recited the chapter of an-Nisa` until I reached the verse, 'How, then, will the sinners fare on Judgment Day, when We shall bring forward witnesses from within every community, and bring you [O Prophet] as a witness against them?' (an-Nisa': 41) Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him then said, 'Enough', and he started to shed tears.(1)

How solemn! The witness was taken by the solemnity of this verse, so how would be the state of those against whom he will testify? The witness who is going to testify cried because of this verse. You should know why he did so since you know very well that the heart of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him abounds in mercy towards his followers. For this reason, we said that the concern and care on the part of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him about the well-being of his followers was the main reason underlying Allah's choice of him to oversee his followers. After Allah, has learnt about that Prophet Muhammad's fervent concern about his followers, He Almighty is He said: 'Perhaps, [O Muhammad], you would kill yourself with grief that they will not be believers?' (ash-Shu'ara': 3)

(1) Al-Bukhari and Muslim

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him was very concerned about his followers although the Allah explained to him; you are only obliged to deliver the message to your people and not to make them guided by it. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him knows this very well. His concern for and mercy upon his followers made him want them to believe. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him was worried about testifying against his followers among those against whom he will testify on Judgment Day. When Allah the Almighty noticed how His messenger was concerned about his followers, He told him; if you desire, I can entrust you with the whole responsibility of your followers.

Consider the greatness of Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him and his understanding of and courtesy towards the Creator. He said: No Allah, you are more merciful towards them than I would ever be. It is as if Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him is asking Allah, ‘Are you entrusting me with the whole responsibility while I am only their brother and you are our Lord? How would I be more merciful towards them’? It was expected that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him would say: yes, let me oversee my followers, but he peace and blessing be upon him said, ‘Lord you are more merciful towards them than anyone would ever be.’ But how was Allah’s reply to him? Allah the Almighty said: ‘I would not fail you concerning them ever.’ Allah knows the mercy of Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him the master of all humans, towards his people.

It has been related that `Abdullah ibn 'Amr ibn Al- 'As said, ‘The Prophet Muhammad recited the words of Allah: “for, verily, O my Lord, these [false objects of worship] have led many people astray! Hence, [only] he who follows me [in this my faith] is truly of me….” (Ibrahim: 36) He then recited the saying of Isa (Jesus), “If you cause them to suffer – verily, they are Your servants; and if You forgive them – verily, You alone are Almighty, truly Wise!” (al-Ma‘ida: 118). At this point the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him raised his hand and said, “Allah! my followers, my followers!”, and he started crying. So, Allah said: “Gabriel go to Muhammad, and know that your God knows best, and ask him what has made him cry?” Gabriel then went to Prophet Muhammad and asked him so he told him the reason. So, Allah said: "Gabriel, go to Muhammad and tell him we will make you content regarding your followers and will never displease you.'[1] 'How, then, will the sinners fare on Judgment Day, when We shall bring forward…' (an-Nisa': 41). This means what the state of those sinning liars would be. '…We shall bring forward witnesses from within every community…' (an-Nisa': 41) means that this messenger has performed his role and delivered the message of Allah about the purpose He has set for His creation. '…and bring you [O Prophet] as witness against them?' (an-Nisa': 41) Then, Allah says:

يَوْمَئِذٍ يَوَدُّ ٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا۟ وَعَصَوُا۟ ٱلرَّسُولَ لَوْ تُسَوَّىٰ بِهِمُ ٱلْأَرْضُ وَلَا يَكْتُمُونَ ٱللَّهَ حَدِيثًا ﴿٤٢﴾

On that day, those who disbelieved and disobeyed the Prophet will wish that the earth could swallow them up: they will not be able to hide anything from God [42] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 42)

Once you come across the phrase '…on that Day…' (an-Nisa': 42), especially if there is a double accent on its last syllable, then know that it replaces something that has been omitted. What is omitted here is more than a sentence. The meaning would thus be, 'On that day we will bring forth a witness from amongst every nation and you will be a witness against them.' On that day: 'Those who were bent on denying the truth and paid no heed to the Apostle will, on that Day, wish that the earth would swallow them…' (an-Nisa': 42). The reason is that they were surprised by the truth of something that they had denied before. They did not think that the divine narrative was true. They thought that the discourse of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him were just empty words. So, what would they do when they are confronted with the Day of Judgment? They would wish that the earth would swallow them. But what is the meaning of the 'the earth swallowing them'? It means that they would be levelled to the ground; as you usually mean when you say that you have run over someone. This usually means that you have run over him in a way that levelled him to the ground. '…but they shall not be able to conceal from God anything that has happened.' (an-Nisa': 42) How would they conceal anything from Him if Allah has already said in another verse?'[But]

---

(1) Muslim

He will say: "Away with you into this [dishonour]! And speak no more unto Me!"' (al-Mu'minun: 108)

Allah has said so about them because the matter has stages: in one instance, they talk and in another they lie. For instance, they lie when they say: 'Then their excuse would be nothing but that they would say, "By Allah, our Lord, we were not polytheists."' (al-An'am: 23) They will also say about the idols that they worshipped: '…We worship them for no other reason than that they bring us nearer to Allah.…' (az-Zumar: 3)

Thus, Allah's saying '…But they shall not be able to conceal from God anything that has happened' (an-Nisa': 42) is evidence that the articulation of words is too forceful to be suppressed; no one can thus conceal it. Concealing means precluding something from actualizing its natural tendency to manifest and reveal itself. Each of them, on the Day of Judgment, cannot conceal anything from Allah because the vocalization is spontaneous; it is no longer governed only by the speech organs, as is the case in the worldly life. They will rather find that they have put forward acknowledgments of their sins with their tongues and other organs. Articulation of words would no longer be confined to the movement of the tongue; rather, the tongue, skin, hands and all other organs will testify against their transgressions.

The whole matter is not under the control of any single person; why? The reason is that there is a term known as the sovereignty rule; it means designating a superior power over an inferior power. To make the matter clearer; suppose there is an army battalion led by a certain commander. The laws state that the commander is in charge and must be obeyed by the soldiers; they are not entitled to violate the martial's commands. In any mission, should the commander issue a command that resulted in their defeat, the soldiers must report it to a higher authority. They are not held accountable and the commander is the only one to be questioned, for they are only following his orders.

I am giving this example to put forward a clearer depiction of the situation of standing before Allah the Almighty as He created man and made his organs subject to his will which is in turn governed by his passions and subjective choices. The will of the obedient is prone to obedience to commands and avoidance of prohibitions. On the contrary, the will of the sinner consists in not obeying the command or avoiding the prohibitions. If one wanted to drink wine; his legs help him to walk to a bar; his tongue orders the bartender to serve him the wine and he reaches out with his hands to pick the glass and drink. All the organs operating are subject to his subjective will, they are created for this. Afterwards when the organs return to Allah who created and set them in this manner they would tell Him, ‘Our Lord he used us to do so and so’, why? The reason is that the sovereignty rule of man on the Day of Judgement will be suspended for Allah is the Supreme Sovereign. Allah says: ‘…To whom belongs [all] sovereignty this Day? To Allah, the One, the Prevailing!’ (Ghafir: 16)

No one would have any will in the Hereafter. Since the function of the subjective will of man is suspended, the hand will talk and confess saying, ‘O Allah! he (man) used me to do so and so and I was forced by this man subjective sovereignty granted by You Lord to him, to have control over me; I have no freedom of choice; once he wills anything, I have to obey; when he wants to beat someone, I cannot refrain from obeying.’ Similarly, the tongue will also confess everything about the affronts and approbations that he paid to others. Thus, all actions spring out from the sovereignty of man's subjective will over the objects exemplified in organs that Allah had made subservient to you. But once these organs return to the One Who granted the sovereignty to the will, no one will have any will but Allah. It is as if when the organs act contrary to the rulings of Allah, as they are subservient to the passion of the one who sins, they would be acting unwillingly and grudgingly. In other words, they would be grudgingly following the orders of their owner. Thus, once the control of man’s will is taken away, the organs start confessing what has happened. Allah says: ‘And they will ask their skins, "Why did you bear witness against us?", and they will reply, "Allah, who gives speech to all things, has given speech to us [as well]…”’ (Fussilat: 21). ‘Those who were bent on denying the truth and paid no heed to the Apostle will on that Day wish that the earth would swallow them…’ (an-Nisa’: 42) The reason is that the disbeliever would say, ‘Oh, I wish that I were dust!’ (an-Naba’: 40) After that Allah says:

يَـٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا۟ لَا تَقْرَبُوا۟ ٱلصَّلَوٰةَ وَأَنتُمْ سُكَـٰرَىٰ حَتَّىٰ تَعْلَمُوا۟ مَا تَقُولُونَ وَلَا
جُنُبًا إِلَّا عَابِرِى سَبِيلٍ حَتَّىٰ تَغْتَسِلُوا۟ ۚ وَإِن كُنتُم مَّرْضَىٰٓ أَوْ عَلَىٰ سَفَرٍ أَوْ جَآءَ أَحَدٌ
مِّنكُم مِّنَ ٱلْغَآئِطِ أَوْ لَـٰمَسْتُمُ ٱلنِّسَآءَ فَلَمْ تَجِدُوا۟ مَآءً فَتَيَمَّمُوا۟ صَعِيدًا طَيِّبًا
فَٱمْسَحُوا۟ بِوُجُوهِكُمْ وَأَيْدِيكُمْ ۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ عَفُوًّا غَفُورًا ﴿٤٣﴾

You who believe, do not come anywhere near the prayer if you are intoxicated, not until you know what you are saying; nor if you are in a state of major ritual impurity – though you may pass through the mosque – not until you have bathed; if you are ill, on a journey, have relieved yourselves, or had intercourse, and cannot find water, then find some clean sand and wipe your faces and hands with it. God is always ready to pardon and forgive [43] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 43)

Here Allah the Almighty moves from stating the commands to the acts of worship. He also warns us against associating partners with Him or engaging in charitable acts for the sake of eliciting people's praise and approval; and that He does not do wrong to anyone and that we will all be summoned before him on the day when there will be no shade but His. Afterwards He Almighty is He wanted us to be linked with him through acts of worship in so much as they make you declare your submission to Him by praying five times a day, for He motivates you to be wholeheartedly and passionately dedicated to His worship.

Allah says: '…Do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated…' (an-Nisa': 43), and did not say, 'Do not pray while you are in a state of drunkenness.' This means that you should not even approach prayers or set out to perform them but rather avoid them. This indicates that all intoxicants should be stopped. What is the meaning of '…Do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated…'? (an-Nisa': 43) The order that they ought not to approach prayers while they are intoxicated implies that the ordinance of the prohibition of intoxicants at that time was not enacted. It was gradual; for Islam was called for in an interval witnessing the break of series of the messengers sent; in other words, people at that time had not been confronted with the divine command for a prolonged lapse of time. Yet when the ordinances are related to the tenants of the creed, they are decisively addressed, i.e. the belief in the unity of Allah and not associating partners with Him. However, issues related to customs and habits have been revealed fractionally so that they are not to be forced or prevented in an abrupt manner, as change can be affected by time

Allah is Merciful enough to reveal His enactment regarding matters of habit in stages. This is one of the stages: '…Do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated…' (an-Nisa': 43). In Islam, prayer is defined as the sayings and acts that start with saying, ' Allah is the Greatest' and ends with the greeting of 'peace and mercy be upon you'; linguistically all this refers to all acts of praying and supplicating to Allah.

Sukara (intoxicated) is the plural of sakran. Sakran is the one who drinks what obscures his mind. The word is derived from as-sakr (barrier used to block rivers). When water floods, people construct dams; this dam keeps water from pouring in. The same holds for intoxicants. Whenever you consume them, you impede your reason and the regular flow of your consciousness. From this sense, the meaning of '…Do not approach prayer, while you are intoxicated…' (an-Nisa': 43) has been derived. What is meant is that prayers take you to the presence of Allah five times a day. But intoxication and whatever intoxicants precipitate in the blood deter you from praying even during the day, due to these residues. He thus pushed them to stop a habit.

If they succeeded in accustoming themselves to give up this habit during the day and until night fall, each one of them will perform the night prayers, drink and then go to bed. Thus, enduring the entire day without drinking is one of the stages. Allah allocated the process of quitting drinking in terms of stages to make it easy enough for one's self to accept it. When He started to talk about intoxicants, He says: 'And We grant you nourishment from the fruits of date-palms and vines; from it you derive intoxicants as well as wholesome sustenance; in this, behold, there is a message indeed for people who use their reason!' (an-Nahl: 67)

It should be noted that 'intoxicants' were mentioned before the 'wholesome sustenance'; it thus includes intoxicants and sustenance. It is as if when they used to eat date-palms and vines, this was sustenance that Allah described as wholesome. But they also used to make wine from grapes. Therefore, Allah mentioned the intoxicants first because this is what they usually made from grapes; however, he did not describe it as good or wholesome. Rather, He said: '…from it you derive intoxicants…' (an-Nahl: 67) and restricted the qualification of wholesome only to the sustenance.

By Allah, should we not, upon hearing '…intoxicants as well as wholesome sustenance…' (an-Nahl: 67) understand that being an intoxicant implies that it is not good or wholesome? We should infer the opposite of wholesome and good namely bad and unwholesome. It is as if he said, 'from the fruits of grapes and date-palms you derive an intoxicating drink, i.e. an unwholesome drink, and at the same time a good and wholesome sustenance.' Due to your interest in the intoxicant Allah has it. After this, what happens? When Allah introduces a ruling, the prelude to it often assumes the form of a warning. The warning is not, yet, a legal enactment; it rather demonstrates a truth to you and you then have the freedom to choose. Allah the Almighty says: 'They will ask you about intoxicants and gambling. Say, "In both there is great evil as well as some benefit for man; but the evil which they cause is greater than the benefit which they bring"…' (al-Baqara: 219).

Allah has just explained the issue and you are free to voluntarily choose. So, He has said: '…Say, "In both there is great evil as well as some benefit for man…"' (al-Baqara: 219). But the great evil ensuing from them outweighs the benefit. Yet did he tell us what to do or how we should behave? No, he did not. The reason is that he wants to endear the minds to the rationale of not consuming intoxicants and abiding by the ruling. He wants each one of us to grasp the ruling and its necessity on his own. Allah says: '…Say: "In both there is great evil as well as some benefit for man…"' (al-Baqara: 219). As long as the evil outstrips the benefit what alternative would be greater? We usually identify the greater alternative when we compare it to the others, among which we are choosing to determine which of them is less evil than the other and which is better.

When Allah says: '…Say: "In both there is great evil as well as some benefit for man…"' (al-Baqara: 219), we must realize that this is just a warning. As long as it is a warning and it enjoins good, then one should follow it and trust the advice of Allah. But there is no binding enactment decreed at this point; there were still people who were drinking while others were not. After this, the following incident took place; an intoxicated man wanted to pray and read the chapter of al-Kafirun from the Quran. Because that man's reason and consciousness were swayed by the intoxicants he mistakenly recited, 'Say: O disbelievers! I worship that which you worship', instead of 'Say: O disbelievers! I worship not that which you worship.' (al-Kafirun: 1-2) It became clear how drunkenness could lead to unacceptable extremes. Thus, the ruling was revealed. We do not interfere with your personal affairs whether you are drunk or not. However, your drunkenness should not lead you to avow your disbelief in Allah while you are praying. Accordingly, do not approach the prayers while you are intoxicated. This is a prohibition, an order and an assignment. 'O you who believe! Do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated…' (an-Nisa': 43). If we cannot pray while we are intoxicated, we must abstain from drinking for some time. This abstaining accustoms one to quit. Subsequently, an incident happened when Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was asked to give his ruling about intoxication. Prophet Muhammad's companions asked him to clarify the ruling of drinking alcohol. They said to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him 'Clarify to us the ruling of Islam regarding intoxicants and alcohol. Allah then revealed His saying: 'O you who believe, indeed, intoxicants, gambling, sacrificing on stone alters [to other than Allah], and divining arrows are but defilement from the work of Satan, so avoid it, that you may be successful.' (al-Ma'ida: 90)

Therefore, His saying: 'O you who believe! Do not approach prayer while you are in a state of drunkenness…' (an-Nisa': 43), was an eloquent introductory stage towards forbidding intoxicants and alcohol. He thus prohibited it for some time; this time is the period in which one meets his Lord i.e. prayers. He explained to you: drink it away from me; but when you come to me you must have total consciousness and reason. '… but wait until you know what you are saying…' (an-Nisa': 43). It is as if this statement has imparted to us an implicit ruling. The one who drinks is not conscious of what he is saying; this is one aspect of the issue. If one does not know what one is saying about ordinary matters one may rave. But when it comes to worshipping and reading the Quran it is unacceptable for one to be in such a state. When one declines to this extreme state, our Lord interferes to say: 'O you who believe! Do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated…' (an-Nisa': 43).

Allah thus decreed another ruling: '…nor while you are in a state of major ritual impurity, until you have bathed (except if you are travelling).' 'O you who believe, do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated until you know what you are saying, or while you are in a state of major ritual impurity, until you have bathed (except if you are travelling). And if you are ill or on a journey, or one of you comes from a place of relieving himself or you have cohabited with women and find no water, then seek clean earth and wipe over your faces and your hands [with it]. Indeed, Allah is ever pardoning and forgiving.' (an-Nisa': 43)

The state of major ritual impurity is well known; it results from intercourse between a male and a female. The ravishment and gratification ensuing from this intercourse makes one distracted a bit from worship; therefore, sexual pleasure is called the epitome of all gratifications and pleasures because it induces the body to tremble because it consumes all its nutrients and distracts one's thought from his Creator. For this reason, it has been said that it is the light of your eyes and the mind of your legs; so, either do it excessively or cut back on it. This means that I give you this power and you are free to use it as you wish. We wash to restore the energy of the human psyche. No one should be concerned about these matters if they are done in accordance with lawful restrictions. So, we should follow the commands of our Lord and wash ourselves whether we understand the wisdom underlying the order'…nor while you are in a state of major ritual impurity, until you have bathed (except if you are travelling)…' (an-Nisa': 43). If what is meant by prayers in this context is the daily prayers, this means that you should not attempt to pray while you are intoxicated, or when you are stained with the effects of sexual intercourse. Allah did not say, 'Do not pray.' The mosque is the place of prayers. His saying '…Do not approach prayer while you are intoxicated…' (an-Nisa': 43) means do not attempt to pray. Attempting may mean even going to the mosque; it is as if He is saying: do not go unless the mosque is the only means to reach water—needed for washing.

'…And if you are ill, or are on a journey…' (an-Nisa': 43) means if you have an excuse that prevents you from using water. '…or one of you comes from a place of relieving himself…' (an-Nisa': 43). Al-gha`it—the Arabic word here translated as 'want of nature', means a low land. At that time people used to satisfy their wants of nature in low lands; the word thus became a sign of this activity. However, we may refer to this activity using different expressions. One may say that he is going to the ‘water circle’; others may wonder where the W. C. is. This is a way of inexplicitly inquiring about something repulsive and repugnant. For this reason, we may even say in informal Egyptian Arabic, ‘I am going to do as other people do.’ This means that it is not strange that I am going to go to the restroom; for, everyone does this.

Allah Almighty is He says: ‘…or one of you comes from a place of relieving himself or you have cohabited with women and find no water, then seek clean earth and wipe over your faces and your hands [with it]….’ (an-Nisa’: 43) It is due to the mercy of Allah towards the followers of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and due to the kindness of Allah that the enactment was phrased in a way endearing to the human being. But it is a decree; so, do not say for instance, ‘I perform my ablution to clean myself’ because we will wonder, ‘How come you just perform ablution for the sake of cleanliness and then when you fail to find water you bring dust and earth and put it on your face?’ So, do not tell me that I am performing ablution merely for cleanliness purposes. It is rather making prayers admissible in accordance with the enactments of Allah. He told me, perform your ablution and if you do not find water then use dust and pass it lightly over your face and hands. Yes; the matter is a command from Allah whether you understand the rationale behind it or not. For this reason, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘I have been given five things that no other prophet before me has been given. Allah has supported me to the extent that He caused my enemies to fear me even when I was one month’s journey away from them, the entire earth has been made a clean mosque for me so that whenever prayers are due any one of my followers may pray, I have been permitted to enjoy the spoils of the war though they were not previously allowed to any prophet, I was also granted the right to intercede and I was not sent to any specific people but to all mankind.(1) ‘…then seek clean earth…’ (an-Nisa’: 43) means that you must make sure that it is pure and clean. '…wipe over your faces and your hands [with it]…’ (an-Nisa’: 43). The issue involves uncleanliness and taking resort to pure dust. '…wipe over your faces and your hands [with it]…' (an-Nisa': 43) does not mean that it is a substitute for ablution. In performing ablution, I must rinse my mouth with water and clean my nose by sniffing some water into it. I also must wash my face, my hands and pass water on my forehead and into my ears. I am here talking about the pillars and the traditions adopted after the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. In this verse Allah explains that if you are using pure dust and earth you can clean both minor and major impurities. Thus, it is enough to pass it over your face and your hands. '…wipe over your faces and your hands [with it]…' (an-Nisa': 43) some have wondered whether this ought to be done by striking the earth once or twice. We say Allah says: '…wipe over your faces and your hands [with it]…' (an-Nisa': 43). Some scholars said one strike, while others said two strikes; this is all intended for facilitation and making things easier. This facilitation is consistent with the word 'forgiveness.' Allah says: Indeed, Allah is ever Pardoning and Forgiving (an-Nisa': 43). But why did Allah mention the absolution of sins? The reason is that He forgave and spared us the effort of toiling in search for water and licensed us to attain cleanness by passing dust. Afterwards Allah says:

(1) Al-Bukhari, Muslim and An-Nisa`i

أَلَمْ تَرَ إِلَى ٱلَّذِينَ أُوتُوا۟ نَصِيبًا مِّنَ ٱلْكِتَـٰبِ يَشْتَرُونَ
ٱلضَّلَـٰلَةَ وَيُرِيدُونَ أَن تَضِلُّوا۟ ٱلسَّبِيلَ ﴿٤٤﴾

[Prophet], have you not considered how those who were given a share of the Scripture purchase misguidance and want you [believers], too, to lose the right path? [44] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 44)

When Allah wants to assert a cosmological truth as a prelude to a question related to creed that guards the system of the universe, he immediately addresses Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him by saying: '[O Prophet], have you not considered…'? The insight here is usually associated with visual perception. The function of the eye relates to the events to which it is exposed; the visual thing is always associated with its evidence, whereas the evidence of the truth of the audible is taken from the fact of the one who utters it and such a fact is a questionable issue. However, what is seen is self-evident. For this reason, people have said, with the act of seeing, there is no room for asking 'where.' This means that if you see something, do not ask where it is;likewise hearing about news is not like witnessing it. So, the news that you hear is never as trustworthy as what you witness with your own eyes. Thus, witnessing is self-evident. It should not thereby be said, prove that such a person is wearing a white gown if you have already seen this person.

Accordingly, when Allah wants to assert the truth of a matter He says: '[O Prophet], have you not considered…'? When you claim that someone is corrupt before a third person, this person may or may not believe you. But when you see someone gambling or consuming an intoxicant, and you tell the same person with whom you talked before, 'Have you not considered the evidence against the person I told you about'? This is evidence that you have seen that person doing such and such. But when Allah addresses Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him by saying: '[O Prophet], have you not considered…', we should wonder whether Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is witnessing the matter at stake or not. If so, then the question is intended as Allah once told him: 'Have you seen the man who forbids [Our] servant to pray?' (al-'Alaq: 9-10)

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did witness this person. But is 'Have you seen' intended in the actual literal sense, or not? Why would Allah use the interrogative form even though Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him saw the one who 'forbade' people from praying? Why did He not simply say: 'You have seen the one who forbids a slave when he prays'? No, Allah wanted to affirm that piece of news in stages. Therefore, in some instances the piece of news may be audible and in others it may be visual. In other instances, Allah does not say: 'you have seen'; rather, He inquires: 'have you seen' because He wants to elicit an answer from Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. In this manner, the answer will be initiated by the addressee rather than the addresser. This is the most forceful form of expression and ascertainment. When Allah addresses his prophet with His saying: 'Have you not considered' we investigate whether this event was witnessed by the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him himself, then the vision is actualised. However, when the event in question did not take place at the time of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and Allah addresses him using the same interrogative form as in the following case: ‘Have you [O Prophet] not seen how your Lord dealt with the army of the Elephant?’ (al-Fil: 1) The event of the ‘Elephant’ took place in the same year that the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was born. When Allah Almighty is He asks his prophet: ‘Have you not seen…’ (al-Fil: 1) about an incident he did not witness, He means, ‘Have not you heard or learnt about it’? Why did Allah Almighty is He not simply say ‘Have you learnt or known about such and such incident’ instead of, ‘Have you not seen…’ (al-Fil: 1)? We can infer that that when Allah addresses his messenger regarding a command, He meant to emphasise to him that, ‘Be aware Prophet Muhammad, that when I inform you of something, you must have faith in Me more than your own eyes.’ Hence when He says, ‘…Have you not seen…’ (al-Fil: 1), this implies that you have been informed by the Truth. His informing is unequalled to any of His creations because the credibility of the created is questioned, yet that of the Creator is nothing but absolute truth. Your eyes may fail you as you may not be totally aware of the whole truth; however, when Allah briefs you on a certain thing, you are certain that it is the comprehensive truth. Allah’s revelation is more trustworthy than you witnessing something. When Allah says: ‘Have you seen the man who forbids [Our] servant to pray?’ (al-‘Alaq: 9-10), this was like the case we just discussed above. However, when Allah says, ‘Have you [O Prophet] not seen how your Lord dealt with the army of the Elephant?’ (al-Fil: 1), it is as if you are seeing them now. So, ‘Have you not seen…?’ (al-Fil: 1), in this context, implies that it is as if you are witnessing the scene in front of you.

In conclusion, the methods of ascertaining a claim, whether it is a piece of news or a relation, are as follows: it is based on the testimony of the created which is questionable, let alone that the vision of the created may be minor to comprehend the entire scene, or alternatively, it may be based on the narrative and statement of the Creator whose knowledge is absolute and encompasses everything. Accordingly, that which is proven and ascertained by the Creator should be the most plausible and trustworthy of all.

‘[O Prophet] Have you not considered those to whom a portion of the Book…’, (an-Nisa’: 44). This verse was revealed while there were several Jews living around Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. He peace and blessings be upon him had seen that they were granted a share of the Scripture; they were people of the Book. Nonetheless they bartered what Allah had granted them with misguidance and refrained from saying the truth. This matter was thereby witnessed by Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.When Allah the Almighty sent Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him He made him the seal of all prophets and concluded with him the lineage of prophethood. This means that prophethood had a certain course. In every age, a prophet was sent in proportion to the pervasive worldview at that historical moment. The basis of communication between beings in life is commensurate with the ailments and diseases in the society. But Allah pre-eternally knows that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would come in an age and that his message and the path he set would suffice to encompass and regulate all issues and matters from his time until Judgment Day. Allah knows that all communicational barriers and impediments of territorial boundaries would dissolve; so, an event may happen in the far east and you may hear about it in the far west and vice versa. An illness may break out in the United States and after a day or two it spreads to another country.

The factor of distance has been overcome with the emergence of modern means of communication that turned the world into one village. In olden times, social ailments were regional; confined or whatever was problematic in a certain community would not reach other ones. For this reason, Allah used to send a messenger to every community and human gathering to treat its ailments and remedy its problems. Since the world came together through means of communication, one messenger must be sent to all mankind as human problems would be the same. In the present time whenever an incident takes place anywhere, it reverberates everywhere.

Accordingly, the message of Allah must be universal. Since the message is united, no further messenger is needed to complete it. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him came as a seal. For this reason, Allah pledged every messenger to herald the coming of a messenger who would be the seal of all prophets and messengers to assure them of the creditability of the final prophet, of whose arrival they had been promised. Thus, they would say, 'Our messengers told us about him.' For this reason, Allah says: 'And when Allah made a covenant through the prophets: Certainly, what I have given you of Book and wisdom- then a messenger comes to you verifying that which is with you, you must believe in him, and you must aid him…' (Al-'Imran: 81). After this Allah says: 'He said, "Do you affirm and accept My compact in this (matter)?" They said, "We do affirm." He said, "Then bear witness, and I (too) am a bearer of witness with you."' (Al-'Imran: 81)

All messengers attest to the verity and truth of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. The Messenger of Allah, likewise confirmed the verity of the religions revealed to other messengers. The religion he called for, i.e. Islam, is the umbrella that encompasses all the previous religions of all other prophets because they share with him the same methodology that he was sent to reveal to the people. As for those who had been guided to believe in Allah via the call of the previous messengers and heard about the message of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, they may be dissuaded from following him based on their own dogmatic bigotry. Therefore, Allah pre-emptively informed and emphasised the coming of the final prophet: a messenger will be sent by Allah as a seal of all prophets. Beware that whenever he is sent, you should immediately believe in him. They had sufficient evidences and notifications in their books. Allah granted them a share of the scripture. Consider also the precision of the performance of the Quran: '[O Prophet] Have you not considered those to whom a portion of the Book?…' (an-Nisa': 44) This statement came forth excusing them in case they miss something of the Scripture. The reason is that Allah will mention in another verse: '…And they have forgotten much of what they had been told to bear in mind…' (al-Ma'ida: 13).

If they have forgotten they are exempt from blame. But those who have sufficient knowledge among those who have been given a share of the Scripture should have had their ears attentive to the sealing voice of truth. This was known to them beforehand. For this reason, our Lord tells us: '…And bear in mind that, not a long time ago, they used to pray for victory over those who were bent on denying the truth…' (al-Baqara: 89). They used to say to the idol worshippers among the Arabs, 'We are waiting for the final prophet whom Allah would send to outrace you to believe in him. If we believe in him and you do not, we will use him to kill you as the people of `Ad and Iram.' They thus adhered to their beliefs in what was revealed to them from the Heavens. If that is the case, could you tell me why they disbelieved in Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him even though they were known as the people of the Book? The disbelievers of Quraysh did not say, 'We are from the People of the Book.' They were at a lapse of break in the series of messengers sent. Accordingly, it was expected that the people of the Book would rush to believe in Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him once he came because they had threatened the Arabs against the consequences of not following him. Allah had granted them a lofty status, but their malice precluded them from benefiting from it. Allah says: 'And if they, who are bent on denying the truth, say unto you O Prophet, "They say, you have not been sent." Say, " Allah is sufficient as a witness between me and you; all knowledge of the Scripture comes from Him..." (ar-Ra'd: 43).

Allah has graciously made you witnesses to the truth and actuality of the message. But He is also a witness as much as you are. This is a great status and honour. But they did not heed this status and honour, and were adamant in their stubbornness: '…whenever there came unto them something which they recognized as the truth, they would deny it…' (al-Baqara: 89).

However, we notice that when Allah reveals a matter pertaining to creed and faith and it is denied by one who opposes it or a disbeliever, this person may think that he is doing some harm to Allah. We tell him, 'No. You are just motivated by a malicious desire in yourself. Allah will bolster the final religion and you will, in turn, be nothing but ignorant throughout the whole situation. So, do not think that you can impede the will of Allah when you disbelieve in Him and the message of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Allah made you proclaim your denial to the polytheists of Quraysh. So, consider what this word will do in order that you know what your denial has contributed to faith. You think that you have opposed faith and belief; on the contrary, you have rather supported it while being totally oblivious and sinful.'

When Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him came and declared the message relayed to him by his Lord, the disbelieving idol-worshipping Arabs said, 'This is the prophet about whom the Jews warned and foretold us, so let us rush to have faith in him before they outrace us.'

Did they or did they not serve the cause of faith? Certainly, they did. So, no disobedient person should think that he can extinguish the light of Allah (i.e. guidance as Allah will consummate his light even if the disbelievers do not like it). A good illustration of this point is what happened when our Lord changed the qibla (direction of prayer). He then explained: Muhammad you are passionate and eager to orient yourself towards the Ka`ba in Mecca. But I have directed you towards Jerusalem for a specific purpose. Now I will re-orient your prayers towards Mecca and you must bear in mind that when I do this, some of the weak-minded—the Jews—would say: '…What has turned them away from the direction of prayer which they have previously observed…' (al-Baqara: 142). They wondered about the reason that made Muslims change the direction of their prayers. If the direction of the prayers of Ibrahim (Abraham) was already the Ka`ba in Mecca, why did they not orient themselves towards it from the beginning? They will say this; the Quran was revealed asserting it and people will continue to recite it. It is due to their lame, feeble and narrow mindedness that they said the same thing when the direction of the prayers was changed. They did not heed what Allah had said before: 'The weak-minded among the people will say, "What has turned them away from the direction of prayer which they have previously observed..."' (al-Baqara: 142). Despite their intelligence, they said such things. This indicates that disbelieving in Allah is nothing but darkness, which the disbeliever blunders in and finds no way out of himself. Allah the Almighty has made their infidelity a means for establishing faith. If they had been truly intelligent and insightful they would, once the Quran relates: 'The weak-minded among the people will say, 'What has turned them away from the direction of prayer which they have previously observed…' (al-Baqara: 142), they should have said the Quran foretold that we would say such and such. So, let us not say that to discredit the Quran, yet they were incapable of doing so. Thus, the disbeliever is always in a narrow state of mind. They thought that, in their disbelief, they would eradicate the faith in Allah. But they did not because Allah made disbelief a means for faith. The Sunnah of the Prophet says, ' Allah would support this religion even with an immoral man.(1)

(1) Al-Bukhari

Allah explains that those people were granted a share of the Scripture and it was expected that they would be the first to believe in Prophet Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah. But they did not believe; this was the first stage of fallacy. But they did not suffice themselves with this share of evil. They were pursuing misguidance not only for themselves, but they also wanted to lead others astray. This is the second stage of fallacy. Once one is misguided, he is to shoulder the responsibility of his own faults, yet the venture lies in his incessant attempt to insinuate and misguide others as well. The hazard here is fortified as the gravity of his disbelief is doubled. You have gone astray, but why do you want to lead me astray as well? The reason is that the one who went astray or the deviant who does not adhere to the righteous path quite knows it, although the difficulty lies in his inability to get himself to adhere to this path. Accordingly, he feels belittled when he wonders why the other believes, whereas I could not.

The misguided painstakingly endeavours to lead others astray so as not to be notoriously singled out. The deviant feels obnoxiously horrid before the righteous and they enviously attempt to pull them to the same mire. They will say, 'Why is he upright? We must drag him towards recklessness. For this reason, the upright have to be very attentive and cautious because the devils among the humans will not let them be obedient without nuisance. They will rather laboriously attempt to sway them because they cannot bear getting themselves to obey the commands of Allah and it hurts them to find other people capable of disciplining themselves, and are guided to the righteous path. For this reason, they say, 'Let us all stumble together so that no one would feel better off than the other. Let us all be dishonest to be disavowed from being stigmatized and disgraced.' The traitor is vehemently agitated by dealing with the honest as if he has been stabbed with a dagger in his heart. He attempts to discredit, just like himself. This is the meaning of '...They buy error...' (an-Nisa': 44).

Allah tells them, you are free to barter faith for error and you would be held accountable for your misdeeds in the hell fire. But why do you then want to misguide people and lead them astray? The obedient should be rather heedful of this matter; when someone ridicules them for being obedient to Allah, they must be attentive when Allah Almighty is He says: 'Indeed, those who committed crimes used to laugh at those who believed. And when they passed by them, they winked at one another.' (al-Mutaffifin: 29-30) This is what happens when some of the prodigals and deviants see someone going to the mosque to pray. They tell him, 'Take us on your wings.' They ridicule him and make fun of him because when they see him eager to be obedient to Allah, while they are incapable of being that submissive to Allah, they shamefully develop low self-esteem. For this reason, they want everyone to be as disobedient as they are. This is the shame that we witness these days. When these disobedient and deviant meet their people they victoriously feel rejoiced succeeding to annoy the believers. They say we have met a believer and we made fun of him. Allah continues: 'And when they returned to their people, they would return jesting; and when they saw them, they would say, "Indeed, they are truly lost."' (al-Mutaffifin: 31-32)

Allah explains that those mockers accuse the religiously-committed of being astray. So, do not ever despair because of their mischievousness. Do not be defeated before those malicious people because you will openly take your revenge upon them. After Allah orders their torture and humiliation to those deviants on the Day of Judgment He will say: 'Have the disbelievers not been rewarded, this Day, for what they used to do?' (al-Mutaffifin: 36) Allah's interrogatives pose the question so that He may elicit the answer from us. The question is, 'Have We been capable of commensurately recompensing them for what they did to you'? So, ridicule and laugh at them as much as they did to you in the worldly life.

In the verse, Allah says: '[O Prophet] Have you not considered those to whom a portion of the Book?…' (an-Nisa': 43) This characterization refers to the Jews. '…to whom a portion of the Book has been given…' (an-Nisa': 43); it implies that they did not embrace the wholeness of the book Allah revealed to them. The evidence is that they had forgotten some of what they were told and reminded of. '…They buy error and desire that you should go astray from the way.' (an-Nisa': 43) Once you come across the word 'buy' you should know that there is a kind of bargain: a commodity and a price paid in exchange for it. They purchase error but by what? What will they pay for it? Allah in another verse says: 'For it is they who have taken error in exchange for guidance…'

(al-Baqara: 16). This means that they paid guidance as a price and accepted error as a commodity in exchange. In any barter, we yield what we pay or give in exchange for what we purchase. So, when we buy a commodity for a pound, the pound is lost after it was in our possession. When Allah says: '…they who have taken error in exchange for guidance…' (al-Baqara: 16), one wonders what the nature of the guidance is. If they had any that they gave away in exchange for error, certainly, they did have the instinctive guidance; the intuitional disposition; the internal guidance compass.

Your subconscious is needless of waiting for a messenger to guide you to Allah; rather, it needs a messenger to inform it of the will and ordinances of Allah. Belief in Allah is purely instinctive. When one consciously realizes that things in the universe are subservient to him in a steady and regular manner, the sun rises every day, the air blows and the land yields crops when you cultivate it, one immediately wonders if all this was due to his efforts or if any other human being could claim that he had the power to make all these beings subservient to you. To the contrary, we are thrown in the world amongst other beings and not the other way around.

When one is born, and sees these bounties around him, would he not believe that this is an endowment from his Creator? When one is born, one is astounded and captivated by the existence of all these bounties. Similarly, when Adam peace be upon him was created, he was overwhelmed by the bounties he found; human beings hence came about, while these bounties were already there. Given that he came into being after all of this was created, should one, by Allah, not pause and ponder about the ultimate creator? He had to think about who created these bounties for him. We have previously given the example of the one who exhausted all means of survival while being cast adrift in the desert. He could find neither water nor food. Desperate as he was, this man fell asleep. He then woke up to find a table that abounded with the most exquisite dishes of food; Should he not pause and ask himself who set this banquet? You were then brought about into a universe that abounds with numerous bounties. No one told you: I created these things; further, your father and grandfather never laid that claim. So, you should be attentive to the fact that there is a Creator.

Had those who exchanged guidance for error, have any guidance to exchange for that error? Yes, they had the guidance furnished to them by their natural disposition. For this reason, when the Companion `Ali Allah be pleased with him was asked, 'Did you know your Lord through Muhammad or did you know Muhammad through your Lord?' He replied, 'Had I known Muhammad through my Lord, I would not have needed a messenger.' But it is also inappropriate to say to someone that you have known your Lord through Muhammad. For this reason, Ali may Allah be pleased with him, said 'I have known my Lord through my Lord and Muhammad came to inform me of what my Lord's Ordinance.' Accordingly, His saying: '…they who have taken error in exchange for guidance…' (al-Baqara: 16) refers to those who sold out the guidance of their natural disposition and bought error in exchange. Allah says: '[O Prophet] Have you not considered those to whom a portion of the Book has been given? They buy error and desire…' (an-Nisa': 44). Allah did not mention guidance in this context because natural instinct had already been distorted in these people's hearts to the extent that they could not even offer it as a price for error '…and desire that you should go astray from the way.' (an-Nisa': 44)

Wanting or willing involves preferring a choice to another. Here is an example. You may have two pairs of socks in front of you; you may thus choose whichever of them. But if there was only one pair you would not have much choice. The will prefers one alternative to the other. What is the meaning of '...go astray from the way'? (an-Nisa': 44) Loss of the way could be interpreted in different ways. However, the point of these possible interpretations is that there is a command from Allah that you did not heed. So, did this happen because you were oblivious to it, or did you deliberately abandon it? The forgetful one is excused. But there may be another who knows the command but he deliberately abandoned it. Thus, error may refer to oblivion as in the saying: '…So that if one of them should make a mistake, the other could remind her….' (al-Baqara: 282)

Here the error consists in forgetting and being oblivious. By contrast some may err because they do not know the righteous path, but yearn for it as Allah says: 'And He found you lost, and guided you.' (ad-Duha: 7) This means that things are intricate and have a lot of ramifications. So, one may see this or that aspect of it. Allah explained to you; do not exhaust yourself because I will lead you to the righteous path. Thus, error has multiple senses and the point of these senses is that they do not lead you to a purpose. When Allah addresses an abstract issue connected with faith and creed He uses terms that people often employ to refer to stellar matters. For this reason, we wonder: what is the 'way'? The way for us, is the road. All of us, even if we were not believers, know that the road is made to lead you to a goal. But you must know the goal and destination first. Subsequently, you may pave and tread the road towards it. There is thereby a difference between motive and actuality.

Before we pave the road, we must know where it leads to, a destination should be determined first, and then the way that leads to it. When we discover the shortest way to the desired destination, we pave it so that it would not exhaust people. Thus, the path is the way leading to a destination or a goal. Therefore, Allah clarifies that that path leading to faith is straight and short, as it is well-known that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points. We should know the goal before we know the path that leads to it. The problem with people in the worldly life is that they live in it while being unaware of their final ends. They only know their partial ends. The student knows that he needs to study to get a job, get married and establish a family. Merchants trade to reach a certain goal. But all these are temporary and secondary ends. The intelligent person is the one who does not seek these finite and short-term ends; rather, he should seek the final and long-term end because one may live for fifty years, another for sixty years and a third for only one year. Therefore, people should consider the end of all creatures. The problem with people is that they work for the worldly life, i.e. the short-term, finite, and transient ends, even though the word ad-dunya (worldly life) means that which is trivial and less important. So long as there is something called ad-dunya, there is something that is called al-'ulyah (more important and sublime).

People get exhausted because they consistently work for worldly ends. However, every human being should consider the sublime end which will be shared, and inevitably reached by all people. If we manage to identify this sublime end, we will save ourselves from short-sightedness and absorption in finite and transient ends. For instance, a person may send their son to learn from kindergarten to the primary stage, then to the preparatory stage, then secondary stage and then college. Afterwards the son specializes in a field, and at around the age of twenty, he graduates and gets employed to start supporting himself by means of his efforts and labours. The father works for the sake of achieving this goal and reaching this end, but sometimes the son fails to get employed, or he may also cause troubles to his father and may drop out of his education. In this case, the son will miss the goal; people should seek the end which will not be missed, as they benefit from the means that Allah has harnessed for them during their life. Therefore, they should follow His Commands.

In the world, people benefit from the means which Allah has created, but in the Afterlife, they will be with Allah himself. During their lives, people utilize and live on the means, which have been harnessed by Allah, but in the Hereafter, they will live close to the One Who has harnessed these means. Irrespective of whichever high-tech means, a person may have in this world, he will never attain the luxury of the Hereafter during the worldly life. A person may lead a luxurious life in the world, as he may press a button in a room and have a cup of coffee or food served to him, but this luxury will never reach the level in the Hereafter in which a person will attain what anything that may come across their mind. Therefore, the Hereafter is the best and most sublime end. In this world, people utilize the means of living which Allah has granted us, but in the Hereafter, we will live in the Company of Allah. In this regard, Allah Glorified is He clarifies that He has given the believer and the disbeliever the means to survive in the world. When a disbeliever plants the land, it yields crops; and when he contemplates the universe around him, its secrets unfold for him. The reason is that Allah has created the means for whoever wants to make use of them, be him a believer or a disbeliever. However, the One Who makes these means available is sought only by the believer, but the disbeliever has faith only in the means that lead him to his goals which Allah has not held back from him: ‘If anyone desires a harvest in the life to come, We shall increase it for him; if anyone desires a harvest in this world, We shall give him a share of it, but in the Hereafter, he will have no share.’ (ash-Shura: 20)

Everyone should consider whether he is more concerned with the means of living which Allah has provided, or with the One Who has provided these means. As for the transient and short-term ends of the worldly life, they may vanish before one can reach them, losing all efforts in vein. Therefore, Allah has concealed the time of death and its causes in order for Him to examine the human being. Some people achieve all what they aim for, and then their entire endeavour in life ends with death; in such a case they take nothing from the world because he did not believe in the One Who provides all the means of living. Even if a person has attained all worldly pleasures, he will eventually die. This means that either a person will part away from the worldly bounties or these bounties will part away from them, but in the Hereafter, the bounties are permanent. Therefore, it is the real aim that should be sought by the rational. Worldly pleasures are commensurate with the means a person has used, but pleasures in the Hereafter fit the One Who provides all means. Allah's Giving and Actions cannot be matched. The reasonable person is the one who considers their final end. In conclusion, the path would be devoid of its meaning if the desired end has not been set.

In addition, people toil and live in asperity in the world because they do consider only the short-term and transient ends. Therefore, the worldly life is called ad-dunya which means the most inferior. This name also implies that the worldly life is temporal and bound to perish in contrast with the Hereafter, which is eternal and lasting. Accordingly, a person should determine his end and goal before he determines the path he will take. There is a difference between reality and motive; the later refers to determination of the goal. For instance, the student studies diligently to succeed and to enjoy a good share in this life. He should keep this goal in his mind before embarking on the education process. When he imagines success and how it is enjoyable, he starts studying, and then he reaches his goal: success. There are two types of goals: a motivating goal and an actual goal; the motivating goal precedes the determination of the path that will be taken, and the actual goal comes after determining the path. Who determines the goal?

The goal and purpose of anything is determined by the person who had made it. People determine their worldly transient ends, but the sublime ends are determined by Allah. As long as Allah Glorified is He determines the sublime ends because He is the Creator, people ask Him to guide them to these ends. Therefore, faith is a must for the person who wants to live in the company of Allah. The way is to follow the path of Allah: ‘This is My path, leading straight, so follow it, and do not follow other ways: they will lead you away from it….’ (al-An‘am: 153)

This means that the ways people choose will not lead to Allah because they have determined them in accordance with their transient ends, but He has determined His Path based on the purposes He has set. So, whoever wants to draw closer to Allah should take His Path. The words ‘path’ and ‘way’ refer to perceptible objects which are used by Allah to depict abstract meanings related to faith and creed. Allah Glorified is He uses definite examples to clarify abstract meanings. When there is a crossroad and a person wants to reach a destination, his deviation even by a few millimetres upon setting out on the road distances him from his destinations. The more he walks, the more his journey will be extended, and it is more likely for this person to get lost. This point may be illustrated using the following example: All people ride trains which run on straight railways. If the course of a train needs to be redirected, the train will not be raised and placed on a new railway; rather, a railway switch that may not exceed two millimetres is used and placed very close to the original railway. This is considered the task of the switchman. Upon doing so, the train changes its course to reach the desired destination.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him got our attention to this fact in the Hadith which was narrated by Hudhayfah Allah be pleased with him as he said, ‘Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him related to us two prophetic narrations, one of which I have seen fulfilled and I am waiting for the fulfillment of the other. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him told us that the virtue of honesty descended in the roots of men's hearts (from Allah) and then they learned it from the Quran and Sunnah (the Prophet's traditions). Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him further told us how honesty will be taken away, saying, “Man will go to sleep during which honesty will be taken away from his heart and only its trace will remain in his heart like the trace of a dark spot. Then he will go to sleep during which honesty will decrease further still so that its trace will resemble the trace of a blister; as when an ember is dropped on one's foot which would make it swell, and one would see it swollen but there would be nothing inside. People would be carrying out their trade, but hardly will there be a trustworthy person. It will be said, "in such-and-such tribe there is an honest man." No doubt, there came upon me a time when I did not mind dealing (bargaining) with anyone of you, for if he was a Muslim his Islam would compel him to pay me what is due to me, and if he was a Christian, the Muslim official would compel him to pay me what is due to me, but today I do not deal except with such-and-such people.'

Faith is rooted in the innate pure nature which reveals to people that this vast universe is accurately organized and managed by a Great Power. It is also organized in a manner that is not subject to anyone's control. Furthermore, this universe which follows a perfect system has been created and controlled by the Supreme Power, which is marked by Omnipotence, Knowledge, Wisdom and all other attributes of perfection.

The human mind cannot name this Power or its intentions without a messenger that reveals and conveys its message. When a messenger comes, and says that the Power that people seek, and they have generally believed in, is called Allah, they should believe him. People's minds cannot name this Supreme Power by themselves, but they know it as well as its intentions via the Message which is conveyed by Allah's messengers. This is the shortest path to Allah away from the complications of philosophy, intricacies of logic and the sophistries of argumentation. This path proves that whoever worships any god other than Allah is not entitled to this kind of worship.

For instance, could the one who worships the sun tell us the guidance the sun has set for the human being? Furthermore, what did the sun set as a reward for good deeds and punishment for bad deeds? Or what could the sun do to the one who does not worship it? It is not capable of either rewarding or punishing, and has no guidance. But a deity who does not prescribe a specific course or guidance for those who believe in him cannot be ascribed with this name. A true god must have a specific course that guides people to proper action, proscribe bad deeds and can reward and punish people. In contrast, the sun does not possess a path that it can convey to people nor do rocks or the moon. All these things are created by the Creator and cannot be taken as gods. The existence of messengers who conveyed Allah's Message is evidence in support of the truth of the Message. Allah the Glorified and Exalted makes us believe in His Existence through the guidance He has revealed. Before the revelation of the Message, people recognized the existence of the Creating Power Whose name and Intentions are not known to them. Therefore, sending messengers to convey Allah's Message indicates that Allah is Merciful to His creatures. Thus, the one who attempts to plan his life using his own reason without the guidance of the Messenger, burdens himself, and his efforts will go in vain. The following example illustrates this point well – and to Allah belongs the utmost example of perfection. If a group of people are sitting in a room and the door is closed, and then someone knocks on the door, all people will agree that there is someone knocking at the door. But if they want to identify the one who is knocking, they will have different opinions regarding whether he is a man, woman, child, a person carrying good tidings or a warning, a person serving coffee, or a person that is charged with arresting them.

The group agrees that someone is knocking on the door, but they will disagree concerning identity of the person who is knocking. The same applies to the universe. Underlying the universe is a Great Power Whose Name and Intentions may cause disagreement among people when they try to reach them by everyone's reason. But when this Power sends a messenger to convey Its Name and Intentions, the disagreement gets settled.

The matter that has exhausted philosophers and led some of them into misguidance is that some of them were not content with merely rationalizing the Supreme Power that has created the universe. Rather, they wanted to envisage this Power, Its Entity and Intentions. The philosophers' view about the Creator is incorrect, and they will remain astray due to this view. However, when a messenger conveys the message, this matter becomes settled. The Hadith that was related by Hudhayfah about honesty depicts the mission of faith, how the believer should learn from the Quran and Sunnah, and what happens when this knowledge is neglected.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him depicted the stages of the loss of honesty with which Allah has entrusted to Muslims. He warned them against the phases of deviation which increase gradually. This point has been explained giving the example of the switch of trains.

The saying of Allah Glorified is He: '…purchase misguidance and want you [believers], too, to lose the right path.' (an-Nisa': 44) This implies that they do not want to be the only deluded people. Allah Glorified is He safeguards and immunizes us against their sayings, as they were given a share of the Book of Allah; a matter which makes the Muslims expect good from them because they received a Divine Book, and followed messengers. But Allah Glorified is He explains that those people want the Muslims to lose the right path, using the share they have of the Book of Allah as a way to misguide them.

In our time, we find that the worst enemies of any creed are not its apparent adversaries, but the false followers of this creed because the disbeliever's enmity is apparent and explicit, and the Muslim is sure that the disbeliever wants to distort his religion and fabricate lies about it. However, when a Muslim says the same, his words are believed and considered true. This implies that the adversaries of Islam despaired of confronting Islam in an overt manner; therefore, the west lost interest in orientalism, and orientalists' studies, which are found currently, are old. Those orientalist thinkers used to write books, when read by a Muslim, he may say that the author of this book works for serving knowledge, culture, and the Sunnah of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. This author may just infiltrate one corrupt idea in the book to make the reader trust him.

When the orientalists have realized that we have discovered their plan, they have introduced the occidentalists who are Muslims that travelled to the West, adopted its ailing ideas and came back to spread them in our educational curricula, media and press. These occidentalists are Muslims; so people trust them, and the West has found that it is easier for them to penetrate Muslim societies through some of the Muslims who were granted a share of the Book of Allah because Muslims will always feel comfortable that these occidentalists are Muslims like them. Therefore, Allah the Glorified and Exalted explains that the apparent enemies are easier to handle than the ones who are allegedly religious because the later will be trusted as they are also Muslims. Therefore, our Lord explains the matter because it may disturb the believers and cause suffering to them. He says when describing deceiving people: '…those who were given a share of the Book of Allah…' (an-Nisa': 44). Those people regard this point as their main source of credibility. Then, Allah says:

وَٱللَّهُ أَعۡلَمُ بِأَعۡدَآئِكُمۡۚ وَكَفَىٰ بِٱللَّهِ وَلِيّٗا وَكَفَىٰ بِٱللَّهِ نَصِيرٗا ﴿٤٥﴾

God knows your enemies best: God is enough to protect and to help you [45] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 45)

The Muslims may know their enemies, but Allah knows all enemies because a person may have enemies such as himself, his wife or children, but not all forms of enmity will be clear to a person. However, Allah knows what people hide in their hearts, so He says: 'Allah knows your enemies best…' (an-Nisa': 45).

Allah has mentioned this verse after His saying: '…and want you [believers], too, to lose the right path' (an-Nisa': 44) because some people may say that those people are people of the Book or Muslims like them. So long as Allah is the One Who knows our enemies best, He will not deceive or delude us; therefore, we should pay attention to Allah's saying about them, describing them as our enemies. Then, He says: '…Allah is enough to protect and to help you.' (an-Nisa': 45) This saying suggests that as Allah is enough to protect the believers, they do not need any other person to protect them. A person may say about someone that he is enough for him because he makes him in need of no one else, and suffices him about the different aspects of life.

'… Allah is enough to protect and to help you.' (an-Nisa': 45). Certainly, Allah is enough as a Supporter because other humans may possess means to do things, but Allah the Glorified and Exalted is the One Who has created these means, and those beyond them. Therefore, He comforts us, saying: '… Allah will find a way out for those who are mindful of Him, and will provide for them from an unexpected source….' (at-Talaq: 2-3)

The word wali, which is mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse, refers to an intimate person. '…Allah is enough to protect and to help you.' (an-Nisa': 45) This means that sometimes the intimate person cannot be a helper or supporter, but Allah is close to the believers as well as a helper and supporter. As long as the matter is one of a continuous conflict, Allah says: ' Allah knows your enemies best. Allah is enough to protect and to help you.' (an-Nisa': 45)

Allah warns the believers against seeking support and advocacy from anyone except Him; they should spare no effort, and entrust what is beyond their abilities to Allah. In addition, Allah explains that the believers should not consider their enemies as supporters, or seek help from them. Allah will support the believers by throwing fear in the hearts of their enemies so that they will be defeated even if they are more powerful and more equipped. If the believers do not have weapons, Allah will advocate them by throwing fear and terror in the hearts of their enemies. As long as Allah supports the believers by terrifying their enemies, this should suffice because once He does so, the enemies will lay down their weapons that will be taken by the believers. Allah commands the believers to spare no possible effort, and did not say command them to prepare what they need to achieve victory over their enemies because He knows that He can make us triumph by throwing fear in the hearts of our enemies, ‘We will strike fear into the disbelievers’ hearts because they attribute partners to Allah although He has sent no authority for this…’ (Al-‘Imran: 151). As long as Allah has struck fear in the hearts of the disbelievers, their means of combat will eventually become in the hands of the believers, and the whole conflict will get settled. Then, Allah says:

مِّنَ ٱلَّذِينَ هَادُوا۟ يُحَرِّفُونَ ٱلْكَلِمَ عَن مَّوَاضِعِهِۦ وَيَقُولُونَ سَمِعْنَا وَعَصَيْنَا وَٱسْمَعْ غَيْرَ
مُسْمَعٍ وَرَٰعِنَا لَيًّۢا بِأَلْسِنَتِهِمْ وَطَعْنًا فِى ٱلدِّينِ ۚ وَلَوْ أَنَّهُمْ قَالُوا۟ سَمِعْنَا وَأَطَعْنَا وَٱسْمَعْ وَٱنظُرْنَا
لَكَانَ خَيْرًا لَّهُمْ وَأَقْوَمَ وَلَٰكِن لَّعَنَهُمُ ٱللَّهُ بِكُفْرِهِمْ فَلَا يُؤْمِنُونَ إِلَّا قَلِيلًا ﴿٤٦﴾

Some Jews distort the meaning of [revealed] words: they say, ‘We hear and disobey,’ and ‘Listen,’ [adding the insult] ‘May you not hear,’ and ‘Ra' ina [Look at us],’ twisting it abusively with their tongues so as to disparage religion. If they had said, ‘We hear and obey,’ ‘Listen,’ and ‘Unzhurna [Look at us],’ that would have been better and more proper for them. But God has spurned them for their defiance; they believe very little [46] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 46)

In the chapter of an-Nisa', Allah has tackled the first creation and explained that He has created mankind from one soul, Adam peace be upon him, then He has created his spouse from him, and then He has created a lot of men and women so that man’s succession on earth can continue. Allah Glorified is He has clarified that He wants a strong society wherein the rights of the orphan will not be lost. In so far as Allah wants this succession to continue, the orphans must take their due rights. Then, Allah has tackled the inherited fortune, and the feeble-minded people who cannot be entrusted with their money. Subsequently, He has tackled marriage and its protocols.

Therefore, the whole process of creation is intended to build an integrated system of life for mankind because the succession of man on earth requires continuous reproduction. This reproduction cannot bear its fruits unless it leads to the creation of strong people, as the reproduction of weak people will not serve the purpose. Accordingly, Allah instructs the Muslims that if there are orphans among them, they must take care and watch over them; and if there are feeble-minded people who cannot manage their wealth, other sound-minded people should take care of their wealth on their behalf. In addition, people should do their best to leave some of the fruits of their labour to their offspring until they become strong enough and able to take care of their own affairs. Then, Allah has explained the system of inheritance, and has allowed the people to marry, but He has set conditions for marriage, and has revealed the general guidance: ‘Worship Allah; join nothing with Him. Be good to your parents…’ (an-Nisa’: 36) He has explained all these rulings.

But why does Allah Glorified is He revert to the issue of the Jews after explaining all these rulings? Allah Glorified is He mentions the rulings in full, and then urges the people to abide by them. He explains that there are some people who know the rulings but cannot force themselves to abide by them; thus, He warns the Muslims from doing this. The Muslims should also know that there are people who have been granted a share of the Book and know the rulings as they do, but they have bartered this knowledge for delusion. Allah explains that this is the reality, and He does not bring about sayings just to give information, but He presents what happened, and warns the Muslims against adopting the same line. Therefore, Allah says: ‘Of those who are Jews (there are those who) distort the meaning of [revealed] words…’ (an-Nisa’: 46). The meaning of distortion is to use a word that bears more than two meanings, one of which is good and the other is evil, but the person who says it intends the evil sense. For example, same people may say, ‘as-samu `alykum’ which resembles ‘as-salamu `alaykum’ in the way it is written and pronounced, but the word ‘sam’ means death. Therefore, some words may be said to make people think that it is said with a good intention, but the real intention of these words is evil.

Another example of this attitude is when some people said to the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him ra`ina (take care of us). While the apparent meaning is 'taking care of', they intended ru`unah (rashness and recklessness). Thus, Allah has commanded the Muslims to leave aside the word that bears dual meanings because the speaker may intend either good or bad it. For example,(1) a person went to a tailor to have a garment made. The tailor had only one eye, and this person did not like the garment he made. The person thought that if the tailor made his appearance bad by the garment which he tailored for him, he would write a poem that will scandalise him in front of all people. Thus, he said,

'Amr tailored for me a garment

I wish his two eyes were the same.

But what does the poet's saying, 'I wish his two eyes were the same' mean? Does it mean that he wished the defective eye to be like the one which is intact? Or does he wish that the healthy eye to be like the defective one? Thus, the saying bears a good and a bad intention. It was narrated that one of the rulers asked a preacher to insult and curse the Companion 'Ali Allah honours his face and family on the pulpit. The preacher asked the ruler to excuse him from this mission, but the ruler insisted on his order. Then, the preacher told him that if he wants him to obey this order, he would ascend the pulpit and say that the ruler asked him to curse `Ali, so repeat your curses upon him. Then the ruler told him not to say anything, as he understood the preacher's intention and ability to use words in a double sense.

Allah speaks: 'Of those who are Jews (there are those who) distort the meaning of [revealed] words…' (an-Nisa': 46). The Muslims should heed the style of the Quran because sometimes it uses the same words in different meanings, a matter which may cause the shallow-minded to think that this is repetition, but this is not true. For instance, Allah in one instance says: 'They have bought error in exchange for guidance…' (al-Baqara: 16). In another instance, He does not mention guidance as a price for error; rather, He says, 'bought misguidance.' They did not pay attention to the fact that the guidance derived from fitrah (innate natural disposition) has been effaced in them. Another example is the saying of Allah raising the question about who: '…distort the meanings of [revealed] words….' (al-Ma'ida: 41)

---

(1) The story of the tailor `Amr who tailored a cape for a gentleman

In the verse under discussion, Allah Glorified is He says: 'Some Jews distort the meaning of [revealed] words….' (al-Ma'ida: 41) This means that Allah's saying was initially received and interpreted correctly, then those people distorted and replaced it with other words in the manner they did with stoning and replacing it with Had (ordained punishment for violating Allah's Law).

As for Allah's saying: '…who distort the meanings of [revealed] words and say [to each other]…' (al-Ma'ida: 41), it means that they have removed the Sacred Words of Allah from their true context, and placed them in a false context, distorting their meanings in accordance with their desires. In so doing, the words had no context. In one instance, they have replaced the words of Allah with their own words, and in another they have distorted the words of Allah by interpreting them per their interests and desires.

And '…say, "We hear and disobey"…' (an-Nisa': 46). They said openly, 'we hear' then said in secret, 'we disobey', which reflects their intention to disobey. Thus, the word 'hear' implies that their ears hear the words, but in fact they 'disobey' Allah's ordainment. They indeed explicitly and openly said 'we hear'; however, they said 'we disobey' in secret. They thus said 'we have heard' while bearing the intention to disobey. May '…you not be made to hear!' (an-Nisa': 46) But the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is the person who caused them to hear, and the evidence is that they said, 'we heard.' So, what did they intend by saying '`isma`'? Did they ask the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to listen to them because he was saying something that they did not like, and they planned to respond to him, or did they want to use an ambivalent word and turn it into an inappropriate meaning like ghayr musma ('may you not hear anything that pleases you' or 'may you not hear' - Allah forbid)? It may also be an insult on their part. All of these are probable interpretations.

'Listen, may you not be made to hear! and; 'Raina, (distorting the word with their tongues and taunting about religion)…' (an-Nisa': 46). They did not intend 'giving care' by the word ra`ina which is mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse, but they intended recklessness and heedlessness. Allah commanded to avoid this term because people may interpret it in a manner that is insulting to the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. The Arabic word 'lay' which is mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse means twisting and twining things together into a pattern. For instance, it may be used to mean interweaving and binding two threads together. Such twisting and interweaving give strength to a rope. But why did they use to do such practices? They did so because they knew well that such practices would give them strength.

By '…distorting the word with their tongues and taunting about religion…' (an-Nisa': 46) they intended evil by twisting and distorting the words of Allah as the intention of religion is causing uprightness which they did not intend. Therefore, when a person twists and distorts the meanings of religion, he intends to disparage it. They should have said, 'We have listened to what has been revealed.' Instead of concealing disobedience, they should have also said, 'We hear and obey, Listen, and unzhurna (look at us) ',” instead of ra`ina. This would have been better*,* since unzhurna' does not bear any negative implication.

Thus, this means that Allah the Glorified and Exalted wants to inform the followers of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that the enemies of the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him might use words to insult him. Therefore, He explains that they should beware of not uttering their words because they intended negative implications, and they had to avoid all words that could be used in an evil manner. '…and if they had said instead, “We have heard and we obey and listen and wait for us to understand”, it would have been better for them and more upright…' (an-Nisa': 46). The word lakin mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse suggests that what had actually happened contradicted with what the Legislator intended..'..but Allah has cursed them because for their disbelief, so they do not believe but a little.' (an-Nisa': 46) The word la`n stated in the Arabic text of the verse, means expulsion and dismissal, i.e. Allah spurned and expelled them because of their disbelief',...but Allah has cursed them because their unbelief, so they do not believe but a little.' (an-Nisa': 46)

Once negation of a particular act is followed by an exception, this implies that the exception proves some of this act or event. For instance, when someone does not eat except for a little bit, this means that the first part of the sentence negated eating, but ‘except for a little bit’ came to prove that he still does have some food. Allah says: ‘they do not believe but a little.’ (an-Nisa’: 46) The act of believing requires suggesting the person who believed. Thus, there is the act and the one who undertakes and performs such an act. Accordingly, exception may apply to the action or the person who performed the action. The saying: ‘they do not believe but a little’ (an-Nisa’: 46) means that they only had faith in a few things, i.e. they had little faith in prayers, and they did not work on Saturdays. However, they did not pay heed to the rest of the prerequisites of faith. In addition, this statement may mean that only a few of them believed, and this opinion is more likely because some of them actually believed. It is also true that they believed in some parts of the Book and disbelieved in other parts. Thus, their faith was little due to the act itself.

Some of them embraced Islam after the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was sent and recited the Quran; and they were assured that he perfectly fit the description mentioned in their Divine Book. However, only a few number of the Jews believed like `Abdullah ibn Salam and Ka`b Al-Ahbar, but other Jews like `Abdullah ibn Suriyyah, Ka`b ibn Asad and Ka`b ibn Al-Ashraf, did not believe.

Therefore, if ‘they do not believe but a little.’ (an-Nisa’: 46) refers to those who believed it, this will be a probable interpretation. It will also be possible to interpret it as the disbelievers used to believe in certain parts of the Book and disbelieve in the other parts. The expression which Allah the Glorified and Exalted has used is called ‘probability consideration’ because when the Quran was revealed with such a saying, some Jews were thinking of declaring their faith in the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Had Allah said, ‘they do not believe’, it would have been difficult for them to declare their faith. But when He has said, 'they do not believe but a little’ the one who was considering embracing Islam knew that the One Who has said such a saying knows all things hidden in the soul. Therefore, Allah has considered the probability that those few people might declare faith. Subsequently, Allah says:

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ أُوتُواْ ٱلۡكِتَٰبَ ءَامِنُواْ بِمَا نَزَّلۡنَا مُصَدِّقٗا لِّمَا مَعَكُم مِّن قَبۡلِ أَن نَّطۡمِسَ
وُجُوهٗا فَنَرُدَّهَا عَلَىٰٓ أَدۡبَارِهَآ أَوۡ نَلۡعَنَهُمۡ كَمَا لَعَنَّآ أَصۡحَٰبَ ٱلسَّبۡتِۚ وَكَانَ أَمۡرُ ٱللَّهِ مَفۡعُولًا ﴿٤٧﴾

People of the Book, believe in what We have sent down to confirm what you already have before We wipe out [your sense of] direction, turning you back, or reject
you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath:
God's will is always done [47] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 47)

All people know that the divine legislations do not involve any contradictions, since they were revealed by the same Legislator. He will not decree legislation one day, and then send another messenger to enact another new contradictory legislation. The fundamentals of all religions that were revealed through different messages are the same. They only differ in certain rulings required by the conditions of different ages. Even the rulings of the same legislation may develop especially those related to habits. Allah the Glorified and Exalted the Merciful to His slaves would never bring about an issue concerning a habit to which people have been accustomed, and then abrogate it. Religious texts pertaining matters of creed were decisive. As for the matters that need habituation, Allah sets the rulings relevant to them gradually and gently. In other words, He sets these rulings in phases to avoid the transitional gap.

This transitional gap could be likened to the case of the person who smokes 100 cigarettes a day. If he reduces the number of cigarettes he consumes to only fifty cigarettes then thirty and so on, he will get rid of this habit overtime. Thus, the time lag between one cigarette and another will be an hour instead of ten minutes or half an hour. Accordingly, this person will get rid of this habit gradually. The same also applies to social affairs pertaining to habits.

Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'O you who have been given the Book! Believe that which We have revealed…' (an-Nisa': 47). He clarifies that this Book does not contain different rulings. Someone may say: As long as this Book contains the rulings they have in their Book, why did Allah reveal it'? That is because new issues have emerged during this age that did not exist at the time when their Book was revealed. The Quran includes treatment of new issues that arose as well as the issues pertaining to faith, miracles, monotheism, creed, and all other indisputable matters.

‘O you who have been given the Book! Believe that which We have revealed…’ (an-Nisa’: 47). The phrase ‘… have been given the Book…’ (an-Nisa’: 47), suggests that this Book is evidence against them, as Allah has not presented to them sayings they did not know, as He says: ‘…We have revealed, verifying what you have (an-Nisa’: 47). This means that they know very well what they have. Therefore, they should have compared what was revealed to them at the hands of the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to what they already had. If they have found it confirming what they already had, then the whole matter would have been settled.

Subsequently, the threat included in the following verse should be considered: ‘…before We obliterate faces then turn them on their backs, or reject you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath, and the command of Allah shall be executed’ (an-Nisa’: 47) is intended to warn those people and urge them to believe in Muhammad’s da`wah (call to Allah). The word ‘tams’ which is mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse) means obliteration, and if an object has experienced ‘tams’, it has been obliterated after being distinct. In addition, the word wujuh is used in the Quran in different senses. In some instances, it is literally used to refer to the face, as a part of the body, as in His saying: ‘On the Day when some faces brighten and others darken…’ (Al-‘Imran: 106). In other instances, it is used to refer to intention and orientation as in the saying of Allah Glorified is He: ‘In fact, any who direct themselves wholly to Allah’ (al-Baqara: 112).

The words aslam wajhahu which are mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse mean directing oneself wholly. Thus, the word is sometimes used in reference to the face with which we face people, and in other instances it is used to refer to the intention and objective, but what is the relation between the intention, objective and face? The relation is envisaged in the fact that when someone intends to do something, he directs his face towards it. Therefore, the word wajh refers to the part of the body with which we encounter things, and also refers to the intention and purpose one may have.

The use of the saying natmis wujuhan suggests that Allah has honoured the humans, and has given them distinct features, such as their eyes, eyebrows, nose and mouth, which cannot be created by any person. Then, Allah Glorified is He declares that He can efface these facial features that characterize those people in a manner that their faces would become like the back of their necks. This is the meaning of the verse if wujuh refers to the face as a part of the body.

The explanation of the verse when wujuh refers to intention and hope: The people who purchased misguidance and wanted the believers to go astray, distorted the sayings of Allah, and said ra`ina and 'May you not hear' absolutely had a certain intention. What is their objective and intention? Their intention is to keep themselves and other people away from following Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Allah urges those people to believe in Muhammad's da'wah (call to Allah) before He obliterates their intention, and prevents it from reaching its end; keeping people away from believing in the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Allah urges them to save themselves before this happens and He curses and dismisses them out of His Mercy. Therefore, when `Abdullah ibn Salam heard this verse, he went to the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him placing his hands on his face and said, 'I have feared that Allah may efface my face before I convert to Islam.'

This proves that he believed that the One Who said these sayings can execute his warning. During the caliphate of `'Umar ibn Al- Khattab Allah be pleased with him, Ka`b Al-`Ahbar used to go to him not knowing that this verse was revealed, but when he knew about it, he went to `'Umar ibn Al- Khattab covering his face with his hand lest his face be effaced before he embraces Islam. This proves that he truly believes that the One Who said these words can execute His Warning.

Someone may say that among the Jews are people who have not believed, but Allah did not efface their faces. We say in response, 'Did He say that He will only efface the faces'? No, He also said, '…or reject you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath…' (an-Nisa': 47). It suffices that some people among their rabbis and religious figures believed that effacement might happen. In addition, the Jews who believed the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him knew about the intrigues of the Jews, as `Abdullah ibn Salam said to the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him before embracing Islam, 'I would like to embrace Islam, but I am afraid that if I embrace Islam, the Jews would bad mouth me, so ask them about me before I convert to Islam.’ The Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him asked the rabbis about him, ‘What do you think of `Abdullah ibn Salam?’ They answered, ‘He is the best of us, and the son of the best of us and the most knowledgeable person amongst us’; and went on glorifying him. When Ibn Salam heard this, he testified that there is no god but Allah and that Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah. Consequently, they insulted and offended him. Then, Ibn Salam said, ‘O Messenger of Allah, did I not tell you that they are not trustworthy people.’

When the news of the arrival of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to Medina reached `Abdullah ibn Salam, he went to him to ask him about certain things. He said, ‘I am going to ask you about three things which only a Prophet can answer. What is the first sign of the Hour? What is the first food that the people of paradise will eat? And why does a child attract the similarity to his father or to his mother?’ Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him replied, ‘Gabriel has just now informed me of that.’ Ibn Salam said, ‘Gabriel is the enemy of the Jews amongst the angels.’ Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, ‘As for the first sign of the Hour, it will be a fire that will collect the people from the East to the West. As for the first meal, which the people of paradise will eat, it will be the caudate (extra) lobe of the fish-liver. As for the child, if the man's discharge precedes the woman's discharge, the child attracts the similarity to the man, and if the woman's discharge precedes the man's, then the child attracts the similarity to the woman.’ Then, `Abdullah ibn Salam said, ‘I testify that none has the right to be worshipped except Allah, and that you are the Messenger of Allah.’ and added, ‘O Allah's Messenger, the Jews invent lies as to make one astonished, so please ask them about me before they know about my conversion to Islam.’ The Jews came, and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him asked, ‘What kind of man is `Abdullah ibn Salam among you?’ They replied, "The best of us and the son of the best of us, and the most superior among us and the son of the most superior among us.’ Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him asked, ‘What would you think if `Abdullah ibn Salam should embrace Islam?’ They said, ‘May Allah protect him from that.’ Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him repeated his question and they gave the same answer. Then ‘Abdullah came out to them and said, ‘I testify that none has the right to be worshipped except Allah and that Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah!' Then, the Jews said, 'He is the wicked among us and the son of the wicked among us.' and so they degraded him. Thus, `Abdullah ibn Salam said, `That is what I was afraid of, O Allah's Messenger.' Sa`d ibn Abu Waqqas said, 'I have not heard Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him say to someone walking on the earth that he will be among the inhabitants of Heaven, except `Abdullah ibn Salam. The following verse was revealed about him: 'Say, "Have you thought: what if this Quran is from Allah and you reject it? What if one of the Children of Israel testifies to its similarity [to earlier scriptures]…"'? (al-Ahqaf: 10) (1)

Allah says,'…before We obliterate faces then turn them on their backs…' (an-Nisa': 47). If the intended meaning of the word wujuh is actual effacement of the face, then this is what scared `Abdullah ibn Salam and Ka`b Al-Ahbar. The former went to the Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and the later went to ``'Umar, covering their faces, lest it should be effaced. Therefore, the words natmis wujuhan, which are mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse, mean either the actual effacement of the face, making the face without any distinctive features, or prevention of those people from reaching their goal, which is keeping people away from believing in the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him'…before We obliterate faces then turn them on their backs, or reject them…' (an-Nisa': 47). This means expelling them from Allah's Mercy. Allah says: ' Allah has sealed their hearts…' (al-Baqara: 7). As long as the disbelievers renounce faith, Allah will not only increase the seal on their hearts, but He will also assist them in this matter; Allah says: 'There is a disease in their hearts, to which Allah has added more…' (al-Baqara: 10).

As long as those people wanted to disbelieve in Prophet Muhammad's da'wah (call to Allah), He fulfilled their demand, saying: '…or reject you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath…' (an-Nisa': 47). In this verse, Allah addresses the Jews, who know the story of the Sabbath in which Allah banished, destroyed, rejected them and prepared for them a great torment. Thus, Allah does not give them a baseless warning, as this warning has a history and background that Jews know well; believe and remember its date: '…or reject you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath…' (an-Nisa': 47). The story of the people who broke the Sabbath is known even though it will be mentioned in another chapter of the Quran. The word 'Sabbath' means comfort and peace, from which the word subat (sleep) is derived. The Arabic words sabat and yasbu mean to repose and rest.

---

(1) Al-Bukhari, Muslim and an-Nisa`i

'…or reject you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath…' (an-Nisa': 47). The word la'n, which is mentioned in the Arabic text of verse means banishment, insult and ruin. Those who want to doubt the meanings of the verses say that the exegetes of the Quran do not restrict themselves to one meaning for a single word, as they say different meanings for a word. We reply that they do not master Arabic, and their knowledge of it is limited to what is needed for their career, and not a talent. Learning language just for the sake of a career enables a person to command its basic rules, but not the ability to use the word in its actual proper sense or to clarify its intention. If the word la'n means dismissal, we should infer that this requires someone to perform the act of dismissing, someone to be dismissed, and a place out of which the latter will be dismissed.

So who dismisses?

Who is dismissed?

And out of where is he dismissed?

If the verse is interpreted in this sense, people will not have problems with the diverse implications and meanings of rejection and dismissal. For example, if a person is sitting and eating, and his dog that safeguards his house comes and goes around your table, what will this person do? He will drive it away from the table, an act which is considered as a form of dismissal. Another example is: if a person's son did something wrong in the presence of guests, this person will drive him out of the room, telling him to go to his mother, an act which is considered also as dismissal and expulsion. Further, if the son's misdeed is great, and the father has control over the son, he may drive the son out of the house, and preclude him from staying at home. Furthermore, if the son's misdeed is more serious, the father may dismiss him from the village or town wherein he lives. Sometimes a person who has perpetrated is driven out of life by another person who has influence; an act which is considered a dismissal. The word la'n is used when disgrace and humiliation are intended. If the intended meaning is ruin, this meaning is proved by the fact that a lot of the children of Israel have already been ruined in battles, and suffered disgrace and humiliation because the Muslims captured their women and their daughters, subdued them and destroyed them. In addition, the Muslims drove them out of their homes towards the Levant and Daraa where Allah caused them to die. Thus, all meanings of dismissal can apply to them, and can be understood in connection with all that happened to them; however, it semantically differs per the one who dismisses the one who is dismissed, and the place out of which a person is dismissed.

When Allah says: '…or reject you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath…' (an-Nisa': 47), this indicates that rejection may take different forms, among which the rejection of those who broke the Sabbath. The word 'Sabbath' refers to Saturday which is one of days of the week; therefore, it is a temporal unit of the week. It is noticed that the names of the rest of the seven days of the week have numerical connotations. Al-ahad (Sunday) refers to number one, the word al-ithnayn (Monday) refers to number two, and the same applies for the Arabic names of the days of the week except jumu`a and sabt (Friday and Saturday), as they have no numerical connotations. They rather take numerical significances from the names of the days of the week which precede or follow them. For instance, al-khamis (Thursday) refers to number five, so it is implied that al-jumu`a (Friday) is the sixth day of the week even if number six is not literally implied by the word. Similarly, al-Sabt (Saturday) is the seventh day, so the numbers to which al-jumu`a (Friday) and al-sabt (Saturday) refer to can be suggested by the number to which the preceding day refers because these two words have semantic implications that override their numerical reference. For instance, the word al-jumu`a (Friday) refers to gathering; therefore, the numerical connotation of the word has been overridden by the reference to gathering. Al-sabt (Saturday) refers to tranquillity, as it is derived from the Arabic root sabata which means being stable without any motion. This meaning is suggested by the saying of Allah: 'Give you sleep for rest.' (an-Naba': 9) The word 'rest' stands for the word s*ubata* which is mentioned in the Arabic text of the verse.

When Allah the Glorified and Exalted wills to examine some of His creatures to assess their degree of faith and obedience to the Commands of Allah, He forbids an act during a particular time and permits it in other times. For instance, Allah proscribed hunting on a certain day, although He allowed people to hunt on all days. Those people used to catch fish from the sea for livelihood, but He chose this day in particular, and commanded them not to go fishing on this day, intending to any type of activity on this day. This is the meaning of Sabbath in terms of rest and peace. The people who broke the Sabbath are the group who took part in an event in violation of the peace and rest on Saturdays. The story of this group is explained and tackled in general in the chapter of al-Baqara: ‘You know about those of you who broke the Sabbath…’ (al-Baqara: 65).

In this verse, Allah says, ‘…or reject you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath…’ (an-Nisa’: 47). He the Glorified and Exalted has mentioned their story in detail before. Allah commands the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to ask those who were concerned with the story of the Sabbath, i.e. the Jews. When Allah puts forward a confirmed story, He presents it as a statement which the people who have faith believe. But sometime He puts forward the topic in an interrogative form because He is certain that the questioned people will not give any answer other than that which Allah the Glorified and Exalted intends. When our Lord says to the Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: ‘[O Prophet], ask them about the town by the sea; how its people broke the Sabbath when their fish surfaced for them only on that day; never on weekdays. We tested them in this way because of their disobedience.’ (al-A‘raf: 163) They cannot deny this incident; Allah would have put it forward, but He wants to assert it in a way that does not leave room for any denial or dispute. Thus, He explains that He will not put forward the incident; but He commands Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to ask them about it. Their answer would match with what has happened because it is a clear and undeniable issue.

Allah Glorified is He says: ‘And ask them about the town which stood by the sea...’ (al-A‘raf: 163). The Arabic word qariya in the verse, translated as 'town', is derived from the word al-qira which means generosity and providing hospitality for guests. A host is not expected to accommodate his guest for long periods of time and provide hospitality to him for many months. Rather, he is required to offer his guest one qariya, or meal (the minimum hospitality to be offered to guests). If a passer-by comes at your door seeking your hospitality, you should serve him one meal (since a Muslim is enjoined to be hospitable to guests). Umm Al-Qura is given this name since it tends to many people's needs or because it the greatest town. The qariyah mentioned in the chapter of al-A'raf is described as 'by the sea', meaning that it was close to the sea. Something that is described as hadir implies that you find therein whatever you aspire to. This meaning is similar to the words of what the Arab poet Ahmad Shawqi said,

When my beloved Layla stands by my side, I have everything I need.(1)

The word al-hadar in the poetic verse refers to the place where everyone's possible needs could be found. However, al-badiyah is the place where people have only what suffices concerning some of their needs. Al-badiya contrasts hadar; al-badiya is the desert land in which there is no permanent settlements (hadar). The word hawadir, plural form of hadira, is used to refer to big cities, towns and capitals. Thus, the reference to the 'town stood by the sea' (al-A'raf: 163) should be understood as a reference to a big town overlooking the sea or that which abounds in all kinds of sea goods. In this verse, the city in reference is the city of ('aylah) which lies between Midyan and at-Tawr.

The story of the people of this town proceeds as follows: Allah Glorified is He wanted to test them. He prohibited fishing on a specific day, Saturday, or the Sabbath. The town stood by the sea; its people mostly depended on it for their livelihood. They were commanded to abstain from fishing on Saturdays as a test for their obedience. One may wonder why Allah Glorified is He would prohibit such an activity on this particular day. We should bear in mind that not all things and activities that are deemed prohibited by Allah Glorified is He must be harmful. The prohibition may be merely intended as a trial and test for people's compliance with the commands of their Lord. Allah Glorified is He says: 'For the wrongdoings done by the Jews, We forbade them certain good things that had been permitted to them before, for having frequently debarred others from Allah’s path' (an-Nisa’: 160).

(1) Poet Majnun Layla (literally 'He Who Was Driven Crazy by Love for Layla')

The reference to 'good things' in the verse means that what was deemed temporary prohibited for them was originally lawful. These people disobeyed their Lord and accordingly incurred His punishment. They transgressed the limits of Allah, took that to which they were not entitled and made lawful what Allah had deemed prohibited for them. Their punishment was the outcome of their action. Why did they transgress the limits of Allah and make lawful what He had deemed prohibited? When they refused to abide by the commands and prohibitions of their Lord, they were denied some of what was deemed lawful to them as punishment.

It should be noted that not all unlawful things are deemed prohibited because they are harmful. Rather, Allah requires our absolute compliance with His prohibitions whether the forbidden things and acts apparently seem harmful or not; He wants our faith to be based on unwavering conviction. For this reason, He says: 'And among men is he who serves Allah (standing) on the verge so that if good befalls him he is satisfied therewith, but if a trial afflicts him, he turns back headlong; he loses this world as well as the Hereafter. That is a manifest loss.' (al-Hajj: 11)

Allah does not want the people to worship Him on edge, worshipping Him to achieve worldly gains. People are confident when they are prosperous, but when they face hardships, they turn away from worship. Rather, He wants people to be moderate and steadfast in faith. Worshipping Allah on edge reflects disturbance, doubt and confusion of such a person who does so, which is unbecoming of a believer who should, instead, relish tranquillity in his religion. This is similar to an army commander who fights only when victory is expected possible, aspiring for the spoils of war; otherwise, he would flee and withdraw his men. Allah wants us to attain genuine faith. Some people may say, 'I will pay zakat in order to have my wealth blessed and increased.' To this person we say, 'You should not pay zakat in order to have your wealth blessed and increased. Rather, you should pay it because Allah has commanded you to do so. Having your wealth blessed and increased is a bonus. Allah may test your faith by denying you this bonus in order to see if you are abiding by His commands He has ordered, or if you are doing so merely because you aspire to the bonus. When Allah blesses you with increasing your wealth, you are required to pay zakat on it as well. He wants to know those who will readily abide by the Divine Command merely because He is the One Who has ordered it and not because they aspire for worldly gains.

As underlined above, it was deemed prohibited for them to fish on Saturdays as a punishment for their disobedience and transgressions. It could have been possible that they would not have to face any enticements urging them to violate the Divine Command, but it is a trial for them. They were commanded to refrain from fishing on the Sabbath day (Saturday), and fish were made to appear on the surface only on the Sabbath, never on weekdays. They began using deceitful means to avoid adhering to the command of their Lord (and refrain from fishing on Saturdays) by placing their nets for the purpose of fishing before the Sabbath. When the fish came in abundance on Saturday as usual, they were caught in the nets for the rest of Saturday. During the night, they collected the fish after the Sabbath ended. Their faith was tested by making the fish become very easy to catch on Saturdays; they were tempted by the easy of the catches made on Saturday, and they thought of this plan to get around the Divine restriction. Had fish not appeared on the surface, becoming easy to catch on Saturdays, the adherence to the Divine Command would have been easy. However, they could not resist the temptations. Allah says: '…when their fish came to them on the day of their Sabbath, appearing on the surface of the water, and on the day on which they did not keep the Sabbath, they did not come to them.' (al-A'raf: 163)

Their trial had two dimensions: the fish came to them on Saturday, appearing on the surface of the water easy to catch and did not come to them on any other day. This made them more anxious. Had they been genuinely confident in their Lord and believed in Him as due, they would have abided by His command.

It was a trial and test for the purpose of spiritual purification. What did they do? They wanted to abide by the command of their Lord, but their material greed was too overwhelming, and they could not resist the temptations to catch the fish that came to them on Saturday. Had they savoured faith in the bounties and grace of Allah, they would have passed the test. Sometimes deprivation is, in essence, giving, while restriction is liberation in disguise. However, who is heedful to this fact?

They should have reminded themselves that Allah had prepared for them what was better than fish that were easy to catch. Tempted by the easy catch to be made on Saturday, the fishermen cunningly devised their plan to get around the Divine restriction. They set up trenches and canals to divert the fish and nets and ropes to catch them. On Saturdays, the canals, nets and ropes were set up, and the fish would swim into them in large numbers. At night, before the fish could return to the sea, the canals were dammed. Then on Sundays, the fishermen would easily catch all the trapped fish. They thought that by means of such a plan, they would deceive Allah. In fact, they failed to grasp the essence of the Divine Command. They were forbidden from fishing on Saturdays; fishing, in essence, means to take possession of the fish. Therefore, as long as they had exerted efforts on Saturdays to catch fish, they violated the Divine Command. Allah says: ‘[Prophet], ask them about the town by the sea; how its people broke the Sabbath when their fish surfaced for them only on that day, never on weekdays. We tested them in this way because of their disobedience.’ (al-A‘raf: 163)

They disobeyed the command of their Lord and made lawful what He had deemed prohibited. As a punishment, Allah deemed forbidden what was originally lawful for them. Allah Glorified is He says: ‘How, when some of them asked [their preachers], "Why do you bother preaching to people Allah will destroy or at least punish severely? " [The preachers] answered, "In order to be free from your Lord’s blame, and so that they may perhaps take heed."' (al-A‘raf: 164)

This proves that there were good people among such a community. These good people admonished the disobedient ones and urged them to be mindful of their Lord and abide by the Divine Command. A party of them exclaimed, 'Why do you admonish us with a severe punishment?’ Those who advised the evildoers said, 'To be free from blame before your Lord, and that haply they may guard (against evil).' This means that there were three groups: those who violated the command of Allah, those who wanted to advise the evildoers and forbade them from such a prohibited act and those who blamed the ones who wanted to admonish the evildoers. The third group exclaimed, 'Why do you bother preaching to people Allah will destroy or at least punish severely?’ Those who wanted to admonish the evildoers replied, 'In order to be free from your Lord’s blame, and so that they may perhaps take heed.' They wanted the admonition to be an excuse before Allah that they did not stand still and could not at least forbid the evil from being committed before them. They said, 'To be free from blame before your Lord, and that haply they may guard (against evil).' They hoped that these evildoers would be admonished and deter when reminded of Allah. What happened next? Allah says: 'When they ignored [the warning] they were given, We saved those who forbade evil and punished the wrongdoers severely because of their disobedience.' (al-A‘raf: 165)

The verse states that those who forbade evil were saved; this means that other groups were punished and destroyed (the wrongdoers and those who refused to forbid them from violating the Divine Command).

Back to our main verse; it is concluded with the statement, 'Allah's Will is always done.' (an-Nisa’: 47) This is true, indeed. There is nothing to be classified as difficult or impossible for Allah Glorified is He. His Power is infinite, and none can repel His Will. If Allah promises or commands anything, it will undoubtedly occur. Divine Promises are different from human ones. The promises and warnings made by human beings may be fulfilled or not. You may promise someone that you will do something good for him in the future; however, you may become unable to fulfil your promise later. Similarly, you may threaten to harm someone in a given way in the future, but you may fall ill later and become unable to fulfil your promise.

This is because human ability is limited and changes; one day you may be able to fulfil your promise, and other days you may be unable to do so. However, this is not the case with Allah. When He promises or threatens to do something, it will surely take place. He may pardon evildoers, out of His Mercy and Grace, the disbelief in Him and associating partners with Him in worship.

We know that the Will of Allah is not bound by time since He controls it. However, human being's actions are constricted by time. We describe the events according to time on which they occur; the past events are described in the past tense, the current ones are described in the present tense and the future events are described in the future tense. When you say that a future event will take place, your statement may or may not be believed due to the fact that you have no control over the future. However, when Allah, describing a future event using the past tense, as is the case in many verses of the Quran, this means that it will surely happen because the Will of Allah is not constricted by time.

Allah says: 'Allah’s Judgment is [bound to] come.' (an-Nahl: 1) The Arabic verb ’ata, translated as 'is bound to come', is used in the past tense. The literal meaning of the verse is that the (Day of) Judgment has already taken place before making this statement. The verse continues: 'So, do not ask to bring it on sooner.' (an-Nahl: 1) This indicates that it had not happened yet! Those who criticise the Quran may say, 'Why does the Quran say that something has already happened even though it will actually take place in the future?’ This is a recurrent style in the Quran; the actions and decrees of Allah are described in the past tense, indicating that they will surely happen (as if they had already happened).Verily, none can repel His Decrees or hinder His Will.

Allah says: 'Allah’s Judgment is [bound to] come.' (an-Nahl: 1) The verse reads as follows: 'Or reject you, as We rejected those who broke the Sabbath.' (an-Nisa’: 47). It may be said that the wording of the verse suggests that Allah may or may not reject them. In fact, this is refutable since Allah’s Will is surely bound to happen. He is not bound by time unlike human beings who are constricted by it. This is due to the fact that human beings have no control over their future. A person may say that he will do such-and-such tomorrow, but he may die, or he may change his mind; and his situation may change. The same goes for threatening; one may threaten to take revenge on someone, but changes his mind later. This means that human beings have no control over their own future affairs. It is, therefore, foolish to argue with Allah's statement in reference. He teaches us to be polite with Him and consider the universal order and decrees set by Him in order to avoid falling into the abyss of lying. He tells his Messenger: 'And do not say of anything: "Surely, I will do it tomorrow", without adding, "God willing." Remember your Lord when you forget and say, "Maybe my Lord will guide me to a nearer course to the right than this."' (al-Kahf: 23-24)

Allah teaches us to avoid falling into the abyss of lying by conditioning all future events to His Will. If someone says, 'I will do such-and-such tomorrow", and does not do it, he would be considered a liar because he tacitly assumed that he would be alive tomorrow and able to carry out this action.

We have previously underlined that every event requires a doer, subject matter, time, reason and power to materialise it. Do human beings have full control over these factors? In fact, you do not have control over any of these factors. You do not even have control over your own existence in this worldly life! Therefore, a believer is enjoined to condition all future events to the ‘Be polite to the Will of Allah by adding the phrase 'Insha' Allah' (meaning, 'if Allah wills'). Thus, he who does so spares himself the trouble of being considered a liar. Accordingly, ' Allah’s Will is always done' (an-Nisa’: 47) when He says: 'or We reject them…' in the verse in reference means that they will certainly be cursed, and none should question the promise of Allah. Similarly, as we read the verse: '…and Allah is Forgiving, Merciful' (al-Ahzab: 5), we should know that it means that He has been, is still and will always be Forgiving and Merciful. His Mercy and Forgiveness are pre-eternal (existing without any prior nonexistence and without any beginning). He is ever Forgiving and Merciful before the existence of whom He bestows His Mercy and Forgiveness upon, and His Attributes do not change. His Attributes are equally pre-eternal and post-eternal even before there is one to whom He manifests His Forgiveness and Mercy. None can repel or challenge His Will and Decrees. He may decree that things should exist with no causes because He is the Creator of the causes.

Then, He addresses a fundamental doctrinal issue pertaining to the relation between Man and his Lord, and so Allah says:

إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ لَا يَغۡفِرُ أَن يُشۡرَكَ بِهِۦ وَيَغۡفِرُ مَا دُونَ ذَٰلِكَ لِمَن
يَشَآءُۚ وَمَن يُشۡرِكۡ بِٱللَّهِ فَقَدِ ٱفۡتَرَىٰٓ إِثۡمًا عَظِيمًا ﴿٤٨﴾

God does not forgive the joining of partners with Him: anything less than that He forgives to whoever He will, but anyone who joins partners with God has concocted a tremendous sin [48] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 48)

It should be noted that this verse is one of the most hope inspiring verses in the Quran. This is why: when Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was once asked, 'What are the requirements of faith in Allah?' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'He who proclaims that none is worthy of worship but Allah (genuinely believes in it, fulfilling its conditions and acts upon its implications), will be admitted to Paradise.'(1)

Moreover, 'Uthman ibn 'Affan Allah be pleased with him narrated that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'He who dies while knowing that none is worthy of worship but Allah will be admitted to Paradise.'(2)

He who associates partners with Allah in worship is committing the ultimate and gravest sin of all. It may be described as the creed-related high treason, in law terminology. The purpose of manmade laws is not to emphasise religious matters, although they should. Suppose that a group of people formed a movement. Afterward, the president of the movement exploited his position to serve his own interests, and another one tried to topple the president of the movement. The action of the second person will be perceived as 'high treason' by the president. By contrast, the one is opposing this president due to his injustice without the intention of toppling him. The concept of high treason as a capital crime exists in human systems of law, and it is punishable by the severest penalty as compared to other offences. The punishment of a certain crime should be in proportion to its gravity.

Back to our verse, Allah underlines the fundamental belief in the Islamic creed, namely the belief in Allah Glorified is He as the One and Only God worthy of worship and has no partners. He wants us to acknowledge that none is worthy of worship but Him. When a person recognises and professes that He is the One and Only God with no partner in divinity, he enters the realm of security and deliverance. For this reason, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said: 'I bear testimony to the fact that there is no god but Allah, and I am His messenger. He who would meet Allah without entertaining any doubt about these (two fundamental beliefs) would enter Paradise.'(3)

In another Hadith, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'Nobody proclaims, "None has the right to be worshipped but Allah", and then later dies while believing in it, except that he will enter paradise.' Abu Dharr Allah be pleased with him asked, "Even if he had committed illegal sexual intercourse and theft? " Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, "Even if he had committed illegal sexual intercourse and theft." Abu Dharr Allah be pleased with him exclaimed, "Even if he had committed illegal sexual intercourse and theft?" Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, "Even if he had committed illegal sexual intercourse and theft." Abu Dharr Allah be pleased with him said, "Even if he had committed illegal sexual intercourse and theft? " He peace and blessings be upon him said, "Even if he had committed illegal sexual intercourse and theft, in spite of the Abu Dharr's dislike."'(1)

(3) Muslim

Abu Dharr Allah be pleased with him was 'jealous' that some people may transgress the limits of Allah. He was not upset when Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'In spite of Abu Dharr's dislike!' This is why he was not annoyed when relating this Hadith. Rather, he Allah be pleased with him was happy that Muslims were blessed with the Mercy of Allah as such. If this were not the case, what would be the criterion to distinguish between the one who believes and professes it and the one who does not do so? There has to be criterion to distinguish between the two persons. Some Muslims may fall into the abyss of any of the crimes and offences that are punishable by the Islamic Shari'a. Concerning this, Allah says: 'And (as for) the man who steals and the woman who steals, cut off their hands as a punishment for what they have earned….' (al-Ma'ida: 38)

This means that it is possible that a believer could steal and fall into the abyss of adultery and immorality while being in a state of oblivion. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him taught us that the five daily prayers and that from one Friday Prayer to the next serve as expiation of the sins committed in between their intervals, as long as major sins are not committed. Hajj and fasting expiate a person's sins as well.

It has been related on the authority of Abu Hurayrah Allah be pleased with him that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'The five daily prayers and from one Friday Prayer to (the next) Friday Prayer are expiations

(of the sins committed in between their intervals), as long as major sins are not committed.'(1)

Therefore, we have come to realise that Allah set up several venues for forgiveness and mercy. He says: 'Certainly, Allah does not forgive that anything should be associated with Him and forgives what is besides that to whomsoever He pleases…' (an-Nisa': 48). You should bear in mind that believing in Allah as the One and Only God and refraining from associating partners with Him in worship is for the benefit of human beings. Worshipping diverse deities overwhelms humans who would be required to submit to diverse entities having power over them. Allah spared us such trouble by requiring us to submit only to Him. Worshipping Allah alone is, thus, a source of tranquillity and comfort for a believer.

The belief in Allah as the One and Only God of the universe teaches us genuine nobility and dignity. Instead of submitting to every powerful created being, you should solely submit yourself to the Creator of the universe Who caused it to come into existence by His Perfect Power. Thus, He has created us in the most perfect shape and form and has control over the whole universe. He stands not in need of the worship of His creation. When a person believes in the unique Oneness of Allah, i.e. being the One and Only God of the universe, it is for his own benefit.

For this reason, we have previously underscored that Allah commands His servants to gather once every week, i.e. on Friday. Throughout the week, every Muslim performs the daily prayers in his house, workplace or anywhere else, but on Fridays, He commands all Muslims to gather in the mosque and perform the Friday Prayer in congregation. He shows humbleness to his Lord by crying and imploring Him when he observes the prayer (salat) in solitude. Allah has decreed that all Muslims of different social standings, the strong and the weak, the powerful and influential and the weak, the rulers and the ruled should gather and recognise that they are all equal and that they all submit themselves to One and Only God. The same concept is realised in Hajj. These collective acts of worship emphasise unity and brotherhood in Islam, as well as equality. All worshippers stand shoulder-to-shoulder and prostrate in submission to Allah together, regardless of wealth, race or social status.

(1) Muslim and At-Tirmithi

Thus, we come to understand that the fact that Allah does not forgive the ascribing of divinity to other than Him and solely worshipping Allah is, actually, for the benefit of people. Had He forgiven such an act, people would have been lost in worshipping diverse deities and submitting to many powers.

However, He has decreed that there should be no deity worthy of worship save Him so that all humankind would submit exclusively to Him and relish the genuine dignity in the servitude to Allah alone. The verse continues: '…anything less than that He forgives to whomever He wills.' (an-Nisa': 48)

Ibn Jurayh narrated on the authority of 'Ata' Allah be pleased with them that Ibn 'Abbas Allah be pleased with him said, 'Wahshi, who brutally killed Hamza Allah be pleased with him the uncle of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him in the Battle of Uhud, came to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and said, "Oh Muhammad, Oh Muhammad, I came to you seeking protection, so grant me safety so I may listen to the Words of Allah." Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him accepted his attendance, despite his (Wahshi's) killing and mutilating his uncle, Hamza. He (Wahshi) (then) said, "I used to associate partners with Allah, killed a soul He forbade and fornicated. Would Allah accept my repentance?" Therefore, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him abstained from responding until the following verses were revealed. Allah Glorified is He says: "And those who do not invoke with Allah another deity or kill the soul which Allah has forbidden [to be killed], except by right, and do not commit unlawful sexual intercourse. And whoever should do that will meet a penalty. Multiplied for him is the punishment on the Day of Resurrection, and he will abide therein humiliated except for those who repent, believe and do righteous work. For them Allah will replace their evil deeds with good. And ever is Allah Forgiving and Merciful. "(al-Furqan: 68-70) Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him recited them to him (Wahshi), who replied, "I see conditions I might not fulfil. So, I am at your side (waiting) to listen to the Words of Allah. The following verse was revealed: "Certainly, Allah does not forgive the joining of partners with Him. Anything less than that He forgives to whomever He wills,but anyone who joins partners with Allah has concocted a tremendous sin."(*an-Nisa':*48) Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him called Wahshi and recited the verse to him. Therefore, Wahshi said, "Maybe I am from those whom He does not wish to forgive! I shall be by your side until I hear the Words of Allah. Upon this, the following verse was revealed, "Say: O, my servants who have acted extravagantly against their own souls, do not despair of the Mercy of Allah. Surely, Allah forgives the faults altogether. Surely, He is the Forgiving, the Merciful." (az-Zumar: 53) Wahshi said, "Yes, now I do not see any conditions!" He declared Islam as his religion and was a good Muslim.'

Back to our verse, Allah forgives all sins except for disbelief in Him out of His Mercy and Kindness. He considers the people's actions done out of oblivion as accidental. If someone commits an act of disobedience and then repents to Allah, people should not be reminded of their past sins. If someone commits a sin openly such as giving a false testimony and then repents to Allah, he must not be reminded of his sin. Upon repentance, the repentent's past sins are cancelled, and he must not be reminded of them since he has already repented to the Most Forgiving and Merciful. The One Who has full control over all matters absolved him of his sins. Why does Allah decree such a thing? The objective is that the repenting would not be humiliated due to the sins he has committed in the past. The sinners who indulge in sin are often looked down upon and abhorred by others. For this reason, when a person sins, repents to Allah and regrets what he has done, he earns a reward. Despite tasting the sin, he chose to repent and give it up. This is the reason why Allah substitutes sins of the repenting with good deeds. Upon knowing that our Lord substitutes their sins with good deeds, we learn that we must not detest or abominate the repenting. Rather, we should be happy with their repentance and refrain from judging them according to their past sins.

Allah says: '… but anyone who joins partners with Allah has concocted a tremendous sin.' (an-Nisa': 48) The Arabic word Al-'Iftira' used in the verse originally means telling a lie deliberately. This is different from the case of someone telling something false because he mistakenly thought it was true. For instance, someone may tell you, 'This person visited so-and-so yesterday.' He may have told you that because someone else had told him this or because he had seen some indications of this visit. However, this visit may have never had happened. Ascribing divinity to anyone but Allah means to lie about Him deliberately and such an act is regarded as a tremendous sin. Allah says: '…but anyone who joins partners with Allah has concocted a tremendous sin.' (an-Nisa': 48) This is due to the fact that it contradicts the affective nature of a human's inclination wanting a person to speak of what he actually knows only. Therefore, one should not go against the dictates of his sound human inclination by deliberately ascribing a false partner to Allah. When Allah proclaims that none is worthy of worship but Him, it should be accepted as an established fact and truthful statement. Had there been any other partner with Allah, why would he not have responded to that? If he had not heard the statement, he would have been an oblivious god, and if he had heard, but had not responded to it, why would he not have objected and brought forth a more persuasive miracle than the one brought forth by Allah? This proves that when Allah proclaims His unique Oneness and sends His Messenger to communicate this message to mankind, and none could or dared to object to it, and that, it should be accepted as an established truth that should be indisputably and intuitively embraced.

Lying means making a false statement or an action intended to mislead others or speaking or acting untruthfully with intent to mislead or deceive others. It may also mean holding false beliefs. Such a deed is considered 'a tremendous sin', and this implies that minor sins are those that do not violate the Islamic monotheistic creed, namely, the unique Oneness of Allah. The following verse related to the Jews, reads as follows:

أَلَمۡ تَرَ إِلَى ٱلَّذِينَ يُزَكُّونَ أَنفُسَهُمۚ بَلِ ٱللَّهُ يُزَكِّي مَن يَشَآءُ وَلَا يُظۡلَمُونَ فَتِيلًا ﴿٤٩﴾

[Prophet], have you considered those who claim purity for themselves? No! God purifies whoever He will: no one will be wronged by as much as the husk of a date stone [49] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 49)

We have previously emphasised that the Arabic expression used in the verse, 'Alam Tara' (meaning have you not seen?) does not necessarily mean actual vision; rather, it may mean, 'Have you not considered or known?' This indicates that when Allah informs us of anything, it is as truthful as the truth established by actual vision. In fact, sometimes vision is deceptive and turns out to be a mere illusion. The verse says: 'Have you considered those who claim purity for themselves?’ (an-Nisa’: 49)

Purification in this context denotes purity from all defects and flaws. This means negating all deficiencies and asserting all aspects of perfection. They thought highly of themselves. Allah says: 'And the Jews and the Christians say, "We are the sons of Allah and His beloved ones."' (al-Ma‘ida: 18)

Allah Glorified is He responded to their claim when He says: 'Say, "Why does He then chastise you for your faults? Nay, you are mortals from among those whom He has created..."' (al-Ma‘ida: 18). This means that if they had truly been the sons and beloved ones of Allah as they claimed, why were they punished? It proves the falseness of their claim. What is the point of informing us of such information? Why would you lie to us? We cannot benefit you. They praised and credited themselves falsely claiming that they were purified from all defects and argued that they were the sons and beloved ones of Allah. Another example of their false claims was related in the verse saying: 'And they say, "None shall enter the garden (or paradise) except he who is a Jew or a Christian." These are their vain desires. Say, "Bring your proof if you are truthful."' (al-Baqara: 111)

This is a false allegation as well. The following question arises 'If someone praised himself, and it were true, would it be accepted?’ In fact, we need to answer another question first, 'What is the purpose of this praise?’ If its purpose were arrogance and boasting, it would be false. However, it should be noted that self-praise may be obligatory in certain situations necessitating it. For instance, when a group of people board a boat, and the captain, or the one in charge of running the boat, turns out to be incompetent, and then a storm breaks out and the incompetent captain is unable to steer the boat through the storm. In this case, a competent and more talented person should step forward to steer the boat through the storm and tell the incompetent captain, 'Give up your position. I am more capable of steering the boat.' This involves self-praise, but it is commendable and even required because at such times we cannot afford mistakes. Moreover, this competent person is truthful in what he is saying; he is actually more competent than this captain. There is thereby a difference between self-praise on a false basis and self-praise on a truthful basis.

We know well the story of our Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him. One day, the king of Egypt dreamt that seven thin cows ate seven fat cows, and he saw seven fresh and healthy ears of corn and seven others that were withered. It would have made more sense that the thin cows would eat the fat ones. The interpretation of visions is not a craft or science. Rather, it is a given talent bestowed upon those whom Allah chooses, enabling them to read the symbols in the visions and deduce their meanings. This is evidenced by the fact that when the king wished to understand the interpretation of this strange dream, he consulted his advisors and soothsayers. Everyone was puzzled because no one could really say what it meant. Some of them thought that it was a passing dream. They were honest enough to admit that they did not have the ability to interpret dreams. Allah says: ' They said, "These are confused dreams, and we do not know the interpretation of confused dreams."' (Yusuf: 44)

They were fair and honest with the king. This is an important lesson for all of us. When someone is asked about something he does not know, he should simply confess his lack of knowledge. When a scholar is asked about a matter of which he has no knowledge, he should simply say, 'I have no knowledge of this matter.' This way the person would simply consult another scholar. On the contrary, when a scholar gives a questioner a wrong answer, he would settle for it and the scholar would bear the sin.

Allah underlines, in previous verses of the same chapter, Prophet Yusuf's (Joesph's) peace be upon him gift of interpreting dreams. He says: 'And two youths entered the prison with him. One of them said, "I saw myself pressing wine." And the other said, "I saw myself carrying bread on my head, of which birds ate. Inform us of its interpretation. Surely, we see you to be of the doers of good."' (Yusuf: 36)

Why did these two young men think that Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him was able to interpret dreams? They clearly stated the reason as related in the verse that says: '"Inform us of its interpretation. Surely, we see you to be of the doers of good."' (Yusuf: 36) This means that they observed his noble manners and kindness and concluded that he was a good man. When they were troubled and needed help, they said to themselves we will not find anyone better than him to ask for help. It should be emphasised that good manners speak for themselves and making the person displaying them deserving of respect; even liars will always respect an honest and truthful person.

Can someone judge another person to be a doer of good unless he has criterion to distinguish good from evil? Upon hearing their question, Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him could have answered them directly and interpreted their visions right away. However, he seized the opportunity to invite them to Allah. He peace be upon him was a Prophet of Allah and a descendant of a family of Prophets of Allah. He said, as related in the verse, saying:, 'He said, "There shall not come to you the food with which you are fed, but I will inform you both of its interpretation before it comes to you."' (Yusuf: 37). He praised himself because he wanted to invite them to Allah. The verse continues: '"…This is what my Lord has taught me."' (Yusuf: 37) It was important for him to praise himself in this context to establish his creditability and earn their trust before inviting them to Allah. He, then, emphasised that it was not a unique gift for him and that anyone could be endowed with it. Allah says: 'Surely, I have forsaken the religion of a people who do not believe in Allah, and they are deniers of the Hereafter.' (Yusuf: 37)

Then, the following verse says: '"And I follow the religion of my fathers, Ibrahim (Abraham), and Ishaq (Issac) and Ya'qoub (Jacob)."' (Yusuf: 38)

His statement meant that they could have been like him had they chosen to follow the path leading to truth. Then, Allah says: '"O, my two mates of the prison! Are sundry lords better or Allah, the One, the Supreme?"' (Yusuf: 39)

He, then, appealed to common sense, asking them, 'Is having numerous deities better or one God?' They were polytheists, yet when they wanted help, they turned to the one worshipping one God. The verse says: '"O, my two mates of the prison! Are sundry lords better or Allah, the One, the Supreme?"' (Yusuf: 39)

Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him praised himself in order to invite them to Allah. When the king knew of his gift and aptitudes, he requested that Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him should be brought to him to be in his close entourage. After the seven years of abundance, foretold by Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him in the interpretation of the vision, came the seven years of drought. He had advised them to save part of their grains for the following years. He peace be upon him informed them of a future event yet to come. When it happened as foretold by Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him they learned that his knowledge was given to him by Allah.

He peace be upon him said (to the king): 'He said: "Place me (in authority) over the treasures of the land. Surely I am a good keeper, knowing well."' (Yusuf: 55). Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him praised himself and clearly stated the reason why the king should appoint him in this position. Allah says: "… Surely, I am a good keeper, knowing well." (Yusuf: 55) The task required honesty and knowledge; there was no room for error.

Therefore, there are two conditions for self-praise to be allowed. First, it has to be based on true reasons. Second, it has to have a purpose so that the one who praised you does so for the right reason. This is why Allah says: '…Therefore, do not attribute purity to your souls; He knows him best who guards (against evil).' (an-Najm: 32)

This is because when you praise and attribute purity to yourself, you should bear in mind that Allah, Who shall judge your deeds, knows your real character. It is foolish that a person would praise himself in the wrong situations and fail to do so in the right ones; self-praise is allowed when it is for the benefit of Muslims rather than a person's own interests.

Allah says: '[Prophet], have you considered those who claim purity for themselves? No! Allah purifies whomever He wills. No one will be wronged by as much as the husk of a date stone.' (an-Nisa': 49)

Indeed, nothing escapes the knowledge of Allah Glorified is He. His knowledge encompasses all things, hidden and apparent. It is possible that someone may pretend to be good for a period of time, and people would not be able to realise his true nature and may even praise him. However, when Allah praises someone, it is based on true Knowledge and Wisdom. When they praised themselves, were their good deeds cancelled? Despite the fact that these people praised themselves, Allah will not praise them; their good deeds shall be cancelled, but they will not be wronged. '…No one will be wronged by as much as the husk of a date stone.' (an-Nisa': 49) This is the ultimate justice.

We know that the Quran was revealed in the Arabic language, communicated to an Arab Messenger of Allah and that the first ones who believed in it were Arabs. We also know that most of its meanings were in harmony with the environment into which it was revealed. Arabs believed palm trees to be the best of all trees because of their abundant benefits.

'Abdullah ibn '‘Umar Allah be pleased with him narrated that one day Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'Amongst the trees, there is a tree, the leaves of which do not fall and is like a Muslim. Tell me the name of that tree.' Everybody started thinking about the trees of the desert areas. And I ('Abdullah ibn '‘Umar) thought of the date palm tree but felt shy to answer. Then, the others asked, 'What is that tree, O, Messenger of Allah?’ He replied, 'It is the date palm tree.'(1)

Palm trees have many benefits. In fact, the benefits of a palm tree are present in all of its parts and under all conditions. Since it grows until it dries, it is eaten, then all of its parts are used: its seeds are given to animals, its fibre is used in for making ropes, besides other benefits. The fibre that grows around the palm tree is used to make sweepers, washing-brushes and sometimes chairs. The Quran uses examples and references suitable for the Arabian environment then continues to illustrate and express abstract meanings perfectly. Allah says:.’.. no one will be wronged by as much as the husk of a date stone.' (an-Nisa’: 49) The Quran mentions three parts of dates; Al-fatil is the Arabic word translated as 'husk of a date stone.’ The nucleus of dates is characterised by the three hidden small parts: The first one is known as (Al-fatil) which is in the long slit of a date-stone, the second one is (Al-naqir) which is a speck on the back of a date-stone and the last one is (Al-qitmir) which is the thin membrane over the date-stone. Allah says: '…Do they have any share of what He possesses? If they did, they would not give away so much as the groove of a date stone.' (an-Nisa’: 53).

Allah also gives examples of the heavens like the crescent. He says about the small crescent: '…And (as for) the moon, We have ordained for it stages till it becomes again as an old dry palm branch.' (Ya Sin: 39) Date palms have branches, along with stalks that support these branches. The date stalk is upright and straight when young, but as it grows older, it bends. Allah likens the crescent in the sky to a tangible thing on earth:, '…as an old dry palm branch…' (Ya Sin: 39). Arabs used to use many metaphors derived from their environment that not all people might have noticed. For instance, an Arab poet said:

---

(1) Al-Bukhari

The light of a small moon I was observing vanished,

As if it was my clipped fingernail that I cut.

Thus, Allah illustrates abstract ideas by referring to material examples from the environment to make the meaning both more meaningful and more accessible. When you eat a date, you do not notice Al-fatil which indicates that it is a negligible thing. The same holds true for an-naqir and Al-qitmir.

Therefore, our Lord adduces examples from the seed of the date; in a different context, He cites examples from palm trees and their life cycle to make another meaning clearer and more meaningful to us: '… and none shall be wronged as much as the husk of a date stone.' (an-Nisa’: 49) Then, Allah says:

ٱنظُرۡ كَيۡفَ يَفۡتَرُونَ عَلَى ٱللَّهِ ٱلۡكَذِبَۖ وَكَفَىٰ بِهِۦٓ إِثۡمٗا مُّبِينًا ٥٠

See how they invent lies about God, this in itself is a flagrant sin! [50] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 50)

The command 'see' in the verse is addressed to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him as well as to his followers. We explained previously that Jews praised themselves and deliberately lied when they said, 'We are the sons of Allah and His beloved ones.' (al-Ma‘ida: 18) And 'None shall enter the garden (or paradise) except he who is a Jew or a Christian.' (al-Baqara: 111)

The verse says: 'See how they invent lies about Allah. This in itself is a flagrant sin!' (an-Nisa’: 50) The sin is described as 'flagrant' because a person may lie to another person, and the person may believe it; however, lying to Allah is utter impudence! This is why Allah says: '…This in itself is a flagrant sin!' (an-Nisa’: 50)

Lying in general is a sin, but lying to Allah is a flagrant sin; and it does not avail the person in the slightest. The following verse says:

أَلَمۡ تَرَ إِلَى ٱلَّذِينَ أُوتُواْ نَصِيبٗا مِّنَ ٱلۡكِتَٰبِ يُؤۡمِنُونَ بِٱلۡجِبۡتِ وَٱلطَّٰغُوتِ
وَيَقُولُونَ لِلَّذِينَ كَفَرُواْ هَٰٓؤُلَآءِ أَهۡدَىٰ مِنَ ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُواْ سَبِيلًا ٥١

Do you not see how those given a share of the Scripture, [evidently] now believe in idols and evil powers? They say of the disbelievers, ‘They are more rightly guided than the believers’ [51] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 51)

The verse explains that they were given the Scripture which indicates a connection to the heavens, the Messengers of Allah and the divine Books revealed to the messengers who were commissioned to relay the divinely revealed way of life to mankind. If they did not have such a connection, their claim would have been plausible due to the absence of the Divine Revelation for a while. However, they were given Scripture, and one of the fundamental functions of Heavenly Books is to connect the Creator with His creation. This bond between the creation and Creator fosters the aptitudes and abilities of the created beings because without this bond they are without the means and needed help for matters over which one has no control. If one does not have a God, to whom he can resort when he exhausts all available means, he will collapse and may even commit suicide! On the other hand, a believer cares less about causes since he is bonded with the Creator of causes.

The belief in Allah gives person strength and provides a firm basis for a believer so that no matter how much he fails to control the different factors in his life, he remembers the Creator of all factors and causes. When one remembers the Creator of all the causes, he will find the horizons expand before him. People who commit suicide have been lost in their sufferings. A believer, on the other hand, turns to Allah during harsh times, and He, thus, grants him relief.

When a person turns to the Creator of all causes at the time he loses control over the worldly causes, he relishes the strength of belief from an unexpected source. Once one invokes his Lord, he will find tranquillity because you he has connected his existence to his creator. He has control over some aspects of his existence and does not have control over others. The person's body will testify against him on the Day of Judgment. A person's legs, skin and all other faculties will testify against him since he has control over them in the worldly life, and they were subservient to his will. I may tell my hand to do something, and my leg to do something, and my tongue to offend this person. Allah has subdued all faculties to a person's will in the worldly life. However, on the Day of Judgment, they will testify against him. Allah says: 'And they shall say to their skin, ‘Why have you borne witness against us?’ They shall say, ‘Allah Who makes everything speak has made us speak, and He created you at first, and to Him you shall be brought back.’ (Fussilat: 21)

Our faculties will tell us on the Day of Judgment, 'You had control over us in the worldly life and forced us to do things we hated. Now we shall testify against you.' The faculties disclose their secrets because on the Day of Judgment all sovereignty belongs to Allah, the One, the Prevailing. He says: 'To whom belongs the kingdom this day? To Allah, the One, the Subduer (of all).' (Ghafir: 16)

The Scripture is the first bond between the Creator and created beings. When a created being is bonded to His Creator, he will face every event in his life confidently, and Allah will endow him with happiness and joy. We have to reflect on the creed-related scenarios when we read the Quran. For instance, we know that when Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him tried to save the Israelites from the Pharaoh and flee out of Egypt, the Pharaoh and his soldiers found out and pursued them. Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him and his followers reached the sea. The enemy was behind them, and the sea before them. The followers of Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him evaluated the situation based on worldly criterion. Allah says: 'So, when the two hosts saw each other, the companions of Musa (Moses) cried out, "Most surely we are being overtaken!"' (ash-Shu'ara’: 61) Can anyone question this statement? No, it seemed to be the plain truth for such a situation. Why did Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him remark differently? Allah says: 'He said, "By no means. Surely, my Lord is with me. He will show me a way out."' (ash-Shu'ara’: 62) He considered his firm faith in the Creator of all causes.

Can any one question the truth of his statement? No, no one can because he did not make this statement based on worldly criterion. It was the fruit of his faith. He asserted, 'No, by no means. Surely, my Lord is with me.' Then, what did Allah say? He says: 'Strike the sea with your staff…' (ash-Shu'ara’: 63). Allah did not command Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him to turn back, but to attack them and try to defeat them. Rather, He commanded him to strike the sea with his staff! Allah assisted him with a miracle beyond human abilities to teach us that He can cause action and its opposite, and none of the creation is capable of that. Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him knew the liquid nature of water, but obeyed his Lord and struck the sea with his staff. The verse continues: 'Thereupon it parted and every part looked like a huge mound.' (ash-Shu'ara': 63) The mound is solid, whereas water is fluid. How could water become a mound? When Allah commanded Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him to strike the sea with his staff, He wanted him to utilise the available means so that he would be reassured from a human standpoint. Allah says: 'And leave the sea intervening. Surely they are a host that who shall be drowned.' (ad-Dukhan: 24) Allah commanded him to leave the sea while it was still because He intended to drown and destroy them with the very means He used to save Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him and his followers.

Back to our main verse; Allah says: 'Do you not see how those given a share of the Scripture [evidently] now believe in idols and evil powers? They say of the disbelievers, "They are more rightly guided than the believers."' (an-Nisa': 51)

After the battle of Uhud, Huyayy ibn Akhtab, Ka‘b ibn Al-Ashraf, Ibn Abu Al-Haqiq and Abu Rafi', who were the chief leaders of the Jews at that time, took seventy other Jews, and went to the people of Mecca and violated the covenant they had forged with Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Their leader Ka‘b ibn Al-Ashraf went to Abu Sufyan and said to him, 'We want to make an agreement to stand against Muhammad.' Abu Sufyan said, 'You are among the People of the Book and you have your scripture. You believe in God, and a Prophet of Allah had been sent to you, but we experienced none of that. Muhammad says that he is a Messenger of Allah, communicating a Divine Message and Scripture. You are connected. How could we not be sure that you are siding by him and trying to trick us! We do not trust you unless you come before our deities, practise our rituals and prostrate yourselves before them.'

Al-Jibt and At-Taghut, translated as idols and false gods respectively, were two idols of Quraysh. The Jews who had the Torah and had been granted a share of the Book went to them in submission. Furthermore, Al-Jibt is everyone who preaches for a god other than Allah, whether he is a devil, a priest or a magician. At-Taghut refers to everyone who transgresses; in Arabic language, it is an intensive form in such a degree that the one who is so described is not just a transgressor, but a tyrant as well. The more you unrightfully obey At-Taghut, the more cruel and oppressive he becomes. Whether Al-Jibt and At-Taghut were two idols or two deities worshipped by people or not, we should learn that a delegation of Jews prostrated before them so that the Quraysh would believe that they were doing so to antagonise Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

In this regard, Ka‘b ibn Al-Ashraf asked Abu Sufyan, 'For what do you blame Muhammad?’ He answered, 'He abandoned the religion of his ancestors, cut off the ties of kinship and fled to Medina. And we follow quite an opposite path. We provide pilgrims with water, serve our guests generously, set captives free, uphold the ties of kinship, tend to the Sacred Mosque and perform the Tawaf (walking around the Ka'ba).' Abu Sufyan continued to exalt the deeds of the Quraysh. Driven by their enmity to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him those who were granted a share of the Book said to Abu Sufyan and his people, 'You are more righteous and more rightly guided than Muhammad.'

Our Lord Glorified is He explains this point to this effect: O, Muhammad, be leery of their inconsistent and contradictory acts. Despite that they were granted a share of the Book, their enmity to you, their opposition to your religion and the light that you have brought forth has made them forget this share of the Book and believe in Al-Jibt and At-Taghut (idols and false gods). It is those same people who, in the past, used to tell Arab nomads, 'There will come a prophet, and we will follow him. We together will kill you just like the people of 'Ad and the City of Iram.' Astonishingly enough, they tended to believe in idols and false gods. Hence, do such people really maintain true religion and faith?

The True Lord Glorified is He intends to comfort and assure Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that they have been deprived from the Support of Heaven (Allah's Help). Thus, if he experiences a conflict or disagreement with them, he should be reassured that Allah Glorified is He has rejected them since they have renounced the share of the Book they have been granted. So, he should not even think that they truly belong to the Book.

The True Lord Glorified is He further assures His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that He Glorified is He has given up on these people, saying to the effect that He will surely support him (Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him). Therefore, he must not be deceived by their possessions, wealth or knowledge. All of these things will eventually vanish. They no longer enjoy their high status as they have been separated from Heaven. Their association of partners with Allah Glorified is He has controlled and misguided them. They have thus antagonised the prophet and joined the side of the infidels against whom they used to beseech Allah Glorified is He for victory with the coming of Prophet Muhammad's peace and blessings be upon him Message. They have sacrificed all this to follow their own desires and abandoned their faith. The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted then says:

أُوْلَٰٓئِكَ ٱلَّذِينَ لَعَنَهُمُ ٱللَّهُۖ وَمَن يَلۡعَنِ ٱللَّهُ فَلَن تَجِدَ لَهُۥ نَصِيرًا ﴿٥٢﴾

Those are the ones God has rejected: you [Prophet] will not find anyone to help those God has rejected [52] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 52)

The word ulaa'ika is an Arabic demonstrative pronoun translated in this verse as 'those', and it is composed of ulaa, which is used in the plural form and the letter kaf, which is another pronoun intended to address Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. We, Muslims, are included in this pronoun originally related to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Thus, 'those' refers to the people who have been granted a share of the Book and, nevertheless, have believed in idols and false gods along with saying to infidels that they are more righteous and better guided than those who believe. Alternatively, 'those' may refer to Jews and those who associate partners with Allah, or it could be taken as a reference to all of them in this verse: 'Those are the ones Allah [God] has rejected…' (an-Nisa': 52). Rejection can take the form of 'driving out', 'shaming' or 'destroying.'

But how does Allah Glorified is He disgrace and demean infidels? This is evident when you see that nowadays Islam spreads more and more in the world, while they (infidels) are losing both momentum and land. 'Do they [who deny the Truth] not see how We come to [their] land and shrink its borders?…' (ar-Ra‘d: 41)

'Those are the ones Allah [God] has rejected…' (an-Nisa’: 52). Thus, the one who rejects is Allah. When the one who rejects is equal to the one who is rejected, the latter may find someone else to help him mitigate the effects of this rejection. But when the one who rejects is Allah Glorified is He, the one who is rejected will never find anyone who can support him. And '…he whom Allah rejects…' (an-Nisa’: 52) means that the one whom our Lord Glorified is He drives away,’...never will you [Muhammad] find for him a helper.' (an-Nisa’: 52) Since the True Lord Glorified is He has driven him away, He will make everyone abandon him for whatever reasons so that no one would support him: 'Those are the ones Allah [God] has rejected, and he whom Allah rejects never will you [Muhammad] find for him a helper.' (an-Nisa’: 52) Afterwards, the True Lord Glorified is He says:

أَمْ لَهُمْ نَصِيبٌ مِّنَ ٱلْمُلْكِ فَإِذًا لَّا يُؤْتُونَ ٱلنَّاسَ نَقِيرًا ﴿٥٣﴾

Do they have any share of what He possesses? If they did they would not give away so much as the groove of a date stone [53] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 53)

What is the meaning of this verse: 'Do they have any share of what He possesses? If they did, they would not give away so much as the groove of a date stone.'? (an-Nisa’: 53)

Allah describes these people as being extremely stingy. This means that they in fact do not possess the world, and nor do they possess what Allah Glorified is He has. Dominion, in reality, belongs solely to Allah Glorified is He; He gives it to whomever He wills and removes it from whomever He wills. However, if they were granted the possessions of the world and the Dominion of Allah Glorified is He they would keep it to themselves and share it with no one. Allah Glorified is He elucidates this when He says in the following verse: 'Say [to the disbelievers], "If you possessed the very stores of my Lord’s Bounty, you would hold them back for fear of spending. Man is ever stingy.' (al-Isra’: 100) They are addressed in this verse to the effect that they are so afraid of spending lest their wealth would decrease. If they thus take possession of the stores of our Lord Glorified is He they will believe that when they give away some of them to others, they will diminish. What I want to say here is that these people, whether they are the infidels of the Quraysh or the chiefs of the Jews, were most keen to maintain their status and safeguard their fortunes, while Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him came to treat all people on equal terms. So, who would be grieved and disappointed due to the coming of the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him? Certainly, it is those who used to have mastery over others since they did not want people to be equal. Furthermore, they did no good to their followers through their mastery. If they had possession of fortunes and dominion, they would not have given people the groove of a date stone as man, by nature, does not give up tyranny since this tyranny is the source of his mastery and ascendancy over others. As long as he enjoys this high status and has authority over others, man will not pay attention to the essence of faith. It is not enough to enjoy prosperity and authority for some time; more importantly, they must maintain this prosperity and authority all the time. One can attain the pleasures of life as long as he lives in this world, but he is destined to live for only a certain period of time. Moreover, the whole life will come to end. Hence, the true prosperity and bliss exists in the Afterlife: 'Neither failing, nor forbidden' (al-Waqi'a: 33). They are further addressed, 'While you are keen to preserve this dominion, fortunes and social distinction, are you prepared to give others some of your pleasures and bounty so that you would have an excuse for your desire to retain wealth and status?' Why do they then want our Lord Glorified is He to continue conferring His Bounty upon them even though they are so stingy? Indeed, Allah Glorified is He will never grant such a bounty to them forever.

In this context, the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted says in the chapter of al-Fajr: [The nature of] man is that, when his Lord tries him through honour and blessings, he says, "My Lord has honoured me", but when He tries him through the restriction of his provisions, he says, "My Lord has humiliated me.' (al-Fajr: 15-16)

Thus, the one who enjoys Allah's Blessings says, 'My Lord has honoured me', while the one who has not been endowed with any of Allah's Blessings says, 'My Lord has humiliated me.' The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted comments on the two cases by saying: 'No, indeed!' (al-Fajr: 17) This means that both parties are liars. The former is a liar because he says that the blessings given to him by Allah is proof of his being honoured, while the latter is a liar too because he says that his denial of blessings by Allah Glorified is He is an indication of his being disgraced. This is a totally false and groundless conception. Allah's Bestowal of fortune to His slaves is not a sign of honouring or disgracing. Regarding this, the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted says: 'No, indeed! You [people] do not honour orphans.' (al-Fajr: 17) This means that you are in possession of wealth, but you are not generous towards orphans. This money will thus be evidence against you. It is not an issue of honour to you; rather, Allah will punish you for not using your money for good deeds. He the Glorified and Exalted adds: 'You do not urge one another to feed the poor.' (al-Fajr: 18)

How would fortune then be deemed as a sign of honouring, while it would bring you disaster? No; possession of such fortune, in this sense, is much better. When man has wealth and does not donate a part of it to the weak and the needy as decreed by Allah, this fortune becomes evil and a plague. In this regard, the True Lord Glorified is He says: '…Whatever they meanly withhold will be hung around their necks on the Day of Resurrection…' (Al-'Imran: 180).

If you greedily withhold what Allah has given you, your neck will be encircled with what you withhold on Doomsday. Hence, when the chains are tightly encircled around your neck, you will wish that you had not been stingy so as to stop the punishment. The True Lord Glorified is He in effect, puts forth the following questions in this verse: 'Why do they align themselves with the camp of infidelity and abandon a portion of the Book they have been granted? Why do they go to infidels and say, "You are better guided and more righteous than Muhammad", even though they know well through their portion of the Book that Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is truly the Messenger of Allah?

They were protecting their dominion in the same manner as the camp of infidels. We may learn that Jews in Medina were forming an affluent community, and they mainly depended on usury for their livelihood. They possessed castles and farms and possessed a vast amount of knowledge. They thus enjoyed all facets of mastery. However, when Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was sent by Allah, all the pillars of dominion and mastery were shaken; so, they were grieved and disappointed. Similarly, the infidels of Quraysh were the masters of the entire Arabian Peninsula. People of all tribes did not dare attack any of their trade caravans lest they would be punished by the Quraysh when they went to their land during the season of Hajj (pilgrimage). Hence, the Quraysh were used to this immense glory they experienced from being hosts of the Sacred House (Al-Ka'ba); this is the same house that Allah protected and caused defeat to all of those who tried to harm it by destroying their malicious plans. Regarding this, the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted tells us: 'Do you [Muhammad] not see how your Lord dealt with the army of the elephant? Did He not utterly confound their plans? He sent ranks of birds against them, pelting them with pellets of hard-baked clay. He made them [like] cropped stubble.' (al-Fil: 1-5)

The following verses explains why Allah destroyed that army. He the Glorified and Exalted says: '[He did this] to make the Quraysh feel secure, secure in their winter and summer journeys…' (Quraysh: 1-2). Had not Allah Glorified is He consecrated this House for people to worship Him, it would not have had any importance. Moreover, the Quraysh would not have had any power, and nor would they have been able to secure its winter and summer trade journeys. So, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'So, let them worship the Lord of this House…' (Quraysh: 3).

Allah is the One Who granted them mastery and power. He is the One Who provides as stated in the following verse: 'Who provides them with food to ward off hunger, safety to ward off fear.' (Quraysh: 4) Allah Glorified is He is also the One Who endowed them with the fruits of different plants and saved them from danger when their trade caravans went on journeys whether they were bound north or south.

'Do they have any share of what He possesses?...' (an-Nisa': 53) If they had this share, then 'they would not give people even the groove of a date stone.' That is to say that they would not give people even a tiny bit of what they own. Then, the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted says:

أَمْ يَحْسُدُونَ ٱلنَّاسَ عَلَىٰ مَآ ءَاتَىٰهُمُ ٱللَّهُ مِن فَضْلِهِۦ ۖ فَقَدْ ءَاتَيْنَآ
ءَالَ إِبْرَٰهِيمَ ٱلْكِتَٰبَ وَٱلْحِكْمَةَ وَءَاتَيْنَٰهُم مُّلْكًا عَظِيمًا ﴿٥٤﴾

Do they envy [other] people for the bounty God has granted them? We gave the descendants of Abraham the Scripture and wisdom, and We gave them a great kingdom [54] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 54)

Envy in this verse is directed to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him since our Lord Glorified is He had chosen him for His Message. Some people at the time of the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him did likewise and said, as narrated by the Quran: ‘Why was this Quran not sent down to a distinguished man from either of the two cities? [Mecca and Ta'if]’ (*az-Zukhruf:*31)

Thus, the Quran was acceptable from their perspective, but what grieved them was that it had been revealed to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. We can say that these people are quite ignorant. They are very similar to those who once said, as related by the Quran: '… "Allah [God], if this really is the Truth from You, then rain stones on us from the heavens"...' (al-Anfal: 32).

They wished to die, being killed by stones raining hard from the sky since they did not want to follow the Truth. This is complete idiocy and ignorance based on unfounded bigotry. The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted giving them the following response: 'Are they the ones who share out your Lord’s Grace? We are the Ones Who give them their share of livelihood…' (*az-Zukhruf:*32) .

Allah asserts that He chooses to bestow His Grace on whomever He wills. Why then do they envy others? They envy people because Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him has come for their guidance. Had they fairly and justly received what Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him brought forth, they would have found that his teachings aim to help man achieve happiness and that whoever follows them will lead a good life. Those who had been given knowledge of the Book by Allah Glorified is He were supposed to foretell the good news about the advent of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. What had been revealed to them made it incumbent for them to be the first to believe in him, but they did not. Rather, they denied the Truth and barred others from his path, siding with the infidel idolaters and claiming that they were more righteous and better guided than Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

When the True Lord Glorified is He confers special privileges upon some of His creatures, He intends the fruits of these special privileges to benefit other created beings. We know that every created being has certain unique talents. If every created being shares his talents with others, they will treat him on equal footing. Thus, they exchange talents for the interest of all.

These people were granted a share of knowledge by Allah, but they kept it for themselves, refusing to benefit others. This might have been acceptable if this knowledge had pertained only to their own lives, but it was associated with their relationship with Allah Glorified is He. That is to say that they represent the people of the Book who know quite well the Path of Allah and are well acquainted with the procession of His Messengers. The True Lord Glorified is He in effect, intends to tell them these words, 'You have been granted a share of the Book, but you have not behaved in a good way reflecting this share. Furthermore, if you were in possession of My Dominion, you would not duly care for it, nor would you give anyone the tiniest part of it, even if it were the groove of a date stone.' Therefore, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'Do they have any share of what He possesses? If they did, they would not give away so much as the groove of a date stone.' (an-Nisa': 53)

Thus, they are not open-handed either concerning morals and values or material objects. Since they are too stingy to transfer their values to others, it is only common sense for them to be so stingy as far as material things are concerned. Hence, they have become devoid of any goodness.

The True Lord Glorified is He in effect, further explains this point, 'Since these people have been given a share of the Book that enables them to recognise the attributes of the coming Messenger (Muhammad) who is the seal of the prophets, what has then precluded them from believing in and supporting him? Undoubtedly, it is envy that has pushed them to do so even though Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him has come to confirm what they have been given. They have certainly envied Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Envy always comes from an unkind heart that is not pleased with the shares given by Allah Glorified is He to His slaves. Envy, as said, means to wish that a bounty given to someone would vanish. The opposite of envy is the desire to be given the same bounty that was granted to someone so that both of you can enjoy the same bounty. If you want a similar bounty from Allah Glorified is He you have to ask Him. The True Lord Glorified is He says: 'What you have is bound to come to an end, whereas what Allah [God] has is everlasting…' (an-Nahl: 96)

So, people must not envy the bounties of others that Allah has given them. However, some people may envy and bear a grudge against others since rich people give them some of whatever they have. These enviers behave this way since they want to have the endowments of the rich people exclusively for themselves. If you have much money and you give some of it to people in need, others, who want to be the only recipients of your endowments and charity, may tell you, 'You are decreasing your fortune by giving these people a portion of it since what you have is ultimately limited. In contrast, the Bounty and Grace of the One Who grants all creatures is infinite and everlasting. He can thus give to you and others without His possessions decreasing.

Thus, a believer can wish to be granted with a bounty similar to one given to others without wishing them any harm or loss since he knows that Allah's Gifts are not restricted to certain people. If Allah Glorified is He gives everyone what he asks for, this will not decrease what He possesses even as much as what decreases an ocean when a needle is dipped into it. Regarding this, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him narrates in a Qudsi Hadith that Allah Glorified and Exalted says: '…O, My servants, even if the first among you and the last among you and the whole human race of yours and that of jinn all stand in one plain ground and you were to ask Me and I confer upon every person what he asks for, it will not, in any way, cause any loss to Me (even less) than that which is caused to an ocean by dipping a needle in it…"(1)

'Do they envy [other] people for the bounty [prophethood given to Muhammad] Allah [God] has granted them?' (an-Nisa': 54) Envy as we have learnt means wishing that a bounty given to someone comes to an end and vanishes. This wishing means that you hate that someone be granted with a blessing. You would hate that someone else be granted with a blessing when you are rebellious against the One Who confers such a blessing upon this person.

(1) Related by Muslim in the section of the proscription of injustice. It is also related by Ahmad

The main error the envious person commits is to reject the fate ordained by Allah Glorified is He for His creatures. Then, he has got a heart burning with grudges, even before doing any harm to the envied person. For this reason, it is said that envy is the sin or crime whose punishment comes first, whereas punishments usually follow other crimes. Before the envious person embarks on envying others, he receives the punishment since his heart burns with spite and grudges. Someone may wonder what the fault is of the one who is envied. We may answer that by saying that Allah Glorified is He plagues some people with diseases that may harm others; envy harms people's health and fortune. Similarly, what is the fault or sin of a murdered person when the murderer points his gun at him and kills him? The gun, for instance, could be considered a gift given to man so as to defend himself and not to be used for aggression.

Suppose that Allah Glorified is He has created in man something that makes him hate the blessings granted to others. Why does man not say the following relieving words whenever he sees a person enjoy good things, 'This is Allah's Will. There is no power but with Allah' (al-Kahf: 39). Thus, if you combine the gifts granted to other people with such words, you will safeguard your heart from envy and spite. Once you utter this phrase when seeing the blessings gifted to some people, you immediately recall that those people have not granted these blessings to themselves, but it is our Lord Glorified is He Who has conferred such blessings upon them. Allah Glorified is He is capable of giving whatever bounty He wills. Envying others could be practised by some people, but the one who feels envy in his heart and wants to eliminate it must feel certain that Allah Glorified is He controls everything. Once this person is convinced that Allah Glorified is He controls everything, he protects himself from being an envier and protects the bounty given to others as well. In this context, the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted says: 'and from the evil of the envier when he envies.' (al-Falaq: 5)

Thus, it is possible that the heart of anyone of us may bear a grudge against someone else due to the blessings he enjoys. This may accordingly cause envy. Therefore, every one of us must keep himself away from grudges and protect his heart from succumbing to the temptation of envy. We may come to realise that envy causes a chemical change in the structure of man. This chemical change is behind man's suffering. One may think that such chemical tensions caused by jealousy regarding others' possessions could result in reactions that might release radiation striking the envied person and killing him. (This hypothesis is a mere attempt to understand this verse): 'And from the evil of the envier when he envies.' (al-Falaq: 5)

Though you may ask Allah to protect you from the harm of an envier, you may ultimately be hurt. Your supplication to Allah Glorified is He to safeguard you from this man's evil means that it has already hurt you. In such a case, you must voice the following words which are again a part of a verse in the chapter of al-Baqara: 'We belong to Allah and unto Him we shall return.' (al-Baqara: 156) You must be assured that it is intended for your good. Thus, if envy causes harm to a blessing you possess, be certain that there is something good in this calamity. Furthermore, if an envious person harms you regarding a gift given to you by Allah Glorified is He know then for certain that the real harm that may befall you is to be deprived from Allah's Reward in event that you suffer depression at the loss of such a gift. Hence, when someone is stricken with a misfortune, he should say, 'We belong to Allah, and unto Him we shall return. O, Allah, you are my Lord and you intend to grant me good things since you have created me to lead a good life. However, sometimes I cannot comprehend the goodness in everything happening to me.'

If a Muslim deals with this situation like this, Allah afterwards demonstrates to him that such a misfortune would turn to be in his interest. For instance, this misfortune may be the death of one of his children. In this case, he may in effect say, 'I know nothing about the unseen. Could it have been possible that the child who has passed away was going to lure me into losing my faith, stealing or accepting a personal bribe? It may have been that Allah Glorified is He has taken him away from me and protected me from such an evil. Instead, the misfortune may be the removal of a blessing such as wealth or power, etc. 'in which case, the inflicted Muslim may say, 'Such a blessing could have caused me to be a wrongdoer, a transgressor or a tyrant. My Lord says to me that if I were to fall sick, I might be more modest.' Accordingly, the one who suffers a calamity must expect good things and put his trust in Allah Glorified is He by saying, and something good must come from this calamity.' However, someone may say that we should always recite these verses: 'Say, I seek refuge in the Lord of the dawn, from the evil of that which He has created, and from the evil of darkness when it overspreads, and from the evil of those who blow upon the knots of mutual relationships to undo them, and from the evil of the envier when he envies.' (al-Falaq: 1-5)

Why then does Allah not protect us from the evil of enviers who continue to harm us with their envy? We may respond to such a question by saying that you did not understand the meaning of this verse: 'and from the evil of the envier when he envies.' (al-Falaq: 5). You think it means that the envy of the jealous person will not harm you if you repeat this verse. No, this is not the case since his envy may still harm you, but you have to know that Allah has decreed such harm for a certain purpose. You must accordingly say, 'My Lord, you have ordained that this misfortune to happen to me since you intend to grant me a good thing.' If you treat the situation this way, then you will definitely be protected from evils.

Nowadays, in our world, we see that the more humanity progresses in knowledge and science, the more Allah reveals to us His signs in the universe, and the more He uncovers to us the secrets of existence which provide us with many explanations. For instance, consider those who manufacture weapons of mass destruction. We may know that the smaller and subtler weapons are, even to the extent of becoming invisible, the more violent and destructive they tend to be. Modern weapons are extensively different from older ones. During earlier times, man used to use stones to hit his enemies, and then guns until we reached the stage of the atomic bomb which is much more destructive than all of the old weapons combined and whose tiniest part that may equal a pin head, could easily kill anyone. We also see that most of the new weapons function by means of radiation which does not have mass, but it has radioparency. We may hear physicians saying that they perform operations via radiation, without spilling a drop of blood. A good example of this is the use of laser rays. Therefore, the subtler the tool is, the more effective it tends to be.

The following example illustrates the following point. Suppose you want to build a palace in the wilderness, and a friend passed by you and asked, 'Why have you not made iron bars for the windows of the first floor?' You may reply, 'Why should I do so?' He may then answer: 'Because there are wolves and lions in the area. So you should use iron bars to keep them out.' Afterwards, another friend may pass by and say: 'The spaces between the iron bars are too wide, and there are many snakes around here.' In which case, you may narrow the spaces between the bars. A third visitor may pass by and say: 'There are many gnats that bite and carry microbes.' Hearing this, you may place screens in front of the windows.

Thus, we see that the subtler the enemy is, the more destructive it tends to be, and the more cautious you need to be. We may realise that since microbes are minute and cannot be seen by the naked eye, they are capable of destroying people. If these organisms had been larger, it may have been easier for man to protect himself against them. However, when they reach this level of minuteness, man fails to protect himself from them. The most lethal microbes are the ones that are too minute to be identified. Physicians sometimes admit that they know nothing about the viruses that cause certain diseases; this means that these viruses are too minute to be examined by microscopes. Why should then we rule out the possibility that there may be a speck of a microbe coming from an envious person who is jealous of anyone enjoying bounties granted by Allah. Their envy may be like laser beams that destroy whatever they hit. Why can we not assume that this may happen? We do the same thing nowadays when we focus laser rays on anything we target since we are well aware that laser beams are among the most destructive weapons of our time. So, why cannot we believe that chemical reactions agitated in an envier's heart could result in radiation that might hit the envied person and destroy him? We can say that radiation is a blessing that must be used for doing good things instead of using it to harm others. We may cite a similar example of someone who owns some money, but he becomes green with envy and holds grudges towards his opponents. Therefore, he may buy a pistol or a gun to kill one or some of them. He thus converts this thing which is a blessing into a tool of revenge. Such acts result from the agitation of the various instincts that control man's reactions.

Then, what kept Jews from believing in Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him even though he came confirming what they had been given by Allah Glorified is He? There is no doubt that they envied him for having such a bounty and looked at the Grace of delivering the Message of Allah Glorified is He as a privilege granted to the Messengers of Allah peace be upon them. Is this true? It is truly a privilege for the Messengers of Allah peace be upon them but it is at the same time a burdensome mission. People of all nations leave fortunes for their children as legacies, whereas prophets are not allowed to leave any possessions for their children (as they spend all of them for the Cause of Allah).

The prophets peace be upon them, were not sent by Allah Glorified is He to obtain social distinction or to be arrogant. Rather, they were given troublesome assignments. Jews wrongly viewed the power of religion given to them by Allah and used it as a tool for luxury and arrogance. What was their reaction when a messenger came to teach and guide them to the straight path? They grieved and felt disappointed because they had established for themselves a temporal authority and had not adhered to values. They were only interested in having authority and power. Thus, when a Messenger of God came to relieve them of this power, they said that they would not follow him. They envied Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him for delivering the Message of Allah Glorified is He believing that it was a privilege and a source of power granted to him. Why did they then envy Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him whereas Allah Glorified is He had given dominion and control to Prophet Ibrahim (Abraham), Prophet Dawud (David), Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) and Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon them? Why did they also feel envious solely due to the fact that Allah Glorified is He intended to honour the other branch of Ibrahim's (Abraham's) posterity, namely, Ismail (Ishmael) peace be upon him with prophethood?

Allah honoured the first branch that descended from Ishaq (Isaac) who was the father of Ya’qub (Jacob) who was the father of Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon them. Afterwards, Musa (Moses), Harun (Aaron), Dawud (David) and Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon them followed in the same lineage. All these descendants of Ishaq peace be upon him were honoured with prophethood. Why were they grieved and disappointed just because Allah Glorified is He honoured the second branch of Ibrahim's (Abraham's) posterity, namely Ismail (Ishmael) peace be upon him and sent Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him as a messenger?

Why did they not admit that Ismail (Ishmael) peace be upon him and his descendants came from the posterity of Ibrahim (Abraham) peace be upon him? Why did they further deem the Message and prophethood a privilege? Why did they not take into consideration how difficult and burdensome this task is for any of the Messengers of Allah peace be upon them? A messenger and his family must always be positive role models for the entire community. None of the members of a messenger's family gains benefits from such a mission. To further this point, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him says: 'We, prophets, bequeath nothing (to our offspring).'(1)

Moreover, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him barred his family from taking zakat (alms) from others. Furthermore, he says: 'Sadqa (mandatory charity) is not lawful for the family of Muhammad. These charities are but the impurities of people (which they wash off themselves).'(2) We thus see that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did not work for the benefit of himself or his children.

The True Lord Glorified is He then says: 'We gave the descendants of Ibrahim [Abraham] the Book and wisdom, and We gave them a great kingdom.' (an-Nisa': 54) Al-Kitab is translated to mean 'the Book' which is the Religion sent down from Heaven by Allah Glorified is He. Al-Ḥikma is translated to mean 'wisdom' which is the sayings voiced by a messenger that are intended to explain the Religion of Allah Glorified is He. In addition, Allah Glorified is He bestowed upon them a mighty dominion. Prophet Yusuf (Joseph) peace be upon him was in charge of the storehouses of Egypt and became the nation's governor. Dawud (David) and Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon them, were granted dominion in addition to prophethood. Therefore, there is dominion, and there is prophethood. Our Lord Glorified is He has granted Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him only prophethood, and not dominion. So, why did they envy him? Furthermore, what was their stance towards their prophets whom Allah Glorified is He granted both prophethood and dominion? The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted answers this question by saying:

فَمِنْهُم مَّنْ ءَامَنَ بِهِۦ وَمِنْهُم مَّن صَدَّ عَنْهُۚ وَكَفَىٰ بِجَهَنَّمَ سَعِيرًا ﴿٥٥﴾

but some of them believed in it and some turned away from it. Hell blazes fiercely enough [55] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 55)

If we consider Allah's Words: 'But some of them believed in it (or him)…' (an-Nisa': 55), we find that the pronoun 'it' in this verse may refer to the belief in the principles of the religions of Ibrahim (Abraham) peace be upon him and the messengers who followed him, whom Allah Glorified is He granted prophethood and kingdoms. 'Some of them' means that some of the people of the Book believed in Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him as referred to by the pronoun 'him' in this verse like 'Abdullah ibn Salam and Ka'b Al-Ahbaar Allah be pleased with them for instance. 'And some turned away from it…' (an-Nisa': 55) means that among them are those who disbelieved in the Path of Allah Glorified is He. As a result, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says afterwards: 'Hell blazes fiercely enough.' (an-Nisa': 55) This means that the result of turning away from the Path of Allah Glorified is He is the blazing and burning fire as a punishment for what they have done.

After the True Lord Glorified is He shows us the procession of messengers He sent to people at intervals, He reminds people of His Guidance. This Guidance is indeed the main core of the mission of Adam peace be upon him and his posterity as Allah Glorified is He says: '…Whoever follows My Guidance, when it comes to you [people], will not go astray nor fall into misery.' (Ta Ha: 123)

Adam peace be upon him conveyed his knowledge about life, about the Truth and about the Guidance of Allah to his offspring. However, Allah Glorified is He has decreed that sometimes His human creatures would be oblivious to his Guidance. The Guidance of Allah Glorified is He always disagrees with the absurd and transient desires of the human self. Yet, if you consider the reality of the Divine Guidance, you will realise that it allows man to satiate his desires but in a decent and exalted way. Allah Glorified is He illustrates this point when he says: '…They (the helpers in Medina) give them (the emigrants from Mecca) preference over themselves, even if they too are poor….' (al-Hashr: 9)

Everyone possesses a set of things that he needs. However, he may find a fellow believer who desperately needs some of these things. So, does he give preference over himself? Does he want him to be better than himself? No, he would rather give these small worldly things that have a short duration in this life so that he may be rewarded by Allah in the everlasting hereafter. In such a manner, this person satisfies his desire in an exalted way. Another example is the one who is ordered by Allah, Glorified is He to avert his eyes from what is unlawful. Apparently, it seems that a man's desire is suppressed, but in fact, man is prevented from having haram (impermissible) desires in this mortal life to be compensated by halal (permissible) desires in the everlasting hereafter. Then, which of these two is fond of beauty: the one who examines a beautiful woman's body with his eyes while she is walking or the one who turns his eyes away from her? The one who really appreciates beauty is the one who keeps his eyes away from women who are haram (impermissible) to him.

Religion only opposes the inclinations of the foolish self that craves and covets the immediate, passing desires even if they were trivial. Rather, religion encourages man to work for what follows wordly life, i.e. the Afterlife since it lasts forever and never perishes. As for worldly desires, you bear in mind that you either miss them by death or forcibly lose them in your lifetime. In the life to come, this will never happen.

Righteous people know quite well how to avail themselves of such an opportunity, while others are foolish enough to miss this offer. The True Lord Glorified is He explains to us that the one who indulges himself in the pursuit of instant passing pleasures is bound to regret it when he faces eternal torment in the Hereafter. This is the true failure. This world is a place of changes and inconstant factors. In this life, man is exposed to the fortunes of time; there is nothing immortal in this world because it is always in a state of great flux. As long as the world is in great flux, everything in it changes constantly. Since everything is bound to change, harm may one day befall the one who enjoys a pleasure or blessing today. Similarly, the one who is strong may become weak, whereas the one who is weak may become strong. Indeed, if the strong and the weak were to stay in the same state, no change would take place in this world.

Thus, people sometimes say to be wary of asking Allah to perfect His blessings on you. If blessings are perfected for someone in this life of great flux, this means that he may be awaiting death. The ultimate realisation of bounty is to rise to the highest point in this life, while you are still in this world of change. Will the blessings granted to man remain at the highest level forever? No, they will not. They have to decline. Therefore, do not be delighted when all your wishes are fulfilled since Allah Glorified is He explains that we have to think of this life as a temporary stay. People toil and suffer when they fail to determine their ultimate destination and focus on immediate goals.

It is not useful at all to grieve overly so the loss of beloved relatives and friends. Think about this matter from a logical standpoint. What is our ultimate destination? It is death and the return to our Creator Glorified is He. Should we be extremely sad when we return to the Creator Glorified is He? Rather, we should be immensely delighted since we are in this world always concerned with means and ways, whereas we will be in the Hereafter with the Creator of all means and ways. In this life, we enjoy blessings, but in the Afterlife we will be in the company of the Donor of these blessings Glorified is He. Then, what grieves you? You should only be grieved if you enjoy a blessing, but do not remember the Donor of this blessing Glorified is He. However, if you enjoy a blessing, along with remembering the Donor of this blessing Glorified is He, you will surely be pleased when ultimately returning to Him.

Since the ultimate purpose of human existence is to go back to the True Donor Who bestows blessings on His creation and to be in the company of His Majesty, why should anyone grieve then? It is sheer folly that some people do not treat Allah Glorified is He in the same way they treat each other.

Suppose that someone’s goal is to travel from Aswan to Cairo. Thus, Cairo is his final destination. Afterwards, someone comes and tells him, 'We will go on foot.' Another one suggests, 'I will find some good riding animals that we may use.' A third person says, 'I will bring a car.' A fourth person suggests, 'We should travel by plane.' A fifth one says, 'Let us travel by space shuttle.' Every means of transport that gets you to your destination is thus favourable and commendable. Since our ultimate destination is to go back to the True Lord Glorified is He, why should we be grieved if someone amongst us dies?

You should only feel sorry and grieve for yourself. When man dies after he has lived a life obeying Allah Glorified is He, he will be pleased with the Presence of the True Lord Who confers bounty upon His creation. Meanwhile, you are still attached to these temporary blessings. This person would indeed laugh at you for feeling sorry for him and would say, 'Look at this oblivious, naïve man. He wants me to stay in this world of means and ways and not to go back to the Creator of all means and ways.

We find that people who lament their beloved ones never see them in their sound dreams because the soul of the deceased person never visits the one who mourns his return to the Donor of blessings Glorified is He. People have to realise that the ultimate goal of existence is to live according to the means and ways created by the True Lord Glorified is He in this world, then to return to the True Lord in the Hereafter. Death is the vehicle that takes you from the means and ways of this life to the Creator of these means and ways. So, what is the cause of your grief then?

Allah Glorified is He always intends to give man all good things. Sometimes, He Glorified is He relieves man of the hardships of life and the sufferings that accompany success and failure. Some people may say, 'This person died when he was still young and did not fully enjoy the pleasures of life.' To such people we may say, 'Will the enjoyment of life pleasures be a good thing for him? You, man, have grown up, and you may have committed sins, while Allah Glorified is He has decreed to take this young person to protect him from being exposed to such a bitter experience.' Think carefully of this significant point.

Companion Al-Harith ibn Malik Al-Ansari Allah be pleased by him narrated that he once passed Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him who asked him, 'How have you found yourself when you woke up today, Harith?' Al-Harith replied, 'I have found myself a true believer.' Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him then said, 'Do you know the meaning of your words? There should be evidence for such claims. What is the evidence of your being a true believer?' Al-Harith replied, 'My soul has lost interest in the pleasures of this life. Thus, I stay up most of the night (in worship) and fast for the whole day (as an act of worship too) as if I am seeing the Throne of my Lord prominent before me. I also feel as if I look at the people of paradise exchanging visits and the people of the fire crying and suffering.' The Prophet peace and blessings be upon him then concluded, 'Harith, you have definitely learned the essence of faith. So, adhere to it.' He repeated this statement three times.(1)

We should also follow the example of Companion Hudhayfa Allah be pleased with him when Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him once asked him, 'How are you today?' (That is to say, 'how is your faith today?') Hudhayfa replied, 'Messenger of Allah, my soul has lost interest in the pleasures of this life. Thus, gold and stone have become equal to me.' (That is to say, 'this is how I see the world now.') Hudhayfa then added, 'I feel as if the people of paradise are enjoying (their rewards) and the people of the fire being punished (because of their disbelief and sins).'

Therefore, we find that the Companion Harith Allah be pleased with him always remembered the image of the Hereafter. When he led his life in a good way, the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him said, 'You definitely have learned the essence of Faith. So, adhere to it.'

When the True Lord Glorified is He mentions various (religious) rulings, He also tells us about those who revolt and rebel against these rulings. He Glorified is He then reminds us of paradise and the fire. He Glorified is He says:

إِنَّ ٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُواْ بِـَٔايَٰتِنَا سَوۡفَ نُصۡلِيهِمۡ نَارٗا كُلَّمَا نَضِجَتۡ جُلُودُهُم بَدَّلۡنَٰهُمۡ
جُلُودًا غَيۡرَهَا لِيَذُوقُواْ ٱلۡعَذَابَۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ عَزِيزًا حَكِيمٗا ٥٦

We shall send those who reject Our revelations to the Fire. When their skins have been burned away, We shall replace them with new ones so that they may continue to feel the pain: God is mighty and wise [56] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 56)

The Arabic verb nuslihim is translated in this verse as 'burn (them) in the Fire' and is derived from 'istila', or sending to the fire. Someone may say that when man is exposed to the fire of this world, he actually burns and turns into nothing. All pain will then come to end. We should note that the True Lord Glorified is He says regarding this: '…When their skin has been burnt away,

---

(1) Related by At-Tabrani

We shall replace it with a new one so that they may continue to feel the pain…' (an-Nisa': 56). Therefore, suffering and torment in the fire of the Hereafter is not like that experienced by the worldly fire because fire in our world burns for a while, and then it is over. By contrast, the fire of the Hereafter is an eternal suffering and torment that never stops. Hence, once the skin is burnt, a new one replaces it. However, is this skin identical to the original one or different from it? Consider this part of the verse once again: '…When their skin has been burnt away, We shall replace it with a new one so that they may continue to feel the pain…' (an-Nisa': 56) Is the new skin identical to the first one? Yes, they are of the same kind. Let me clarify this point by saying if you have a ring and you say that you are going to make another one from this same ring. This means that the material of the two rings is the same. Then, is the torment intended for the skin and body organs? Torment and suffering is always directed towards the conscious self. The evidence is as follows: when a man suffers from a tumour with oozing pus (an abscess for instance), he may not be able to endure pain. Then, once he sleeps, he will feel no pain. However, as soon as he wakes up, pain will start anew.

Thus, pain is not felt by the body organs themselves, but by the conscious self. This is quite true since modern medicine shows us that we can anaesthetize the conscious self so that when pain may occur, man does not feel it. Hence, the abscess can be opened with a lancet, while the person undergoing the operation does not feel any pain. So, torture has nothing to do with the skin and body organs. They are only conductors of pain and suffering, whereas the receiver of torture is the conscious self. This is why skin and organs will testify against us on the Day of Judgment. On this Day, skin and body organs will testify against man and be instruments for transmitting pain and suffering. Moreover, they will take pleasure in meting out pain to sinful souls.

These are Divine Procedures. Thus, do not be amazed at what the Quran tells us. The more knowledge and science progresses, the more it guides us to the signs of Allah in the universe. Nowadays we are capable of anaesthetizing the conscious self and splitting the body with lancets, while man feels no pain. Again, we learn that pain does not pertain to an organ itself, but rather to the conscious self. Thus, all the organs are instruments that communicate torturing pain to the conscious self, and they rejoice in undertaking such a role. This is similar to someone who has an abrasion. However, when he scratches his skin, he may bleed and be pleased with such rubbing.

Hence, this part of the verse: '…When their skin has been burnt away, We shall replace it with a new one so that they may continue to feel the pain…' (an-Nisa': 56) means that the skins is recurrently replaced by other skin that evolves from the same material and transmits pain and suffering to the conscious self.

'We shall send those who reject Our Revelations to the Fire. When their skin has been burnt away, We shall replace it with a new one so that they may continue to feel the pain...' (an-Nisa': 56). We know that the True Lord Glorified is He revealed a Book, namely the Quran, and made it a miracle and a way of life for people to follow. This is the key attribute of Islam (as compared with other religions). The way of life in Islam is the real miracle. Before Islam, every messenger had a way of life that differed from his miracle.

For instance, the way of life preached by Prophet Musa (Moses) peace be upon him is the Torah, whereas his miracle was the staff. As for 'Isa (Jesus) peace be upon him, his way of life is the Gospel, whereas his miracle was healing the blind and the lepers and bringing the dead back to life by Allah's Permission. Meanwhile, the miracle of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessing be upon him is the Quran because his religion is the final word from Allah Glorified is He to His creation till the end of this world. Hence, Allah Glorified is He has made the Way of Life preached by Prophet Muhammad peace be upon him his miracle too; therefore, it proves the truthfulness of the Way of Life at any given time. Thus, none of the followers of the previous messengers could say, 'The miracle of the messenger I follow is his way of life since all the miracles of the previous messengers were immense workings that came to an end as much as a burning matchstick turns into ashes.' So, some people witnessed these miracles at the time and that was it. However, a Muslim should take pride and boast that Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is the Messenger of Allah, that he is true and that this (the Quran) is his miracle. The miracle of Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is, indeed, eternal, whereas the miracles of other messengers peace be upon them, who came before him were experienced by those who witnessed them. Thus, the miracle of every messenger before Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was distinct from his way of life.

We realise that The Way of Life actualised by the Quran includes (religious) rulings. Rulings mean doing some things, while not doing others. These rulings have been quite clear since Allah Glorified is He revealed the Quran to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him till the Day of the Hour arrives (Doomsday). Whoever obeys and follows these rulings will be rewarded, while those who do not will be punished. All people are equal as far as adherence to these rulings is concerned till the Day of Judgment.

As for the signs of Allah in the universe, they do not change as time moves forward. People at the time of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would not have benefited if they had known these universal signs. Allah Glorified is He has concealed these signs in the Quran, giving only allusions here and there. The reason is that Arab minds were incapable of assimilating them at the time when the Message was revealed to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. If the Quran had included, for example, a verse that explicitly states that the earth is round, rotates and revolves around the sun, what, by Allah Glorified is He would the contemporaries of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him have said? Some people nowadays are questioning this fact. So, imagine the reaction of the contemporaries of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him if he had told them such a thing. They would have wholeheartedly disbelieved what he was preaching.

They used to benefit from the fact that the earth is round as much as a peasant or a nomad benefits from it presently. Similarly, those who have not studied electricity are now benefiting from this field through watching TV and using electric lights along with other applications without knowing the technical functioning details. Consider another example. When the sun shines over the world, water evaporates from the oceans, rivers and seas to form clouds. Then, rain falls from these clouds. All these phenomena are universal signs whose secrets have not been revealed by Allah Glorified is He except to the extent that human mind can comprehend them. Yet, Allah Glorified is He has left in his Book (the Quran) what always satisfies the aspirations of scientific research.

When we as Muslims learn about a new scientific discovery in the universe, we often say that the Quran has told us about such a thing. However, we should not say that the Quran has mentioned a certain fact before it is scientifically proved so that people would not question the verities of this miraculous Book. For example, Allah the Glorified and Exalted says: 'But they are denying what they cannot comprehend– its prophecy has yet to be fulfilled for them...' (Yunus: 39)

Had the Quran said that everything in the universe multiplies and has a positive and a negative part, a male and a female, would they have believed it? No, and the reason is that they learned about males and females among humans, animals and some plants such as palm trees. They did not know anything about procreation in many plants like wheat and corn and nor did they realise that the male part in corn is located in the corncob spike that is moved by the air so that pollen grains may drop and seeds may sprout. For this reason, we notice that intelligent farmers open corn plants a bit from above so that pollen grains can reach their targeted place. A farmer may open a corncob to find amid the lines of seeds a dead seed that does not have a thread. This means that this seed was not fertilised by pollen grains. Such a seed is called in the country, 'an aged tooth.’

Thus, all forms of multiplication must have male and female parts. So, our Lord the Glorified and Exalted says: 'Glory be to Him Who created all the pairs of things that the earth produces, as well as themselves and other things they do not know about.' (Ya Sin: 36) We first learned about males and females in humans and animals, and then we recognised them in plants. The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted mentions’..and other things they do not know about' (Ya Sin: 36) to include everything, like positive and negative charges in electricity. We have thus come to realise that every living organism has two parts: a male and a female. The more science makes progress, the more it becomes capable of explaining cosmic signs.

The True Lord Glorified is He is so Merciful to the followers of Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that He has not willed to make His Laws in the universe clear and explicit so that the human mind would not stand incapable of working them out, particularly the Book (the Quran) that initially addressed an illiterate ummah (Nation) that did not have any culture. Suppose that this Book is intended to address the contemporary world; there will be universal issues that our contemporary world knows nothing about. Had the Quran addressed these issues in an explicit manner, it would have turned people away from the religion. The Quran came as a Way of Life, whereas miracles came to support this Way of Life. Thus, Allah Glorified is He has not intended to turn miracles into an impediment that may keep people from pursuing His Way of Life. Nonetheless, He Glorified is He has left much room in His universe for the ambitions of the human mind, created by Him, to look into this vast universe created by Him too. Every single day, the human mind makes new discoveries. Such discoveries do not come from nowhere; rather, they are based on things that actually exist.

If you investigate the origin of the most subtle discoveries of science achieved by the contemporary mind and their size in comparison to the whole universe, you will ultimately get back to the basic facts. Intellects have created or invented nothing new. They have just thought of something which already exists and deduced a non-existing proposition from the premises of this existing thing. The non-existing proposition then becomes an existing premise so that someone else may come and use it to deduce and infer something new. Thus, scientists tend to be well-behaved and modest when they say they have discovered a given thing since it already exists.

The True Lord Glorified is He gives us examples to help us understand matters. When we learned geometry, for instance, we knew that geometry is composed of theories from number one to infinity. When a teacher tries to prove theory number one hundred, for example, he refers to theory number ninety nine. In turn, when a teacher proves theory number ninety nine, he refers to the one that came before it.

So, the proof of every theory depends on the preceding one. A conscious thinking mind that is capable of deduction and inference is the one who arranges the premises to make conclusions. People participate in everything in the universe. However, the mind that arranges and deduces thinks, and so do people, and one may think he has brought something new even though he has not actually done so. Rather, he has generated something new from what already exists. A good example is when a child is born to two parents. Have they created their child from nothing? No, the child has come through copulation. When we go back in sequence, we ultimately arrive to Adam peace be upon him. However, who created Adam? It is Allah Glorified is He.

Hence, axioms in the universe are the basis for all scientific progress, and they have been created by Allah Who has perfected everything. Every theory, no matter how complicated it is, originates based on an axiom. A good example of this is steam. How had steam been discovered before it was used as a source of energy to operate machines? One day someone noticed that the steam produced by the boiling water in a container caused the lid of a container to move upwards and downwards. Searching the secret behind this phenomenon, he found out that steam could be used as a driving force. This is how the age of steam power started. This person is quite intelligent in as much as he bases his discovery on an intuitive observation present in the universe. Therefore, do not be full of conceit and say that man via his intellect is the one who creates. Rather, you should say that man uses his intellect and makes earnest, organised efforts to discover Allah’s secrets in the universe.

Thus, when the human mind invents something new, we may tell this mind that it has not really invented something new, but it has only discovered such a thing. The True Lord Glorified is He lets people discover the secrets of the universe from time to time. This is evidenced when he says: 'We shall show them Our signs in every region of the earth and in themselves, until it becomes clear to them that this is the Truth...' (Fussilat: 53).

So, when humanity makes a new discovery, we tell them that this discovery is already mentioned in the Quran. Consequently, they will ask, 'How is it that the Quran, which was revealed fourteen centuries ago, refer to this discovery since it was addressed an illiterate ummah and was communicated through an unlettered Messenger?’ We say to such people, 'Yes, it is true that the Noble Quran refers to the recently discovered scientific facts fourteen centuries ago.' This point is even supported and proved definitively by the verse this very discussion, that is, the saying of Allah the Almighty '… When their skin has been burned away, We shall replace them with a new one…'.

We have previously explained how skin and sensations function. Regarding this, it is important to note that scientists had exerted great efforts to understand how humans' senses work. Some of them mistakenly believe that the human brain is the source of sensation since these are matters the brain is not involved with even though we are able to still sense them. This is proved by the fact that when someone approaches the front of someone's eyes and points his finger to poke any of them, that person will close his eyes before his finger even reaches it. This clearly means that man can feel things and matters without the intervention of the brain. Other groups of scholars yet hold the position that sensation occurs through the spinal cord and reflexive movement, in general, and the nervous endings under the skin, in particular. This is proved by the fact that when a person is given an injection, the pain of penetrating the skin will look like the sting of a bug, and there will be no pain at all.

Thus, the centre of sensation is the sensory nerve endings scattered on a human's skin. This fact is proved by this particular verse of the Quran in which Allah Glorified is He explains clearly that when the skin burns completely, there will be no sensation at all after that. That is why He the Almighty replaces their burnt skin with a new one so that they would continue to feel the severe punishment. Thus, the saying of Allah the Almighty '…When their skin has been burned away…' means that when their skins are burnt completely and entirely cease to feel pain, Allah the Almighty will replace them with new skin to perpetuate their torment since skin is the medium through which pain is transmitted to the conscious self. As such, the verse sheds light on a practical scientific topic. As a matter of fact, had the Quran addressed this topic directly and said: 'O, Children of Adam! Skin is the source of sensation. People would have understood naught.' That is why it the Quran left the matter for the human intellect to infer and deduce as it progresses and matures.

The saying of Allah the Almighty '… When their skin has been burnt away, We shall replace them with a new one so that they may continue to feel the pain…' clearly indicates that the chief purpose for replacing the skin that was burnt with a new one is to perpetuate the torment. He Glorified is He and then concludes the verse with His saying, '… Surely, Allah is Almighty and All-Wise.' The word Al-'Aziz, or the Almighty means the One Who is invincible and Who can defeat the entire creation, irrespective of what meticulous preparations they may have made. It is at this point that a disbeliever may say, 'We have taken pleasure in committing the sin for five minutes and in another instance for two hours. So, I can endure the pain until my skin burns away and then I will suffer nothing at all.' To this person, we give the following reply, 'The One Who tortures you is invincible, and thus He Glorified is He will perpetuate the torment for you by replacing your burnt skin with a new one. As well, He the Almighty is All-Wise and thus He Glorified is He does not want to torture you only for the sake of displaying or showing off His Might and Power. Rather, He the Almighty uses His Might in the light of His Justice.'

Having told us about the punishment and torture prepared for those who refused to have faith in all the Divine instructions and teachings, He Glorified is He did not forget to discuss the opposite case so that His Discourse would have addressed both purposes: that of those who are religiously committed and that of those who are deviant. He the Almighty says:

وَٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُواْ وَعَمِلُواْ ٱلصَّٰلِحَٰتِ سَنُدۡخِلُهُمۡ جَنَّٰتٖ تَجۡرِي مِن تَحۡتِهَا ٱلۡأَنۡهَٰرُ
خَٰلِدِينَ فِيهَآ أَبَدٗاۖ لَّهُمۡ فِيهَآ أَزۡوَٰجٞ مُّطَهَّرَةٞۖ وَنُدۡخِلُهُمۡ ظِلّٗا ظَلِيلٗا ٥٧

As for those who believe and do good deeds, We shall admit them into Gardens graced with flowing streams and there they will remain forever. They will have pure spouses there, and we shall admit them into cool refreshing shade [57] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 57)

In this verse, Allah Glorified is He sheds light on the reward prepared for those who, contrary to those mentioned in the previous verse, believe in Allah and all what Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him told them about. We know for certain that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is the last and seal of all the Prophets and Messengers and his ummah (followers of Islam) is thus the closest to the Day of Resurrection. Previous nations and people, since the creation of Adam, lived for long periods of time. Yet, we, Muslims, are the closest to the Day of Resurrection. That is why Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said, 'I and the Last Hour have been sent like this.' He joined the forefinger with the middle finger (to illustrate his point).(1)

(1) Muslim, Sahih

For this reason, Allah the Almighty did not use Sawfa, or will, which is an Arabic particle implying the existence of a time lag between two events, when describing the reward prepared for believers. On the other hand, He Glorified is He used it to refer to the punishment prepared for disbelievers. This is due to the fact that this particle refers to an action which is intended to take place after a long period of time. In addition, it may be viewed as an indication from Allah Glorified is He that He does not immediately afflict His punishment on disbelievers so as to give them time to repent. In truth, when Allah the Almighty informs us that the distance between doing good deeds and receiving the reward for Him in return is really short; this clearly points out that He Glorified is He wants to strongly encourage us to firmly adhere to His Obedience. The distance between you (O, Muslims) and the Garden is not remote; it is close. This is why He the Almighty says: '…We shall admit them into Gardens graced with flowing streams…'

The word jannah is the Arabic word that means 'Garden', and it is derived from Al-Jinn and As-Sitr which mean hiding and concealing. Al-Jannah is the garden whose trees veil and cover one who walks within. It is completely different from earthly gardens of flowers whose short flower plants can bring enjoyment only for man’s eyes. As for the heavenly Garden, it includes ever so tall and massive trees, to the extent that they hide the person who walks amongst them. In the same respect, it contains various and different kinds of sustenance. Therefore, it prevents you from looking at any other garden since it contains what is completely sufficient for you. Generally, if someone does not have what suffices his needs, he will long for whatever will meet them. However, the one who has what totally suffices his needs is not in need of anything else in the world. As a matter of fact, Allah Glorified is He gives us an example of something that is unknown to us now, but that we shall, due to His Will, witness it in the near future. We know full well that the Garden encompasses everything that a soul may ever wish for. In this regard, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him narrates for us the saying of Allah the Almighty in the Divine Hadith, 'I have prepared for My pious worshippers such things as no eye has ever seen, no ear has ever heard of and nobody has ever thought of. All that is reserved as well as all that you have seen is nothing.' Then he recited: "No soul knows what is kept hidden (in reserve) for them of joy as a reward for what they used to do." (as-Sajda: 17)'(1)

Due to the fact man knows about the universe in relation to his ability, Allah the Almighty upon describing the great reward prepared for believers in the Garden, says that it includes such things that eyes have never seen. It is taken for granted that a human's sight is limited. This is contrary to the sense of hearing which is wider in range than sight. This is because he will hear news from a particular person who sees it. As such, the series of a human's perception may be ordered as follows: sight comes in first place, and then hearing follows. Naturally, a human hears much more than what he sees. For example, one may visit Aswan and see it, but he might hear about the USA, and, thus, the range of hearing is broader and wider than that of seeing.

As for the saying of Allah the Almighty in the Qudsi Hadith narrated to us by Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him '…and nobody has ever thought of…' means that no one can actually imagine the reward prepared for believers in the Garden. This naturally leads us to the following question, 'How many descriptions are there for the Paradise?' The first is that it includes such things that eyes have never seen; the second is that in includes such things that no ear has ever heard of, which indicates that one is able to hear much more than he can see; the third is that it includes such things that nobody had ever thought of, which means that even imagination could not vividly catch the essence of the Garden. So, the question to be asked here is as long as Allah the Almighty will give us all this reward in the Garden, which words in the Arabic language would truly communicate the clear and exact meanings of this reward.

Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him tells us that no words can fulfil this task since the meaning has to be initially known before a word is coined for it. In truth, every word in the language has a particular meaning, or even various meanings. However, as long as paradise has not been seen, heard or even comprehended by any mind, there are no words that could express it. For this reason, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did not give full and complete descriptions for paradise; rather, he said that it would be such and such since there are no words in our language that could express these meanings both exactly and precisely. As a matter of fact, due to the fact that this Divine reward in paradise was not seen by any eye, heard by any ear, or even comprehended any mind, there are no words in human language that could depict or portray it for us. In this regard, Allah the Almighty gives us a striking example for the unimaginable reward He Glorified is He prepared for believers. In this example, He the Almighty chooses to draw a comparison between earthly rivers and those in Paradise. He Glorified is He states clearly that paradise includes rivers of water that do not alter, rivers of milk the taste whereof does not change and rivers of a delicious drink for those who partake of it, along with rivers of honey clarified and for them therein are every kind of fruit and protection from their Lord. (Muhammad: 15)

---

(1) Muslim, Sahih

We see rivers in this worldly life, but Allah the Almighty assures us that rivers in paradise will be completely different; He Glorified is He tells us that He will remove purities from it. The water of a given river may naturally stop moving and thus become still and corrupt. This is why He Glorified is He created the rivers of paradise in such a way that does not render their water corrupt. As such, He Glorified is He gives us an example with something known to us, but He explains that He will remove all impurities that we witness in the worldly life's rivers. Furthermore, the rivers of this world flow and run in cracks between two banks, and thus, they are totally different from the rivers in Paradise that flow, due to the Will of Allah, between no banks. You will also find rivers of milk the taste whereof never alters.

The Arabs used to take milk from camels and store it in leather canteens. Camels would then travel to grazing fields or to any other place. So, when an Arab nomad needed milk, he might not find any to drink except what he had previously stored in these canteens and whose taste has been altered and changed. For this reason, Allah the Almighty states clearly that the milk in the rivers of paradise will never change or alter since they are not like ones in this worldly life. He Glorified is He also states that paradise will contain rivers of wine which are completely different from those in this worldly life. These various points are definitively proved by the fact that He the Almighty in this aforementioned verse in the chapter of 'Muhammad' provides us with examples of how paradise will look. This is why He the Almighty describes the wine of the paradise, for example, in this particular verse of the chapter of 'Muhammad' as 'being delicious to those who drink.' As a matter of fact, many people do not delightfully drink wine in this world, which is a point proven by the fact that when someone drinks it in this world, he usually pours it in his mouth all at once. This is, of course, entirely different from the scenario of someone who tremendously enjoys drinking a glass of mango juice. The person drinking wine often drinks it in one shot to reduce the time he has to taste it due to its being bitter and acidic. In addition, wine of this worldly life covers and corrupts people's minds; therefore, it is completely different from that of the Hereafter, which never corrupts minds.

Thus, when Allah Glorified is He gives a parable of paradise, He Glorified is He simultaneously explains that it has no impurities. In the same manner of speaking, we find that there are various parables in this respect. For example, when an Arab nomad would find any small jujube tree in the desert, he used to consider it an oasis under which he could rest and enjoy its fruits. He thus used to reach out and avoid the thorns to pick the fruits. In certain cases, a thorn might hurt him. When he did not find any thorns in the tree, he would say that this tree was free of thorns. In the same way, Allah the Almighty emphatically and firmly affirms that paradise does not contain any of the impurities this world experiences.

He Glorified is He and then tells that there are rivers of purified honey in paradise. The Arabs used to gather honey from the mountains because bees used to make their hives in the cracks of mountains. Upon gathering it, they used to find sand and pebbles mixed with it. This is why Allah the Almighty tells us that He purified the honey of the paradise from all the impurities that could corrupt it. Having said that, the question to ask is the following: ' Allah the Almighty had already purified the honey of the Hereafter, so why did He Glorified is He clearly state that this is just a parable even though He confirmed doing so?' The main reason is that since no eye has ever seen, no ear has ever heard and no human mind has ever thought of the reward prepared for believers in paradise; all the words in the dictionaries of all human languages would fail to express or describe such a great blessing. However, Allah Glorified is He uses familiar examples, and gives us a vivid picture so as to enable us understand the reward He prepared for believers in paradise, exactly as He did when He gave us a striking example for how His Light illuminates the universe. In this respect, He Glorified is He clearly states that He is the Light of the heavens and the earth. The example of His light is like a niche within which is a lamp, the lamp is within glass and the glass as if it were a pearly [white] star lit from [the oil of] a blessed olive tree. (an-Nur: 35)

Therefore, He gives us a familiar example to more closely fathom the meaning in our minds since human languages do not include any words that could lend an adequate and sufficient explanation for this high and great reward prepared by Allah the Almighty for believers in paradise. This is why He Glorified is He when describing paradise, sometimes says that it includes trees 'from beneath which rivers flow', while other times He says that it includes trees 'beneath which rivers flow.' So, what is the difference between the two sentences? The difference is that the second sentence may mean that the rivers flow from another place and that they may be owned by another person who might prevent one from their water. This is why He Glorified is He wants in the first sentence to assure believers that their rivers in paradise flow directly from beneath their trees.

Allah the Almighty then states clearly that the dwellers of paradise will live therein forever. Concerning this point, He Glorified is He is addressing those who already enjoyed some of His Bounties in this worldly life and who also knew perfectly well that the pleasure of this world will definitively and surely come to an end. That is why He the Almighty clearly and plainly states that the blessings prepared for the believers in paradise are eternal and never ending.

In the same manner of speaking, He the Almighty gives us another example of one of the temporary pleasures of this worldly life, namely, wives. He Glorified is He plainly states that the believers in paradise will have Azwajun Mutahharah (pure spouses). Therefore, it is of great importance to know that when Allah the Almighty describes a plural noun, He uses the adjective in the form of plural, as well. This is clear in the following example when He the Almighty says that He ordered the jinn to obey Prophet Sulaiman (Solomon) peace be upon him and thus they made for him many items including Qudur Rasyat, or cooking-pots. (Saba': 13). However, concerning the state of wives in paradise, He Glorified is He did not put the adjective in the plural form; rather, He used it in the singular. What does this mean? This means that there may be discord and disagreement among man's various wives in this worldly life, but the matter will be completely different in paradise where a man's wives will be in total agreement with each other, along with it that in paradise there is no form of discord and disagreement. If someone asks, 'How could a woman accept that her husband would be married to another wife in the Hereafter?' The answer is quite evident in the fact that Allah the Almighty will remove any traces of ill-feeling in the breasts of the dwellers of Paradise. (al-A'raf: 43)

As such, this clearly means that even though a man will be married to various women in paradise, his wives will never cause him any annoyance. He will really like each one's extraordinary beauty and good manners. His wives in paradise will not suffer from any defects. Allah the Almighty as such, gives us a clear summary for all the pleasure that could possibly be attained with his wives in paradise.

He the Almighty finally concludes the verse with His saying: '… and We shall admit them into cool refreshing shade.' In Arabic, when one wants to emphasise a particular meaning, he uses a derivative from the same word repeatedly. For instance, a native Arabic speaker may say, 'Hadha Laylun A'lyaj', which means it is a very dark night. Similarly, when someone wants to lay emphasis on the range and value of a shade, he may describe it as Zhalieel, or dense. Therefore, what is definition of the term 'shade'? It is the withdrawal of sunlight from a particular place. It may also refer to the same place which sunlight never reaches, such as a cave.

People who live in the desert know perfectly well the expression Zhillan Zhaliala, or dense shade. Once one sees a tree in the desert, he hastens to sit under it and enjoy its shade. Truthfully speaking, the shade itself may be abounding like the air-conditioned tents people manufacture and use nowadays and are often made of two layers; the first is exposed to sunlight in such a way that enables it to absorb heat; the second layer, on the other hand, keeps the heat from penetrating into the tent. This particular design is called 'the double ceiling.' It is often found in high places since apartments in middle floors are naturally protected. However, apartments found on upper floors of a building, especially in warmer climates, are often swelteringly hot. For this reason, a two-layered ceiling is made for such apartments. In this manner, a shade may exist within another one.

However, this raises a question: 'Why does one enjoy sitting under the shade of a tree more than he would enjoy sitting under the shade of a wall?' The reason is that the shade of the wall is often composed of one layer. It is true that it protects us from the sunlight. However, it, unfortunately, blocks air. The case is completely different when one sits under the shade of a tree. It is taken for granted that the leaves of a tree are neatly organised, one above another, to the extent that one can see each of them lying under the shade of the one above it. Due to the fact that leaves are light and can easily be moved by air, they can protect one from the hot sunlight while allowing him to simultaneously enjoy the gentle and soft breeze. This is actually the precise meaning of the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Zhillan Zhaliala', or dense shade.

For this reason, when a poet once wanted to describe Ar-Rawadah, the place between Prophet Muhammad's peace and blessings be upon him pulpit and his grave, he said:

A valley abounding with trees protected us from the sweltering heat of the sun.
We sat under a tree and it was tender and kind to us as much as a mother is tender and kind towards her children.
The taste of its abounding shade is tastier than any drink a server could serve you.
It blocked the sunlight if it faced us and still allowed the breeze to reach us

The poet describes the situation of a man walking in the desert who then finds a garden of trees that kindly and lavishly provides him with abounding shade that prevents sunlight from hitting. Furthermore, he describes delicious water to drink and a soft breeze, as well as different kinds of fruit; in much the same way a mother does with her children when trying to wean them. This is actually how we should understand the expression Zhillan Zhaliala, or dense shade, for it is the shade of paradise that is even covered and shaded with another shade.

Having shed light on the destiny awaiting the two categories of His creation, i.e. disbelievers who disobey Him the Almighty and deviate from His Path and believers who obey Him and firmly adhere to His Path. To further illustrate this point, Allah Glorified is He says that the people of the first category will be admitted to the Fire, and whenever their skin is burnt away, He the Almighty shall replace it with a new one so that they will continue to feel the pain. On the other hand, He the Almighty says that He prepared paradise with all the descriptions we explained previously for believers. Having thus clarified the punishment and the reward prepared for the two categories respectively, He Glorified is He directs our attention to a new ruling. This is due to the fact that the human psyche at this particular time (after talking about the Fire and Paradise) will be quite afraid of the fire and, meanwhile, will be longing for paradise. Under these conditions, it will be easier for man to accept this ruling and even readily apply it. In addition, one will be properly prepared for receiving any new rulings. Consequently, one will be able to know perfectly well about the reward prepared for those who firmly adhere to the Path of Allah and the punishment prepared for the disobedient and the misguided.

As a matter of fact, in the event one is fully prepared for receiving a particular ruling, and in the event, the wisdom and the purpose behind this ruling are crystal clear, man will receive it wholeheartedly. This is due to the fact that the human soul knows many things and understands many matters. From the Mercy of Allah, man’s brain includes a memory and an imaginative power that are incapable of comprehending and encompassing excessive information all at once. This is why one cannot entertain a new thought unless his mind is fairly empty of any particular thought that may be occupying his mind at the same moment of receiving the new one. Indeed, if the old meaning is retained in the mind, one will not be able to receive a new one.

Accordingly, a human's consciousness is especially interested in what is taking place right now, and thus, thoughts and ideas have no place to be in intermixed with each other. For this reason, when someone wants to recall something from his mind, he finds that meanings swiftly flow in such a way that enables the hidden ideas and thoughts to come to the conscious mind. Once this happens, the first thought completely vanishes.

As such, we should not think that the human mind can store every piece of information in its conscious part all at once; this is completely wrong. Truthfully speaking, it is due to the Mercy of Allah the Almighty that He created minds in such a way that enables them to store information. For this reason, one may remember something that happened ten years ago. Therefore, if this incident had been already removed and erased from one's mind, he would not have been capable of remembering it! This clearly indicates that it already exists in the subconscious. When different ideas and thoughts intermix with each other, this particular incident comes to the conscious mind where it performs its function and vanishes.

Therefore, this clearly indicates that the human mind has the power and energy necessary to enable it to store events and incidents. Despite this, people's capacities for storing events may vary. There may be someone who needs to study a poem ten times before he can learn it by heart, whereas another may be capable of memorising it after just two times, or even three times. In reality, the human mind is like a camera; it may be capable of shooting an excellent picture upon first trial. What really matters is that one’s consciousness should be free at the time of thinking. If the consciousness is free of any other thoughts, one will be able to receive a new one.

You may read a poem, a verse or a word repeatedly in order to memorise it. However, if you manage to focus all your consciousness on the text you are studying, you may be able to memorise it immediately from the first reading. You only fail to memorise the text when ideas dart across your mind continuously, thus distracting you and causing you to lose your concentration. As such, your consciousness gets distracted, causing you to fail to memorise new pieces of information. You then repeat the studying process until you are capable of assimilating each part of the poem or the verse you are trying to memorise. For this reason, they say that there are students who memorise slowly and others who do so quickly. The entire process may be explained as follows: if the person pays particular attention to what he is studying, he will be able to memorise it from the first time; otherwise, he will take a longer time to memorise it.

I will give a striking example to illustrate this point. I believe that most of us, especially students, have undergone such a situation. If we assume that there is a student who was about to take an exam, and before the bell rang, heralding as he was about to enter the examination room. Then, one of his colleagues came to him and said, 'There will be a question about such and such part from this particular text.' However, the student had not studied this particular part. So, he immediately grabbed the book and read it carefully. Would he at this moment be thinking of what he will have for lunch? Would he even be thinking of the one who was with him yesterday? No, he would never think of any of these things because he did not have much time before taking the exam, and thus, he had been paying special attention to this particular text. As such, he might be faced with a question from this text and would be able to answer it even though another student, who studied the same text a month ago, was unable to answer it, for he was distracted while studying. As for this particular student, he studied it while using his total concentration, thus making him able to answer it correctly.

Another example to illustrate this point is a student who complains about his inability to understand the lectures of a particular professor. However, another student may fully comprehend the lectures from the same professor. As for the student who does not understand, he was distracted by other topics, which have nothing to do with the main and prime theme of the lecture. Thus, when he attends a new class, he will be surprised by new pieces of information that could not be assimilated unless he fully understood the previous pieces of information. Accordingly, when the teacher explained the new lesson, this student who was unable to understand said, 'What is this teacher saying?’ As for the other student who fully understood the teacher, he perfectly comprehends all the new pieces of information delivered by the teacher. For this reason, a good teacher must attract the attention of his students by capturing their attention and maintaining throughout the lecture. He may, for instance, explain a particular theme of a lesson under discussion and then may tell a student, 'Stand up and recount what I have just said.' In this manner, students will remain alert the entire time for fear that they may be embarrassed if the teacher asks them and they fail to answer. Thus, they will pay attention to the lecture and automatically keep their focus on him.

Having shed light on the Fire and Paradise, to the extent that this matter became firmly implanted in people's minds, He Glorified is He started to reveal new rulings. As matter of fact, every time Allah the Almighty sheds light on the Fire and Paradise, He follows this by the most important legal rulings which, if people firmly adhere to, they will be admitted into paradise and keep away from the fire. Having prepared and qualified people's minds by telling them about the appalling destiny, the fire, and the attractive one, He the Almighty reveals the ruling in the following verse:

إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ يَأۡمُرُكُمۡ أَن تُؤَدُّواْ ٱلۡأَمَٰنَٰتِ إِلَىٰٓ أَهۡلِهَا وَإِذَا حَكَمۡتُم بَيۡنَ ٱلنَّاسِ
أَن تَحۡكُمُواْ بِٱلۡعَدۡلِۚ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ نِعِمَّا يَعِظُكُم بِهِۦٓۗ إِنَّ ٱللَّهَ كَانَ سَمِيعَۢا بَصِيرٗا ٥٨

God commands you [people] to return things entrusted to you to their rightful owners, and, if you judge between people, to do so with justice: God's instructions to you are excellent, for He hears and sees everything [58]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 58)

The saying of Allah the Almighty '…to return things entrusted to you to their rightful owners…' succinctly summarises and encapsulates all the Divine Rulings and Commands to people on earth. This is due to the fact that trust is of three kinds: the most supreme trust manifested clearly by believing in Allah, trust that exists between people themselves and the one which pertains to all other creatures in the universe.

Al-A'manah, or trust, means that people's things are entrusted to you for the sake of preserving and keeping them, and you are the custodian of these things and items. Therefore, you may or may not return these things entrusted to you. It must be said that if you ask someone to keep something for you, and you have officially documented that matter, this action will not fall under the category of the 'trust' since there are witnesses and evidence. Yet, in the case of 'trust', there shall be no witnesses since the act of 'trust' entails that you entrust a person to keepsomething for you while allowing his conscience to finally decide whether to return the 'trust' back to you or not.

In the chapter of al-Ahzab, Allah the Almighty clearly says: 'Verily, We have offered the trust of the Divine Law to the heavens, the earth and the mountains, but they refused to bear it and were afraid of it. But man bore it. Indeed, he is capable of being unjust to, and neglectful of, himself.' (al-Ahzab: 72). Therefore, this raises the question, 'What is this particular trust referred to in the aforementioned verse of al-Ahzab?' We know perfectly well that the universe has different creatures including the inanimate things which represent the lowest rank in the chain of creatures; plants would be considered in the middle rank, while animals would be of higher rank than plants. Finally, man would top all of the previous ranks since all of them are subjected to his service. One point to be made is that it is of great importance to realise that inanimate things, plants and animals do not have freedom of choice to do whatever they want; rather, each of them has been created to perform a certain function and cannot choose to refrain from performing it.

The heavens, the earth and the mountains, as such, refused to have freedom of choice or to bear the trust. This clearly means that they did not want to have free will by means of which they would decide whether to do an act or not to do it. They all were afraid of assuming the burden of this trust due to the lack of confidence in themselves at the time of fulfilling the trust. This means that one of these created beings may have the intention to return a trust to its owners; however, it may, out of self's enticement, fail to do so at the time of delivering. That is why the heavens, the earth and the mountains, out of their fear, said, 'We do not want to assume this trust, and we do not want to have the freedom to do things or not do them, or to obey or disobey. Rather, we want to be subservient to what you (O, Allah), without any choice on our part.' This clearly and plainly means that the heavens, the earth and the mountains have chosen to willingly submit to the Will of Allah the Almighty. Man, on the other hand, out of his ability to reason, chose to assume the trust and said, 'I will assume the trust, and my reasoning will enable me to deliver it.' Therefore, man failed to consider the difference between the act of shouldering the trust and his state at the time of actually delivering it.

For example, someone may entrust you with a sum of money. You may then take this money while being certain that you will deliver it when this person asks you to give it back. Nonetheless, at the time of actually delivering the trust, you may not be able to control yourself. For instance, you may be going through bad financial circumstances and spend some of this money. Your integrity may even, Allah forbid, have been destroyed.

Therefore, it is not guaranteed that one would be in full control of himself at the time of delivering the trust even though he may be so at the time of taking it. This is why those who are cautious may say, 'Keep us away from assuming trusts. We do not want to keep anything for you.' But, due to the fact that man was unjust to himself and ignorant about his state at the time of actually delivering the trust, he accepted to shoulder it. Thus, now it becomes quite clear the trust referred to in the chapter of al-Ahzab is none but that of the freedom of choice upon which all Allah's Legal Obligations are based.

As a matter of fact, At-Taklif, or a legal obligation, is restricted to the two following commands, i.e. 'Dos' and 'Don'ts.' Thus, if one has the will to do a particular act, he is able to do it, and vice versa. This means that the trust in this context is restricted to what Allah the Almighty asked human beings to do. However, it did not tackle the other kinds of trusts that exist between mankind. The 'trust', in fact, may also refer to the rights of others you have in your custody. For this reason, when a person gives another one (person) something for him to keep, the former is considered to be entrusted with the thing he took, for/he may then will to deliver back what he took or not.

However, there are other trusts that were not given by a person to another one (person). Rather, they were given by the Lord of the Worlds to all humans. The list of this particular kind of trusts includes the knowledge that Allah the Almighty grants man. Truthfully speaking, Allah Glorified is He is the One Who taught you and enabled you to understand a particular field of knowledge. Then, He Glorified is He asks you to deliver the trust of knowledge He gave you, in the exact same manner one is asked to return the trust of money he is entrusted with.

We say to every scientist and knowledgeable person, 'Your knowledge did not emanate from yourself so that you may give it to someone else and expect him to give you something in return. This is totally wrong since Allah the Exalated will reward you for delivering this trust of knowledge to others.' The same equally applies for the virtues of patience and courage. As far as relationships or transactions among mankind are concerned, the virtue of keeping the trust often manifests itself in material affairs. However, as for other kinds of trusts, they are between Allah Glorified is He and His Servants. He the Almighty may entrust you with a certain field of knowledge so that you can deliver it to those who do not know. In the same respect, He the Almighty may entrust you with great strength and command you to assist those who are incapable, or need assistance.

Accordingly, the question to be asked here is 'Who gave you this trust?' It is Allah the Almighty. It is thereby not necessary that you should return the trust to the same one who gave it to you. This is due to the fact that the trust is that with which you have been entrusted is either from the creation, or mankind, or the Creator Glorified is He. Therefore, you are obligated to deliver it in all cases. The meaning of trust in this sense is thus broad; the fact that Allah the Almighty is the Only One Who deserves to be worshipped is a trust; your ability to carry out legal obligations is a trust as is your ability to use given talents Allah the Almighty bestowed upon you. So, everyone who has a talent is entrusted with it and has to deliver it and transmit its effects to the one who lacks it. In this regard, it is important to know that our Lord the Almighty may give a particular person muscle power. Similarly, He Glorified is He may give another person sound reasoning. He the Almighty furthermore, may give a third person the ability to show forbearance, while giving a fourth the ability to acquire knowledge. As a matter of fact, Allah the Almighty has endowed His creation with all different kinds of trusts so that they would complement each other. As such, when every man delivers his trust to others, all the members of the society will certainly enjoy each other's talents.

When Allah the Almighty says, ' Allah commands you [people] to return things entrusted to you to their owners…', we should immediately recall that the most important thing with which we have been entrusted is to worship Him the Almighty alone and not to ascribe others with Him the Almighty in worship. We should also take into account the other kinds of trusts He the Almighty entrusted you with, for just as you are obligated to deliver and return other's trusts to them, they are also obligated to deliver and return your trusts to you. This is why, when He Glorified is He forbids you from stealing, it means that He the Almighty is obligating everyone else not to steal you in return.

In truth, just as you keep trusts for other members of the society, they, in turn, should keep trusts for you. If you, thus, fulfil the requirements of that with which you have been entrusted, the society around you will deliver the trust it possesses for you. The trust then transpires to be the deliverance of another person's right that you have in your custody.

It is narrated that the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Allah commands you [people] to return things to their owners…' had been revealed concerning ‘Uthman ibn Abi Talhaibn Abi Talhah who was the servant of the Sacred House in Mecca. When Allah the Almighty opened Mecca for Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him he wanted to enter the Ka‘ba, but ‘Uthman ibn Abi Talhah refused to give him the keys, closed its doors, ascended to its roof and said, 'Had I known that he was the Messenger of Allah, I would not have prevented him from entering the Ka‘ba.' Then, ‘Ali ibn Abi Taleb Allah be pleased with him fiercely took the keys from him and opened the doors of the Ka‘ba for Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him who entered into it and offered two units or prayer. Upon getting out of it, his uncle Al-‘Abbas Allah be pleased with him asked him peace and blessings be upon him to give him the keys and to appoint him as the new servant of the Ka‘ba, but this particular verse was revealed. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him consequently ordered ‘Ali Allah be pleased with him to return the keys to ‘Uthman ibn Abi Talhah and to apologise to him. When ‘Ali went to him, ‘Uthman Allah be pleased with him said: 'After you hurt me, you returned to apologise and speak leniently to me.' ‘Ali Allah be pleased with him then told him that Allah the Almighty had sent down this verse and he recited it for him, whereupon ‘Uthman embraced Islam. Finally, the archangel Jibril descended and told Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that the family of ‘Uthamn ibn Abi Talhah are rightfully entitled to the service of the Sacred House until the end of time.

What should be mentioned is that we must certainly know that the non-deliverance of trusts necessarily entails that the fulfilment of justice becomes a must. As a matter of fact, if every one of us were to deliver the right he owes to its owner, there will be no need at all for justice. Justice naturally emerges due to antagonism and hostility. Truthfully speaking, the act of litigation indicates that someone has denied the right he owes to someone else. Thus, if everyone were to deliver the rights of others that are in his custody, there will be no need for litigation since there would be no antagonism amongst people. Indeed, there will also be no need for the application of justice at this time.

However, due to the fact that Allah the Almighty is the One Who knows perfectly well His creation and their flaws, He Glorified is He is fully aware of the fact that some people would be heedless and may not give back the trusts to their owners. This is why He the Almighty laid down another principle through which people could have their due rights once again, that is, justice. However, if people made sure to give back the trusts to their owners, there would be no need at all for the application of such justice.

Therefore, it becomes clear that justice was revealed to overcome the flaws and defects of the human soul when it rejects to return things to their owners. This is why He the Almighty says: '… And if you judge between people, you should do so with justice…' Here, we must take into account a very important point, that is, He the Almighty did not say if you are entrusted with a trust, return it to their owners; rather, He Glorified is He says: ' Allah commands you to return things entrusted to you to their rightful owners…' So, in case you refuse to give back things to their rightful owners, what will be the solution then? This is where the role of justice applies which means to give back a right to the custody of someone to someone else. This means that this right is not in your custody since you arbitrate so that you could settle an issue or resolve a dispute.

In this manner, we know that there is a difference between Al-Amanah, or trust, and Al-'Adl, or justice; the first entails that you have something in your own custody and that you must give it back to its rightful owner, whereas the latter entails returning things which are not in the custody of oneself to their rightful owners. That is why He the Almighty says: '…And if you judge between people, you should do so with justice…' Just as the order of giving the trusts to their rightful owners addresses all of mankind, the order of maintaining justice also addresses all of mankind. Thus, the saying of Allah the Almighty '… And if you judge between people, you should do so with justice…' is not restricted to rulers alone; rather, everyone is required to maintain and achieve justice. If you have been appointed by others as an arbitrator, and they agreed to accept your judgment, you have to judge justly even if such arbitration concerns something pertaining to sensitive matters like ennoblement, honour and talent. It is not realistic that arbitration should always pertain to material matters. This point is proved by the story of 'Ali Allah be pleased with him when he saw two boys seeking the judgment of his son Al-Hasan Allah be pleased with him concerning their handwriting. Both boys wanted to know which of their handwritings was better than the other. Even though this issue may not be of great importance, it occupied the minds of the two boys and thus it was a must that Al-Hasan judged justly between them. For this reason, 'Ali Allah be pleased with him said to his son, 'O, Be careful how to judge, for Allah will hold you to account for your judgment son On the Day of Resurrection.'

This gives a striking example of how the judge must be extremely precise in his judgements even if the matter seems of no great importance. Even in football matches, the referee who judges the match must be properly qualified to perform his job. That is because his decisions will lead to the winning of one of the two teams and the defeat of the other. The fact of the matter is that one gets enraged when he watches a football match and notices that the referee did not take into account a particular violation.

I wonder at this point, why people are so earnest and serious about applying the rules of justice in a game while paying them no attention at all in real life. This is what happens often, for we tend to take the application of justice in games seriously and leave out many of the important matters without a governing law. Had we cared for these matters as much as we cared for the games, all our disputes and conflicts would have been settled. Justice is thereby a right that someone owes to another even if it were in matters pertaining to a match. Likewise, as long as a matter concerns two parties involved and caused them to have a dispute and disagreement amongst themselves, you have to put an end to such dispute in a just manner.

Allah the Almighty then says: '…Allah's Instructions to you are excellent…' This means that there is nothing greater than such an admonition, namely delivering the trusts to their rightful owners and judging justly amongst people. Accordingly, the movement of life will be in its correct path. If people deliver that with which they have been entrusted, there will not be any dispute or disagreement amongst them. Furthermore, if they judge justly amongst each other, all disputes will certainly come to an end. Regarding this, scholars say, 'If the people in a particular society knew that they are governed by a just ruler who maintains justice, no wrongdoer would dare to do any injustice anymore.' The opposite naturally occurs when there is an unjust ruler since people will say, 'This person has committed wrong and injustice, but he was not held accountable for his actions.' The absence of justice thus entices and emboldens the wrongdoer to do more injustice. But when people see that a ruler deters and punishes the one who usurps someone else's right and gives back the right to its rightful owner, no one will dare to wrong another.

O, People! You must know that your obedience never benefits Allah the Almighty and nor does your disobedience harm Him Glorified is He. Thus, your obedience is for your own benefit, while your disobedience is against you. The best form of command is the one that does not bring any benefit to a commander because if the command involves a benefit accruing to a commander, its purpose and value may be dubitable. Thus, to enjoin a command from which you expect no benefit and in which you have no interest, is the apex of justice. Yet there may be a person who has no vast knowledge or deep wisdom, yet he commands doing acts from which there is no personal benefit. The matter in this context is quite different than with Allah the Almighty since He does not have any interest in the command. In addition, He the Almighty is All Knowing and All-Wise. For this reason, this Divine Admonition is quite conceivable. Furthermore, it is a bounty conferred by Allah the Almighty on mankind and what is at odds with it is a bad admonition since no benefit accrues to Him the Almighty from His Command, and He is entrusted with all His servants. In addition, there may be someone who commands something from which he may not have any benefit. However, this person may be deficient in knowledge and flawed in wisdom and so his admonition and command would not be acceptable. Therefore, the saying of Allah, '…Allah's Instructions are excellent to you…' means that He the Almighty exhorts you to deliver that with which you have been entrusted and to judge justly among people.

We should also notice the rhetorical expression of the Quran when He the Almighty says: 'Allah instructs you to return…' This rhetorical style indicates clearly that He Glorified is He addresses all mankind, which plainly means that all people are required to firmly adhere to and follow this Divine Command of delivering the trusts to their rightful owners. The same applies to judging amongst people with justice, that is, all members of the society are also required by virtue of the Divine Command to judge amongst people with justice. As matter of fact, these two Divine Commands point out that Muslims are not only ordered to protect their own rights amongst themselves, but also they are obligated to protect the rights of others even if they are not Muslims.

In the same respect, His saying, '…Allah’s Instructions to you are excellent…' must be interpreted to mean that He the Almighty orders us to protect the rights of those who believe in Islam and those who do not believe in it; a point which is obviously indicated by the fact that He the Almighty addresses all mankind with this particular command. As a matter of fact, He Glorified is He does not appoint any particular group with this command, whether they are believers or disbelievers.

The word 'people' indicates the justice of the command enacted by Allah the Almighty the Lord of the Worlds. He is the One Who created a person to be either a believer or a disbeliever. However, no one, whether he is a believer or a disbeliever, is excluded from His Divinity. He the Almighty supplies all His creation with their provisions. Yet, it is of cardinal importance here to know that Allah the Almighty provides those who make use of reasons and means for attaining provision, whether they are believers or disbelievers. This clearly indicates the Divine Justice. He the Almighty provided man with sustenance and made everything in the world subservient to him. The truth of the matter is that He did not make the universe subservient only to believers. Rather, He made it equally subservient to all mankind, whether they are believers or disbelievers. For this reason, He Glorified is He commands us to deliver trusts to their rightful owners whether they are believers or disbelievers. Furthermore, He the Almighty commands us to judge justly amongst all mankind, whether they are believers or disbelievers.

This previously mentioned point is even proven by the Sunnah of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. It is narrated that a Muslim man called Tu‘mah ibn U’bayriq had stolen armour from his Muslim neighbour Qatadat ibn an-Nu‘man*, Allah be pleased with him*. Tu‘mah was in a state of complete confusion since he did not know where to hide the stolen armour. This is why he hid it in a sack of flour, but there was a hole in the sack and thus the flour leaked and made a mark on the road. Tu‘mah finally hid the armour at the house of a Jew named Zayd ibn As-Samin. When Qatadat discovered that the armour had been stolen, he shouted loudly, and people came and followed the marks of the flour on the road till they reached the house of Tu‘mah ibn U’bayriq, but he swore to Allah that he did not steal it. Therefore, they traced the marks of flour once again till they reached the house of Zayd ibn As-Samin who told them that Tu‘mah was the one who brought it to him. There were some Jews who witnessed to this. The case was thus referred to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. At that time, people of Banu Zhufar came to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and asked him to defend their man by saying, 'O, Prophet Muhammad! If you did not defend him, he would be exposed, and the Jew would be acquitted.' It is at this point that Allah the Almighty sent down some verses of the chapter of an-Nisa' in which He the Almighty states clearly that He revealed the Book to him peace and blessings be upon him with the truth that he may judge between people by means of that which Allah has taught him. He the Almighty also ordered him peace and blessings be upon him not to be an advocate on behalf of the treacherous and to ask Him the Almighty for forgiveness. Furthermore, He the Almighty further ordered him peace and blessings be upon him not to plead on behalf of those who act unfaithfully to their souls, for He Glorified is He does not love those who are treacherous and sinful. (an-Nisa': 105-107)

These verses of the chapter of an-Nisa' clearly indicate that Muslims must not support their fellow brothers and sisters in committing injustice even against non-Muslims. This is why He Glorified is He follows these three aforementioned verses on the story of Banu Zhufar with His Saying in which He clarifies that if they plotted in secret, but He the Almighty is All-Acquainted with everything and that He is with them when they meditate by night words which do not please Him. He Glorified is He furthermore, gives warning to the believers not to defend the wrongdoers even if they are Muslims. He says that if you (O, Muslims) plead for the treacherous in this worldly life, no one will be able to plead for them on the Day of Resurrection. (an-Nisa’: 108-109)

Thus, the saying of Allah the Almighty '… and whenever you judge between people, to judge with justice…' clearly means that Allah the Almighty addresses all of mankind and orders them everyone to judge justly whenever any one of us is appointed as a judge amongst people for any given case. This Divine Command is not restricted to believers only; rather, it includes disbelievers’ relations with Muslims, as well. It furthermore includes the disbelievers’ relations with each other, in the event that they accept the Sharia of Islam to settle their disputes and disagreements.

Allah the Almighty then concludes the verse with His saying, '… Allah’s Instructions to you are excellent, for He hears and sees everything.' When we notice a verse ending with Two Divine Attributes or Two of the Most Beautiful Names of Allah the Almighty we must realise that there is a relation between these Attributes or Names and the content of the verse. In this verse, He the Almighty having ordered us to return trusts to their rightful owners and to judge justly among people, tells us that He is All-Hearing and All-Seeing. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him explained this matter when he ordered the one assuming a judicial position to treat both parties equally in both attention and discourse. This means that a judge should not be biased towards one of the two parties, and nor is he allowed to pay special attention to one of them while neglecting the other. He must thereby treat them both equally paying the same attention to both parties, while addressing both of them in the same way.

It has been narrated that there was a dispute between a Jew and ‘Ali ibn Abi Taleb, Allah be pleased with him. The dispute was thus referred to the “Umar ibn Al-Khattab, the Commander of Believers, Allah be pleased with him. When ‘Ali and the Jew were before ‘‘Umar, he called upon ‘Ali and said, 'Stand up, O, father of Al-Hasan!' However, ‘Ali was angry. ‘‘Umar then asked him, 'O, ‘Ali, do you hate the fact that I treat you and your litigant equally in the court?’ Whereupon ‘Ali Allah be pleased with him replied, 'No, but I disliked that you called upon me with my title while not doing the same with my Jewish litigant.'

Accordingly, when ‘‘Umar Allah be pleased with him advised Abu Musa Al-A’sha‘ry Allah be pleased with him upon being appointed as a judge, he said to him, 'Treat everyone who attends your court equally even in the way you sit with each of them and the way you look at each of them.’ This clearly indicates that arbitrators and judges must give equal treatment to the two litigating parties. They, arbitrators and judges, are not allowed to pay special attention to one of the two parties, while neglecting the other, and nor are they allowed to give preference to one of them over the other.

Al-Lahzh, or seeing, is the function of the eye, and it requires someone who can see, whereas Al-Lafzh, or utterance, requires an ear to hear it or someone capable of hearing. However, the question to be asked here is 'Why did Allah the Almighty give precedence to the Most Beautiful Name of “All-Hearing” over that of “All-Seeing”?’ The reason is that what is heard involves a clear expression, but the act of seeing is only recognised by the one who looks at others tenderly and respectfully. However, did the Divine Attribute of being 'All-Hearing' evolve in Allah after He came across what He could hear? Also, did the Divine Attribute of being 'All-Seeing' evolve after He identified what He could see? The answer is that all the Divine Attributes of Allah including these two ones mentioned are eternal. He Glorified is He is Eternal, and He is the Creator of the existing universe. Furthermore, His Attributes are as eternal as He is.

Therefore, there is a difference between the following words, Sami‘, or All-Hearing, and Sami‘, the one who could hear, and Basir, the All-Seeing, and Mubsir, and the one who has the ability to see. Truthfully speaking, one is described as 'hearing' if he actually comes across someone or something that could be heard, and he hears it. However, what does the word 'All-Hearing' mean? It means that the One Who acquires this attribute of 'All-Hearing' is always capable of hearing regardless of whether or not that which could be heard exists. The same holds true for the attribute of 'All-Seeing.’

Let me give you an example to illustrate this point for you. When a poet composes a poem, this does not mean that he was not a poet before doing so; rather, this means he was originally a poet and that he composed it out of his potential capacity to write poetry. Similarly, when we say that Allah the Almighty is All-Forgiving, this means that He was so even before He created any creature. It also indicates that this Divine Attribute of 'All-Forgiving' is eternal and that He the Almighty had it even before the creation committed any given sin. The same equally applies to the Two Divine Attributes of 'All-Hearing' and 'All-Seeing.’ This means that they are eternal and that He the Almighty had them even before creating what would be seen or heard. Allah the Almighty then says:

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوٓاْ أَطِيعُواْ ٱللَّهَ وَأَطِيعُواْ ٱلرَّسُولَ وَأُوْلِي ٱلۡأَمۡرِ
مِنكُمۡۖ فَإِن تَنَٰزَعۡتُمۡ فِي شَيۡءٖ فَرُدُّوهُ إِلَى ٱللَّهِ وَٱلرَّسُولِ إِن كُنتُمۡ
تُؤۡمِنُونَ بِٱللَّهِ وَٱلۡيَوۡمِ ٱلۡأٓخِرِۚ ذَٰلِكَ خَيۡرٞ وَأَحۡسَنُ تَأۡوِيلًا ﴿٥٩﴾

You who believe, obey God and the Messenger, and those in authority among you. If you are in dispute over any matter, refer it to God and the Messenger, if you truly believe in God and the Last Day: that is better and fairer in the end [59] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 59)

We have extensively discussed this verse and mentioned it in almost all occasions. However, we have to briefly recount what we have previously mentioned about it. Why should we obey Allah and His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him? The answer is that this order is viewed as the legal justification for either the Divine Reward or Punishment. Similarly, when a judge passes a verdict, he puts forward the legal justification for the judgement. For instance, the judge may say, 'Since the person has committed such and such violation, then according to such and such article, such and such penalty should be meted out to him.' These are the justifications of the verdict. The Arabic word Al-Haythiyyat (to refer to justifications or grounds of the verdict) is derived from the conjunction Haythu which gives the meaning of 'since' or 'because', that is, since so and so happened, then our verdict is such and such, or since so and so did not happen, then our verdict is such and such. Accordingly, the grounds and fundamentals of the verdict mean the legal justification that supports the rationale of the judge who passed the verdict.

In this verse, Allah the Almighty says: '…obey Allah and obey His Messenger…' It is noticeable that He the Almighty does not address all of mankind in this particular verse; rather, He addresses believers only. This means that as long as you (O, believers) have true faith in Allah as the All-Wise, the Creator, the All Knowing and the One Who has the right to command and enact legal obligations upon you, then you have to listen to and obey what He orders you to do. As such, it is clear that He the Almighty does not order all of mankind to obey Him; rather, He orders all of them to believe in Him since obedience follows faith.

Thus, the justification for obeying Allah and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him naturally evolves from faith in Him the Almighty and in His Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. This is the perfect form of justice since Allah the Almighty does not assign anyone to do anything unless he has already attained faith in Him, to the extent that he shall believe that He the Almighty is the Only One entitled to command and enact legal obligations upon him. As for those who do not believe in Him, He Glorified is He does not order them to 'do' or 'not to do' anything. Rather, He asks them first and foremost to believe in Him and then that will naturally lead to obedience of His Orders and Commands. For this reason, you will notice that all legal obligations enacted by Him the Almighty are preceded by His saying, 'O, you who believe.’

Having faith in Allah and His Messenger is the main reason behind obeying Him and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. This is the most important reason in this regard. Furthermore, it is completely different from enquiring into the wisdom and rationale behind the enactment of this or that particular legal obligation. For this reason, I would like to direct your attention to a very important point, that is, it is wrong to approach the Divine Rulings and Commands by way of investigating and examining so that as long as you are convinced with them, you adopt and follow them, and if you do not, you will not adopt or follow them. As a matter of fact, such behaviour indicates that you have doubts about these rulings and commands.

This is why we have to obey and follow Divine Rulings and Commands since He the Almighty addresses you who have believed in Him as the All-Wise. Having said that, does this preclude your mind from inquiring into the wisdom underlying the Divine Ruling or Command? To this question, we respond, 'You may understand some of the deep wisdom, but not all of it. The reason is that it is impossible to restrict the Wisdom of Allah to one particular aspect, so, you may realise an aspect of this Wisdom, while another person realises a different one. For this reason, it is said that the key difference between Allah's Commands to people and people's commands to each other is something very simple, i.e. Allah's Commands to humans are preceded with the underlying cause, namely having faith in Him the Almighty. As for humans, when one of them is asked to carry out a particular command, he may respond, 'Why should I do so? Please, give me a reason to.' The main reason behind this human response is that one usually believes that the mind of others is not better than his. Accordingly, he should not do anything unless he is completely convinced of its validity and unless experience has proved the authenticity of the opinion of the one commanding you and that he is not a deceiver.

Therefore, we see that our obedience to Allah is entirely different from our obedience to another created being. We obey Allah since we have faith in Him the Almighty. Accordingly, when He asks us to obey Him, we should not inquire into whether this obedience will benefit us or not. If we trust that He created us due to all of His Attributes of Perfection, then we must be certain that He does not want to acquire a new attribute to Himself through this legal obligation. Allah is in no way obligated to create you, yet He the Almighty created you by His Power and provided you with the means to support and sustain your existence. Accordingly, when He the Almighty commands you to do something, He does so since it is in your interest, exactly in the same way a manufacturer deeply and genuinely cares about his manufactured item. Similarly, Allah the Almighty wants to boast about His creation, not by forcing and compelling them to obey His Commands but by making them follow them out of their love for Him. He wants us to declare through our behaviour that we love Him as much as He is our Lord. As a matter of fact, man might have chosen to be disobedient to Allah. So, as long as you have the choice to disobey and violate His Commands but you choose, instead, to obey Him the Almighty this definitively proves your love for Him the Almighty. In fact, there is a big difference between someone who compels you to obey him and another who, despite being capable of subjugating you, gives you the freedom to choose to obey him or not so that you may do so willingly and lovingly. Therefore, when Allah the Almighty orders us to obey Him, this indicates that He does not ask you to do something that is strange or odd.

However, how can we carry out the Divine Command of being obedient to Allah the Almighty? We do so by obeying all His Commands. This raises a very important question, 'Did Allah the Almighty issue His Commands to only certain individuals?' No, His Commands are directed to all of mankind, whether they are individuals or groups. In addition, He provided them with a natural inclination towards faith that definitively proves that there is a supreme force running the creation of the universe. No one knows the essence of this force, nor does anyone know its attributes or how it will reward those who obey it. Thus, the existence of Messengers and Prophets to inform mankind was an absolute necessity. For this reason, I believe that some philosophers were wrong when they claimed that the human mind alone can realise the essence of religion. To these philosophers, I say, 'No, this is not correct, in spite of the fact that the mind can know about the One we ought to worship, it cannot tell anything about the methodology of religion.'

This is why sending Messengers and Prophets was an absolute necessity, for it is these Messengers and Prophets who would convey the Divine Commands to mankind. We thus say to those philosophers, 'Even though the mind is able to identify this power running the universe, it is meanwhile unable to tell anything about its essence, name and requirements. For this reason, Messengers and Prophets were sent, meaning that they were sent to tell us about this ultimate power. Therefore, this means that this particular and ultimate power in which you believe in due to your natural inclination must have sent to you (O, mankind) someone to tell you of His Names and Commands. This clearly implies that obedience to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is necessary for owing Allah the Almighty our absolute obedience to Him.

He Glorified is He then says: 'and those in authority among you' We notice that He Glorified is He did not repeat the verb 'obey' when He mentioned those who have been entrusted with authority so that we may understand that we are supposed to obey those in authority only in so far as our obedience to them is in harmony with our obedience to Allah and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Reflecting upon the meanings of Quranic verses clearly indicates that the Divine Command to obey Allah and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him has taken three different forms as stated throughout its pages, and they proceed as follows: 1) obedience to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is included in with Allah since both use the same imperative verb 'obey Allah and the Messenger'; 2) the imperative verb is repeated twice, one time with Allah and the other with Prophet Muhammad 'obey Allah and obey His Messenger'; and 3) some verses indicate the order to obey Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him without including it with a statement commanding obedience to Allah, simply 'obey the Messenger.’

As for the first form, 'obey Allah and the Messenger', we notice that it includes only one imperative verb of showing obedience to Allah and His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. As for the second form, the imperative verb of showing obedience is repeated twice: one to Allah Glorified is He and the other to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Concerning the third form, the imperative verb is confined to showing obedience to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him only.

There are differences amongst these three forms. As a matter of fact, the first form indicates that Allah the Almighty is the One Who issued Commands, which were thus confirmed by Prophet Muhammad’s sayings, actions or tacit approval. As for the second form, it points out that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had explained in detail the general Divine Commands. Regarding the third form, it informs us that Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him explained something to us, for which Allah the Almighty did not issue a Divine Command. Truthfully speaking, the fact that obedience to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is indispensable from that to Allah the Almighty and is certainly mentioned in the chapter of an-Nisa’ in which He Glorified is He clearly states that whoever obeys Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him indeed obeys Allah the Almighty. (an-Nisa’: 80). Also, in the chapter of al-Hashr, He the Almighty orders us to accept willingly whatever Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him gives us and to refrain from doing anything he prohibited us: 'And whatsoever the Messenger gives you, take it, and whatsoever he forbids you, abstain from it. And fear Allah. Surely, Allah is Severe in retribution.' (al-Hashr: 7).

Based on the discussion justmentioned, it becomes clear to us that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him contributes to Islamic Legislation in three ways: he decreed and legislated by way of asserting what Allah the Almighty decrees; he also legislates by way of spelling out the details of what Allah has already decreed. For example, Allah Glorified is He has prescribed upon Muslims the performance of five daily prayers. He also obligated Muslims to pay zakat, or alms to the poor. Yet, He the Almighty did not explain in detail these particular obligations, thus it was the role of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to give the minute details of these general Divine Commands. Accordingly, he told us about an-Nisab, or the minimum amount of property or wealth that must be owned by a Muslim before he is obligated to pay zakat, and how to correctly perform the five daily prayers. Therefore, we obey Allah's Commands which are further explained to us by Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Furthermore, Prophet Muhammad, out of Allah's Authorisation to him, issues a particular command, for which Allah the Almighty did not directly address. For this reason, if someone tells you to support your viewpoint with some verses of the Quran, and you were unable to show him this evidence, you can tell him that there is ample evidence for all the legitimacy of what Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him told us in the saying of Allah the Almighty in the chapter of al-Hashr in which He Glorified is He orders us to accept whatever Prophet Muhammad gives us and to refrain from what he prohibits us.

In fact, this is conclusive and persuasive evidence fervently supporting the legitimacy of all the commands and orders given by him peace and blessings be upon him. Someone may still say, 'There is a difference between the Sunnah, or the recommended act of worship, and Al-Fard, or the legal obligation.' We give the following reply to this person, 'You should make a distinction, for there is a difference between a supererogatory act of worship which, if performed, one is rewarded for and if not, one is not punished, (and a mandatory act of worship which one must observe and which, if one neglects, he will be held accountable and punished for it).' As a matter of fact, this obligation is commanded by Allah the Almighty and is proven by Prophet Muhammad's Sunnah. In addition, the legitimacy of different obligations is proven by Prophet Muhammad's Sunnah. Therefore, it becomes quite clear nowadays that there is a difference between the obligatory act of worship and the recommended one. So, naturally, this is different from the explanations provided for these obligatory acts of worship in Prophet Muhammad's Sunnah and are considered as practical applications that must be followed by Muslims.

As for the command to obey those who have been entrusted with authority, it was associated in conjunction with those to be obeyed (namely Allah and His Messenger Muhammad) without an explicit command related exclusively to this case. This indicates that obeying those who are entrusted with authority is only binding as long as the obedience is in harmony with obedience to Allah and His Messenger. This, in fact, safeguards society against tyrannical rulers who try to humiliate and dominate people by misconstruing the saying of Allah the Almighty; they are 'those who have been entrusted with authority', alleging that obeying them is a must. Thus, they would say in response, 'Are we not those who have been entrusted with authority?' Scholars should reply by saying, 'Yes, but you are entitled to be obeyed as long as this obedience is in line with obedience to Allah and His Messenger. So, if obeying those who have been entrusted with authority contradicts obeying Allah and His Messenger, then no obedience is due to them.' This is based on the following rule which states, 'No created being should be obeyed if his commands would lead to disobeying the Creator.' This is actually the same response given by Abu Hazim to Maslamat ibn 'Abd Al-Malik when he (Maslamat) said to him, 'Are we not those who have been entrusted with authority?' In addition, we should take into account the fact that this obedience to those in authority has been abolished by virtue of the saying of Allah the Almighty '…then if you quarrel about anything, refer it to Allah and the Messenger…' Thus, a Muslim ruler is first required to deliver that with which he has been entrusted to their rightful owners, to judge justly amongst people and to always make people's obedience to him in complete harmony with their obedience to Allah and His Messenger. If a ruler fails to fulfil these conditions, he would be judged as a tyrannical ruler.

As for the saying of Allah the Almighty '… If you are in dispute over any matter, refer it to Allah and the Messenger…', it means that variance and dispute must be about a matter pertaining to complying to the obedience of Allah the Almighty. Furthermore, it must have a proper frame of reference to settle it, which means if you truly believe in Allah and the Last Day, you must refer all of your disputes to Allah and His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

As a matter of fact, those who know these rulings perfectly well are the well-versed religious scholars. Thus, in case there is a dispute between rulers and their subjects, we should refer the matter to well-versed scholars to inform us of the Divine Ruling concerning this issue. Therefore, if someone argues that 'those who have been entrusted with authority' refers to rulers, we reply to him: 'The saying of Allah the Almighty: "refer it (the dispute) to Allah and the Messenger" indicates plainly that a ruler has an obligation to follow the Path and Course set by Allah and His Messenger Muhammad.' Naturally, it is the opinions of well-versed scholars that must exclusively and entirely be relied upon. Scholars are the ones who closely and strictly observe, based on their knowledge of religion, the implementation and adherence to the Rulings made by Allah the Almighty. Undoubtedly, Allah Glorified is He asks us to refer matters of dispute between rulers and their subjects to Him and His Messenger because He wants to settle disputed issues since disputes cause turbulence and unrest in life. Someone may claim that so and so is correct, while another may refute this and claim or stand by a contradictory view. Thus, issues of dispute must be referred to a supreme authority, i.e. Allah and Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Regarding this, He the Almighty tells us that if Muslims at times of disputes refer their problems to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and to those in authority from amongst themselves, those among them who can search out the knowledge of it would have known it. (an-Nisa': 83) This verse explains that 'those in authority' in this context refers to well-versed religious scholars.

Based on what was mentioned, we can clearly state that the meaning of the first verse is general by saying that it associates the obedience due to the ones who have been entrusted with authority to be obedient to Allah and His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. As for the second verse which sheds light on Al-Istinbat, or legal deduction, it refers to well-versed religious scholars.

Therefore, it becomes clear that what is meant by 'those who have been granted authority' in the first verse are the ones who oversee the implementation of the Rulings of Allah, which is the executive authority, while the same phrase in the second verse refers specifically to well-established religious scholars, which is the legislative authority.

Thus, the saying of Allah the Almighty '… (If you are in dispute over any matter,) refer it to Allah and the Messenger, if you truly believe in Allah and the Last Day…' (an-Nisa’: 59) indicates clearly that the one who does not refer issues of dispute to Allah and His Messenger Muhammad may cause himself to fall under the category of those who do not believe in Allah and the Last Day. We say to such people, 'Review your faith and belief in Allah and the Last Day starting from the way you receive the Divine Rulings and obligations and down to your faith in the fact that you will be punished for violating such rulings on the Last Day. This is due to the fact that Allah the Almighty did not make the worldly life a place for punishment.'

Allah the Almighty then concludes the verse with His saying, 'That is better and fairer in the end.' (an-Nisa’: 59) This means that the act of obeying Allah and His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him by referring disputed issues to Him the Almighty and to Prophet Muhammad is best for both the rulers and the ruled. This is due to the fact that the good stems mainly from man’s determination to do and pursue what benefits him both in this worldly life and the Hereafter. As a matter of fact, if we consider the benefits to be obtained from any of the worldly desires, we will fully realise that satiating any or all of them only pleases you for a moment and then evil ensues.

Ta’wil is the Arabic word that translates to 'in the end' and means to refer the matter to its actual and original ruling. It is derived from al/Ya’ul, which means to return. In this respect, the saying of Allah the Almighty 'better in the end' means the best return and consequence because in the event of one only caring about achieving his worldly interests, his final destination will undoubtedly be evil and bad. It is therefore better for one to do what will lead him to be admitted into paradise. The phrase "Wa Ahsanu Ta'wila" in this context may also refer to the deduction of judgments and rulings since scholars do so based on their understanding of the sayings of Allah and His Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. However, you may understand the Divine Commands in respect to your own interests and whims. Therefore, it goes without saying that the proper understanding of the meanings of the Divine Commands and Obligations will keep you from erring and deviating from the righteous path.

Therefore, if you really pursue goodness, you should do so in all times and under all circumstances. One should not consider goodness that only satisfies his interests and serves his desires. Rather, he should pursue the kinds of goodness that results in no evil. If we consider the history of many rulers, we may find that some of them escaped criticism and punishment for what they did due to the oppression and coercion they exercised. However, when they died, their evil doings started to be exposed, and the campaigns against them started to emerge. It is thus the duty of every ruler to consider and learn from the examples of those who ruled before him, those who silenced the mouths and broke the pens of writers. However, after they died, the tongues and pens of their people started to curse them. Therefore, we must make sure to keep in mind the best end we want for ourselves and act accordingly. Whoever is capable of protecting himself during his life through his power and influence may fail to protect his reputation and history, posthumously. After his influence came to an end, people would start to condemn and belittle him even while we are still in this worldly life and before making our transition to the Hereafter. If this is the punishment meted out by the creation, imagine what would be the punishment meted out by Allah the Almighty?!

Therefore, the saying of Allah the Almighty: 'that is better and fairer in the end' (an-Nisa': 59) means that this is the best destiny one should aspire to. He the Almighty then says:

أَلَمۡ تَرَ إِلَى ٱلَّذِينَ يَزۡعُمُونَ أَنَّهُمۡ ءَامَنُواْ بِمَآ أُنزِلَ إِلَيۡكَ وَمَآ أُنزِلَ مِن
قَبۡلِكَ يُرِيدُونَ أَن يَتَحَاكَمُوٓاْ إِلَى ٱلطَّٰغُوتِ وَقَدۡ أُمِرُوٓاْ أَن يَكۡفُرُواْ بِهِۦ
وَيُرِيدُ ٱلشَّيۡطَٰنُ أَن يُضِلَّهُمۡ ضَلَٰلَۢا بَعِيدٗا ٦٠

Do you [Prophet] not see those who claim to believe in what has been sent down to you, and in what was sent down before you, yet still want to turn to unjust tyrants for judgement, although they have been ordered to reject them? Satan wants to lead them far astray [60] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 60)

We explained previously that the saying of Allah the Almighty 'Do you [Prophet] not see…?' is an interrogative expression that basically means 'Have not you learnt or known?' It is usually used if what is known was previously discussed or what is known was obvious enough for you to notice or to understand it. We also know that He Glorified is He used this particular expression of 'Do you [Prophet] not see…?' in the reference to addressing issues which Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him - the addressed person- was not aware of. He the Almighty did so to indicate to us that we have to firmly believe in what He Glorified is He says even if it was an act of informing about what had happened in the past. We must truly believe in this in the same way we believe in the actual and real existence of objects upon seeing them with our own eyes. That is due to the fact that Allah the Almighty is more trustworthy than our own eyes. Without a doubt, your eyes may deceive you, but Allah the Almighty would never deceive any of us.

The saying of Allah, 'Do you [Prophet] not see those who claim to believe in what has been sent down to you, and in what was sent down before you…' refers specifically to the hypocrites and some of the people of the Book who purported to have faith in the Message of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Az-z'am, or claiming, is the pretext for lying. The hypocrites and some of the people of the Book claim that they believed in what has been sent down to him (Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, which is the Quran. They also claim that they believed in what has been sent down before him which are the Torah and the Gospel. Having falsely claimed belief, they ironically want to turn to unjust tyrants for judgment.

At-Tahakum ila As-Shay', or turning to something for judgment, means to seek the help and adjudication of a particular thing to settle and putting an end to the issue of dispute. When we say, 'We have turned to the rule of so and so', this means that we have become fed up with disputes and discord and want to come to a consensus by turning to the rule of someone. As a matter of fact, any two litigating parties would not agree to turn to the rule of a particular system or person unless they are really tired of disputes and arguments. This means that they must be in disagreement on a particular matter or issue, and they are exhausted of arguing about it.

We previously explained that the word At-Taghut refers to a person who is enticed and lured into becoming more unjust and tyrannical; the more people submit to and obey him. There are indeed tyrants who immensely enjoy wronging people so much so that they realise others fear them. This point is definitively proven by the Saying of Allah the Almighty in the chapter of az-Zukhruf in which He Glorified is He explains that when Pharaoh incited his people to levity, they obeyed him. (az-Zukhruf: 54)

The one who does so is thus called Taghut, or an unjust tyrant, to show how extreme his injustice is. This word in question, Taghut, is used mainly to refer to the one who does injustice frequently. It also refers to those who are falsely worshipped beside Allah and who have enacted legislations including commands and prohibitions; it may refer to Satan who tempts people or even to a tyrannical ruler whom people greatly fear his tyranny. Any of these forms squarely falls under the category of At-Taghut. Arab grammarians still hold the position that this particular Arabic word At-Taghut is used to indicate the singular and the plural forms of the noun; this point is proven by the saying of Allah the Almighty in the chapter of al-Baqara in which He Glorified is He plainly clarifies that He is the guardian of those who believe and that He brings them out of the darkness into the light; and (as to) those who disbelieve, their guardians are At-Taghut who take them out of the light into the darkness. (al-Baqara: 257). In this aforementioned verse of Al-Baqara, the word Taghut is used to indicate the plural even though it is in the singular form. The same word in the saying of Allah the Almighty in the chapter of an-Nisa': '… though they were commanded to deny him' is used to refer to the singular.

Thus, it is quite clear now that this particular word, At-Taghut, may be used either in reference to a singular or a plural noun. Undoubtedly, all the rulings of the Quran may have particular causes of revelation; thus, it is not right to confine or restrict the ruling to a particular case for which it was revealed. Rather, we can apply it and extend it to other matters if they share the same condition and reasons. This is based on the following maxim which states, 'It is the generality of the subject matter of the ruling that should be taken into account, and not the specificity of the situation wherein it was revealed.'

This verse was revealed in connection with an incident that occurred with a hypocrite called Bishr. A dispute flared up between him and a Jew, and the Jew wanted to defer to the rule of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. However, the hypocrite wanted Ka‘b ibn Al-Ashraf to arbitrate. The Jew, from his perspective, was certain that he would be entitled to win the dispute, so he did not ask for the judgment of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him out of love for him, but rather, out of love for his justice. For this reason, he preferred the one whom he thought would judge justly. He thus asked Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to arbitrate their dispute, while the hypocrite who allegedly declared to be a Muslim, while concealing his hatred towards Islam, asked to refer the dispute to Ka‘b ibn Al-Ashraf. This proves the verity of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him in delivering and carrying out the Divine Order to judge amongst people justly.

In fact, the fact that the Jew wanted to defer to the rule of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him clearly indicates the Jew’s absolute confidence that the Prophet would never dissipate his right. He did not even ask to defer to the rule of one of the leaders of the Jews the like of Ka‘b ibn Al-Ashraf since he knew that Ibnul Ashraf used to take bribes.

Allah the Almighty finally concludes the verse with His saying, '… Satan wants to lead them far astray?’ As a matter of fact, if they deferred to the rule of an unjust tyrant, like in this case Ka‘b ibn Al-Ashraf, and he judged in favour of the one who had no right, such a judgment would entice everyone who wanted to commit injustice to go to this unjust judge and to defer to his rule. Allah the Almighty describes this act as leading them far astray since injustice will subsequently ensue. Thus, the unjust judge would bear the sin of every case in which he passes a false judgment. This is actually the true meaning of Ad-Dalal Al-Ba'id, or leading them far astray. He Glorified is He then says:

وَإِذَا قِيلَ لَهُمۡ تَعَالَوۡاْ إِلَىٰ مَآ أَنزَلَ ٱللَّهُ وَإِلَى ٱلرَّسُولِ رَأَيۡتَ
ٱلۡمُنَٰفِقِينَ يَصُدُّونَ عَنكَ صُدُودٗا ﴿٦١﴾

When they are told, 'Turn to God's revelations and the Messenger [for judgement],' you see the hypocrites turn right away from you [Prophet] [61] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 61)

The saying of Allah the Almighty 'Turn to…' infers the meaning of calling upon them to come to Him. It is noteworthy to mention that He the Almighty did not use the verb A'qbilu since it means that one is going to someone who is equal to him. However, the word Ta'alaw means 'to go to someone who is of higher rank and who is more exalted.' To further this point, it is of great importance to note that laws enacted and made by human mind are lower in rank than those enacted by Him the Almighty. It is taken for granted that such laws made by human mind and those which pertain to the protection and preservation of societies assume legislators' good intentions and sincerity are clearly shown and are always commensurate with their level and capacity to deduce conclusions and correctly reading the circumstances surrounding them.

However, laws enacted by Allah the Almighty are naturally more superior to those made by humans since He Glorified is He does not miss any particular aspect no matter how small it is. Human legislation, on the other hand, is always associated with a particular situation which may change as events develop. Human laws thereby fall short of assimilating and dealing with what is new. This is due to the emergence of new developments and events that were not taken into consideration by the one who enacted the laws and who, at that time, assumed that they were capable of preserving society. In other words, the mind of the one who enacted the law was thus incapable of conceiving such new developments or anticipating them at that particular of time of making them. Furthermore, most laws are amended only after the legislator fully realises their bad effects on society, the effects which result from the original state of the law made by him. Thus, when new events came into existence and such a law became unable to address their situation, there was a dire need to amend it.

As for Allah's Legislation, it fully protects society by precluding these events from happening from the very beginning. This is the difference between human legislation and laws that are often introduced to save us from provisional and transient events and the Divine Legislation that is intended to safeguard us against the very possibility of such events. Therefore, we can clearly state that laws made by humans look like treatment given to a patient, whereas Divine Legislation is like protective medicine. It is taken for granted that protection is always better than treatment.

For this reason, Allah the Almighty revealed a number of legislations that protect us from and immunise us against the evil that may evolve from the occurrence of certain events. Thus, He the Almighty by virtue of these Divine Laws fully safeguards man from being afflicted with any harm. Therefore, the Mercy of Allah the Almighty decrees that some people will surely be kept away from being inflicted with any harm. Manmade laws, on the other hand, always leave behind victims. Only upon seeing these victims, do the hearts of legislators feel compassionate and sympathetic and decide to change the law they have previously set.

Regarding laws of a positive nature, some people are often obligated to bear the brunt of injustice more than others since these laws are incapable of protecting and preserving man from a comprehensive perspective. By the passage of time, legislators find themselves forced to interfere by amending their previously set laws. Thus, certain group of people will have to suffer from injustice till these laws are modified and amended. As for the Creator Glorified is He He knows His creation quite well. For this reason, He the Almighty did not commit any injustice to anyone of His creation at the expense of the other. He laid down His Divine Legislations in a just manner. In the Quran, He the Almighty strongly stresses the point that He Glorified is He reveals of the Quran that which is a healing and a mercy to the believers. (al-Isra': 82)

The Quran gives us healing for diseases that may afflict and befall us due to carelessness. Furthermore, it is viewed as a mercy, thus fully preventing afflictions and disease. Therefore, the saying of Allah the Almighty 'When they are told, “Turn to Allah’s Revelations and the Messenger [for judgement]", you see the hypocrites turn right away from you [Prophet]' completely exposes and unveils the acts committed by hypocrites, and, as a result, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and the entire society will be fully aware of them.

The saying of Allah the Almighty '…you see the hypocrites turn right away from you [Prophet]' means that they turn their backs right away from you, Prophet Muhammad because they are hypocrites. In truth, every hypocrite suffers from two main problems: a problem related to his tongue and another related to his heart. Verbally, using his tongue, he declares his faith in Allah and His Messenger, Muhammad. However, his heart, meanwhile, is full of contradictory and ambivalent attitudes. This is entirely different from the case of a true believer and even one of a disbeliever. As for a true believer, his faculties are in harmony with each other since his heart has decided to believe and guide him towards the righteous path. Similarly is the case of a disbeliever who is led to the way of destruction and not in harmony with his faculties. The hypocrite, on the other side, disperses his energy and faculties. For this reason, Allah the Almighty states clearly that hypocrites will be in the lowest level of the fire. A disbeliever is consistent with himself; he does not declare faith since his heart is not convinced. He could have pretended to have faith, but he did not verbally claim what his heart opposes. His antagonism towards Islam is thus obvious. However, a hypocrite apparently claims to have faith in public only to attain his goals or in order to take advantage of the rulings of Islam. Yet, he would eagerly seize any opportunity to give up or attack Islam; this point is strongly stressed by Allah the Almighty in the following verse in which He Glorified is He states:

فَكَيۡفَ إِذَآ أَصَٰبَتۡهُم مُّصِيبَةُۢ بِمَا قَدَّمَتۡ أَيۡدِيهِمۡ ثُمَّ
جَآءُوكَ يَحۡلِفُونَ بِٱللَّهِ إِنۡ أَرَدۡنَآ إِلَّآ إِحۡسَٰنٗا وَتَوۡفِيقًا ﴿٦٢﴾

If disaster strikes them because of what they them- selves have done, then they will come to you, swearing by God,
‘We only wanted to do good and achieve harmony' [62]
(The Quran, an-Nisa’: 62)

Thus, the hypocrites are faced with the following question: 'Why did you defer to the rule of unjust tyrants instead of resorting to Prophet

Muhammad?' The answer they are expected to give is the following: 'O, Prophet Muhammad! We only wanted to do well and not to burden you with our problems. Furthermore, we wanted to settle our problems and disputes not involving you so that you would not worry yourself about our problems. As a matter of fact, we never intended by acting as such to disobey you, nor were we disappointed with your judgement.' Truthfully speaking, they claim so after they had been exposed before people by Allah the Almighty.

Allah the Almighty then says: 'If disaster strikes them…' the word Musibah, or calamity is the disaster that causes harm to a person. Since they are hypocrites, they wanted to keep their hypocrisy secret. Thus, when an event results in revealing this secret, it is considered a calamity even though the event itself is not a disaster. As a matter of fact, when we identify hypocrites and expose them before themselves and others, we thus protect ourselves from their evil. However, this exposure is a calamity for them since they wanted to use such hypocrisy to attain personal goals

Thus, revealing their hypocrisy is a disaster for them. They believe that hypocrisy is useful for them as they benefit from the rulings of Islam and its implementation. However, when their hypocrisy is revealed, they are struck with a calamity, exactly like someone who went out to steal and was surprised upon entering the site of his crime to see the police waiting to arrest him Undoubtedly, when the police arrested this thief, this would be considered something good for him since the act of arresting prevented him from committing the crime of theft. Yet, the thief himself would think that he had been struck with a disaster.

When hypocrites are struck with a disaster, they make false oaths in the Name of Allah, and then try to apologise for what they did. They actually do so since they want to remain in permanent hypocrisy. Therefore, they swear to Allah that they deferred to the rule of unjust tyrants since they only wanted to settle their disputes and to achieve harmony with their adversaries. However, Allah the Almighty stresses this fact in the following verse in which He states:

أُوْلَٰٓئِكَ ٱلَّذِينَ يَعۡلَمُ ٱللَّهُ مَا فِي قُلُوبِهِمۡ فَأَعۡرِضۡ عَنۡهُمۡ
وَعِظۡهُمۡ وَقُل لَّهُمۡ فِيٓ أَنفُسِهِمۡ قَوۡلَۢا بَلِيغٗا ٦٣

God knows well what is in the hearts of these people, so ignore what they say, instruct them, and speak to them about themselves using penetrating words [63]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 63)

How great is the Knowledge of Allah the Almighty! He Glorified is He tells Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that had He so willed, He would have made him know them so that he would certainly recognise them by their marks, and most certainly he can recognise them by the intent of (their) speech. (Muhammad: 30)

This means that had Allah the Almighty so willed, He could have informed him peace and blessings be upon him of the hypocrites so that he could easily and clearly identify them. However, He Glorified is He concealed them in the hope that they would repent. He the Almighty then told Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that he would be able to identify them through their style and discourse.

Allah the Almighty then says: 'Allah knows well what is in the hearts of these people…' The hypocrites resorted to unjust tyrants for arbitration. They did so because they knew that they were not right. In addition, they knew that if they referred the dispute to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him he would judge justly. However, these hypocrites are really annoyed with the application of justice. So, the question to be asked here is the following: 'Did they really want to do well and to bring about harmony? Or did they not want to seek the truth and Justice?' They sought false judgment.

For this reason, Allah the Almighty orders Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to ignore what they say since he (Prophet Muhammad) punished them, which means that he took revenge on them. However, Allah did not want him to do so since He the Almighty wanted to retaliate on his behalf. In addition, he (Prophet Muhammad) did so since He Glorified is He wanted their true intentions to be gradually revealed and exposed to the society of believers. This way, believers would know that there were people who infused themselves subtly into their community. For this reason, you (O, Muslims) have to be careful and cautious. Furthermore, if you leave them alone and turn away from them, you will no longer occupy your mind with calling them to Islam.

He the Almighty then tells Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to 'instruct them.' This means the following: 'Tell them (O, Prophet Muhammad) to be ashamed of their deeds.' He the Almighty finally concludes the verse with His saying, '…and speak to them about themselves using penetrating words.' This part of the verse implies an order to Prophet Muhammad to call them in such a way that would reveal to them the ultimate objective and purpose of the human soul and which, meanwhile, would achieve the goals of admonition.

In other words, Allah the Almighty orders Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to warn them (hypocrites) in a way that terrifies, deters them (from the evil consequences of hypocrisy) or even exposes what they have concealed in their hearts so that they would know that Allah has revealed to him (Prophet Muhammad) what they hide and veil in the hope that they might be ashamed of what they do and thus refrain from doing it. Their intentions should be exposed to them, but not publicly because if he were not exposing them in public, they may feel shy enough to quit their hypocrisy. Furthermore, he should do as such since any admonition will achieve a good effect if the admonisher puts forward his admonition privately. In reality, exposing the one to be admonished in public may provoke his stubbornness. But if Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him admonishes him privately, he would realise that he is still merciful towards him, by dealing with him in a good and lenient manner.

The saying of Allah the Almighty 'instruct them, and speak to them about themselves using penetrating words' thus indicates that if he (Prophet Muhammad) were to do so (expose them) in public, he will set this as an example for others to follow. Allah has already revealed solely to him the disbelief in the hearts of disbelievers. Indeed, He the Almighty did not reveal such secrets to anyone but him (Prophet Muhammad). As a matter of fact, there are some people who are falsely accused of disbelief. This happens in spite of the fact that our Shari'a tells us to ward off legal punishments when there is doubt and uncertainty involved.

A case in point is when a thief is caught, but there is still doubt as to whether or not he was the perpetrator of the crime in question. This doubt consequently should be interpreted in the interest of the defendant. Thus, we should avoid the administration of the penalty due to the existence of doubt. It is indeed not in the interest of Muslims to say daily that the hand of a thief has been cut off or that an adulteress has been stoned to death. However, if a crime is discovered and there is no doubt about the identity of its perpetrator, then the proper penalty should be administered and imposed. We avoid administering penalties so that we avoid harming an innocent person. Yet, we administer the penalties to deter everyone whose inner self may feel tempted to do something prohibited by Allah the Almighty. In fact, when a penalty is administered in a given community, it is only carried out for a short period of time until the rate of crimes shrinks, to the extent that there are no longer thefts or fornications being committed.

Thus, the saying of Allah the Almighty 'instruct them, and speak to them about themselves using penetrating words' carries an order to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to seriously threaten them so that they would be deterred from doing wrong. It may also indicate that he (Prophet Muhammad) is supposed to reveal and expose to them their concealed flaws and mistakes, yet he should do so privately since this is more likely to make them accept his admonition and refrain from being stubborn.

The Chapter of

an-Nisa’

Continued

He the Almighty then says:

وَمَآ أَرْسَلْنَا مِن رَّسُولٍ إِلَّا لِيُطَاعَ بِإِذْنِ ٱللَّهِ ۚ وَلَوْ أَنَّهُمْ إِذ
ظَّلَمُوٓا۟ أَنفُسَهُمْ جَآءُوكَ فَٱسْتَغْفَرُوا۟ ٱللَّهَ وَٱسْتَغْفَرَ لَهُمُ
ٱلرَّسُولُ لَوَجَدُوا۟ ٱللَّهَ تَوَّابًا رَّحِيمًا ﴿٦٤﴾

All the messengers We sent were meant to be obeyed, by God's leave. If only [the hypocrites] had come to you [Prophet] when they wronged themselves, and begged God's forgiveness, and the Messenger had asked forgiveness for them, they would have found that God accepts repentance and is most merciful [64] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 64)

The main purpose of sending the truth to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is to teach people the Shari'a laid down by Him the Almighty as manifested in the course He Glorified is He set and to guide them to the true religion. This course involves a set of rules in the form of 'dos' and 'don'ts.' Yet, whatever matter for which there is no explicit commands as to whether or not one should do it, one is thus free to choose whatever suits his case. Indeed, no Prophet brought about legal obligations from his own mind; rather, all legal obligations are decreed by Him the Almighty. Thus, a Messenger is only obeyed due to the authorisation granted to him by Allah. Therefore, obedience to Allah is clearly manifested by obeying Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Likewise, he may be authorised by Allah in other matters. This is quite clear in the Divine Order in the chapter of al-Hashr in which Allah orders us to accept willingly whatever Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him gives us and to refrain from what he prohibits us: 'whatsoever the Messenger gives you, take it, and whatsoever he forbids you, abstain from it.' (al-Hashr: 7).

This clearly indicates that those who truly believe in the Message of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him have to obey him in light of the authorisation given to him by Allah the Almighty to enact laws.

As for the saying of Allah the Almighty '…If only [the hypocrites] had come to you [Prophet] when they wronged themselves, and begged Allah's Forgiveness, and the Messenger had asked forgiveness for them, they would be found that Allah accepts repentance and is most Merciful', Zhulm an-Nafs, or sinning against oneself, happens when one hastens to satiate a desire without carefully considering the suffering he will afflict himself with. Undoubtedly, 'sinning against oneself' is the most egregious form of injustice one could commit. It is plausible that one may wrong another person, but to intentionally wrong oneself seems rather implausible. Any sinner, who does not fulfil an enacted legal obligation and pursues something prohibited by Allah the Almighty may be under the false impression that he has achieved a gratification when, in fact, what he is really doing, is a great injustice to himself. This is why we say to the one who commits sins like refraining from offering prayers and being lazy about performing them, drinking wine or committing any other form of sin: 'You have wronged yourself since you have mistakenly thought that you were gratifying and enjoying it, when in fact, you have incurred by doing it severe and eternal suffering. You cannot thereby be entrusted with yourself.'

The 'self', as we know, refers to the union of the soul with physical form. This union is what causes the human self to be either Nafsun Mutma'innah, or a tranquil self, or Nafsun Ammarah bi As-Su', or a self that incites one to do wrong, or Nafsun Lawwamah, or a reproaching self. Once the soul is united with its physical form, the human self comes into existence. Before being unified with its physical form, the soul is good by nature, and so is its physical form prior to being united with the soul. In fact, the physical form is subservient and subdued to the Will of Allah the Almighty and thus acts according to His Commands. Thus, we shall never differentiate between the soul and its physical form by calling them as follows: 'the material life is such and such, while the spiritual life is such and such.' This is completely wrong.

The physical form is good in an absolute sense, obedient and subservient to Allah the Almighty and so is the soul. So, when does corruption ensue? Undoubtedly, when the soul is unified with its physical form and this integration between both of them occurs, we say, 'O, man, who is legally charged! Are you going to eagerly obey the Commands of Allah the Almighty and thus acquire a reassured soul? Or will you choose for your soul to be a reproaching one? Or will you choose to show disobedience to Allah and, as a result, acquire a soul which is a persistent enjoiner of evil?

This raises a question, 'Who wrongs whom?' It is your human desire when violating the Rules of Allah that it wrongs the unity of the soul and matter. As a matter of fact, when one commits a sin, he mistakenly thinks that he has satiated his, yet he did not taken into consideration the fact that by doing this crime, he has caused himself much trouble. Allah the Almighty says: '…If only [the hypocrites] had come to you [Prophet] when they wronged themselves… Let us then distinguish that there is a difference between someone committing a sin to satisfy his lust and another who wrongs himself. This difference is quite clear in the saying of Allah the Almighty in the chapter of Al-'Imran in which He Glorified is He encourages those who commit an act of indecency or an injustice against their souls to remember Allah and ask forgiveness for their souls: 'And those who, when they commit a foul deed or wrong themselves, remember Allah and implore forgiveness for their sins…' (Al-'Imran: 135).

Therefore, this indicates clearly that committing a shameful deed and sinning against oneself are two different things. By committing a shameful deed, one marginally gratifies himself. However, the one who sinned against himself did not do so; he neither gratified himself nor left it alone, and he did not satiate his lusts in this worldly life, nor did he mercifully protect it from torment in the Hereafter. A (false) witness who gives false testimony so that someone may take the right of another is committing an egregious sin against himself. For this reason, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is reported to have said, 'Hasten to do good deeds before you are overtaken by tribulations which would be like a part of the dark night. A man would be a believer in the morning and become a disbeliever in the evening, or he would be a believer in the evening and become a disbeliever in the morning. He would sell his Faith for worldly goods.'(1)

In addition, one may sin against himself by deferring to the rule of the powers of evil or unjust tyrants. However, when one defers to the rule of a ruler or a judge, he, while doing so, does not know for certain whether the ruler or judge will pass the verdict or the judgement correctly or not.

Therefore, Allah's saying, '…If only [the hypocrites] had come to you [Prophet] when they wronged themselves…' indicates that they refrained from going to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. So, the first step of their repentance is to retract what they have committed, and then they should seek Allah's forgiveness for their sins. Truly, the sin they committed by not going to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him plainly means sinning against the One Who sent him peace and blessings be upon him. For this reason, people say, 'Insulting Prophet Muhammad means insulting the One Who sent him.' It is true that their refraining from going to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is a matter that concerns him, but if you carefully reflect on the matter, you will fully realise that it is concerns the One Who sent him, or, namely, Allah the Almighty. This is due to the fact that he did not do anything of his own accord. After Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is sufficiently conciliated, he will ask Allah to forgive them. Thus, they must first go to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him; second, they must ask Allah for forgiveness and third, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would then ask Allah to forgive them.

(1) Muslim, Sahih

He the Almighty finally concludes the verse with His saying, '…they would have found that Allah accepts repentance and is most merciful.' This part of the verse clearly indicates that Allah Glorified is He will not accept their repentance, nor will He show Mercy to them unless they return to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him instead of turning their backs to him. Then, they are supposed to ask Allah for forgiveness since He the Almighty did not send any Messenger or Prophet but to be obeyed by His Leave. Thus, if you ever disagree with Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him you should take into account the fact that you have actually disagreed with the One Who sent him, namely, Allah the Almighty. Actually, if you have asked Allah the Almighty for forgiveness without conciliating Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, He will not accept your repentance. No one can strengthen his relation with Allah Glorified is He without improving his relation with Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him in the first place.

When they fulfil all these requirements, which include going to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and asking Allah and him for their forgiveness, they will find that Allah accepts their repentance and is most Merciful. The word Tawwab, or acceptor of repentance, indicates that their sin was great and major.

Allah the Almighty created His creation knowing that their thoughts and desires are subject to change and that desires might flare up in their selves at any given moment, causing them to slip into sinning. Since our Lord is the Most Merciful, He explained to us the remedy to such forgetfulness. It is inconceivable that He the Almighty would abandon His sinful servants. This is why He allowed His sinful servants to return to Him because He Glorified is He likes His servants to repent and take refuge in Him even if they sinfrequently.

Therefore, He the Almighty teaches us how to remove the effects of sins. He thus said: '…If only [the hypocrites] had come to you [Prophet] when they wronged themselves…' The remedy for a given sin is to return to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him since they were forgetful and careless of the fact that Allah's Commands and His message, along with His Legislation and Rulings, was conveyed to them by Prophet Muhammad and is revealed from Allah. After submitting and returning to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him they should ask Allah for forgiveness, along with asking him to beseech Allah for their forgiveness and to support their repentance. If they do so, they will find that Allah accepts their repentance and that He is Most Merciful. He Glorified is He and then says:

فَلَا وَرَبِّكَ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ حَتَّىٰ يُحَكِّمُوكَ فِيمَا شَجَرَ بَيْنَهُمْ ثُمَّ
لَا يَجِدُوا۟ فِىٓ أَنفُسِهِمْ حَرَجًا مِّمَّا قَضَيْتَ وَيُسَلِّمُوا۟ تَسْلِيمًا (٦٥)

By your Lord, they will not be true believers until they let you decide between them in all matters of dispute, and find no resistance in their souls to your decisions, accepting them totally [65] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 65)

Thus, we should support our faith by accepting and embracing all what has been revealed to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Indeed, just as much as the hypocrites asked someone else to adjudicate amongst them, despite their ostensibly embracing of Islam, they were banished out of sphere of faith. All believers should heed this example.

We must note that the saying of Allah the Almighty 'By your Lord, they will not believe…' contains the Arabic particle La which indicates negation. It also clearly indicates that Allah the Almighty had sworn by Himself. We know that that hypocrites had deferred to the rule of someone other than Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him even though they had professed that he is the Messenger of Allah. So, is it conceivable for them to admit such a testimony, and then seek another judge and refuse to accept his peace and blessings be upon him judgment? Allah passed His Judgment on this matter. He Glorified is He plainly states that hypocrites, by doing so, can no longer be called Muslims. Thus, if it is confirmed that they testified that Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah, and at the same time, they resorted to another arbitrator beside him, then, they should know that Allah's Judgment on the matter is that they do not merit the honour of professing that Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah. Allah the Almighty then swore by Himself. As a matter of fact, we, human beings, are not allowed to swear except in the in the Name of Allah, but Allah Glorified is He may swear in the name of whatever thing He likes and about whatever thing He wills. That is why we find Him the Almighty in many verses in the Quran swearing by Mount Sinai (at-Tur: 1), adh-Dhariat, or winds that scatter the dust far and wide (adh-Dhariyat: 1), at-Tin and az-Zaytun, or figs and olives (at-Tin: 1) and the angels (as-Saffat: 1).

However, as far as humans are concerned, we find that He the Almighty did not swear by anyone except His Messenger Muhammad. In the Quran, He the Almighty swears by the life of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. (al-Hijr: 72)

In this aforementioned verse of the chapter of al-Hijr, He the Almighty swears by the life of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that they were blindly wandering, intoxicated. This means that they are astray inasmuch as they continue in their state of being misguided, and thus, they can never be guided to the truth. He Glorified is He also swears by Himself as plainly stated in the chapter of adh-Dhariyat in which he the Almighty swore by being the Lord of the heavens and the earth. (adh-Dhariyat: 23) As a matter of fact, when He the Almighty swears by the heavens and earth, this clearly indicates how great these two creatures are, which is a point that is strongly stressed by the verse in which He the Almighty states that the creation of the heavens and the earth is indeed greater than that of man. (Ghafir: 57) This means that if you, human being, draw a comparison between the creation of the heavens and the earth and your creation, you will fully realise that their creation is greater than yours.

The verse under discussion plainly indicates Allah's Honouring Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Furthermore, it definitively proves the high status and superiority of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Thus, do not think (O, mankind) that when Allah the Almighty states that the creation of the heavens and the earth is greater than the creation of man that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is included amongst the men referred to in this verse. He the Almighty explains that this is not the case by swearing in the name of the life of Prophet Muhammad in the same way He Glorified is He swore in the name of the heavens and the earth. Undoubtedly, swearing by the fact of being the Lord of the heavens and the earth points out the Absolute and the Ultimate Power of Allah the Almighty; He is the Creator, the Lord, the Protector and the Lord.

The cosmic law suffices for the purpose of creating the heavens and the earth and running their affairs properly. However, the creation of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him can be interpreted as a supreme goal, meaning that He the Almighty wanted to bring him up in a way that encompasses all the graces of prophecy. He Glorified is He thus told him: 'By your Lord Who created, fashioned, brought up and qualified you to be the best of His Creation and the seal of His Prophets and to be a Mercy to His entire Creation, they will not truly believe until they let you decide between them in all matters of disputes.' Is it inconceivable after all of this not to let Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him decide in all matters of disputes among you?!

Hakkam is an Arabic verb that is translated by the verbal clause 'to let you decide between them in all the matters of dispute'; it shares the same linguistic root with judgment, arbitration, wisdom and control. All these semantic references are derived from the word Al-Hakamah, which is the iron-brace, placed in the mouth of the horse to keep it from going astray and is used by the owner or rider of the horse to direct him to the right or to the left. Similarly, Al-Hikmah, or wisdom, is to keep everyone from going astray and appropriating other people's rights. Thus, arbitration, judgment and wisdom are all words that refer to the importance of placing things in their right and due positions.

The verb Shajara, which means disagree, is derived from the root composed of the three letters: Ash-Shin, Al-Jim and Ar-Ra'. If you see these three letters in any given word, then you shall know that it is derived from the word Shajarah, or tree, with which you are familiar. In fact, there are certain plants that do not stick to each other. Yet, there are others that stick closely to each other and interweave together. For instance, we see certain kinds of trees that are often intertwined with each other and that have branches closely interlaced to the extent that the beholder will not be able to distinguish which leaves belong to which tree. Furthermore, if the two trees were of the same kind and they bore their fruits, you would not even be able to tell which fruits came from which tree. This means that things have become mixed with each other.

The saying of Allah the Almighty Shajara Baynahum, translated as 'disagree among themselves' means that a dispute has flared up, and things have become so intricate and confused with each other. When you try to separate between two intertwined trees of the same kind or distinguish their fruits from each other, you will not be able to do so since you will find that their identical branches have been interlaced with each other. However, if you are mainly interested in reaping the fruits of both trees, it will not make a difference which fruits come from which tree. You will just reap the fruits wherever they are, irrespective of the tree that bore it. Similarly, if you wanted to spend some time under the shade of a tree, you would not mind which tree is casting the shade you enjoy. This is the benefit of blending two equals with each other. However, if one wants a specific leaf, he will carefully choose it because he needs it for a specific purpose.

Naturally, the entire creation of Allah the Almighty is equal before Him. Thus, they were supposed to share property equally among themselves when they started to mingle and deal with each other. However, due to the fact that the human soul tends to be stingy by nature, people started to fight over property. For this reason, an intelligent judge must say to disputants, 'Do you want me to judge amongst you fairly and justly or based on what is better than justice?’ The two may then be taken aback and wonder, 'Is there anything better than justice?’ The judge may then answer, 'Yes, grace is better than justice, for as long as the subject matter of dispute is amongst brothers, then the interest of each party cannot be at odds with the interest of the other. Accordingly, there should be no dispute.' However, if there is disagreement, someone has to decisively arbitrate between the two altercating parties.

Who, then, can undertake this mission of judging disputes? It is undoubtedly our master Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. This is based and proven by the saying of Allah the Almighty in which He swore by Himself that they would not be true believers unless they let him (Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him decide in all matters of dispute amongst them. Faith is not merely a verbal utterance; rather, one must meet the requirements of faith to achieve this particular function. You, while embracing Islam, must say, 'I profess that there is no god but Allah and that Muhammad is the Messenger of Allah.' However, in order for this utterance to be indicative of true faith, it has to be conjoined with action and the performance of action. Furthermore, one's life must be governed by this saying. Consequently, one must firmly believe that there is no one deserving to be worshipped except Allah the Almighty. Allah is the Only One Who issues (Divine) Commands. There is no benefactor except Him, and no one is capable of causing harm except Him the Almighty. Also, there is no legislator besides Him. Therefore, professing that there is no god but Allah is not merely a verbal utterance that you may completely ignore when you actually face a situation that calls for the application of the principle of faith. For example, Allah the Almighty tells Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that hypocrites will not believe in the religion of Islam until they wholeheartedly let him (Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him) be the one to decide amongst them in all matters of dispute. Furthermore, they must find no resistance in their souls to his judgment. Moreover, they must completely accept the judgements and verdicts given by him peace and blessings be upon him.

Thus, faith is not a mere verbal utterance. Rather, it entails the practical application of such statement by resorting and referring to it for day-to-day life chores and activities. This means that hypocrites do not really believe unless they turn their faith into actual practice, undoubtedly, Allah has chosen the most critical time in the experience of the human soul, namely, the moment of rivalry and disagreement that causes enmity and abets one to deviate from the truth. Then, Allah the Almighty emphasises the fact that hypocrites must completely accept the judgement of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. He the Almighty thus says: 'By your Lord, they will not be true believers until they let you decide between them in all matters of dispute, and find no resistance in their souls to your decisions, accepting them completely.'

If we reflect carefully upon the three conditions: the first is 'If only [the hypocrites] had come to you [Prophet] when they wronged themselves'; the second is 'and (they) begged Allah’s Forgiveness', while the third condition is 'and the Messenger had asked forgiveness for them', we will find that these three represent the remedy for expiating sins. In the same respect, you are also admitted into the realm of faith upon meeting the following three conditions: the first is 'By your Lord, they will not be true believers until they let you decide between them in all matters of dispute'; the second is 'and find no resistance in their souls to your decisions'; while the third is 'accepting them completely.’ Thus, the two statements are about Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: one pertaining to the removal of sins, while the other is concerned with faith.

I thus do not exaggerate if I say that I pondered on this saying of Allah for more than ten years, namely, 'If only [the hypocrites] had come to you [Prophet] when they wronged themselves, and begged Allah’s Forgiveness, and the Messenger had asked forgiveness for them, they would be found that Allah accepts repentance and is most merciful.' This statement is an admonition and recipe for salvation that You, Allah, gave to the contemporaries of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. However, what about those who were not contemporaries of him peace and blessings be upon him? What admonition and recipe for salvation would You give them? In fact, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was sent to all of mankind. So, how is it conceivable that there is an admonition that this addressed exclusively to only those who were contemporaries of him peace and blessings be upon him and of which those who have not seen and lived with him would be deprived?!

This question preoccupied my mind for a long time without reaching any decisive answer. However, I have reached the same conclusion of some scholars before me that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said the following Hadith as a means of comforting and conciliating believers during all times, 'My life is good for you. You will do things and things will be done to you. When I die, my death will also be good for you. Your deeds will be shown to me. If I see that you do good deeds, I will thank Allah for that, and if I see that you do evil deeds, I will ask Him the Almighty to forgive you.'(1) Consider the conciliating tone in the following saying of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him '…Your deeds will be shown to me (after my death). If I see that you do good deeds, I will be pleased, and if I see that you do evil deeds, I will ask Allah the Almighty to forgive you.'(2)

The fact that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him will ask Allah the Almighty to forgive us is thus guaranteed. All what we have to do is to ask Allah Glorified is He for forgiveness. In other words, what remains for them is to return to him, or in other words, to adhere firmly to his Sunnah. Regarding this, he peace and blessings be upon him is reported to have said, 'I have left two matters with you. As long as you hold to them, you will not go astray. They are the Book of Allah and the Sunnah of His Prophet.'(3)

As much as the contemporaries of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him used to rely to him, we rely on his rulings, tradition and legislation. He thus asks forgiveness for all of us. What is left for us is to ask Allah for forgiveness by saying, 'We seek forgiveness from Allah, the Magnificent, whom there is none worthy of worship but Him, the Ever-Living, the Lord of all existence, and we repent to Him.' We will do so if Allah wills.

The saying of Allah the Almighty '…and find no resistance in their souls to your decisions, accepting them completely'; means that they would not find any resentment or hesitancy in their heart when they accept and submit to any obligation or ruling decreed by Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Legal obligations, as we know, often assume the form of 'dos' or 'don'ts.' However, verdicts differ in that they are passed when people disagree with each other on a particular matter. This requires us to accept the verdict in any given dispute if it is issued by Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Thus, we have to submit completely to what Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him decrees, whether it be a legal obligation or a verdict. He the Almighty then says:

---

(1) As-Suyuti, Sahih

(2) Ibn Sa'd, Good

(3) Muawtta', Good

وَلَوْ أَنَّا كَتَبْنَا عَلَيْهِمْ أَنِ ٱقْتُلُوٓا۟ أَنفُسَكُمْ أَوِ ٱخْرُجُوا۟ مِن دِيَـٰرِكُم مَّا فَعَلُوهُ إِلَّا قَلِيلٌ
مِّنْهُمْ ۖ وَلَوْ أَنَّهُمْ فَعَلُوا۟ مَا يُوعَظُونَ بِهِۦ لَكَانَ خَيْرًا لَّهُمْ وَأَشَدَّ تَثْبِيتًا ﴿٦٦﴾

if We had ordered, ‘Lay down your lives’ or ‘Leave your homes,’ they would not have done so, except for a few – it would have been far better for them and stronger confirmation of their faith, if they had done as they were told [66] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 66)

In this verse, the True Lord the Most High equates the command of killing oneself to the command of forsaking one’s homeland. Killing signifies the departure of the soul from the body by a coercive force other than natural death. Similarly, the command to forsake one’s homeland is a coercive evacuation from one’s homeland. Therefore, the process of killing is described as being akin to, or as bad as, the process of being driven out of one’s homeland. Both cause suffering; both are difficult experiences for human beings.

The True Lord the Most High also mentions these two rulings that were imposed, at one time, upon the people of Musa (Moses) peace be upon him. Allah Glorified is He says: '…and (remember) when Musa (Moses) said to his people, ‘O, my people! Verily, you have wronged yourselves by worshipping the calf. So turn in repentance to your Creator and kill yourselves…’ (al-Baqara: 54).

It was narrated that when the people of Musa (Moses) peace be upon him heard this ruling, seventy thousands of them killed themselves. We also know that the people of Musa (Moses) peace be upon him were driven out of their homes and wandered around in the desert. In this regard, Allah Glorified is He says: 'Therefore, it (this holy land) is forbidden to them for forty years; in distraction they will wander through the land.' (al-Ma‘ida: 26) This means that they were forbidden to either enter or possess the holy land. In this respect, the True Lord the Most High clarifies that Islam, unlike the ordinances of previous Divine messages, did not rule that repentance should involve killing oneself. These laws were based on the threat of inevitable ruin of the person whose inner self tempts to violate Allah’s Law. It is out of Allah’s Kindness that He the Most High did not impose any such ruling on us. For this reason, our masters, 'Abdullah ibn Mas‘ud, ‘Ammar ibn Yassir and Thabit ibn Qays Allah be pleased with them collectively responded to this verse by saying, 'By Allah, if we were commanded to do so, we would have done it.' Our leader 'Umar Allah be pleased with him also said, 'By Allah, if we were commanded to do so, we would have done it, but, praise be to Allah, He did not decree this upon us. This is due to Allah's Kindness. He the Most High explains to them that 'If We (Allah) had ordered them (saying), "Kill yourselves" or "Leave your homes"...' (an-Nisa': 66), as He had commanded the people of Musa (Moses) peace be upon him what would they have done then? Instead, our Lord accepted their supplication, 'Our Lord! Lay not on us a burden like that which You did lay on those before us. Our Lord! Put not on us a burden greater than we have strength to bear....' (al-Baqara: 286)

Allah the Most High answered their supplication. So, the question that arises is the following: 'What would you do if Allah had decreed such a ruling for you?' The reason underlying this story was that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him had a cousin named Az-Zubayr ibn Al-'Awwam Allah be pleased with him who was one of the Ten Given the Glad Tidings of Paradise. He and another man named Hatib ibn Abu Balt'a Allah be pleased with him used to live in Medina. Anyone who visits Medina knows that there is an area there called Al-Harrah where the ground is covered by black stones with a burnt-like appearance. There are also many Hitan, or gardens, in this area. People there used to call a garden Ha'it, which means wall; it had gotten this name due to the fear of the destruction of their land by floods, they used to build a wall around cultivated lands that would protect it from floods and delineate its borders. Hatib ibn Abu Balt'a Allah be pleased with him owned a piece of land that was lower than the land that was owned by Az-Zubayr*, Allah be pleased with him*. So the flood would flow downwards from the land of Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him to the land of Hatib Allah be pleased with him. We know that rain falls over a place in a scattered manner; subsequently, water from different directions converges into a rivulet which the Arabs called Shiraj and used to irrigate their lands.

When a flood occurred, both Az-Zubayr and Hatib Allah be pleased with them wanted to irrigate their lands, which resulted in a dispute between them. The land of Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him was higher than that of Hatib Allah be pleased with him who wanted the water to pass through his land first, and then have Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him start irrigating his land. When they asked Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to arbitrate between them, he passed a verdict in favour of Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him since justice was on his side. Indeed, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would never infringe on someone else's right for the sake of kinship. Indeed, there are instances where, in order to gain fame for being just and fair, certain people make erroneous judgements. For example, someone's son may have a dispute with another person, and just for the sake of avoiding people thinking that he is biased towards his son, he may pass a judgment against him. This is unjust. Justice requires that you judge justly, and then ask your son to waive his right by way of favour. True courage consists in judging fairly, even if this judgment is against yourself since truth and justice should be dearer to you than your own self.

This incident is related by Imam Al-Bukhari Allah be pleased with him in his Sahih as follows: Abu Al-Yaman narrated on the authority of Shu‘aib, and he on the authority of Az-Zuhari, who narrated that ‘Urwa ibn Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him said that (his father) Az-Zubayr once disputed with an Ansari man, who was a participant in (the battle of) Badr, over a stream in Al-Harrah from which they both used to water their date palm trees. They brought their dispute before the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him. The Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him said to Az-Zubayr, 'O Zubayr, irrigate (your garden) first, and then let the water flow to your neighbour.' However, the Ansari man became angry and said, 'O, Messenger of Allah, is it because he (Az-Zubayr) is your cousin?' On that, the face of Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him changed colour (due to anger), and he said (to Az-Zubayr), 'Irrigate (your garden), and then hold the water till it rises up to the walls (the pits surrounding the palms).' Thus, the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him allowed Az-Zubayr to take his right in full, although before that he had suggested to Az-Zubair a middle course of action that suited them both. However, when the Ansari man made the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him angry, he gave Az-Zubair his right in full, as stated clearly in his ruling. `Urwah then added that Az-Zubayr said, 'By Allah, I think the following verse was revealed concerning this case: "But no, by your Lord, they can have no faith, until they make you (O, Muhammad) judge in all disputes between them."' (an-Nisa': 65) (1)

(1) Narrated by Al-Bukhari in the Book of Sulh (Reconciliation); Muslim in the Book of Fada'il (Merits), At-Tirmidhi in the Book of Ahkam (Legal Rulings), An-Nasa'i in the Book of Qudah (Judges) and Ibn Majah in Al-Muqadimah (Introduction)

When Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him ruled in favour of allowing Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him to irrigate his land and then to let the water flow down to his neighbour, Hatib ibn Abu Balt'a Allah be pleased with him disliked this verdict. He objected to it, saying that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him ruled this way since Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him was his cousin. It was customary for Arabs to drop a subtle word only and leave the rest of the meaning to the insight of the listener to figure out. It was as if Hatib ibn Abu Balt'a Allah be pleased with him meant to say that he ruled in his favour because he is his cousin. Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, therefore, became angry on realising that Ibn Abu Balt'a Allah be pleased with him did not appreciate the justice of a true verdict. Many of the people who searched for a way to attack Islam claimed that the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him initially ruled that Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him should water his land and then let the water flow down to Hatib. However, when Hatib Allah be pleased with him was infuriated with the verdict, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him told Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him to water his land and to take his right in full, along with taking as much water as his land required, and then letting the water flow down to his neighbour. Therefore, they ask: Why did Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him change his verdict?

Such people do not pay attention to the fact that the land that belonged to Az-Zubayr was high, whereas the land of Hatib was low. If you look at any valley, you will notice that fertility and greenness is often concentrated in the centre of the valley, and not at its periphery. Water always flows from a high ground to low ground. Accordingly, if you allow the owner of the lower land to irrigate his land first, the owner of the higher land will have nothing left for him.

This shows that the first ruling was based on facilitating matters and building tolerance on the part of Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him. As for the second ruling, it was based entirely on justice and fair dealing. By the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him allowing Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him to exercise his full right and take as much water as he needed, it was as if Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was saying to Az-Zubayr Allah be pleased with him that he would deal with him justly without bias or considerations. The True Lord the Most High says: 'But no, by your Lord, they can have no faith, until they make you (O, Muhammad) judge in all disputes between them, and find in themselves no resistance against your decisions, and accept (them) with full submission.' (an-Nisa': 65)

If this was the order received from Allah, how would you react if such rulings, revealed to the prophets of previous nations, became binding upon you? In fact, when they were ordered to kill themselves or forsake their homelands, only a few, who had a firm and unwavering faith, fulfilled these orders. From this we can learn that Allah never leaves a nation completely devoid of those who adhere to His Laws and Commands and fulfil them as they ought to be fulfilled.

Concerning '…if they had done what they were told, it would have been better for them…' (an-Nisa': 66), assume that Allah ordered you 'Kill yourself' or 'Forsake your homeland' and people complied with His Order, they would find that their compliance with Allah's Order would bring them much more good than what they expected as opposed to refraining from what they were ordered. People should ask themselves, 'What is the purpose of having faith in Allah, and what is the use of such faith?'

Through out your worldly journey, you are experiencing and utilising the means and causes that Allah created for you. Why should you be upset about proceeding to live with the One Who initiates the cause of all causes? Why should you be upset if Allah said, 'Kill yourself'? He told you so because through death you are transferred back to the One Who initiates the cause of all causes and shall live forever without labour or toil.

The Rulings of Allah are always intended for the elevation of mankind. During our worldly lives, we see people who are given their food, ready to eat, just by ringing a bell. However, no matter how improved and advanced worldly life gets, it cannot reach the extent of having what one desires merely by thinking of it without even going through the trouble of ringing a bell or exerting any effort. So, why should any human who lives depending on means and causes and is about to proceed to live with the One Who initiates the cause of all causes be upset? On the contrary, they should be happy since they will find much more goodness. By comparing your worldly life to the Afterlife, you will discover that your stay in this world is uncertain and finite, along with the pleasure you experience in it being restricted by the limits of your own capacity. However, when you proceed to meet with Allah, you will cease to be finite, neither in terms of lifetime nor capacity. Rather, you will live eternally and the delights which you will have, will not be by human standards, but according to Allah’s Grace and Generosity.

Also, concerning '…if they had done what they were told, it would have been better for them and more strengthening (to faith) ' (an-Nisa’: 66), the goodness brought about will, indeed, be more strengthening to the faith of others since they who see them adhering to the Commands of Allah will learn with certainty that these commands would surely lead them to a much better end than their status quo. Thus, their obedience to Allah strengthens the faith of those who follow them. Or this verse could mean that if they abide by the Command of Allah, which entails following and obeying and complying with Prophet Muhammad's rulings, since he never says anything out of personal bias or interest, this would be for their own good both in this life and the Hereafter and would effectively strengthen and stabilise the faith in their hearts.

وَإِذٗا لَّأٓتَيۡنَٰهُم مِّن لَّدُنَّآ أَجۡرًا عَظِيمٗا ﴿٦٧﴾

And We would have given them a rich reward of Our own [67] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 67)

If they had done what they were advised to do, then 'indeed We (Allah) should then have bestowed upon them a great reward from Ourselves' (an-Nisa’: 67). Once you hear 'from Ourselves' (an-Nisa’: 67) know that what follows is outside the power or action of any created being and is purely a bounty from Allah. The True Lord the Most High reveals to us His Path and Law through His Messengers, yet He the Most High explains that He has singled out some people for special bounties and gifted them with special knowledge out of His Grace. He is the One Who says: 'Then they found one of Our servants, unto whom We had bestowed mercy from Us, and whom We had taught knowledge from Us.' (al-Kahf: 65)

The previous noble verse signifies that the knowledge that Allah the Most High gave to this servant was unknown to Musa (Moses) peace be upon him. Allah’s bestowal of knowledge is determined by His Will, and we already know that good deeds and the rewards for them follow a specific system. Anyone who does a good deed is granted a tenfold reward in return, but there are certain good deeds that are rewarded without limit. Allah repays such deeds according to His Grace. We encounter instances of this in many of our life's dealings. Let me give you this simple example, and for Allah is the highest and loftiest description. For example, you may ask your son, 'How much will the payment be for this work?' He may answer, 'A hundred pounds.' You may then say, 'Here is a hundred for the work you are doing and an extra fifty pounds from me.' What does 'from me' mean in this context? It means that the extra fifty pounds do not have anything to do with the payment for the work he had done.

Based on what we have previously discussed concerning the part of the verse: '…if We (Allah) had ordered them (saying), "Kill yourselves"…' (an-Nisa': 66), there is a difference between killing and death. It is true that both of them involve the termination of life, but death is a termination of life without the destruction of the body. On the other hand, killing is a termination of life through the destruction of the body, as when someone breaks the head of someone else or shoots him with a bullet in the heart. This is a destruction of the biological functioning of the body. The soul cannot dwell except in a body with certain characteristics intact. In the latter case, the soul does not depart from the body first; rather, the body has been destroyed first. Once the body is destroyed, it no longer becomes fit to contain the soul. The well-known example is that of an electric bulb. If you throw a small pebble at it, it will shatter into pieces, and the light will go out even though electricity is still available. It can only generate light if it is contained in a vessel with specific characteristics intact. If these specific characteristics are eliminated, the light will go off as well. We thus need to get a new a bulb that has the proper specifications so as to get the light back.

The same holds for the soul; it can only dwell in a body of certain characteristics. If you damage these specific characteristics, the most important of which is the brain, by inflicting a severe blow to it, you will destroy the entire structure of the body. In this case, the soul departs from the body since it is no longer a proper dwelling for it. By contrast, death is a termination of life without bodily damage. The following saying of the True Lord the Most High establishes this point: 'Muhammad is no more than a Messenger and indeed (many) Messengers have passed away before him. If he dies or is killed, will you then turn back on your heels (as disbelievers)?' (Al-'Imran: 144)

Accordingly, there are two ways in which life may be terminated: either death by natural causes or by killing. Death is a deprivation of life, and so is killing. However, killing is a deprivation of life through the destruction of the physical container of the soul. It differs from death in that the soul departs from the body without killing. For this reason, we may hear people say, 'This person died on his bed even though nothing had happened to him.'

Our Lord says about the one who dies as a martyr for His Cause: 'Think not of those who are killed in the Way of Allah as dead. Nay, they are alive, with their Lord, and they have provision.' (Al-‘Imran: 169) If those who fight for the Cause of Allah will receive great bounties from Allah for having obeyed His Command, what would be the reward of those who kill themselves in compliance with His Order? The true examination of the self is always through the self itself, and not through its enemy.

What is distinctive about our master Ibrahim (Abraham) peace be upon him? Did the True Lord the Most High tell him that He will cause his son to die? Or Did He the Most High inform him that another person would kill his son? No. Rather, Allah the Most High told him, 'Slay him yourself.' This is exaltation and purification of the human soul. Afterwards, Allah the Most High sent a great ram to be sacrificed instead of his son Ismail (Ishmael) peace be upon him. This signifies that the command to kill oneself must have been for a higher good: '…if they had done what they were told, it would have been better for them and more strengthening (to faith). And indeed We (Allah) should then have bestowed upon them a great reward from Ourselves.' (an-Nisa’: 66-67) The True Lord the Most High then says:

وَلَهَدَيْنَٰهُمْ صِرَٰطًا مُّسْتَقِيمًا ﴿٦٨﴾

And guided them to a straight path [68]
(The Quran, an-Nisa’: 68)

This passage proposes two options for us: either they should kill themselves or forsake their homeland. But to whom does the following saying of Allah apply: 'And indeed We (Allah) should have guided them to a Straight Way' (an-Nisa’: 68)? Is it addressed to those who were killed or to those who have forsaken their homeland? Rather, it is addressed to those who have forsaken their homeland because they are the ones who are still alive. Afterwards, the True Lord the Most High says:

وَمَن يُطِعِ ٱللَّهَ وَٱلرَّسُولَ فَأُوْلَٰٓئِكَ مَعَ ٱلَّذِينَ أَنْعَمَ ٱللَّهُ عَلَيْهِم مِّنَ ٱلنَّبِيِّـۧنَ
وَٱلصِّدِّيقِينَ وَٱلشُّهَدَآءِ وَٱلصَّٰلِحِينَۚ وَحَسُنَ أُوْلَٰٓئِكَ رَفِيقٗا ٦٩

Whoever obeys God and the Messenger will be among those He has blessed: the messengers, the truthful, those who bear witness to the truth, and the righteous – what excellent companions these are! [69] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 69)

The command here is to 'obey', and the one who should be obeyed is Allah and His Messenger. This means that it is a Decree of Allah implemented by His Messenger, meaning, according to the Book of Allah the Most High and the Sunnah. When you see the word 'Messenger of Allah' associated with Allah through a conjunction without repeating the verb referring to each of them know that the matter at hand is one issue. In other words, it is not that each of them has a separate command. Rather, it is one command. It is an utterance and a decree by Allah and an application by the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him since he is the example to be followed. This is the reason why the True Lord the Most High says in another verse: '… they had said the word of disbelief and disbelieved after their (pretense of) Islam and planned that which they were not to attain. And they were not resentful except (for the fact) that Allah and His Messenger had enriched them of His bounty. So if they repent, it is better for them…' (at-Tawba: 74).

What this verse says is that it is not that Allah the Most High has enriched them in a way appropriate to Him and that the Messenger enriched them in a way that is appropriate to him. Enrichment in this context is from both Allah and His Messenger since everything Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him did was in full compliance with the Command of His Lord. It is thus the same matter.

There is another matter which the Book of Allah addressed that preoccupied many contemporaries of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him.

No one was denied sitting and convening with Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Anyone who came to the Prophet was allowed to sit at any available place. The one who wanted to stay in the company of the Prophet continued to sit, whereas the one who wanted to see him every now and then was allowed to come whenever he wished. Thawban, the freed slave of Prophet Muhammad, loved the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him greatly and had no patience to stay away from him. He once came to the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him with his face pale and his body emaciated. When Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him saw the grief on his face, he asked him, 'What is wrong with you, O, Thawban?' He replied, 'I do not suffer from any sickness or ailment. I simply love and miss you. I know that I can see you in this world whenever I want, but in the Hereafter you will be in the highest level of paradise with the Prophets. If I am admitted to paradise, I will be in a lower degree than yours. And, if I am not admitted, I will not see you at all.'

Following is the text of the Hadith as it was related by Ibn Jarir, according to his chain of transmission, on the authority of Sa‘id ibn Jubayr: 'An Ansari man came to the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him while feeling sad. The Prophet asked him, "Why do I see you sad? " The man replied, "O, Prophet of Allah! It is due to something that I thought about." The Prophet asked, "What is it? " The Ansari man said, "We come to you day and night, looking at your face and sitting with you. Tomorrow, you will be elevated to the highest level of paradise along with the prophets and we will not be able to reach you." The Prophet peace and blessings be upon him did not say anything, but later Jibril (Angel Gabriel) peace be upon him came down to him with the following verse, "And whoever obeys Allah and the Messenger (Muhammad) shall be in the company of those upon whom Allah has bestowed His Grace – the Prophets…." (*an-Nisa': * 69) So the Prophet peace and blessings be upon him sent someone to the man to give him the glad tidings.'(1) But how does one come to think so highly? This is a man who was so preoccupied with his love for the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him and was simply wondering if this bounty of being in the company of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would last. He thought of the different degrees of Paradise and realised how the status of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him in paradise would be higher than that of anyone else. Thawban Allah be pleased with him only wanted to be assured that the bliss of seeing Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him would not end. He was used to seeing him in this life, but then he thought about what might happen to him in the Afterlife. He might either be admitted to paradise or not. If he would not be admitted to Paradise, he would never see him. And, if he would enter paradise, the Prophet's level would be too high for him to reach. So what should he do?

---

Just consider how one ought to love the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him. Allah the Most High is Kind and Merciful towards such a preoccupying love for Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that is scarcely experienced by most people. In this regard, the True Lord the Most High says by way of assurance to those who strongly love the Prophet: 'And whoever obeys Allah and the Messenger (Muhammad)…' (an-Nisa': 69). This saying refers to those who are obedient to Allah the Most High and His Messenger and asserts that they '…shall be in the company of those upon whom Allah has bestowed His Grace – the Prophets, the truthful, the martyrs and the righteous. And how excellent these companions are!' (an-Nisa': 69)

This issue was related to Thawban Allah be pleased with him after having drawn the attention to an issue that may preoccupy the minds of those who strongly love Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. He was comforted and assured that he will end up with the one whom he loved. However, the discourse is not limited to Thawban. The inquiry of Thawban was a cause for comforting and assuring all steadfast affirmers of truth, the martyrs and the righteous. These categories encompass all believers. For instance, Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him was surnamed As-Siddiq, the epitome of being ever so truthful. Why? It was for his unwavering belief in and affirmation of everything that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said. He never questioned any of the Prophet's actions or sayings. When people once asked Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him 'How come your companion, Muhammad, claims that he visited Jerusalem and returned (to Arabia) in the same night, whereas it takes an onerous journey on camels to get there?' Thus, Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him simply responded, 'If he said so, it must be true.' He wholeheartedly justified the honesty and truthfulness of the statement of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him by the conditional antecedent, 'If he said so,' a conditional meaning that if he said so, it must be true. Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him believed whatever Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said. Abu Bakr Allah be pleased with him did not wait until Quranic verses were revealed to vindicate the claim of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Also, as soon as Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him declared, 'I am a Messenger', he responded affirmatively and immediately embraced Islam. Therefore, he was known As-Siddiq, or the epitome of being ever so truthful.

There were preludes in support of the truth of the Message of Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to the early faith of those who first embraced Islam. The evidence upon which they based their faith preceded the Prophet's reception of Divine Revelation. They had personally experienced the truthfulness of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and knew him. So, when he started to communicate the Message of Islam, they immediately believed in him on the strength of the previous knowledge of and experiences with him, which indicated to them that he was truly a Messenger of Allah. A good illustrative example of this point was the response of Khadija Allah be pleased with her when Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him told her, 'I fear for myself.' That is, he felt that something bad might happen to him, such as having a false vision or experiencing some evil from the devil. Khadija Allah be pleased with her said, 'Never! By Allah, Allah will never disgrace you. You keep good relations with your kith and kin, help the poor and the destitute, serve your guests generously and assist the deserving calamity-afflicted ones.'(1) This was the first legal inference in the history of Islam.

This is the meaning of '…shall be in the company of those upon whom Allah has bestowed His Grace – the Prophets, the truthful, the martyrs and the righteous…' (an-Nisa': 69) The martyrs are the ones who died in the Cause of Allah. However, when a believer fights for the cause of Allah, he should not say, 'I want to die as a martyr' and immediately jeopardises his life. Do not ever interpret the meaning of dying for the cause of Allah in this manner. You are defending a Divine message and should fight your enemy without giving him a chance to kill you. If you let him kill you, you will make the Muslims lose one who truly strives in His Path. Just as martyrs enjoy a special status and reward, those who fight for the cause of Allah and survive the battle also enjoy a special status and reward. Islam wants to put forward evidence in support of the truth of its message; this evidence is only furnished by martyrs.

(1) Narrated by Al-Bukhari

But could we all become martyrs? If so, who will communicate the Message of Allah to the rest of the people? We, therefore, want some people to stay and some to engage in striving and dying for the cause of Allah; each group has its own mission. For this reason, At-Taqiya which means concealing or disguising beliefs, feelings, opinions and/or strategies to save oneself from punishment, has been decreed as a legitimate practice. According to the principle of At-Taqiya, one may pretend to turn his back on Islam and outwardly show allegiance with disbelievers in order to preserve his life and to continue defending and fighting for the cause of Allah, on the condition that he hates and antagonises disbelieving warriors deep down in his heart. The reason why such a practice was decreed as permissible is that Islam wants to confirm through some believers the certainty of going to a better life if one were to die for the cause of Allah. Such truth is established by the martyrs. For this reason, the True Lord the Most High allows martyrs to see their blissful destination when their souls are about to depart their bodies. Martyrs then utter words heard by those who have not been granted martyrdom. For instance, some of them may say, 'Blow wind of Paradise, blow!' Or a martyr may utter a sentence indicating that he is actually looking at paradise so that those around him may hear him. The singular of Shuhada', which isthe Arabic word meaning those who with their lives bore witness to the truth, is Shaheed which is the Arabic word meaning the one who is killed for a specific cause or principle; alternatively, Shuhada' could be the plural of Shaheed which is the Arabic word for witness. Thus, As-Shuhada' are the ones who bear witness before Allah that they conveyed to their successors the Message of Allah as much as the Messenger of Allah peace and blessings be upon him testified that he conveyed the Message of Allah to them.

All these meanings revolve around bearing witness about something that a martyr asserts. Thus, we thus realise that we need two categories of people: those who are killed for the Cause of Allah and those who survive death, also for the Cause of Allah. The former confirms the certainty of the blissful end and reward awaiting the martyr, and the latter sustains the communication of the Message of Allah; therefore, they are also bearing witness: '… so that (with your lives) you might bear witness to the truth before all mankind…' (al-Baqara: 143).

The last category speaks of 'the righteous.' (an-Nisa': 69) A righteous person is the one qualified to undertake the mission of being Allah's vicegerent on earth. The righteous leave everything that is useful and beneficial as it is, and sometimes they increase the benefit that could accrue from it. For instance, water falls from the sky in the form of rain drops. After this, it forms rivers and runs through valleys and is absorbed by the earth to form wells. Were a righteous person to see a well of water, he would leave it and not try to fill it up with earth. The righteous thus leave useful things as they are. However, there may be another righteous person who may try to increase the benefit accruing from this bounty. He may erect a wall around the well to preserve it. This is more righteous since he increased the benefit of what is already useful and beneficial. Another righteous person may think that instead of people becoming exhausted due to having to walk from their homes to obtain water from the well and carry it in containers on top of their heads, he may use his reasoning to enhance the benefit people accrue from the well and devise a way to transport the water directly to them in their homes. He may build high reservoirs and connect them with pipes to deliver water to whoever needs it by simply opening the tap. Whoever does so enhances and eases the lives of people. He becomes a reformer through increasing the benefit of what is already useful and beneficial.

The True Lord the Most High closes this noble verse by saying: 'And how excellent these companions are!' (an-Nisa': 69) 'These' in this verse refers to the Prophets, the steadfast affirmers of truth, the martyrs and the righteous. Indeed, there can be no better company. A companion is someone who permanently keeps you company, whether in your travels or visits. This is why people recommend that you choose a good companion before you choose your way. You may run into trouble and impediments on your way since you are going to unknown and unfamiliar places. Therefore, you must choose your companion before you chose your way. We know that abstract matters are often copied from sensible, tangible counterparts. There is a companion to our hands which is the elbow. The word for elbow in Arabic is mirfaq, which is derived from the same root as rafeeq, the Arabic word for companion. The True Lord the Most High says: '… wash your face and your hands (forearms) up to the elbows….' (al-Ma'ida: 6)

Usually when people are feeling exhausted and their head is weary, they rest their head on their elbow. Also, if they want to sleep and cannot find a pillow, they rest on their elbow. As we can see, all the meanings of these derivatives come from the root ar-rifq, or companion, and rafeeq is derived from it and al-marafiq, or elbows, is also derived from it since it accompanies the body and comforts it. Furthermore, there is marafiq, which is the Arabic word for utilities found in every house and often refers to the places designated for food preparation, as well as bathrooms. In addition to these facilities found in a house, rural houses may have a place specifically to accommodate farm animals that serve peasants. The houses of the poor may consist of one room that has a place for dining and another for sleeping. A poor person may tie his donkey to a corner in his house. However if one was affluent, he would supply his house with all the facilities and utilities he would need. This means that his house would have an independent kitchen, a bathroom and a separate barn for animals. He may also have a separate storage room. All these are called utilities or annexed amenities since they are intended to comfort people.

Accordingly, the saying of Allah, 'And how excellent these companions are! (an-Nisa': 69) is derived from the root rifq which means providing comfort, company and easiness. Those who obey Allah and His Messenger in this sense shall attain all these good qualities by being in the company of the Prophets, the truthful, the martyrs and the righteous.

However, someone may ask, 'How could these different categories of believers share the same the status despite their different deeds in this worldly life? Is not Allah the One Who says: "And that there is not for man except that for which he strives"?' (an-Najm: 39) I say to this person by saying, is not a believer's obedience to Allah and His Messenger part of his striving and effort in this world? Obedience and love for Allah and His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him is indeed part of the action and exertion of any servant of Allah. Accordingly, there is no contradiction between the two glorious verses because the action of a person is no different than his pursuit. He then becomes entitled to the company of the Prophets, the steadfast affirmers of truth, the martyrs and the righteous. To be among such company may be an honour bestowed upon them all so that they may enjoy being together. This interpretation can further explain the saying of Allah: 'And We (Allah) shall remove whatever of ill-feeling is in their breasts….' (al-A'raf: 43)

Never think that upon seeing one's status in the Hereafter higher than that of others, one would say: 'My status is higher than theirs.' Since one has given up all worldly causes and means and has chosen to live in the company of the One Who initiates all cause of causes, out of love for Allah, one will love anyone who has listened to and obeyed the Words of our Lord. They would also say to anyone who loves Allah, 'You deserve your status.' They would rejoice if they see others enjoying a higher status than theirs.

Let me give the following example, and for Allah is the highest and loftiest description. Assume that there is a classroom that contains many students. Some of these students just want to pass the course, while others love knowledge for the sake of knowledge. When the students who love knowledge for its sake come across a new, clever student, would they like or dislike him? Surely, they would like him, and seek his help and rejoice in his presence. They would say, 'This student is going to be the top of our class because he does not love himself, but he loves others.' The same holds true for a believer who sees someone else enjoying a higher status in paradise. Do not begin to think that he would feel any jealousy towards others - absolutely not. Rather, due to his love and appreciation for his Lord, he loves whoever obeys Him. He is like the student who attains a high status through his excellence and wants others to excel like him without any envy. We thus realise that the noble verse at hand does not contradict the Saying of the True Lord the Most High: 'And that there is not for man except that for which he strives.' (an-Najm: 39). The saying of the True Lord Glorified is He in this verse could be read in a different way. As a preposition al-lam which means 'for', indicates possession and entitlement. It is like saying, 'I do not owe you except such and such sum.' This means that this is the right to which you are entitled. Accordingly, His saying, 'And that there is not for man except that for which he strives' (an-Najm: 39) means that this is the right to which a believer is entitled. It defined justice in terms of giving everyone that to which they are entitled, and not in terms of generous giving. This is the reason why Allah the Most High says in another verse:

ذَٰلِكَ ٱلْفَضْلُ مِنَ ٱللَّهِ ۚ وَكَفَىٰ بِٱللَّهِ عَلِيمًا ﴿٧٠﴾

That is God’s favor. No one knows better than Him [70]
(The Quran, an-Nisa’: 70)

Allah’s Bounties are obtained through, and in proportion to, the action and effort everyone exerts in this world. Allah’s saying, 'And that there is not for man except that for which he strives' (an-Najm: 39) defines the right to which you are justly entitled in accordance with the assignments Allah has given you. However, our Lord did not call this bestowal from Him an entitled right and just compensation. Rather, He describes it as a bounty from Him, and definitely Allah’s Bounty is the ultimate aim and delight for any believer. No matter how well you do an assignment from Allah, you will never perform it sufficiently proper for Allah. Allah Glorified is He explains this further by saying: 'Say: "In the Bounty of Allah and in His Mercy, therein let them rejoice. That is better than what they amass.’" (Yunus: 58) In other words: Pay attention, for Allah has assigned a role for you that you may work and exert much effort to perform it, but refrain from rejoicing in the rewards this work will allow you to amass. Rather, rejoice in the bounties your Lord will bestow upon you.

Such bountiful gifts from Allah the Most High give an answer to the question on why Thawban, or someone who enjoys a lower status than his, may accompany the Prophets, the truthful, the martyrs and the righteous. To whomever who wonders about this issue, the response is to ask if his status were lower than theirs, would there not be any bounty from Allah involved in the whole matter? He is receiving this bounty from Allah since his obedience to Allah and His Messenger was superior to all other kinds of obedience. As for his Love for Allah and His Messenger, this is due to his work, exertion and Allah’s Support. This generous giving is the highly sought-after joy of any believer: 'Such is the bounty from Allah, and sufficient is Allah as the Knower.' (an-Nisa’: 70) We should rejoice in and be content with the Knowledge of Allah the Most High. He Glorified is He bases His Laws on comprehensive, all-encompassing Knowledge of all things. Allah knows the truth of the love in everyone's heart, the sincerity of their affection and the veracity of every believer's appreciation for those who enjoy a higher status than theirs. Through the principles stated, the True Lord the Most High secured the fundamentals of the Islamic community and the internal relations amongst Muslims. First, we must deliver that with which we have been entrusted, for if we do so, we will not need to litigate. However, if someone becomes forgetful or careless and he fails to deliver that with which he is entrusted, thus a dispute flares, and the judgment will be fair. Subsequently, we are required to refer to the Judgment of Allah and His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him and never to seek the verdict of evil powers. If the members of every society of believers deliver that with which they have been entrusted to the ones entitled to it, tranquillity shall prevail.

We know that the following phrase, 'that with which you are entrusted', basically refers to the right(s) of others in your custody that you are obligated to fulfil. Everything other than you is someone or something else. Conversely, you are someone else relative to everyone other than you. Accordingly, delivering that with which one is entrusted secures the overall good of the entire society. However, if one fails to deliver that with which they are entrusted, justice must be administered. However, justice requires a judge; and if we should resort to a judge, we should refer to Allah and His Messenger peace and blessings be upon him and not to evil powers. At the time of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him Ka'b ibn Al-Ashraf represented evil powers. Nowadays, there are some people who are like Ka'b ibn Al-Ashraf. There are indeed many evil powers. If you spot a problem in the Muslim world, you should know that it is due to a deficiency in applying Islamic obligations. How can matters proceed correctly if we stray from the teachings and laws of Islam? If matters did not go amiss, this would attest that an Islamic course is not necessary. However, if matters go wrong, this proves the truth and reality of Islamic principles and obligations.

After Allah Glorified is He has assured us about the destiny that awaits believers in the Afterlife with the Prophets, the truthful, the martyrs and the righteous, He emphasises the particular role of every Divine message sent from heaven to earth in combating corruption and eradicating its spread on the earth. The human soul must practise self-restraint against errors. For example, it may intend to commit a sin, but instead reproaches itself and returns to the Path of Allah, in which case it develops an immunity (from the effects of evilness) that is self-generated. Or the immunity of the human soul may evolve from the surrounding environment rather than being self-motivated. For instance, we may find someone who is incapable of controlling himself. Nonetheless, there may be someone else who tells him, 'What you are doing is wrong and inappropriate.' This means that the surrounding environment is still good. The previous nations became totally devoid of immunity and became a single form that followed a single path. This is what the True Lord the Most High depicts in His saying: 'They used not to prevent one another from the wrongs they used to commit….' (al-Ma'ida: 79)

In the previously mentioned case, self-immunity was corrupted, and the society became void of any immunity towards evilness. Thus, the Lord of the Heavens had to intervene. However, the True Lord Glorified is He privileged the followers of Islam over other nations with its immunity always being consistently found in its individuals. Therefore, if it is no longer in the individuals making up the society, then it is in the community. This way, any society based on faith will never lack someone who does not say, 'No' (to evils). This is the reason why no messenger will come after Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. If a disaster should happen that would lead to the corruption of the entire society, and we would no longer find anyone who would say, 'No,' then it would be time for a messenger to be sent. However, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him is the Final Prophet, and Allah Glorified is He distinguished the followers of Islam by making the restraint against evil and the desire to do good always existent either in the individuals themselves so that everyone exercises self-restraint against evil and spontaneously turns to self-reproach, or in the society itself so that everyone would recommend the good for everyone else. Read the words of the True Lord the Most High: 'By the time! Verily, mankind is in loss, except those who believe and do righteous good deeds, and exhort one another to the truth and exhort one another to patience.' (al-'Asr: 1-3)

However, why should humans exhort one another to hold fast to truth and patience? This is due to the fact that the human soul is always in a state of flux. For example, my own self may, at one time, be tempted to deviate from the Path of Allah, and then someone may admonish me to refrain when I am about to commit a given sin. I may, in return, do the same for him and try to guide him to the righteous path, or I may guide another person who committed a mistake. Therefore, the saying of Allah: '…exhort one another to the truth…' (al-'Asr: 3) means that every one of you should admonish others and, likewise, accept admonition from others. Each and every one of us observes and watches over others. This way anyone who has a weakness in a particular aspect will find someone who can help straighten him up. There will never be a time where there is no one in the followers of Islam who do not admonish others to do good or there being one who is being admonished to do good. It may also happen that the same person, under some situation or circumstance, admonishes others, and under some situation or circumstance is one being admonished by others. Therefore, one should not be too arrogant to accept admonition from others because under certain situations, he could have admonished others, and they may not have found it debasing or demeaning to accept his admonition. As people often say, 'May Allah have mercy upon the one who guides me to my defects.'

After having completed the construction of the faith-based environment through the Message of Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and you being the last of nations, the True Lord the Most High assures us that evil will never completely prevail or take over our communities since there is a faith-inspired immunity in our societies. Thus, even if not everyone adheres to the Path of Allah in their behaviour, at least some will. Accordingly, if the Lord of the Heavens did not intervene to introduce a righteous system, the world would fall into troubles and ailments. However, how can the world suffer troubles and ailments? The world must ail if the laws set by Allah Who established us as His vicegerents on earth, were suspended. Consequently, all sorts of evil and tyranny would prevail over the different aspects of life, and everyone would be under the control of their desires.

In our contemporary world, we notice that even countries that do not believe in God do not leave its peoples to be governed by their own discretion and inclinations. Rather, they organise life according to laws and legislations which may eventually lead to their suffering. Non-religious countries have devised for themselves a system that allows them to control the inclinations and desires of the human self. However, we must tell them that their policies are commensurate with their knowledge and conception of the characteristics of human nature. They are making laws for something that they have not created, and so they have overstepped their bounds since they are not completely aware of the nature of the soul.

The fundamental principle for decreeing and enacting any law is to make it for something you have created. As we have said before, the one who ought to develop a maintenance program for any machine is the one who manufactured it. The one who made a television set should not let a butcher devise the system of its maintenance. Only the one who made the television set should be the one who devises its maintenance system. We can imagine, by analogy, the case with our Creator? He is the One Who puts the laws and rules for my maintenance through a guide of 'dos' and 'don’ts' that He provides for me. We, humans, control things according to the inclinations of some of us; then, we say do so or do not do so. On what basis do we find our knowledge of the evils that may ensue from the violation of these laws and rules? Did we ourselves create the human soul, and do we know full well its powers and capacities? No, certainly we did not. The evidence is that we always amend our laws, and such amendments happen—as we said—because the lawmaker or legislator recognises a mistake, and thus, he tries to fix it. The human lawmaker or legislator commits mistakes since he tries to put laws and rules for something that he did not create. Accordingly, if we do not want any mistakes, we should leave legislation and law-making to the One Who created us, namely, Allah.

Human history demonstrates that corruption prevails when the law revealed to us from the Heaven is suspended and is no longer followed. The Lord of the Heavens affects our lives through the revelation of a Divine message. Every message that came was opposed by adversaries, namely, the controllers and manipulators of mankind. Such people will never allow the Law of Allah to prevail and will strip them of their personal dominion by dictatorship, tyranny and despotism, and will profit from evil. They, therefore, fight the Divine messages. Our True Lord Glorified is He directs our attention to the fact that evildoers, non-followers of the Divine Law, and irreligious people will cause us troubles. Thus, after you have firmly ground yourselves in the principles of faith, you should pay attention to the enemies and adversaries of Allah. The True Lord the Most High says regarding this issue:

يَٰٓأَيُّهَا ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُواْ خُذُواْ حِذۡرَكُمۡ فَٱنفِرُواْ ثُبَاتٍ أَوِ ٱنفِرُواْ جَمِيعٗا ﴿٧١﴾

You who believe, be on your guard. March [to battle] in small groups or as one body[71] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 71)

‘Take your precautions’ would not be said unless there was an enemy waiting to attack you. Therefore, the call to 'take your precautions' (an-Nisa’: 71) indicates that such preparation is like arming oneself, like when someone tells you to take your weapon or your staff. In other words, you should use these tools to confront your enemies and protect yourself against their plots. You should not wait until you are caught up in their ambushes and mischief. Rather, you should prepare yourself beforehand in case there is a chance of inattentiveness or heedlessness on your part. This is the gist of the warning ‘take your precautions.’ It is also the reason why the True Lord the Most High says in another verse: 'And prepare against them whatever you are able of power and of steeds of war, to frighten thereby the enemy of Allah and your enemy…' (al-Anfal: 60). This instruction means that you should not wait until they transform their feelings of enmity into actual aggression against you since they may attack you unexpectedly, in which case you will not have any time to confront them. So, believers should take precautions and be fully prepared since he has enemies who do not want to see the Law of Allah obeyed and prevailing on the earth. Therefore, if the Law of Allah is supreme and in control, they will not have any chance to tamper with the destinies of people. Furthermore, those who take advantage of their authority and enforce their interests to exploit mankind would not have a chance to impose their control over others.

The part of the verse that says '…either go forth (on an expedition) in parties, or go forth all together' (an-Nisa’: 71) means that the act of setting forth should be proportionate to your level of preparedness and caution. ‘Parties’ in this verse means group after group and expedition after expedition, and ‘all together’ means the case when all of you proceed to confront the enemy.

Accordingly, we should be prepared in proportion to the evil we may confront. So, if we are attacked by a small group, we should do as Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him used to do when he sent forces based on the level of the confronting danger. By contrast, if the situation is graver than this and needs public mobilisation, all of us must go forth to meet the enemy. Notice that the True Lord the Most High addresses believers and knows that they experience fluctuating emotions even though they are believers. The soul may weaken when facing a difficult situation and dealing with it, in spite of faith and belief in Allah.

Therefore, the True Lord the Most High says in the chapter al-Baqara: 'Have you not thought about the group of the Children of Israel after (the time of) Musa (Moses)? When they said to a Prophet of theirs, "Appoint for us a king and we will fight in Allah's Way." (al-Baqara: 246) The children of Israel used to ask Allah Glorified is He to allow them to fight in His Cause. Since they asked for it, they should rejoice when the command of fighting comes from Allah Glorified is He. However, Allah knows His servants best. Therefore, He further says to them: '…would you, perhaps, refrain from fighting if fighting were prescribed for you?' (al-Baqara: 246)

The True Lord the Most High clarified to them that they should remember well that they were the ones who asked to fight in His Cause; therefore, they should not refrain from fighting when Allah decrees that they should fight. After all, He did not originally decree it upon them; rather, they were the ones who asked for it. Since the discourse was still on the theoretical level, they wondered as follows: '…and why should we not fight in the Cause of Allah when we have been driven out from our homes and from our children?' (al-Baqara: 246)

The children of Israel deplored not being able to fight in the Cause of Allah, especially in the respect that they had all the reasons for fighting, specifically being driven from their homeland and abandoning their children. But what happened when Allah decreed fighting upon them? The answer is the following: '…but when fighting was ordered for them, they turned away, all except a few of them. And Allah is All-Aware of the wrongdoers.' (al-Baqara: 246) The majority escaped, and only a few believers remained. Also, this was the initial excuse put forth by those who escaped fighting in response to their Prophet when he told them that Allah had sent Talut (Saul) as their king: 'They said, "How can he be a king over us when we are better fit than him for the kingdom, and he has not been given enough wealth? "' (al-Baqara: 247). This was the first sign of wavering from accepting Allah’s Decree. The True Lord the Most High then explained to them the wisdom underlying the selection of Talut (Saul): he was a man of physical strength, and winning a struggle requires strength. Furthermore, he was knowledgeable, and administering a struggle requires someone capable of accurate planning. Allah Glorified is He says: 'Verily, Allah has chosen him above you and has increased him abundantly in knowledge and stature….' (al-Baqara: 247)

When they were about to start fighting, the True Lord the Most High wanted to test them to sort out the weak from the strong. Thus, Talut (Saul) said to them, "'Verily! Allah will try you by a river. So whoever drinks thereof, he is not of me, and whoever tastes it not, he is of me, except him who takes (thereof) in the hollow of his hand." Yet, they all drank thereof, except a few of them. So, when he had crossed it (the river), he and those who believed with him said, "We have no power this day against Jalut (Goliath) and his hosts." (al-Baqara: 249)

This test was intended to make evident those who were capable of controlling themselves and the endurance power that each striving one had to possess. Each was only allowed to scoop and drink a single handful of water from the river. Nonetheless, all except for a few of them drank their fill of it. Thus, the True Lord the Most High wanted to further sift them. When they saw the army of Talut (Saul), they said, 'We have no power this day against Jalut (Goliath) and his hosts.' (al-Baqara: 249)

However, what was the point of this selection and sifting processes? Obviously, Allah wanted only the true believers to undertake the defence of the law and path He set on earth. These were the ones who said, 'How often a small host has overcome a mighty host by Allah’s leave!' (al-Baqara: 249) Allah the Most High says: 'So, they defeated them by Allah’s Leave.' (al-Baqara: 251)

Why does our Lord give us such glimpses into this process of sifting and selection? This is in order to understand that the human psyche may take a different stance when confronted with a ruling on the theoretical level than when it is faced with it on the practical level. Anyway, just a select few among a few people were granted triumph by Allah. Thus, Allah the Most High wants to ingrain in our psyches the truth that He Glorified is He is the One Who is capable of causing defeat or triumph. Indeed, this is in line with what the True Lord the Most High says: 'Fight against them! Allah will punish them by your hands….' (at-Tawba: 14)

Accordingly, the True Lord Glorified is He explains that He gave them the order to go forth to struggle either in small groups or collectively and that the nature of the human soul is the same; it will always be susceptible to fluctuations when it tries to implement rulings in real life situations. This is the reason why the True Lord the Most High also says:

وَإِنَّ مِنكُمْ لَمَن لَّيُبَطِّئَنَّ فَإِنْ أَصَٰبَتْكُم مُّصِيبَةٌ قَالَ قَدْ أَنْعَمَ ٱللَّهُ
عَلَىَّ إِذْ لَمْ أَكُن مَّعَهُمْ شَهِيدًا ﴿٧٢﴾

Among you there is the sort of person who is sure to lag behind: if a calamity befalls you, he says, 'God has been gracious to me that I was not there with them' [72] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 72)

Some men, when called upon to participate in a battle, would be lazy and linger behind. Allah the Most High says in another verse: 'O, you who believe! What is the matter with you, that when you are asked to march forth in the Cause of Allah you cling heavily to the earth?' (at-Tawba: 38) The part of the verse saying 'you cling heavily to the earth' (at-Tawba: 38) indicates that there are some who pull themselves downwards to the earth entirely of their own accord and will. We must distinguish between the one who drops down just due to gravity and the one who lets gravity pull him down. 'Cling heavily to the earth' means that the person intended to intentionally show sluggishness and inaction, which is evidence that he did not want to take the initiative and fight. Furthermore, not only were they sluggish, but they also swore to act like this. Some of them used to dissuade others and discourage them from fighting as the hypocrite 'Abdullah ibn Ubayy used to do.

The part of the verse saying 'And indeed, there is among you he who lingers behind…' (an-Nisa': 72) means that we must understand the situation and safeguard against those who may impede the spread of the message before the battle even begins. If we do so before the battle should start, we will have an accurate assessment of our power and be able to prepare ourselves based on the number of the truly strong ones who earnestly strive, not those who tend to lag behind and show inaction. There are some people who even rejoiced in surviving by not joining the battle, especially if Muslims were defeated and some were killed. The True Lord the Most High gives us an example of this attitude, saying: '…and if disaster strikes you, he says, " Allah has favoured me in that I was not present with them."' (an-Nisa': 72) The person referred to by this verse lingered and stayed behind, and also, if calamities such as defeat or killing should befall Muslims, such a person would say, “I thank Allah that I was not with them.” This shows that tardiness and inaction with regards to joining the battle was deliberate and intentional on the part of such a person. This is utmost insolence. For although he disobeyed the Command of our Lord, he said, 'Allah has favoured me.' (an-Nisa': 72) When making such a statement, he is acting like a thief who steals and then says, ‘Allah protected me and did not expose my deed.’ Such is the language of those who fail to comprehend the principles of faith. These types of people would say: '…if disaster strikes you, he says, " Allah has favoured me in that I was not present with them."' (an-Nisa': 72) They thus considered not taking part in the battle and staying alive as a bounty from Allah. For this reason, some knowledgeable people say, 'By making a statement like this, one would be ascribing partners to Allah since calamity to them is either getting killed or defeated.' Yet what would be the stance of the one lagging behind upon collecting the spoils of war and at the time of victory? The True Lord Glorified is He says:

وَلَئِنْ أَصَـٰبَكُمْ فَضْلٌ مِّنَ ٱللَّهِ لَيَقُولَنَّ كَأَن لَّمْ تَكُنۢ بَيْنَكُمْ وَبَيْنَهُۥ
مَوَدَّةٌ يَـٰلَيْتَنِى كُنتُ مَعَهُمْ فَأَفُوزَ فَوْزًا عَظِيمًا ﴿٧٣﴾

yet he is sure to say, if you are favoured by God, ‘If only I had been with them, I could have made great gains,’ as if there had been no ties of affection between you and him [73] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 73)

The reason behind His saying ‘If only I had been with them’ (an-Nisa': 73) is not that the person is retracting and recoiling from his original intent; it is rather an expression of regret over missing the spoils of war. In this verse, the True Lord puts forwards a parenthetical phrase in order to provide us with a glimpse of faith: ‘But if good fortune comes to you from Allah, such a person is sure to say, just as if there had been no ties of affection between you and him, "If only I had been with them, and thus had a [share in their] mighty triumph!”’ (an-Nisa’: 73)

The parenthetical phrase is when He says: ‘just as if there had been no ties of affection between you and him.’ (an-Nisa’: 73) It is as if affection on the basis of faith were worthless to him. Indeed, had he had the slightest appreciation for it, he would not have said previously: ‘Allah has been Gracious to me that I was not there with them’ (an-Nisa’: 72), and he would have accompanied the Muslim fighters. So, he is only interested in material gain and the spoils of war, but if defeat befell Muslims or if a huge number of them were killed as martyrs, he would have detached himself from them.

Thus, the True Lord exposes to us the stance of those who lag behind, explaining that to bee aware not to be influenced by those when you march to battle in small groups or together, Also, know that there are people amongst you who dissuade their peers from fighting in the cause of Allah—laggards and those who cling heavily to this worldly life. All what they care for is to reap their share of the spoils of war. For this reason, they would thank Allah that they were not with you, if you were defeated, and would crave for their share of the spoils of war, if you achieved any victory, even if they were not present by your side in battle. Therefore, do not be influenced after having been granted such immunity so that you would not be taken aback by their stance towards you, and so that you would always be aware of their real intentions. Immunizations are but a kind of education directed to the body, whether it is material or in an abstract and moral sense. If something wrong happens, you will have the background upon which to build your response.

When we are attacked by a particular microbe, we use the same microbe, but in a latent state, to make a vaccine to immunize people against it. In this manner, the body becomes aware and develops immunity within itself. Accordingly, if a microbe actively attacks the body, the defence forces inside the body immediately fight back and engulf the microbe. It is as if giving immunizations were like training and activating the body resistance, which Allah has put in your blood so that it carried out its protective mission. The same holds true for moral immunization. The True Lord explains that there will be those among you who will do wrong things; hence, you should be prepared to deal with these attacks and you should not be surprised by them because if you got surprised, you might collapse completely. So, do not be influenced by such wrong attitudes. Subsequently, the True Lord says:

فَلۡيُقَٰتِلۡ فِي سَبِيلِ ٱللَّهِ ٱلَّذِينَ يَشۡرُونَ ٱلۡحَيَوٰةَ ٱلدُّنۡيَا بِٱلۡأٓخِرَةِۚ
وَمَن يُقَٰتِلۡ فِي سَبِيلِ ٱللَّهِ فَيُقۡتَلۡ أَوۡ يَغۡلِبۡ فَسَوۡفَ نُؤۡتِيهِ أَجۡرًا عَظِيمٗا ﴿٧٤﴾

Let those of you who are willing to trade the life of this world for the life to come, fight in God's way. To anyone who fights in God's way, whether killed or victorious, We shall give a great reward [74]
(The Quran, an-Nisa': 74)

The root shara and the verb ishtara [translated as 'trade' in this verse] refer to exchanging and bartering. You may say: 'I have bought this dress for a dirham,' this means that you have bought the dress and paid a dirham for it. Further, shara' may be used in the sense of selling, as when the True Lord says: 'And they sold him for a reduced price—a few dirhams—so little did they value him.' (Yusuf: 20)

The group of travellers who found Yusuf (Joseph) Allah be pleased with him in the pit considered him to be of little value. Subsequently, they sold him for a reduced price. Thus shara is among the verbs that could be used both in the sense of buying and in the sense of selling because what is bought and what is sold have the same value. In the old days, people used to depend on bartering to exchange commodities. There was no money at that time. For instance, someone may give you some grains in exchange for some dates. Thus, someone buys dates and another buys grains. What makes the process take the form of buying and selling is the existence of goods that are bought and sold.

What is the difference between commodities and money? The former are a direct form of livelihood, whereas the latter is an indirect form. For instance, you may eat a loaf of bread that costs five piasters (Egyptian currency). However, if you have a mountain of gold, and the loaf of bread you need is not available, will the mountain of gold feed you? Thus, the loaf of bread is a direct form of livelihood because you will eat it, whereas gold is an indirect form of livelihood, as one uses it to purchase what he needs. In this manner, we can distinguish between the different forms of livelihood. The thing from which immediate benefit may accrue is a direct form of livelihood; we pay its price using something from which we do not get any immediate benefit. The True Lord wants to strike a bargain with the believers; you know that a seller sells the goods at a price, and the purchaser pays the price for them. Similarly, the True Lord says: ‘Hence, let them fight in Allah’s cause—those of you who are willing to trade the life of this world for the life to come.’ (an-Nisa’: 74) In this verse, the believer gives up this world in exchange for the hereafter, as it is represented in the reward of heaven and the special status intended for the martyrs. For this reason, the True Lord says in another verse: ‘Allah has purchased from the believers their lives and their properties, [in exchange] for that, they will have Paradise.’ (at-Tawba: 111)

Subsequently, the True Lord says: ‘Rejoice, then, in the bargain which you have made with Him.’ (at-Tawba: 111) This is the deal that the True Lord makes with the believers. Allah wants to provide us with a clue to help us recognise profitable bargains. Everyone in their life wants to conclude a profitable deal by giving away something and taking something bigger in return. For this reason, The True Lord says in another verse: ‘…may hope for a trade that will never decline.’ (Fatir: 29) Trading is involved here as well. When you strike a deal, you have to compare the thing that you give up with the thing that you take in return to see the difference between them and decide which one is worth being sacrificed for the other.

The True Lord describes our life ‘dunya’ as the lowest form of life. There is not a more inferior description. He, then, explains that you give up the lowest form of life in this world in exchange for the afterlife. If what you take is more than what you give away, be sure that the deal is profitable. Indeed, no matter how life in this world may last, it has to come to an end. Accordingly, do not ever ask about the length of the present life because it should not concern you if the length of the present life were, for instance, one thousand centuries. The length of life for every human being is the amount of time he spends living; because even if the world lasted longer for someone else, how would that be of any benefit to me?

Thus, the true value of the present life lies in the amount of time you spend in it, and this amount is uncertain. Despite the fact that the average life expectancy has risen in the twentieth century—for instance, in the USA, the average life expectancy is between sixty and seventy— this does not prevent death from taking anyone's life, be it a child, an adult or an old man. The length of the present life for any human being is measured in terms of the span of his own life; that is, how many years he has lived. Accordingly, do not ever measure it in terms of others' existence in it. Rather, measure it in terms of your own existence. Further, even if you assume that you are bound to live for seventy years—no matter how great your enjoyment and gratification is—it will still be limited.

Every one of us is brought up until they reach puberty. Once they reach puberty and start to have a personal life, they will cease to be subordinated to their parents, even though they used to be totally dependent on them. Their parents used to buy clothes and food they needed, in addition to giving them the proper upbringing. However, once they start to be independent, they may say to their parents: 'I do not like this colour,' 'this kind of food does not appeal to me,' or 'I won't enrol in this college.' Man does not develop a personality unless he reaches a stage in his life at which he can reproduce. At that stage, we will tell him that he has reached maturity, and it is maturity that gives him personal worth.

If you grow a watermelon plant, you will have to nurture, irrigate, fertilize and trim it when it is still young so that it does not grow up twisted. Once the fruit ripens your concern and interest immediately shifts from the tree to the fruit, that is, the watermelon itself—which has acquired its own identity. The reason is that if you, by now, cut and eat it, you will find seeds which will sprout and grow into a new plant (if you plant them in the soil). However, if you pick the watermelon before it is ripe, the white seeds inside will not be mature enough to be planted and cultivated. If the seeds inside the watermelon are half white half black, it indicates that this watermelon is not fully ripe, whereas, if the seeds are completely black, then, they are ready to be planted. You will also find that the sweetness of the watermelon is commensurate with how ripe the seeds are. Thus, had the nature of the fruits been such that they would ripen before their seeds, Allah would have prompted us to eat the fruits before their seeds would grow. Were it the case, such species of plants would be doomed to extinction. For this reason, our Lord has decreed that the plant will not be sweet unless its seeds are mature. The same holds true for human beings. The True Lord says: ‘When your children reach puberty, they should [always] ask your permission to enter, like their elders do.’ (an-Nur: 59) We often let children play and wander around any part of the house freely. However, once they grow up and reach puberty—which indicates that their bodies are fully ready for reproduction—they have to ask for permission before they walk into any closed room. At this age, the person’s independence forms. Let us assume that a person would live fifty five years of age after reaching puberty, being capable of reproducing and acquiring an independent personality. That person would have spent his teen years learning, until he becomes capable of earning his own livelihood and enjoying his life. At this point, we may wonder how long he will actually enjoy living. We will discover that there are only a few years to enjoy life. Life is therefore finite, and its gratification and pleasure depend on the person’s means—one may live in a two bedroom flat, a three bedroom flat or even in a big house or castle; also, one may drive a car or walk to move around. In brief, everyone enjoys life based on their own capacity and available means, whereas, in the Afterlife, it is totally different; one submits to a life of infinite length. If we compare between the finite and the infinite, we will find out that the Afterlife is bound to outweigh the present life because it is certain, and its pleasures are proportional to Allah’s Grace and His capability. Therefore, it is better for us to sell the present life in exchange for the Hereafter. This is indeed the profitable, never-failing deal.

Why does Allah want His servant to engage in this transaction? The reason is that before the True Lord offers you to participate in this transaction that exhausts you—that if you did not either kill or get killed in the cause of Allah—He has to explain to you how to attain the gratification and reward of the afterlife. You will not attain such gain just by uttering words. You have to understand the path and purpose for which you are fighting; in essence, your goal as a believer consists in establishing a society wherein each will perform his task and deliver what he has been entrusted. This should only disappoint those who want to exploit others and build their success on the toil and exhaustion of others. Find a society that does not have faith in Allah and tell its people: ‘we want each of you to deliver that with which he has been entrusted; we want each of you to judge justly.’ If you do so, rest assured that these people will rejoice in relief. Any people of sound disposition and good understanding would not reject the religion of Allah, for it only enjoins on everyone to fulfil the mission, he is brought to life for and calls for justice to be established on earth. We are commanded to submit to the One God worthy of worship. In this way, we would not be confused and torn apart trying to submit to the will of more than one god. Subsequently, Allah has admonished us to treat well our parents, our kinsfolk, the orphans and the needy. By Allah, tell me: were not this religion a Heavenly revelation, rather a human legislation, would it be possible to find anything more perfect and just?

Man ought to defend the implementation of such a path that ensures safety for everybody. Before Allah has enacted upon us to fight in His cause, Allah clarified that this was the model of society for which we would fight. Therefore, you should realize that when you go fighting in the cause of Allah, the furthest ahead that could happen to you would be to get killed and then enjoy the benefit of a profitable transaction—the reward of the Afterlife. This way, the distance between you and your ultimate purpose would diminish—since everything is measured in terms of the time required to achieve the final destination. Thus, if you got killed, the time you need to achieve your purpose would diminish, so you would reach paradise. Foolishness befalls people when a dear one is killed and they get lost in grief. We tell them: If we are all bound to the same destiny, why would we be lost in grief?

The True Lord Glorified is He rewards the one who fights in the cause of Allah with life and livelihood in the Hereafter. Some people think that if they open the grave of a martyr, they will find him alive and enjoying the livelihood Allah has promised him. To these people, we say that the True Lord does not say that martyrs will be alive among you, but with Allah in the world of the unseen. The True Lord asks those who endorse Islam to spread it and to judge justly among themselves so that their conditions would improve and so that they would confront the evil people who only know the outer surface of this present life.

Allah has not decreed fighting before the advent of the Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. The messenger mentioned here was one of the messengers peace be upon them who were sent before Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, and was only required to deliver the Message of Allah to his own people. The Messengers have been sent down to their own people to deliver the Message of Allah: whoever believed was rewarded, and those who did not believe were punished by Allah; such punishment was in the form of a fierce wind, an earthquake, a shriek, being swallowed by the earth or being drowned. Fighting was only decreed when the people themselves suggested it, like the people of Israel. The True Lord says: '[Prophet], consider the leaders of the Children of Israel who came after Moses, when they said to one of their prophets, "Set up a king for us and we shall fight in God's cause."' (al-Baqara: 246) They were the ones who suggested that Allah should enact fighting upon them. But the fighting—that is truly intended to establish the principles and spread the religion in order to exalt the word of Allah and establish the dominion of the caliphate (rule) based on ensuring security as well as faith on earth—was only decreed at the time of Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him. Allah has entrusted Muslims with the mission of calling all other nations to the true religion—a mission to which He has assigned no other nation. It is as if Allah did not entrust any nation with other nations except the Muslims; that is, Allah chose the Islamic ummah to be a guardian and a trustee. Allah has entrusted you with the responsibility of disciplining and rectifying violators. Thus, you have been granted a high status as far as the religion and the message are concerned. Allah ennobled His prophet as He says: 'But Allah would not send them punishment while you [Prophet] are in their midst' (al-Anfal: 33) Thus, fighting was decreed, and the Muslims—even when they were weak—fought in the cause of Allah against other strong but corrupt societies. The poet says:

Those who are strong and aberrant are settled in the land they occupy.

And a herd of weak ones are following and siding with them.

If fighting did not come through religion, would faithless nations not set out for war in order to reform their affairs? Indeed, they do fight. So why is it legitimate for all nations to fight for the sake of establishing their principles, and when religion decrees fighting, they say 'No. This is a religion that was spread by the sword!' To these people, we ask: by Allah, why then do nations fight? We see nations that fight each other, and tyrants who fight each other. Yet, when justice is there to eradicate injustice, why do we stand in its way?

No! This should not be the case. So, we should know for certain that fighting here is a Heavenly message, not the oppression of some tyrants who gathered and conspired to bring about a revolt through which they can dominate people.

When Islam came about, the weak ones who did not have the means to fight, embraced it. They were not even capable of defending themselves. This is to prove to us that when truth manifests, it comes about, not by the hands of the strong, but rather by the hands of the weak ones who struggle and persevere to spread the faith and establish it firmly on earth. The Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him called for Islam in Mecca, but it did not prevail as a religion except in Medina. Mecca is the home town of Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, and his tribe, the Quraysh—a tribe accustomed to sovereignty over all the peninsula, which no one could threaten and no power would dare to intercept its trade caravans in the north or south.

All tribes went to the Quraysh during the pilgrimage season. They feared attacking Quraysh caravans lest the Quraysh would take revenge. Accordingly, if the religion of Islam, that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him called for, had triumphed in Mecca, people might have said that the Quraysh was a tribe that loved ascendancy, and the Arab nation submitted to its command, so what would stop it from aiming to dominate the entire world?

The True Lord wanted the Quraysh to be the first party to oppose and persecute the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, and decreed that the weak were the first to follow him. Then, the victory for Allah's religion came from a distant place, far from Mecca—Medina—so that the entire world would testify that people believed in Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him because of the Message he had brought and not because of ties of kinship and love for a fellow tribesman. The Prophet's Companion 'Umar Allah be pleased with him was listening to the words of Allah the Exalted: 'Their forces will be routed and they will turn tail and flee' (al-Qamar: 45). He, then, said: 'What forces would be defeated by us, if we are even incapable of defending ourselves?' The True Lord says: 'We shall brand him on the snout' (al-Qalam: 16). 'Umar Allah be pleased with him then exclaimed: 'How could this be possible if we cannot defend ourselves?' Afterwards, the battle of Badr took place and vindicated the truthfulness of that statement for ‘Umar. It is indeed astounding that the verse was revealed at a time when Muslims were incapable of defending themselves. Thus, no one can say that there were preludes that made it easy to predict the end result of the battle. The preludes did not suggest that any victory was forthcoming; it was only that our Lord foretold its occurrence, and people did see that Al-Walid ibn Al-Mughira was hit on his nose, and the strike left a mark on it. This was because the One said so is capable of bringing about what He said, and no force is capable of precluding Him from fulfilling what He promised. This was an indication that adhering to the basics is put to the test.

You will always find that those who truly believe in the basics are those who are most willing to make sacrifices for their cause. They may sacrifice their wealth, their homes (by forsaking them) or even sacrifice their lives and get killed. All of this is done for the sake of the basics in which they believe. But this is different when it comes to false principles; those who choose to embrace them collect the price before they do. Those who promote such principles tell those whom they try to delude: take this money, live your life, enjoy it and wear the best of clothes.

By contrast, those who embrace the principles of the truth are often the poor who pay the cost dearly. Yet, they are justified in paying a dear cost because the One who set the price is Dear. However, those who embrace falsehood have no knowledge of the One Who set the price. Anyone who considers the destructive principles will realize how their leaders live, while their subjects languish in misery. Every one of them says to himself: I have to take the reward in advance. The case of the believers is totally different; they are the ones who pay the cost so that they enjoy the reward in the hereafter.

When the True Lord the Glorified and Exalted enacted fighting on the followers of Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, He did so for the purpose of defence at first. People used to ask the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: ‘O Messenger of Allah, allow us to fight as much as we can afford.’ The Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, would then answer: ‘Be patient; I have not been commanded to fight as of yet.’(1)

(1) Al-Kafi Ash-Shafi fi Takhrij Ahadith Al-Kashshaf by Ibn Hajar

Subsequently, fighting was decreed so that the community of believers could defend itself after Muslims had immigrated to Medina. We know that fighting is a necessity of life. The True Lord Glorified is He is the One Who says: 'If Allah did not drive some back by means of others the earth would be completely corrupt.' (al-Baqara: 251)

Further, He is the One Who also says: 'If Allah did not repel some people by means of others, many monasteries, churches, synagogues and mosques, where God's name is much invoked, would have been destroyed. Allah is sure to help those who help His cause— Allah is Strong and Mighty.' (al-Hajj: 40)

Thus, Allah repels some people by means of others because this is a necessity entailed by the reality of human life. When Islam is criticised for the decree of fighting, we should say: The True Lord the Glorified and Exalted decreed fighting to confront the forces of injustice that consistently tried to preclude the implementation of one of the well-known paths of justice, which no one could question. If justice did not come from the Heavens, there would be no appropriate system to rule people. Accordingly, if Allah wants to establish justice through a path that He reveals, why should someone try to impede the implementation of this path and say to the Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, 'you have come to force people to believe in your religion'? True Lord clarifies the purpose of the path of the Messenger, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him: he was sent to assert the dignity of the human being as the master of everything else in the world; all inanimate objects are subservient to him, and so are all the plants and animals. None of these of beings have the freedom of choice to say: 'I will do this and not do that.' No other species is granted will and choice except for humans. The True Lord says about the responsibility of having a choice: 'but they refused to bear it...' (al-Ahzab: 72).

But what is it that distinguishes human beings from other species? It is reason. Reason means to choose and distinguish between alternatives. However, if there is a situation that has no alternative, reason will be useless.

A good illustration of this point is the following: you may want to go someplace. Then, someone may explain that there is no route to the place you want to go except a particular one, so would you even think of taking another way? Of course you would not. Thus, reason does not have any other function except choosing among different alternatives. Were there no alternatives, reason would not have any function. If reason main purpose is to choose among different alternatives, should it be granted freedom or should its freedom be restricted? If you restrict reason's freedom of choice by coercion, you would be taking away the bounty you have granted it, and you would be making it subjugated, subservient and coerced. For this reason, we say that the one who is forced to do something does not have independent judgment; he is rather subjugated and coerced.

As long as you say that reason is the faculty that chooses among alternatives, the right to choose freely must be secured for every rational being; reason and free choice entail each other. Thus, if one suffers a deficiency in his reason, like being insane, he may not be able to choose. Further, if reason exists, but has not yet matured, we would also say that this person does not have any choice. Thus, reason must be both sound and mature in order for it to properly choose from among several alternatives, enabling the human being to choose freely. If reason is not sound, this means that the person is mentally ill and, subsequently, is incompetent to be entrusted with assignments from Allah—Allah has divested the insane of the dearest and most valuable distinguishing feature he has given to humans that is reason. However, Allah has also absolved the insane of all responsibility; so no one should hold him accountable for anything. Thus, the insane may do anything unaccountably. Divine assignments are only enacted upon those who have sound, mature minds; similarly, there is no fulfilling of obligations before reaching puberty.

Therefore, Islam came about to preserve the dignity of the human being and his right to freedom of choice; similarly, it gives you the choice to either believe or not. Those who carried swords and fought did not do so to force anyone to embrace Islam. They rather did it to combat the conspiracy and the sedition of those who wanted to coerce people. The jizya (the amount of money non-Muslims pay as taxes in Muslim countries) was decreed to absolve non-Muslims of the responsibility to fight. If Islam were to impose belief on people in the countries it took over, we would not find followers of any other religions in such countries. This is an attestation in favour of Muslims. Islam did not come about to impose itself as a religion; rather, it came to protect man's freedom to choose his religion. To those who claim that Islam was spread by the sword, we say that they need to understand things properly; early Muslims were weak and continued to be so for a long time. The countries conquered by Muslims still include non-Muslims. This is evidence that Islam came to protect freedom of faith: 'Say, "Now the truth has come from your Lord: let those who wish to believe in it do so, and let those who wish to reject it do so."' (al-Kahf: 29)

We now turn to another point, namely that Islam only decreed the jizya, because the non-Muslims would enjoy all the good of the Muslim countries, when the Muslims who undertake the mission of defending the country pay zakat—the obligatory alms: annual payment on certain kinds of property used for charitable and religious purposes and one of the Five Pillars of Islam—and kharaj—type of individual Islamic tax on agricultural land and its produce. Thus, it is thereby a matter of justice; the justice of the path of Allah. Against this background, one ought to understand the saying of the True Lord: 'Hence, let them fight in Allah's cause – those of you who are willing to trade the life of this world for the life to come. To anyone who fights in Allah's cause, whether killed or victorious, We shall give a great reward.' (an-Nisa': 74)

Fighting was decreed so that the courses set by Allah may dominate. Allah the Exalted says: 'Hence, let them fight in Allah's cause…' (an-Nisa': 74) indicating that fighting could be for causes other than Allah's. For instance, one may fight out of prejudice or to show off his courage. So, fighting always depends on its intention. For this reason, some people wondered: who is a true martyr? To this question, scholars responded that he is the one who fought so that the word of Allah would be the greatest and most exalted. Thus, fighting could either be for the cause of Allah or for the cause of self, or even for the cause of Satan. The True Lord says: 'Hence, let them fight in Allah's cause – those of you who are willing to trade the life of this world for the life to come. To anyone who fights in Allah's cause, whether killed or victorious, We shall give a great reward.' (an-Nisa': 74)

Accordingly, the one who engages in fighting has one of two choices: he may either be killed by enemies or he may triumph. This is the dialectical issue that is often in dispute between the camp of faith and camp of disbelief. The fighter from the camp of faith says to his counterparts in the camp of disbelief: I fight to attain one of the two best things: I may either be killed, become a martyr and enjoy a life better than the one I used to lead in this world, or triumph. So why are you even lurking for us, you disbelievers?

The believer has faith that he is the winner in all cases. If he is killed, he will go to paradise, to a better life than worldly life. Alternatively, he may live and triumph. Both cases are equally good.

Allah has ordained matters to be like that in order to demonstrate that His divine course deserves shedding blood for it. Further, it is a testimony that this religion is correct. Otherwise, no one would fight unless he is truly convinced of the rightness of this religion. Every one ultimately works and toils for his life and interests. Man assesses everything in terms of its advantageous value, even religion. For this reason, they say: do not choose bad selfishness, which is concerned with what is low and cheap; rather, choose good selfishness, which is concerned with what is high and worthy. Religion is a practice of an exalted form of good selfishness.

Let us give an example to illustrate this point—and to Allah pertains the highest and most exalted example. Assume that someone has only one pound of which he is in need; upon seeing that another person is in dire need of money, the true believer would say to himself: ‘I have eaten and it could be the case that person has not eaten yet.’ Then, he may give the other person the only pound he has. By Allah, does he love the one to whom he gave the pound more than himself? No. He loves himself, but it is a refined and exalted form of selfishness. We have previously said that the one who sees a beautiful woman and still shies away from looking at her is different from another who stares at her. Which of the two men likes beauty more? It is the one who keeps away from looking at the beautiful woman because he does not want her provisionally; he wants her permanently.

Not to mention the one who sells the worldly life and gets killed in the cause of Allah in exchange for the hereafter; that does not involve any killing or anything that may cause vexation. This is form of selfishness. The True Lord also deals with us according to a pragmatic law. However, it is a refined form of pragmatism and not a cheap short-term one. He thus bids us to sell what is cheap in exchange for what is dear and more exalted.

Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him saw, on the night of 'Isra'a and Mi'raj', those who died fighting for the cause of Allah and witnessed their status—the night when Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was elevated to the heavens. Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him saw a group of people cultivating and harvesting the fruits immediately after sowing the seeds because the one who gets killed in the cause of Allah did so for the elevation and ennoblement of the word of Allah. Therefore, he will never cease to harvest the fruits of the effort he exerted; and his life will extend through the lives of millions of people. Allah says: 'To anyone who fights in God's way, whether killed or victorious, We shall give a great reward.' (an-Nisa': 74) We know that every believer who fights in the cause of Allah says to the camp of disbelievers what the True Lord has revealed in His saying: 'Say, "Do you expect something other than one of the two best things to happen to us? Well, we expect God to inflict punishment on you, either from Himself or at our hands. So wait; we too are waiting."' (at-Tawba: 52) The believer knows that he will either be killed—and become a martyr—or he will defeat the camp of disbelief. Hence, he waits for Allah to inflict chastisement upon the disbelievers from Himself or by the hands of the believers. Thereby, the believers are bound to win, and the disbelievers are bound to lose in all cases.

Al-Ma'arri (a great medieval Arab poet and philosopher) said, before Allah guided him to His path, when he used to be an agnostic sceptic:

Days shatter us asunder as if we were glass

Though, unlike glass, we can never be reassembled.

Some interpreted this verse to be a denial of resurrection because he likened humans to broken glass that no one can return it to its former condition. He said that when his life was full of vanity, on the days when he was self-absorbed. However, the events developed in a way that altered him and strongly changed his way of thinking, until he ended up being a believer. But was he sure that he would live until he believed? Why had he not ridded himself of the bitterness of doubt? Yet, after he had believed, he said: 'Here I am dying a follower of the creed of the old people of Nysabur. Our Lord is the Truth and He is All-Hearing and All-Seeing. Then, he added:

The astrologist and the physician both claimed
That bodies cannot be resurrected;
To them I respond: were your statement true, I would not be a looser,
And were my stance true, you are the losers.'

This means that even if you were you right in claiming that there is no resurrection, and I still did good deeds, what loss would I have incurred in this case? I would not have lost anything. By contrast, were my claim true, and you were surprised by the Hereafter and resurrection, I would be the one who won, whereas loss and torment would be for you. Therefore, if my faith does not benefit me, it will not harm me. Your claims whether they were correct or not correct, they would not harm me.

The True Lord says: 'To anyone who fights in Allah's cause, whether killed or victorious, We shall give a great reward.' (an-Nisa': 74) Here, Allah prolongs the time of giving. Consider the precise articulation of the Quran due to the fact that the One speaking is Allah; let us look at how an action depends on another. When I say for instance: come to me and I will treat you generously and once you come, generous treatment ought to happen. But if you say: if you come, I will treat you generously in a while, this means that there may be a time lag between your arrival and the occurrence of the generous treatment. You will not be treated generously as soon as you come. You have to come to me first, and after a short while, you enjoy my generous treatment. Further, if I want to extend the time a little more, I may say: 'If you come to me, I will treat you generously after a while.' Thus, there are three stages of extending a reward based on an act: a reward that follows immediately once the condition is fulfilled, a reward that follows a short time after the condition is fulfilled and a reward that follows after a longer time.

The True Lord does not say to anyone who fights in Allah's cause: 'we shall immediately give a great reward.' Further, He does not say: 'we shall, after a while, give a great reward.' Rather, He says: 'we shall, in time, give a great reward.' This indicates that the complete fulfilment of this promise will take place on the Judgment Day. For this reason, the future (indicated by sawfa) had to be used in this context. This is evidence that it is a continuous reward that is neither disturbed nor forbidden.

Thus, we notice the precision of the phrasing of the Quran, when the True Lord talks about Himself using various styles. He once uses the plural form because, as we learnt in Arabic grammar, the letter nun is for majesty as in His saying: ‘We have sent down the Quran Ourselves, and We Ourselves will guard it...’ (al-Hijr: 9). Allah does not say ‘I sent down’, for everything is ultimately due to an action taken by Allah. Rather, He uses the plural form for majesty and glorification because when Allah does something for His creation, whether in the form of bounty or gratification, He intends to manifest a manifold of His attributes including accentuating His power and His knowledge in arranging and organizing His Bounty and His Wisdom. Thus, He says, ‘We shall give a great reward’ (an-Nisa’: 74) because different divine attributes cooperate to create the good.

But when He talks about himself apart from His actions, Allah uses the ‘I’ that refers to His Oneness, as in the saying of the True Lord: ‘Indeed, I am Allah. There is no deity except Me, so worship Me.’ (Ta Ha: 14) This style also recurs in the saying of the True Lord: ‘And I have chosen you, so listen to what is revealed [to you].’ (Ta Ha: 13) When Allah Glorified is He talks about Himself, He uses His Oneness; we do not say individual or singular form, out of politeness and courtesy towards Allah, for He does not have a partner or a counterpart.

When Allah talks about His actions, He uses ‘We.’ This style of address solved a lot of problems for us because it happened when we read the saying of the Tue Lord: ‘Have you [Prophet] not considered how Allah sends water down from the sky and that We produce with it fruits of varied colours; that there are in the mountains layers of white and red of various hues, and jet black.’ (Fatir: 27) Allah the Exalted says: ‘…Allah sends water down…’ It would have been (seemingly) suitable to follow this with ‘and produce with it…’. But He says ‘We produce with it fruits of varied colours’ (Fatir: 27); then, why does He use ‘Allah sends’ in the first case and ‘We produce’ in the second? The reason is that when He says: ‘We send water down from the sky’ (Luqman: 10), none of his creatures, with or without means, has anything to do with it. But once the rain fell, someone may plough the land, another may sow the seeds and a third may irrigate the land. All of these are causes and means Allah has created for His creatures. Accordingly Allah does not marginalize or ignore the efforts of His creatures. He thus says: ‘Allah sends water down from the sky.’ (Fatir: 27) Afterwards, He says ‘I and my creatures, through what I have supplied and provided them, bring forth fruits: “produce with it fruits of varied colours”.’ (Fatir: 27) Therefore, we ought to pay attention to the significance of the ‘I’ form versus the significance when it is used the ‘We’ form. The words of Allah: ‘We shall give a great reward’ (an-Nisa’: 74) draws our attention to the fact that every action is an event commensurate with the one who undertakes it in terms of both its potential and influence. When a child slaps one of his classmates, his slap might not be as strong as that of a youth or a grown up man. Accordingly, if the one who dispenses the reward had a counterpart, he would give in proportion to the amount his counterpart may give. But if the dispenser is our Lord, He gives in proportion to His Worth. Hence, the reward must be great; the reward is what one receives in return for a service.

There is a difference between a reward and a price. A price is the specific value paid in return for goods or service. By contrast, a reward is what is given in return for a particular benefit or service. When I say: ‘I have bought this’, this means that I have paid its price. But if I rent something, it is still the property of the owner, and I just enjoy its benefit. In this vein, would Allah’s reward for the one who gets killed for His cause be deemed as a reward or a price? We notice here that the True Lord explains that He does not set a value for the one who dies for His cause; rather, He considers his action. He, thereby, reckons the effect of his action and grants him, in return, a ‘mighty reward.’ (an-Nisa’: 74) Subsequently, the True Lord says:

وَمَا لَكُمۡ لَا تُقَٰتِلُونَ فِي سَبِيلِ ٱللَّهِ وَٱلۡمُسۡتَضۡعَفِينَ مِنَ ٱلرِّجَالِ وَٱلنِّسَآءِ
وَٱلۡوِلۡدَٰنِ ٱلَّذِينَ يَقُولُونَ رَبَّنَآ أَخۡرِجۡنَا مِنۡ هَٰذِهِ ٱلۡقَرۡيَةِ ٱلظَّالِمِ أَهۡلُهَا وَٱجۡعَل
لَّنَا مِن لَّدُنكَ وَلِيّٗا وَٱجۡعَل لَّنَا مِن لَّدُنكَ نَصِيرًا ﴿٧٥﴾

Why should you not fight in God’s cause and for those oppressed men, women, and children who cry out, ‘Lord, rescue us from this town whose people are oppressors! By Your grace, give us a protector and give us a helper!’? [75] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 75)

The verse starts with an exclamatory expression. The reason is that, after clarifying the kind of compensation granted for fighting and dying for the cause of Allah, He had to show how this fighting is in line with humans’ natural inclination. In our day-to-day lives, we say: ‘Why do you not do such and such?' It is as if we are wondering about the reason behind refraining from doing something that matches the person's nature and mindset. Accordingly, if one does not do so, it is considered weird and strange. After Allah has explained the marvellous outcome of fighting for His cause, He goes on to say that whoever refuses to fight when it is demanded by Allah, his refusal will be regarded peculiar and strange. For this reason, the True Lord says: 'Why should you not fight in Allah's cause…' (an-Nisa': 75) which means, 'How could you not fight for the cause of elevating the word of Allah?' On certain occasions, the believer may fight to support the weak ones who have been hurt and harmed due to their religion. This is also another form of elevating and exalting the word of Allah.

Allah the Exalted says: 'Why should you not fight in Allah's cause and for those oppressed men…' (an-Nisa': 75) meaning that fighting can be in the cause of Allah as well as in the cause of saving the oppressed. This is a way of arousing and exciting human zeal and ardour so that one would be resolute in fighting, even on humanitarian grounds, for the cause of relieving the weak of the torment and pain to which they have been subjected—because, as long as they tolerate pain, while still keeping their faith, they will be demonstrating the strength of their faith. Therefore, they are the ones who deserve the most to be defended and rescued from pain and torture. Allah Glorified is He uses an exclamatory style to express this point: 'Why should you not fight in God's cause and for those oppressed men' (an-Nisa': 75). Reason, passion and religion all dictate that fighting is necessary, so refraining from fighting is what should arouse suspicion and wonder. When our Lord poses this issue, He does so based on the fact that everyone will be equally astounded and surprised by it. It is like the saying of the True Lord: 'How can you disbelieve in Allah…' (al-Baqara: 28) This means: how can you abjure your faith in our Lord, you disbelievers? This is a strange stance that no reasonable person could easily conceive; for this reason, the verse says: 'How can you disbelieve in Allah…' (al-Baqara: 28).

'Why should you not fight in God's cause and for those oppressed men…?' (an-Nisa': 75) The word 'oppressed' is followed by 'men', but men are supposed to be strong. This draws our attention to the condition that would make a man helpless, and make those who followed, 'women and children', even more helpless. '…For those oppressed men, women and children who cry out, "Lord, rescue us from this town whose people are oppressors! Give us, out of Your grace, a protector and give us one who will bring us succour!'" (an-Nisa': 75) The disbelievers persecuted the believers to the extent that it made the latter invoke Allah to lead them forth to freedom, out of the land the people of which are oppressors. The land of oppression they refer to here is Mecca.

The story here is about a group of believers who were incapable of migrating out of Mecca after the Messenger of Allah, Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, had emigrated. They were forbidden to emigrate; yet, they kept their faith, so they became utterly helpless men, women and children. The persecution to which they were subjected by the disbelievers was too fierce to exempt even young children. In this vein, the True Lord says to the believers: 'Why should you not fight in God's cause and for those oppressed men, women, and children…' (an-Nisa': 75).

What did these people say when they became utterly helpless? They said: "'Lord, rescue us from this town whose people are oppressors! Give us, out of Your grace, a protector and give us one who will bring us succour!'" (an-Nisa': 75) The articulation of the supplication itself indicates that they will not go out. Rather, some of them trusted that a believer from the Muslims would come and rule over them. It is as if this part of the verse suggested that the Muslims would conquer Mecca, which came true.

Allah raised for them, out of His grace, a protector and a Sustainer: Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him who took charge of them in the best way and led them to the greatest victory.

Maslama ibn Hisham(1) was in the group of the utterly helpless who could not emigrate along with Al-Walid ibn Al-Walid, Ayyash ibn Abu Rabi'a, Abu Jandal ibn Suhayl ibn 'Amr and our Ibn 'Abbas Allah be pleased with him who said: 'My mother and I were among the oppressed women and children, and they used to restrict our movement so that we could not leave Mecca.' Thus, they needed to be supported and helped. For this reason, Allah made their believing brethren feel pity and sympathy in order to motivate them to fight for their cause since the disbelievers' injustice towards them was ferocious and did not distinguish among men, women or children in the torture they inflicted.

(1) The story of Maslama ibn Hisham and the group of poor people who could not emigrate

‘Who cry out, “Lord, rescue us from this town whose people are oppressors! Give us, out of Your grace, a protector and give us one who will bring us succour!”’ (an-Nisa’: 75) The Messenger Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him and his Muslim followers were their succour. Subsequently, the True Lord says:

ٱلَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا۟ يُقَٰتِلُونَ فِى سَبِيلِ ٱللَّهِ ۖ وَٱلَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا۟ يُقَٰتِلُونَ فِى سَبِيلِ
ٱلطَّٰغُوتِ فَقَٰتِلُوٓا۟ أَوْلِيَآءَ ٱلشَّيْطَٰنِ ۖ إِنَّ كَيْدَ ٱلشَّيْطَٰنِ كَانَ ضَعِيفًا ﴿٧٦﴾

The believers fight for God’s cause, while those who reject faith fight for an unjust cause. Fight the allies of Satan: Satan’s strategies are truly weak [76] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 76)

We have previously learnt that the powers of evil refer to those who do injustice and wrong others in an extreme way. It can be used to refer to singular, dual or plural nouns. Thus you may say taghut—evil power—in reference to one, two or more than two men who wrong others in an extreme way. The True Lord says: ‘ Allah is the ally of those who believe: He brings them out of the depths of darkness and into the light. As for the disbelievers, their allies are the powers of evil.’ (al-Baqara: 257)

Thus, the word taghut—powers of evil—may refer to singular, dual and plural nouns. But could the evil power be the devil? Yes, it could be. Could it also refer to the despotic tyrant who is enticed to do more injustice through people’s submission to him? Yes, it could also assume this meaning. Could it also refer to the one who impose evil on people to the extent that people would fear his evil? Yes, the word could also refer to this person. All of these are possible meanings of the word taghut. The style of the Quran varies significantly. Thus, it may in one instance say: ‘You have already had a sign in the two armies that met in battle, one fighting for Allah’s cause and the other made up of disbelievers.’ (Al-‘Imran: 13) Consider the contrast in this context: ‘The believers fight for Allah’s cause, while those who reject faith fight for the cause of the powers of evil’ (an-Nisa’: 76). On the one hand, there is the contrast between ‘the believers’ and ‘those who reject faith’; on the other hand, there is the contrast between the ‘ Allah’s cause and the ‘cause of the powers of evil.’ This is to let us grasp the significance of the phrasing of the statements that our Lord intersperses throughout the Quran. We have to realize the miraculous dimension they involve. In this verse, He says: 'The believers fight for Allah's cause, while those who reject faith…' (an-Nisa': 76). The reason is that it can be easily inferred that the disbelievers are powers of evil and will fight for this cause. But if in the verse cited from the chapter of Al-'Imran, Allah mentions an opposite to an already omitted, but inferrable party in the verse from the chapter of an-Nisa' or vice versa; this method is called ihtibak in the science of Arabic rhetoric. But how does it function?

Consider the saying of Allah the Glorified and Exalted: 'You have already had a sign in the two armies that met in battle, one fighting for Allah's cause and the other made up of disbelievers.' (Al-'Imran: 13) The word 'disbelievers' here indicates that they fight for the cause of taghut (the powers of evil); this group is contrasted with the opposite group —that fights for the cause of Allah—who certainly consist of believers.

Thus, the entire discourse is harmonious. Allah says: 'You have already had a sign in the two armies that met in battle, one…' (Al-'Imran: 13). Here, He just says 'one' and we immediately infer that this army that fights in the cause of Allah are believers, though this is not mentioned in words. Our Lord provokes our minds by avoiding stating everything explicitly so that we put our mind to work, and so that there would be no redundancy. This way, we also realize that if Allah says: 'in Allah's cause', He refers to the believers, and if He says for the 'cause of the powers of evil' (an-Nisa': 76) He refers to the disbelievers. The True Lord then resumes: 'Fight the allies of Satan' (an-Nisa': 76). This verse refers to the advocates and proponents of the devil who promote his principles and endorse his temptations with their hearts in order to spread them among other people. These are the allies of Satan; for, Satan, as we know, said in the following conversation that took place between Satan and his Creator: 'Satan said, "I swear by Your might! I will most certainly tempt them all."' (Sad: 82) Satan, then, realized his limits and constrained his claim accordingly: '(All) save such of them as are true servants!' (Sad: 83)

This means that I (i.e. Satan) will not be able to tempt or sway whoever Allah wills to be on His path. This indicates that the struggle is not between Satan and Allah. Allah is too Exalted to go into struggles with anyone. The struggle, then, is between Satan and the losers among the creatures. Inasmuch as He said: 'I swear by Your might! I will most certainly tempt them all.' (Sad: 82), this indicates that Satan knew how to take oaths and swear because if our Lord wills that all people adhere to His path and become believers, Satan would not be able to approach anyone. But our Lord is Mighty and All-Sufficient and is in no need of His creation. Thus, whoever wills, may believe and whoever does not, may not. This is how Satan insinuated himself into the picture. Satan made his way due to the fact that Allah is Almighty and in no need of His creation because if Allah wants all people to adhere to his path, Satan will not be able to do anything about it. The evidence is Allah's saying: '(All) save such of them as are true servants' (Sad: 83) which indicates that he will not be able to approach any of them. The oath of Satan also indicates that he has studied and is aware of how to approach the servants of Allah. He thus said: 'I shall most certainly lie in ambush for them all along your straight path.' (al-A'raf: 16) Satan will not try to sway those who already stray on the path of error because those do not need Satan to sway them. They are comfort to him. They are his allies who help him accomplish his mission. The allies of Satan are thereby the ones who oppose the path of Allah and by doing so they become his advocates.

The True Lord commands us: 'Fight the allies of Satan' (an-Nisa': 76). Those are the ones who ally themselves with Satan. Each of them supports the other. Allah then comforts us in this regard and says: 'Satan's strategies are truly weak.' (an-Nisa': 76) The reason is that when Satan forges a guile, his guile will be against his Lord. Thus, it has to be weak in comparison to that of Allah. Satan does not have dominion and power over the human body, so he cannot overpower humans to do anything. He cannot force you to do anything and he does not have any justification with which he can convince you. You are said to be physically coerced if someone forces you to do something unwillingly and grudgingly. For instance, a person may threaten and menace you, point a gun at your head or command you to prostrate to him. But can anyone coerce or overpower your heart and command you to say, 'love me'? No, it is impossible. Thus, a tyrant can overpower your body, but can never overpower your heart. The things that overpower the heart are justification and evidence; these are the powers that may convince you, but not force you to pursue a specific course of action. Hence, the means of overpowering the body is force and that of overpowering the heart is justification.

The True Lord explains this point to us: know well that Satan is very weak. He does not have the power to force you to do anything. So if he tries to tempt you, you should say to him: ‘I will not do so.’ Further, he cannot come to your head and say: ‘You should do this’ and force you do a particular thing against your will. He does not have any justification with which he can convince you to do such things; he is weak. Why do you obey him then? You obey him due to your oblivion and your love for your lusts and desires. Satan is incapable of overpowering your heart or your body; he just entices you. For this reason, Satan would defend himself on the Day of Judgment by saying: ‘I had no power over you except to call you, and you responded to my call.’ (Ibrahim: 22) This means that he did not have any power or force to compel your bodies to do anything, and nor did he have any power of justification to convince your hearts to do anything. You are the ones who are faulty and sinful, and Satan does not have anything to do with it. Therefore, the guile of the devil is weak. The ‘guile’—as we know—is an attempt to corrupt something or a state of being through mischief and knavery; for there are some who corrupt without using any tricks and there are some, by contrast, who want to corrupt things so that if you catch them, they would say: ‘We did not do anything,’ because they commit mistakes secretly and corrupt using mischief and knavery. However, guile can only attract the weak. The strong person is the one who is capable of confronting the one who conspires against him. For instance, if someone is trying to poison another, he would be classified among those who try to corrupt things using tricks because he is afraid of confrontation. By contrast, a strong person is the one who refuses to do so even to the one who kills by way of confrontation, we say to him: you are afraid. You have proven through your audacity to kill another person that you cannot stand his life; but true manhood and courage necessitates that you let him live and see what he can do.

Therefore, the guile of Satan has transpired to be weak because Satan does not command power, whereby he can coerce or force your body, and he does not have the justification with which he can overpower your heart and persuade you. He, cunningly, points and tempts you using tricks, and you come to him. He does not play his ticks except on the weak person. The weaker the person, the graver Satan’s guile will be. For this reason, people used to say that a woman is stronger than a man because our Lord says: ‘Verily, your guile is great.’ (Yusuf: 28) To these people we say: ‘A woman's use of guile is proof of her weakness.’ Otherwise, why would they resort to forging guiles? An Arab poet emphasizes this by saying:

A woman is weak till she seizes an opportunity
Only then she would kill. This is what the power of the weak looks like

This is because, once a weak person has power over his opponent, and life gives him mastery over him, he says: ‘I will not let him go, for if I do, he will harm me more and do this and that’; whereas a strong person if put in the same situation, will say: ‘I will let him go, and if he wrongs me again, I will get hold of him and hit him on the head.’ So, when the guile is great, the weakness behind it is greater. The True Lord, then, says: ‘[Prophet], do you not see those who were told, “Restrain yourselves from fighting, perform the prayer and pay the prescribed alms”? When fighting was ‘ordained for them, they evaded the command. The reason is that when the weak seizes his enemy and has control over him, he will say, ‘I will not leave him because if I do that, he will do so and so to me.’ But when the strong seizes his enemy, he will say, ‘I will let him go, but if he does something else, I will catch him and hit and punish him.’ Thus, the greater the person's guile is, the greater his weakness tends to be. Subsequently Allah the Exalted says:

أَلَمۡ تَرَ إِلَى ٱلَّذِينَ قِيلَ لَهُمۡ كُفُّوٓاْ أَيۡدِيَكُمۡ وَأَقِيمُواْ ٱلصَّلَوٰةَ وَءَاتُواْ ٱلزَّكَوٰةَ فَلَمَّا كُتِبَ عَلَيۡهِمُ ٱلۡقِتَالُ إِذَا
فَرِيقٞ مِّنۡهُمۡ يَخۡشَوۡنَ ٱلنَّاسَ كَخَشۡيَةِ ٱللَّهِ أَوۡ أَشَدَّ خَشۡيَةٗۚ وَقَالُواْ رَبَّنَا لِمَ كَتَبۡتَ عَلَيۡنَا ٱلۡقِتَالَ لَوۡلَآ
أَخَّرۡتَنَآ إِلَىٰٓ أَجَلٖ قَرِيبٖۗ قُلۡ مَتَٰعُ ٱلدُّنۡيَا قَلِيلٞ وَٱلۡأٓخِرَةُ خَيۡرٞ لِّمَنِ ٱتَّقَىٰ وَلَا تُظۡلَمُونَ فَتِيلًا ٧٧

[Prophet], do you not see those who were told, ‘Restrain your- selves from fighting, perform the prayer, and pay the prescribed alms’? When fighting was ordained for them, some of them feared men as much as, or even more than, they feared God, saying, ‘Lord, why have You ordained fighting for us? If only You would give us just a little more time.’ Say to them, ‘Little is the enjoyment in this world, the Hereafter is far better for those who are mindful of God: you will not be wronged by as much as the fibre in a date stone [77] (The Quran, an-Nisa’: 77)

We know that when Allah the Exalted uses the interrogative clause ‘do you not see,’ He means that if you witnessed the matter at the time it happened, you could meditate on the actual event. By contrast, if the event has not been witnessed, then it means, ‘do not you know?’ However, the knowledge informed by Allah is more authentic than whatever you may witness with your own eyes. When Allah says, ‘Constrain your hands,’ this entails the intention to extend and use the hands; that is, no one would order someone who did not extend his hands to constrain them. The discourse here in the verse is about fighting. Thus, constraining hands, in this context, refers to abstaining from fighting. The evidence is that Allah says later in the verse, ‘When fighting was ordained for them...’ Hence, they were commanded to constrain their hands because they had manifested the intention to engage in fighting, either verbally by saying, ‘O Muhammad, give us the permission to fight,’ or action by preparing themselves for fight. Inasmuch as Allah says in the Quran, ‘...But when fighting was ordained for them,...’ this indicates the existence of two temporal contexts in this verse: the first is when they were asked to constrain their hands, and the second is when fighting was prescribed for them. We, thereby, understand that there were intentions on their part to extend their hands in the sense of fighting before it was ordained for them. Those who asked for the permission to fight were Ibn ‘Awf and some of his friends. If the command to fight had been left to Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him, he would have commanded them to do so once they asked him. It has been related that Ibn ‘Abbas Allah be pleased with him said that ‘Abd Ar-Rahman ibn ‘Awf and some of his companions came to Prophet Muhammad in Mecca and said, ‘O Muhammad! We were respected when we were idolaters, and when we believed, we were humiliated.’ He said, ‘I have been commanded to pardon, so do not fight.’(1) Then, when Allah caused us to move to Medina, He commanded us to fight, but they refrained. Then Allah the Almighty has revealed: ‘Have you not seen those who were told to constrain their hands (from fighting)?’This is proof that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him was waiting for the Command of Allah. Subsequently, Allah has prescribed fighting upon them; yet, some of them evaded the command. This is in line with Allah’s words that, when fighting was prescribed, some of them feared the enemy as they feared Allah or even more. (an-Nisa’: 77) So, how can one explain this fear even though they are supposedly believers? Does this mean that they were afraid of their enemies, or that they reneged on their faith, as some of the children of Israel did after they had asked Allah to prescribe fighting upon them? The children of Israel asked a Prophet of theirs to raise a king for them to fight in Allah's cause. Yet, when fighting was ordained for them, they turned their backs, save for a few of them. (al-Baqara: 246)

(1) Abu Dawud, authentic

Accordingly, when matters reached the stage of actual application, fear and weakness befell on some of them. Allah the Exalted has not ignored the possibility that any believer's faith can increase and decrease. Since the person is neither a Messenger and nor infallible, we should not say that someone did so and so. The reason is that the person did not claim to be infallible. Thus, he may err, fall prey to the inclinations or temptations of his own self and he may be in a weak position. For this reason, when someone tells you that this woman did this, and that man did that, ask him, 'Did anyone claim to be infallible? Since they are not infallible, they may err.'

Allah says that only some of the group took this stance, and this means that they were not equal; some of them were weak, and some of them preserved the strength and robustness of their faith so that no weakness or atrophy befell them. In addition, consider Allah's courtesy when addressing people. Allah has not referred to a specific person; rather, He only says that some of them wanted to evade fighting which necessitated that everyone should check into himself. Allah has intended to avoid naming anyone in order to preserve the privacy of His Servants. Since preserving the privacy of His servants emanates from Him the Exalted then know that our Lord is more jealous about His Servant than the servant himself. For this reason, we always say that Allah's concealment of people's secrets from others is an honour for all mankind.

Assume that Allah has revealed to you the secrets of other people; would you like them to know yours? No; therefore, when you see that Allah has concealed your secrets and that of other people, know that it is a bounty and a form of Mercy because man is always in a flux of change. Thus, someone may offend you deep down in his heart, but he may not want you to know about this offense. You may also hate him and want to get rid of him. If Allah revealed to him what you conceal in your heart and revealed to you what he conceals in his heart, a dispute may flare up wherein each of you may lose his dignity. But Allah has concealed the secrets of His creation due to His mercy to them.

You are the servant of Allah who may disobey Him, but He likes to conceal your sins and also commands others not to look into them. By Allah, is there another Lord like this Lord? This is wondrous. You may be sinful, but He still conceals your sins, and He also commands others not to reveal other people's faults. That is because some people may be ashamed of their faults, so they use their reputations and clothes in order to conceal their shortcomings. Why has Allah decreed this? He has decreed this so that people would not lose control or hope of the way of repentance to Allah.

Therefore, Allah the Exalted dispenses His mercy to society, but the failure is on part of the people who always insist on knowing the unseen and seeking those who can foretell the future. We say, to whoever pursues such practises, that Allah has concealed the unseen as a bounty that He has bestowed upon you, so leave it as Allah has willed.

Therefore, Allah the Exalted says that when fighting has been ordained for them, a group stood in awe of men as one should stand in awe of Allah. Everyone who belonged to this group was afraid of fighting, getting killed and death because it would lead him to be recompensed for what he has done in the worldly life. For this reason, one companion once said, ‘I hate the truth.’ So, another companion wondered, ‘How come you hate the truth?’ He replied, ‘I hate the truth of death and who among us likes it.’

Why do people hate fighting and death? The reason is that Allah takes a soul without the destruction of the body. In contrast, enemies at war may cut bodies into pieces or even mutilate them. But if the servant of Allah recalls the reward which he will be granted for this sacrifice, the whole matter will become easy for him.

When fighting was prescribed for those people, they asked why Allah has done so. It is as if they forgot that they were the ones who had asked Allah to prescribe fighting for them. But this is the nature of the human psyche; it always craves what is remote and out of reach, but once the object of desire is attained, it loses interest.

Then, they said, 'Lord, why have You ordained fighting for us? If only You would give us just a little more time.' Was this discourse really intended as an interrogative? Allah explains that they said, 'Lord! Why have you examined us in such a tough way? We may not be able to endure it at the time of fear in battles.' For this reason, they asked Allah to postpone the prescription of fighting and cause them to die naturally, not at the hands of their enemies. The phrase '…for a little while…' shows that each and every one of them was completely aware that he would inevitably die, but none of them wanted his life to end by getting killed. Why do you ask Allah to postpone the time of prescribing fighting? Is it out of your love for the worldly life and its pleasures? Allah's answer immediately follows: '…Say, "little is the enjoyment of this worldly life…"' It is very inappropriate of you, believers, to be so concerned about your lives that you do not go to fight. All of you will ultimately die and everyone will be recompensed according to his or her deeds. However, the one who gets killed while fighting for the cause of Allah, will immediately be rewarded and granted a life in lieu of his death in this worldly life, as he attained martyrdom. For this reason, Allah commands His Prophet Muhammad to declare the littleness of the enjoyment of this worldly life when compared to the great reward that someone attains if he is killed for the Cause of Allah. Then, some of them said, 'If death is inevitable, why do we not go and fight for Allah's cause. If we get killed, let it be for a price that exceeds the value of our deed.' Hence, this is raising the value of the benefit. For this reason, a wise man once said:

If any human being were immortal

We would deem the courageous the most erroneous among us.

This means that if life lasted for someone, the most misled people among us would be the courageous ones—who get killed in battles; however, this is not the case. The Arab poet says:

O you who deter me from fighting let the uproar of battle begin

And watch me take pleasure in dying, for will you make me immortal

And the poet Al-Mutanabbi says:

I see that all of us desire the life

Each keen on his life as if he were in love with it
The love of the coward for himself made him cautious
And the love of the courageous for himself led him to war.

Thus, both of them love their own selves; but there is a difference between the foolish love and the deep love.

When we look at the overall context of the verse, we will realize that Allah the Exalted is educating the believing group in the early times of Islam. This education regarding their faith is not subject to the party spirit of the pre-Islamic era or to the pride of the soul. A group of the believers in Mecca who experienced persecution wanted to fight, but Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him informed them that he has not been commanded to fight yet. Then, he commanded them to pray, pay alms to the poor, and endure what they were going through until Allah permitted them to fight. This is the first stage of education which the believers went through because Islam came about at a time when Arabs were full of pride, tribal prejudices, haughtiness and arrogance. Whenever one of them was provoked about something, he would rush to his sword and tribe and wage a war. Thereby Allah the Exalted wants to uproot the believers' anger for the sake of themselves, tribal prejudices and pride; rather, He the Exalted wants to make their anger for the sake of Allah only.

When the permission to fight was revealed, it did not come to impose Islam as a creed on people or to force them to embrace it as a religion. Rather, it came to protect the people from the domination of the stronger one, who wants to subordinate the weak to him. When Allah the Exalted wants to free the choice of the human being, He prescribed fighting to preserve the dignity of the human being and to keep them from being subordinate to anyone else in their creed. Afterwards, Islam should be presented rationally so that whoever accepts it is welcomed, and whoever does not, he can retain his religion. This indicates that Islam is a religion that prohibited encroaching upon other people's faiths and guaranteed for them the freedom to choose whatever creed they wanted—after clarifying to them what is guidance and what is error.

When Allah enjoined fighting on the believers, He made it solely for His cause so as to clear the believers' intentions from any other purposes or aims. He wants the believers to fight only for His cause and not for anger, prejudice, pride or any other personal motive. For this reason, we find that some of those who were craving to fight feared it when it was decreed as they fear Allah or even more.

Accordingly, there is a difference between fighting in theory and actually engaging in it. For this reason, we saw that some of them even feared to engage in fighting in order not to get killed. Killing, as you know, is the destruction of the body; it is different from the natural death in which Allah severs the soul from the body without destroying the latter. In addition, fighting excites one's fear of death, and the fear of fighting emanates from one's desire to live longer. That is due to the fact that getting killed in battle makes the fighter confronts death closely, whereas natural death is only known by Allah. For this reason, they said, Our Lord! Why have you ordained fighting for us? Was their request for fighting intended to satisfy their pride and haughtiness? Allah wants to acquit the believer of any suspicion of fighting for the sake of pride because He the Exalted wants the battle to be only for the cause of faith so that the Word of Allah is the highest, even if the one opposing its prevalence shares familial, blood or friendship relations with the believers.

Allah the Exalted wants to teach us this principle because the Muslim Ummah will face fierce violence in its attempt to affirm the basis of creedal choice among mankind. In this vein Allah the Exalted tells Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him that 'If they say to you that they want Allah to postpone the prescription of fighting, tell them that the enjoyment of this world is little.' Thus, the keener the believer is to preserve his life—to make it longer—the bigger the share he wants to take from this life. Similarly, Allah commands us to abandon this idea and to establish a criterion whereby we can gauge the worth and value of our life; 'for He promises the believers to be admitted into Paradise in return for their lives and property' (at-Tawba: 111).

It is a transaction of selling and buying. Furthermore, Allah the Exalted says concerning the bargain of faith that He says 'Shall I show you to a bargain that will save you from a grievous punishment.' (as-Saff: 10)

Accordingly, Allah regards the human interest in His dealing with us. A courteous and intelligent person would choose to engage in the profitable and guaranteed deal whose return exceeds every other deal. If we compare this world to the Afterlife, we will immediately realize that no matter how long the former lasts, this will not affect or increase the age of the individual. That is due to the fact that, even if the age of the world were extended, its actual lifetime, which is relative to everyone, is measured in terms of the individual's lifetime and not in terms of the lifetime of the world's population. Even if the worldly life lasted longer for others, what benefit would accrue to the individual in return?

Therefore, the worldly life for any individual is defined. Allah gives glad tidings to the believer who fights for His cause by assuring him that He will gain an infinite lifetime from this deal. Moreover, the length of our stay in this world, without being killed and dying naturally, is dubitable and not certain. Indeed, we see people who die as infants, and others who die in their youth or early adulthood. By contrast, the Afterlife is infinite and certain.

Indeed, on the one hand, pleasure and gratification in this world are commensurate with the vision and capacity of each individual to achieve them. On the other hand, pleasure in the Afterlife is commensurate with what Allah has prepared for His servants through His infinite power and abundant Mercy. Thus, if we compared the exchange of the worldly life for the Afterlife, we will realize that the worldly pleasure, assuming that it is a pleasure in the first place, is quite short-lived and limited.

Accordingly, Allah raises our awareness to value the bargain of faith. He knows that everyone loves to achieve his benefit. So, no one should think that religion came about to divest him of his freedom or to humiliate him because religion was revealed to refine and develop the interest of the believer.

A good example is when religion forbids the person to steal from others, it also forbids all other people to steal from that person; therefore, everyone gains the protection of religion. As much as religion prevents one from encroaching upon others' rights, it similarly prevents others, who are numbered in millions, from encroaching upon the individual's rights. Similarly, when religion forbids you from casting your eyes upon what is only permitted to others; it restricts others from casting their eyes upon what is only permitted to you. The greatest gain thereby accrues to the individual.

Allah's statement concerning the littleness of this world enjoyment reflects the greatness of the bargain of faith. Subsequently, Allah assures us of His

Justice saying that none will be wronged by even as much as the fibre in a date stone. The Arabic word al-fatil often refers to the threads of dirt that get formed as one rubs his plums together. Also, al-fatil may refer to the small thread inside the date stone. All of these semantic connotations indicate that you will not be wronged even regarding the most trivial matters. Allah has also set conditions for justice as He explains that whoever commits a sin will be commensurately recompensed for it. However, the one who does a good deed will be rewarded ten times its worth or more.

In this manner, justice will not exhaust any believer because it comes with its grace as the good deed is worth ten times its value or more. The good deed is further weighed for Allah on the scale of justice based on the Grace the one has received. So, no one should say that Allah dispenses Justice without Grace.

Thus, the saying of Allah that says that none will be wronged by as much as the fibre in a date stone associates grace with justice. For this reason, we supplicate to Allah to treat us in accordance with His Grace and not with His Justice, since Justice alone may exhaust us. We also ask Allah to give us gracefully and favourably and not according to the measure of the scale, because the latter may exhaust us. Further, we supplicate to Allah to treat us generously and not according to strict calculative measures. Thereby, we see that Allah's statement informs us that He will treat us justly and gracefully so that the sin would be counted as one, and the good deed would be worth ten times its value or more.

Allah's statement refers to what He has decreed in accordance with both His Grace and Justice. Further Allah the Exalted wants to reassure us that the issues of faith are preserved. Accordingly, we should not think that your deeds are the cause of your granted reward. Rather, the true cause is the Grace of Allah as He says that the believers should rejoice at the Bounty of Allah and His Grace. (Yunus: 58)

It is Allah's Grace which delights the heart of the believer. Afterwards, Allah responds to an issue that the hypocrites raised when Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him went out to war in Uhud and a large number of Muslims were killed. The hypocrites said that if the Muslims had remained with them, they would not have been killed. (Al-'Imran: 156) They thought that staying in their homes would protect them from death and that going to war, conversely, brought about death. We know that every event has its temporal and spatial context to which we usually refer as the condition of the event. Those who grammatically studied the meaning of azh-zharf (the spatial and temporal conditions) know that it is the part of speech which classifies the conditions into either time or space. Every event must have a certain place and it at a certain point in time. However, the time and place of death are ambiguous; it is spatially and temporally vague. When Allah conceals something, He does not do so to make it unknown to us; rather, to clear its nature abundantly. Thus, when Allah conceals something, it becomes abundantly clear, but how so?

When Allah the Exalted conceals the time of death and makes it unknown to us, man ought to expect death at any moment. Thus, is there clarity better than this? When He has made us unaware of the time of death, He has not prevented us from determining the time it happens; however, He has raised our awareness that death may happen at any point in our lives; therefore, no one is thus capable of taking precautions to avoid the time or the place of death. Thus, Allah says:

أَيْنَمَا تَكُونُوا۟ يُدْرِككُّمُ ٱلْمَوْتُ وَلَوْ كُنتُمْ فِى بُرُوجٍ مُّشَيَّدَةٍ ۗ وَإِن تُصِبْهُمْ حَسَنَةٌ
يَقُولُوا۟ هَٰذِهِۦ مِنْ عِندِ ٱللَّهِ ۖ وَإِن تُصِبْهُمْ سَيِّئَةٌ يَقُولُوا۟ هَٰذِهِۦ مِنْ عِندِكَ ۚ قُلْ كُلٌّ
مِّنْ عِندِ ٱللَّهِ ۖ فَمَالِ هَٰٓؤُلَآءِ ٱلْقَوْمِ لَا يَكَادُونَ يَفْقَهُونَ حَدِيثًا ﴿٧٨﴾

Death will overtake you no matter where you may be, even inside high towers.' When good fortune comes their way, they say, 'This is from God,' but when harm befalls them, they say, 'This is from you [Prophet].' Say to them, 'Both come from God.' What is the matter with these people that they can barely understand what they are told? [78] (The Quran, an-Nisa': 78)

In this verse, Allah addresses the question of death from the perspective of the place, when He says that death overtakes the person wherever he might be, even inside high towers. The human mind—which imagines that it could take precautions against death by avoiding the place where it is supposed to happen—should realize that it is incapable of doing so. The presence of a person in a particular place does not protect or prevent him from death.

Irrespective of whether he is in the camp of belief or that of disbelief, nothing will keep death from reaching him.

The location, as we know, defines the spatial condition of the event. The subtlety of death penetrates any place or time as long as Allah has decreed it to happen. The enemies of man, as far as his health and life are concerned, are numerous. But if we consider enemies in terms of their violence, we will find that it suits their subtlety. The subtler the enemy is, the more violent it tends to be; the greater and larger in size it is, the less violent it tends to be. The powerful enemy may terrify and horrify a man, but one can always protect himself against it. But when is the enemy really difficult to confront? It is when the enemy is really small in number, subtle and imperceptible so that it manages to insinuate itself into a man.

Here is an example that may illustrate this point; assume that someone is building a house in the wilderness, and another person passes by to congratulate him for laying the foundation of the house. The latter may tell the house owner, 'You did not take the necessary precautions for building a house in this location, where wolves and foxes abound; you should install iron bars on the ground floor windows so that wild animals do not attack you. ' Upon listening to this piece of advice, the owner of the house installs iron bars. Another person may come and tell him, 'You have overlooked the fact that in this place snakes also abound. So, you should make the spaces between the iron bars narrower.' The owner of the house then accedes to the advice to prevent snakes from entering the house. Then, a third person may come to visit the owner of the house and tell him, 'I wonder how you safeguard your house against snakes, wolves and foxes and forget to protect yourself from the flies in this region, even though the flies here are poisonous.' The owner of the house may then install a screen to shut out the flies. Afterwards, a fourth person may tell the owner of the house that there are even smaller yet more ferocious and dangerous insects in the area. Upon this warning, the owner of the house may replace the screen he had already installed with another that with a finer mesh. Accordingly, we may draw the conclusion that the subtler and more imperceptible your enemy is, the more aggressive and dangerous it will tend to be.

For this reason, the most dangerous microbes that penetrate the human body—without one's awareness of how they infringed his skin and contaminated his body— are quite minute and subtle. Thus, one does not become aware of his infection except after the incubation period, when the symptoms start to surface. Those microbes enter the body, even though we can never know when it does so or where it dwells in the body.

Allah drives our attention to the fact that the subtler and more minute the thing is, the more aggressive it tends to be—and the less likely that any defence mechanism would be capable of deterring its offense. So, imagine the case of death, which is subtler than anything? Can anyone take any precautions against it?

What is the opposite of death? It is life; the period within which the soul dwells in the body. But what is the essence of the soul? No one knows the essence of the soul despite the fact that every person bears a soul within. Further, no one knows the dwelling place of the soul or its shape; moreover, no one knows who has seen, heard or touched it. When Allah takes the soul away, life ends. Allah is the One Who confers the soul upon any living being; when He breathes this soul into it, He brings life into it.

Allah draws our attention and alerts us to the fact that He has willed that some truths about our material existence would remain concealed and hidden away from physicians and microscopes. For instance, until today we do not know which viruses cause certain diseases.

If Allah the Exalted has given man a soul that is the cause of his life, why can we not believe that there is an actual, concrete cause underlying death that deprives the man of his soul as soon as it happens?! In this vein, we may understand the saying of Allah (chapter of al-Mulk) that He is Glorified is He Who holds all control and is Powerful over all things. He has created death and life in order to test people. (al-Mulk: 2)

Accordingly, death is not a negative process as some people may mistakenly think. It is rather a positive one; man has been created with accurateness and exactness like that of a manufacturer. The Almighty Allah described the process of life and death in the chapter of al-Mulk, and even gave priority to death over life; despite the fact that we factually experience life before death, death is mentioned before life. Life gives everyone his identity and capabilities—and using them, he employs the means and causes Allah has created for him to fulfil his mission in life. One may plough the land or trade in things; whichever befits his life, and entertain one's hearing and seeing. For that reason, man may think that life has been created first. The Almighty Allah calls our attention and explains to us that we should not think of life without thinking of its opposite. He says about himself that He is the only One who created death and life (al-Mulk: 2). This facilitates the comprehension of the Qudsi Hadith that explains the state of the inhabitants of Paradise versus that of the inhabitants of Hellfire. The Almighty Allah will bring death represented as a ram that He slays.

Abu Hurayra Allah be pleased with him narrated that Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him said that 'Death will be brought on the Day of Resurrection and made to stand on the sirat (the bridge over hell). It will be said: "O people of Paradise!" And they will look anxious and afraid lest they be brought out of the place they are in. Then, it will be said: "O people of Hell!" and they will look, hoping that they will be brought out of the place they are in. Then, it will be said: "Do you know what this is?" They will say: "Yes, it is death." Then, the command will be given for it to be slaughtered on the sirat, and it will be said to both groups: "It is eternal wherever you are, and there will never be any death therein."'(1)

The depiction of death as a ram indicates that death is an actual entity. The Almighty Allah informs us that He will annihilate death so that we can have immortality without any fear of death. Further the Almighty Allah alarms and warns those who abjured their faith and mistakenly thought that, if the people who were killed for the sake of Allah had stayed behind, they would not have died or been killed; we say that staying behind would not have avoided death. If someone's demise is due, wherever he may be, death will overtake him, even if he were inside fortified towers.

The discourse of the Quran varies according to different contexts. Sometimes, the meaning of its discourse is immediately grasped through the literal analysis of the words. In other contexts, the discourse is understood based on the guidance of the style of the Quran because it is the discourse of the Almighty Allah. Humans generally forge their discourse in line with their linguistic and mental aptitudes. But when the Almighty Allah addresses His creatures, He addresses their psyche. For this reason, when a child—who is happy because he memorized the Quran—is asked by an elder person: ‘What is so delightful about memorizing the Quran?’ The child responds: ‘Memorizing the Quran gives me peace and harmony, and this suffices me as an enjoyment.’ He does not know that memorizing or listening to the Quran fills him with such harmony—because the speaker is the Almighty Allah, and through His Capability and the Beauty of His Majesty, He addresses the psyche.

(1) Musnad, Ahmad

The Almighty Allah says that wherever you may be, death will overtake you; the word ‘overtake you’ indicates that once the soul is breathed into the body, death starts pursuing it (the soul) until it overtakes the latter at the time appointed by Allah. The word ‘overtake’ shows that death pursues the soul until it overtakes it. It is often said that death pursues life until death overtakes it; indeed, none of you can ever escape from death. For this reason, people who got deep knowledge from the Almighty Allah say: ‘Death is an arrow shot at you; your life is measured in terms of its journey towards you.’

Thus, we learn that the saying of the Almighty Allah ‘overtakes’ indicates that death pursues the life of the human being until it concludes and brings it to its demise.

Almighty Allah says that death will come to you even if you dwell in a lofty tower. Tracing the etymological root of the word buruj—the Arabic word for towers—we can grasp its general sense. The etymological root of this word consists of three letters: al-ba', ar-ra' and al-jim. All of these letters semantically indicate salience and height.

Some people may say about a particular woman: ‘This woman has baraj.’ This often means that her eyes are wide and occupy a considerable portion of her face. Accordingly, al-baraj refers to salience, conspicuousness and wideness.

Towers were often tall buildings, like the fortresses we build nowadays with concrete and steel. The word mushayyad means that it is well-constructed. This qualification is important because some buildings may be tall, yet frail and faltering. A building that is mushayyad—the Arabic word, here translated as raised which is derived from ash-shayd referring to either height or clay.

What is intended is that the bricks used to build the tower are bound using clay, and thus it stands strong and tall.

If there is a number that is divisible by another number, this means that the division process yields units. Once a teacher walks into a class room, he says to his students: ‘Take out your books;’ that is, each student must take out his book. The same holds true in the analogy.

The word ‘towers’ was used in a plural form to indicate that even if all of you take refuge in a tower surrounded by another, that one by a third and a fourth, and if there were a perfectly fortified fortress, such tower would not be of any avail to you. As a matter of fact, sometimes fortresses are built as a point surrounded by bigger concentric circles. Thus, the fortress would assume the shape of a centre point surrounded by a number of other fortresses. Death overtakes humans even if they are hiding in a tower surrounded by other fortresses. Both meanings reflect the Capability of the Almighty Allah to cause death to happen whenever He wills.

When The Almighty Allah speaks about life and death in a context of jihad (fighting in Allah’s Cause), so He wants to lead people out of darkness into light because religion is essentially light that dispels darkness. But those who live in darkness for a while get used to it and to the anarchy and corruption that accompany it. When religion comes about, some of them are bound to avoid it because light will deprive them of the pleasures they enjoy in their misguided life—as light dispels darkness. For this reason the Almighty Allah explains that He created death to serve two functions; the first is to be a reminder for the believer of his encounter with his Lord. Whoever believes has to always recall death because he knows well that his reward will only come forth upon death. When a believer hears the word death, he ought to start looking forward to this end and the reception of His reward.

The other function of death is that the non-believer always fears and dreads death and consistently fails to prepare himself for that reckoning. Thus, the word death inspires both desire and fear. When the one who truly has faith hears the word death, he immediately tells himself: ‘The hardships of this world will not last; I really want to go to Paradise.’

For this reason, those who have faith in the Almighty Allah must always bear this issue in mind. Doing so will alleviate the effect of any calamity that befalls them. As long as one has faith, he would immediately ask himself whenever he lost anyone dear to him: ‘was this person a believer or not?’ Were he a believer, he would be happy for him because the Almighty Allah brought him forth to what is good to him. Indeed, if you grieve over losing a relative who is a believer, then you should know that you are grieving over yourself. If the one who died is not a believer, then the believer would be relieved of his evil. Therefore, death is a comfort in all cases. The one who did good deeds ought to look forward to it—this is the ‘desire’ aspect—while the disbeliever should be afraid—this is the fear aspect.

For this reason, it is foolish to grieve over the deceased. One should rather consider the saying of the Almighty Allah that wherever you may be, death will overtake you even though you are in towers raised tall.

The Almighty Allah then follows, ‘Yet, when a good thing happens to them, some people say, “This is from the Almighty Allah,” whereas when evil befalls them, they say, ‘This is from you, O Muhammad!” Say: “All things come from the Almighty Allah.” What, then, is amiss with these people that they are in no wise near to grasp the truth of what they are told?’ But who is most likely to propose such a discourse?

The one who says that the hasanah (good deed) comes from the Almighty Allah truly believes in Him; he says so based on a true belief and conviction in his mind. However, the verse at stake does not address such a strain of people; it is rather intended to address those who tend to separate between Muhammad and his Lord. That is, they attribute the good things that happen to them to the Almighty Allah and the bad things to Muhammad. Accordingly, those who say such things are either hypocrites who only allegedly declared their conversion to Islam and allegiance to Prophet Muhammad, while still bearing infidelity in their hearts, or some people of the Book who believe in the Almighty Allah but do not recognize Muhammad as the Messenger of Allah. The latter group attributes all good things to the Almighty Allah and falsely accuses His Messenger of being responsible for all evils that befall them. In doing so, they separate between Muhammad and his Lord.

Therefore the Almighty Allah would not allow them to do as such. He revealed to them the Quran to be recited until the end of time, and there He says 'whoever pays heed to Prophet Muhammad pays heed to the Almighty Allah thereby; and as for those who turn away – We have not sent you to be their keeper' (an-Nisa': 80) The Almighty Allah also says: 'O Muhammad, tell them, 'If you love Allah, follow me and Allah will love you.' (Al-'Imran: 31) No one can cause a dispute or cleavage between Muhammad and his Lord because Muhammad is a Messenger from Allah the Almighty to relay His Message and the course He set to mankind. Allah the Almighty says that they could not find any fault [with the faith] save that Allah has enriched them and caused His Apostle to enrich them. (at-Tawba: 74)

The Almighty Allah is not content with any servant who asks Him only for forgiveness. Rather, His good servant ought to go to the Messenger of Allah and ask him to ask the Almighty Allah to forgive him on his behalf. No one can have a proper relation with the Almighty Allah away from Muhammad—His Messenger; so do not separate between the Command of the Almighty Allah and that of His Messenger. Therefore, the one who wants to fabricate and claim a difference between the Almighty Allah and His Prophet Muhammad by attributing good things to Him and bad things to His Messenger is erroneous and will ultimately be a loser.

But in what context was this verse revealed? People used to go to war; if they triumphed and collected the spoils of war, they would say: 'The Almighty Allah has privileged us with these winnings and gains.' Were they defeated, they would say that Muhammad is the one who caused us to be defeated as if Muhammad causes things to happen in a way other than that which the Almighty Allah intends. So, do not be misled and deceived by anyone who tries to distinguish between the will of the Messenger of Allah and that of his Lord. The Almighty Allah is the One Who sent Muhammad and revealed to him the Quran.

When the Message of Islam was revealed to Prophet Muhammad, he was hoping that people of the Book would believe in him as they have already believed in Allah. They were closer to his heart than those who do not have any faith or belief in one God, namely those who ascribe divinity to aught beside Allah. At that time, there were two main global powers: the Persians and the Romans. The Persians used to worship fire— Allah forbid!—while the Romans used to believe in Allah and the Books He had revealed before sending Prophet Muhammad, but they abjured the Message of Muhammad.

Those who believed in Allah the Almighty were closer to the heart of Muhammad than those who disbelieved in Him. This evidence refers to the inclination of Muhammad towards the latter group; a matter which stemmed from his faith and belief in the Almighty Allah. Such inclination also applied to the Jews. When Prophet Muhammad migrated to Medina, their harvest accidentally yielded less than usual. The Jews said: ‘Our ranches and harvest have been decreasing since the arrival of this man.’ But was this really a sheer coincidence or was there a material explanation for it?

When Prophet Muhammad arrived in Medina, the Jews refused to recognize him even though they used to take pride in him and foretell his advent to the infidels. However, his advent divested them of their temporary power because they used to dominate wealth by dealing in usury and provoking enmity and animosity among people. Further, they dominated the movement of trade so that they would achieve mastery over others. They also knew the Almighty Allah’s Book, yet they tried to turn such knowledge into a trade. Hence, they had mastery in terms of three aspects: knowledge, money and the system of life they followed.

In the early times of Islam, the Aws and the Khazraj tribes went through one path under the power of Islam; the Jews thus failed to sell the weapons they used to make. This ultimately led them to lose the power and dominion they used to enjoy due to the disputes and differences they originally created and fomented. Further, they lost their financial dominion because Islam proscribed usury. In addition, they lost the mastery and dominion they enjoyed due to their knowledge of the path of Allah the Almighty because Islam exposed the way in which they paraphrased the Book of Allah.

Therefore, their means of dominion came to an end. For this reason, they grieved at the advent of the Prophet Muhammad to the extent that if any Jew met another one, he would not talk to him about anything except the issue of Muhammad. In so far as they were distracted by the matter to that extent, they neglected agriculture. They were distracted from the pursuit of the proper means of growing a good harvest and so they did not get one. Nonetheless, they tried to impute the problem to Prophet Muhammad since it was difficult for them to understand what was happening. However, it could also be the case that the Almighty Allah wanted to punish them because they cunningly conspired against His Messenger instead of taking care of their land and crops and pursuing the proper means to nurture their harvest. It could also be that this was a heavenly curse; the question is: 'Why did they not turn to the religion of Muhammad to rescue themselves from such hardship?' They used to take pride in Islam and foretell about its advent, but when Islam was revealed, they did not believe in it, and when it came unto them that which they knew (to be the truth), they disbelieve therein. Accordingly, more than a punishment was meted out to them. Those who used to deal with Jews in usury refrained from such practice. Further, the harvest of their land diminished.

Thus, Islam was a cause of the diminishment of their wealth. Allah the Almighty has related what they said: 'Yet, when a good thing happens to them, some people say, "This is from Allah," whereas when evil befalls them, they say, "This is from you, O Muhammad!" Say: "All is from Allah." (an-Nisa': 78) This means that good and evil things are both from Allah. But what is the 'good thing' and what is the 'evil thing'? The 'good thing' in this context refers to victory, gain, affluence, prosperity and fertility. The 'evil thing' refers to defeat, murder, misery, harm and aridity. This is their conception. But we—the believers—understand the meaning of the 'good thing' in a more precise way. The good thing from the perspective of the Islamic law is what Allah the Almighty commands, and the evil thing is what He proscribes. The evidence in support of this is that a believer may lose someone dear to him, or harm may befall the one who is dear to him, and at the same time, he takes a stance based on faith in receiving and dealing with such a calamity. Thus, this person may say: 'My grief will not bring back this dear person to me; I should seize the opportunity of such a calamity to gain admittance into Heaven.' He may add to this: 'it is enough condolence that the Almighty Allah may reward me for enduring the loss of someone who was dear to me; I would not receive in my entire life as big a reward as that which I would take for enduring the calamity of losing this dear person.'

Thus, Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him warns us against thinking that the ‘good deed’ is what is favourable to ourselves, and that the ‘evil deed’ is what is distasteful. No; from the perspective of the Islamic law, the one whom evil befalls is the one who has been deprived of the reward of Allah. For this reason, the Quran says that everything is from Allah, which means that good and evil deeds are all from Allah.

But does Allah cause evil deeds to happen? We must seek forgiveness of Allah should we think so. What is evil and what is good are only so from the relative perspective of man; all is ultimately from Allah. But if we ascribe every act to Allah, we will realize that everything that He has decreed is good. It is the absence of correct criteria that causes tiredness and toil. Indeed, if we tried to measure these things around us as accurately as a computer does, all our results would be correct.

Here is an example to illustrate this point. Assume that a student neglected his studies and attending his classes. Subsequently, he would fail at the end of the year. He may consider this failure to be an evil that befell him, but it is a good thing from the divine perspective. The success of such a negligent student would be an infringement of the universal law that whoever works hard should be rewarded for his efforts. It would also lead to the negligence of studying by all the students which would, in turn, cause the decline of knowledge and sciences. When Allah the Exalted has set the law that whoever does not work or exert any effort should fail, He has revived this universal law as a standard for thousands of humans. The failing person would become a clear, sufficient and practical example of this universal law. Similarly, the one who did not cultivate his land or was too lazy to plough or irrigate should not expect that it yields a good harvest which is something bad for him. This universal truth, in its essence, is good because it teaches everyone not to neglect the pursuit of proper means for attaining success. In conclusion, the one who suffers the result of his negligence often tends to interpret such a calamity as an evil thing that befell him because it involves harm and detriment. But if he considered the result commensurately with the effort he exerted, he would realize that this is Allah’s permanent law; it will never change.

Allah the Exalted sets His laws in His universe so that He will reward whoever pursues the proper means for success and divest of the reward whoever does not. When we weigh things according to this standard, we can easily discern that the one who works assiduously is bound to be successful, and that, conversely, the one who is neglectful and lazy is bound to fail. Both ramifications are results of the universal law set by Allah.

Whenever Allah the Exalted puts forward the sayings of any party without commenting on them, this implies that He approves such sayings. In contrast, if the opinion is false, Allah puts forward the proper evidence to refute it and demonstrate its falsity. This shows us that Allah the Exalted does not want us to neglect the false claims of our adversaries so that we do not know them. Rather, Allah elucidates these claims, and then criticizes them to protect our faith and creed against any disbelievers' claims—so that their claims do not harm our faith and creed. Therefore, Allah expounds the rationale and arguments of the disbelievers and explains to us that they are bound to argue, and that you believers, should respond to them by arguing in a certain manner.

A good example of this point is when some alleged that Allah has had a son; He has responded that their claim were nothing but falsehood. (al-Kahf: 5) Allah has exposed the arguments of the believers' adversaries because some believers may be taken aback by such arguments. However, when Allah presents these arguments, He draws the attention of the listener to the way in which He can refute it by showing its weak points.

Those—who said that what is good is from Allah, whereas what is evil is from Prophet Muhammad—wanted to cause dissension and a chasm between Allah and His Messenger. Thus, in order to explain that matter, Allah has commanded Prophet Muhammad to say to them that everything ultimately emanates from Allah. Further, the precision of Allah the Exalted is manifested in the fact that He has chosen prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to deliver His Message to them, even though He could have put forward the matter without saying, 'Say…' as a command to Prophet Muhammad.

However, Allah wants Prophet Muhammad peace and blessings be upon him to be the intermediary. Hence, He has commanded him to say that all is from Allah. All, in this context, means both the good and evil things. Allah the Exalted wants to explain to us that the ontological realities of the world are consistent with the human natural inclination to have faith.

For a long time, scholars have disagreed about the ultimate origin and cause of the deeds of the servants of Allah. In this vein, they posed the following questions: is the deed of a servant of Allah undertaken by himself, or does Allah cause all actions to happen through the agency of His servants? If every servant of Allah is the ultimate cause of his deeds, it is fair that Allah will either punish or reward him for what he has done. However, if Allah were the ultimate cause and the Originator of all deeds, then why would He punish His servants? Subsequently, scholars plunged into a huge maze in pursuing the answer to this question.

Here, we say that we have to understand that Allah has created the universe and set laws to govern it. Further, these laws, to our utter surprise, regulate and encompass the acts and deeds of both the believers and the disbelievers. This indicates that no one in Allah's universe is worthier of worship than Him. Allah has admitted even those who do not believe in Him in the realm of His Lordship. Moreover, He has ordered all means and causes in His universe to respond to whoever labours and exerts effort, whether he is a believer or disbeliever because Allah is the One Who created him and brought him to the universe. In so far as this is the case, Allah thereby provides him with what is needed to sustain his life. Afterwards, Allah reveals His path to His servants saying that He likes a certain act and dislikes another; so whoever believes in Him, will be assigned a different status—he will be a true servant of Allah.

Therefore, recognition of the Divinity of Allah is the cause of His assigned obligations for all those who believe in Him. However, Allah is the Lord of all, and His Lordship encompasses everyone. In this vein, He sustains and provides all with their livelihood. That is, cosmic laws serve all. Some of Allah's creatures—whom He has made subservient to humankind and governed by His laws and norms wanted to revolt against man, to stop serving man because of his ingratitude to Allah.

Cosmic laws are like the soldiers of Allah. They revolt against the man when he fails to thank Allah for what He endowed him. But Allah explains to the subservient creatures that those disbelievers are still His creatures and He is the One Who brought them into existence. Thus, Allah has set universal laws that regulate the life of both believers and disbelievers. Afterwards, Allah has revealed His assigned obligations through the agency of His messengers. In this vein, He explained to mankind that He likes one act and dislikes the other; so whoever loves Him should adhere to His assignments. Accordingly, the purpose of Allah's Lordship is different from those of Divinity.

The purpose of Lordship is creation and supporting the needy, whereas the purpose of Divinity is to establish obedience to Allah. Such obedience consists in following commands and avoiding proscriptions. Every ruling that involves a command or a proscription, which is Allah's obligation, is related to the requirements of Allah's Divinity and not His Lordship.

By contrast, everything related to the universal laws is connected with the purpose of Lordship. Universal laws never change. For instance, someone who wants to succeed in a subject at school may need to score fifty per cent or more; another may need to score only forty per cent to pass a different subject. The question is: if a student managed to meet the condition of success, would it imply that the student has succeeded due to his efforts or, rather, that such rules gave him success on him?

The latter is true. It was the law that conferred on the student his success. It is true that the law did not tell the student that his exam answers would guarantee his success. Thus, if the student applies himself and studies according to this standard, his effort will give him a level of success that is commensurate with the level of excellence such effort supposedly accomplishes. The law does not make anyone successful, nor does it cause anyone to fail; rather, the student who exerts effort succeeds, and the one who does not do so fails. Accordingly, everything in the universe functions according to a specific law.

Let us consider the following example: if we consider the movement of the hand created by Allah, we will not be able to completely know the way it functions. When one lifts something from the ground, none of us usually knows which muscles move to carry such object. In reality, the One Who has acted is Allah. By analogy, the hand, whether one used it to do a good deed or used to perpetrate an evil thing, is ultimately used by Allah, Who is the Ultimate Doer; indeed, every act is ultimately the act of Allah. The man only directs the energy to either shaking hands with someone or slapping another person on the face; the hand can perform both functions. When one directs his hand to slap someone on his face, he deserves a punishment, and when he directs it to shake hands with someone, he merits a reward.

The man is thus responsible for directing the effort required for undertaking a particular act, not for the deed itself. Therefore, punishment and reward are the compensations for the direction of the energy spent, and not for the act itself. Let us take another example: consider a knife; one may use it knife to slaughter a chicken; alternatively, one can use the same knife to stab a person. The knife itself is incapable of disobeying the one who uses it to slaughter a chicken as much as it cannot disobey if he decides to use it to stab another person.

Allah has created the knife to serve the function of slaughtering. However, one may use this tool to slaughter in different ways—whether such slaughtering is lawful or proscribed by Allah. Therefore, Allah is the ultimate Doer of all deeds. As long as the deed is within the realm of the commands of the One Who has assigned the commands, and He is the Originator of the universal laws, then He is the ultimate Doer of all deeds and actions.

When we meditate on the matters carefully, we realize that all deeds ultimately emanate from Allah. The man is only capable of channelling his energy to actually bring about the act. A young man dwelling upon studying his lessons did not create his mind or his eyes with which he reads. However, his mind is fit for thinking about the good things and the bad ones. Further, he can use his eyes to read a comic or use them to read a useful book.

Accordingly, irrespective of one’s deeds, he can never hide anything he does from his Lord. In fact, all what one does is to channel the energy that Allah has given him to act.

Your reward or punishment is based on the way in which you channel your energy and power to do good or evil things. Thus, when our Lord Glorified is He says: ‘All is from Allah,’ we immediately say that this true. Practically, whoever neglects his land and fails to fertilize and irrigate it, and then suffers through a drought, should know that such a calamity is a result of his failure to correctly direct the energy that Allah has created for him.

By contrast, when there is no rain, one is absolutely left idle. Universal laws have been created by Allah; whoever follows these laws gains, but whoever suffers an evil thing should know that he failed to pursue the proper means to succeed in whichever endeavour he undertook. This holds true for both individuals and groups. Whoever gambles and afterwards suffers destruction and loss of wealth or property should know that he was the cause of such misfortune because he had already received orders from the True Lord Glorified is He not to practice such activities. Any nation that complained about the lack of agricultural land or proper livelihood should realize that they are the cause of such a problem because those in charge amongst them should have worked on developing the nation's resources in proportion to the increase in population.

What often exhausts and drains us is the fact that we have to endure the oblivion of other previous generations; thus, a single generation may find itself faced with all the problems that its predecessors should have addressed and resolved in the first place. If a previous generation took its responsibility in resolving its own problems, the mission of the present generation would be less exhausting. As long as we have a fertile land that is suitable for cultivation, we should prepare and use spring water to cultivate it. If there is a problem, it is therefore the problem of the laziness of the previous generations. As long as there is a buffer of underground water, we have to use our reason to extract the secrets Allah has concealed in His universe. It is not necessary that rain should fall in order for agriculture to happen. The True Lord Glorified is He says: 'Do you not see that Allah sends down rain from the sky and makes it flow as springs [and rivers] in the earth' (az-Zumar: 21).

Allah Glorified is He has created outlets for water inside the soil so that people in tropical countries could reach down to underground water as well as the water would not evaporate. Thus, Allah has hidden some of the water inside the earth for the benefit of man. In tropical countries, we notice how salt precipitates on the soil. This is clear evidence that Allah has set the law for distilling fresh water so that it can be used for both drinking and cultivation.
